Sir, I do very much forget my ſelf, if I did aſſert that there was no ſuch Place in Scripture that required two Witneſſes; the Thing that I ſaid, was this, That if any Gentleman could ſhew me any Rule from Scripture that required two Witneſſes more in the Caſe of Treaſon than in the Caſe of Murther and Felony, I ſhould be glad to ſee it. I do ſay that the Scripture ſhall be a Rule to me, as far as the Scripture requires; but I do take the Jewiſh Law not to be ſo abſolutely literally binding upon us here. And as to the Text out of Numbers, that very Text of Scripture is particularly and literally applicable to Murther; and if that be binding now, we have been very much miſguided by our Predeceſſors, and I think we are bound to take it in hand, to repeal all Laws that are againſt it.

Sir, he is pleaſed to deny us, in ſome meaſure, the Liberty of being guided by our Conſciences; truly, I don't know what he would have Gentlemen go by; truly, let him go by what Rules he pleaſes, I will go by the Rule of my Conſcience, and will not do any thing againſt it upon any Conſideration or Conſequence whatſoever; nor will I part from the Liberty and Power of Parliaments, for any Rule or Law of inferior Courts whatſoever.

Sir, you are told, you ought to be guided by the Rules of Law, that is not the Forms of Law, but the Rules of Law. Sir, I ſay, if theſe Rules were made to bind Parliaments, it was reaſonable they ſhould be bound by them; but if they were made only to bind inferior Courts, they were far enough from being intended to put a Cramp upon the Proceedings of Parliament; and if you ſhall ſubject your ſelves to them, you give the Lawyers ſuch a Power, that I don't doubt, but their Books will be of greater Authority than your Journals; therefore in Conſideration of that, and becauſe I would leave that which is the Right of Parliaments to my Succeſſors, I ſhall not ſubmit to that.

Therefore, I ſay, I come clear to the Point whether Sir John Fenwick be guilty or not, only I muſt obſerve a little back, That as to thoſe Inſtances that the worthy Member was pleaſed to make uſe of, of Ravillack, and of Felton; ſhall thoſe extraordinary Caſes, that which Men did in heat of Blood and private Malice; ſhall theſe be brought to bear a Parallel with what is done in Parliament for the Juſtice of the Nation? I don't doubt but there are Men enough, in their Conſciences, at leaſt with pretence of it, will juſtifie the Deſtruction of your Government and Religion, and every Thing elſe: All thoſe Men that deny the Right of your Government, have Conſcience and Juſtice enough to ſubvert it if they could; and therefore I do not ſo much wonder, that many Men without Doors have argued in that Nature.

But I ſay, my Conſcience is the Rule I muſt go by; and to me the Queſtion is, only whether Sir John Fenwick be guilty, or not guilty, and I am called to give my Judgment in it; and I think I am bound by the Law of Nature, by the Law of the Nation, and I ſee nothing in the Law of God that prohibits me, to give my Judgment according to the Evidence, and the Opinion I have in my Conſcience of the Truth of it.

If there be no ſuch Rule that requires two Witneſſes binding upon me; if I may go upon one Witneſs; if I believe he ſpeaks true, and that the Perſon is guilty, then I am bound to act for the Preſervation of the Nation, and all our Poſterity: They that made this Attempt, made it upon you and your Poſterity for ever; 'tis not ſo ſmall a Matter as ſome repreſent it; 'tis not the Perſon ſo much as the Nature of the Fact we are to conſider; and we are not to let Men eſcape Puniſhment according to their Greatneſs or their Smallneſs; but according to the Nature of the Fact, and their Guilt. I think I have that freedom, and I am ſo little bound by thoſe Rules that have been urged, that if both Witneſſes were here, and gave Teſtimony againſt him, if I did not believe him to be guilty, I would loſe my Life rather than Vote him ſo; but on the contrary, if here be ſufficient Evidence to convince me, though not according to the Rules of inferior Courts, I will not ſubject the freedom of Parliaments to thoſe Rules.

Sir, you have been told formerly, and I think it a Matter of that Weight, I beg leave to urge it again, becauſe 'tis a great Reaſon that guides me in this Matter; if you lay it down for a Doctrine in this Houſe (for a Reſolution here taken, is as much a Rule as a Law, for it ſhall be brought as a Precedent) and therefore, if it ſhall be laid down as a Rule here, That you will never attaint any Man, or find him guilty, but upon two Witneſſes; I think the Government, and all you have, ſtands upon a tottering Foundation: He muſt be a very ordinary States-man that can't lay his Plot ſo, as you ſhan't reach him by two Witneſſes.

Therefore I ſay, I think it becomes the Wiſdom of Parliament, not to declare themſelves bound in that reſpect; I would have them bound by Juſtice, but not by the common Rule of the Law.

Sir Robert Cotton. Sir, I do find that Gentlemen do very much inſiſt in this Caſe, That if a Gentleman does believe that Sir John Fenwick is guilty, he muſt give his Vote for the paſſing of this Bill; if that be ſo, I am glad that Opinion did not take place in the laſt Reign, if it had, I am of Opinion I ſhould not have been here now; and I believe my Lord Warrington, who was very inſtrumental in promoting this Revolution, would not have died in his Bed. My Lord and I were accuſed of a Crime, which I believe, if proved by two Witneſſes, had been Treaſon: I have heard ſome Gentlemen ſay in this Houſe, they did believe my Lord Warrington was guilty (though he was not guilty of the Fact as it was laid.) There was a Man ſwore, &c. and there was ſome corroborating Evidence; but as to Mr. Fley, and my ſelf, there was none but this particular Perſon, and they indicted us of Miſdemeanour; though it would have been Treaſon, if there had been two Witneſſes; ſes: Now if the ſame Fact was Treaſon when proved by two Witneſſes, and but Miſdemeanor when proved by one, Methinks we are doing an extraordinary Thing: We are going after the Fact committed, to make that which is but a Miſdemeanor, to be Treaſon. And for theſe and other Reaſons, I can't agree to the paſſing of this Bill.

Lord Norris. Sir, though I had always an Apprehenſion of the ill Conſequence of this Bill, yet never ſo much as now; for this Gentleman hath given Arguments that ſhake me more than all that I have heard before; for he ſays, there are a great many Men, if they may proceed according to their Conſciences, will ſubvert this Government, and bring in King James and Arbitrary Power; and he tells you, That every Precedent in this Houſe, is equal to a Law, and will juſtifie the like for the future. I am ſure I am very unwilling to make a Precedent that ſhall juſtify Men in ſuch ill Actions, in ſaying their Conſciences prompted them to it.

Then a Queſtion was put for bringing in Candles, which paſſed in the Affirmative, and they were brought in.

Mr. Hamond. I don't think the Power of Parliaments in queſtion in this Caſe; but then, as all other Powers, it muſt be founded upon Juſtice, and never uſed but upon extraordinary Occaſions, and when Criminals are not to be met with otherwiſe. The Power of Parliament is not leſſened if this Bill does not paſs: But the Queſtion is, whether this Power ſhould be exerted in this Caſe? What Gentlemen ſay of being guided by Conſcience, hath no Weight with me, further than that is governed by the Law of the Land; if it be to be admitted in the Caſe of Life and Blood, why not in Meum & Tuum? Why was he brought to the Bar then, if according to our private Judgement we are to determine this Matter? No Man thought but he was guilty.

I beg leave to mention one thing that is come to my Knowledge; after the Tryal and Condemnation of Mr. Cook, I had an Order ſent me, that I might ſee him, and I went to him by Vertue of that Order; and the greateſt Part of the Time I ſpent with him, he took up in declaring againſt the Evidence of Goodman, and that he would receive the Sacrament upon it, and give it in Writing, as his dying Words. I ſaw alſo three poſitive Witneſſes confront him at his Tryal; and when I heard him ſay this, it weighed ſo much with me, that I have very great ground of Suſpicion, That Goodman was perjured in the Caſe of Cook.

Here hath been Popular Expreſſions of Plots, and Jacobites, that no Man can apply to this particular Caſe, or ſay this is a Caſe wherein we ought to uſe this extraordinary Power; he was in the Hands of the Law, and no Body can ſay, that the Government muſt ſink, if he does not die. If we go from the Rules of Juſtice, I believe it will give a great Blow to the Government.

Mr. Vernon. Sir, I riſe up only upon what that worthy Gentleman hath offered unto you; for I did not think to trouble you with any thing of that Nature. But if you will give me leave to acquaint you with what I believe, who have been later with him than this Gentleman, and much oftner. Sir, he does tell me, that he is very far from denying what hath been ſworn againſt Sir John Fenwick and himſelf, concerning the Conſultation to bring over the French, for he hath a very particular remembrance of it; and if that Gentleman was to ſpeak with him now, he would ſatisfie him, I believe, in that Point: And ſince I am up, I think every Man that ſpeaks upon this Occaſion, ſhould likewiſe give ſome Account of himſelf, in what manner, and for what Reaſon he diſcharges his Conſcience here; I hope I may uſe that Word, ſince Gentlemen make uſe of Conſcience for his Acquittal; and a Man ought to have a very good Conſcience for his Condemnation.

As to Sir John Fenwick's Innocence, I wiſh he had given no Occaſion to have it called in Queſtion; and ſince he did fall under this Accuſation, I wiſh he or his Council for him, would have taken ſome Pains to have made his Innocency appear; but I don't find the Queſtion is, Whether Sir John Fenwick is guilty, but whether there be any Evidence of his Guilt? And I ſhall tell you, in ſhort, my Opinion of that; I take the Proof of the Fact to be in general, ſuch a Demonſtration as the Nature of the Thing is capable of; and that is ſufficient, and capable to convince a reaſonable, honeſt, unprejudiced Man, of the Truth of what is aſſerted: And there is no manner of Doubt left, Whether it is ſo or no? Nor Appearance of any Poſſibiliiy, that it could be otherwiſe. I think there hath been that Proof in this Caſe, and nothing attempted to diſprove it, and nothing hath been proved on Sir John Fenwick's Behalf, that any Wrong hath been done him; and therefore in ſhort, my Senſe is, That whereas ſome Gentlemen think him guilty, but the Matter not proved; I think him guilty, becauſe 'tis proved, and there hath been no Offer made to diſprove it.

Mr. Bromley Warr. Some Gentlemen have ſpoke of the Power of Parliaments, but I ſhall ſay nothing to their Power, which I have learned from my Lord Coke, is ſo Tranſcendent and Abſolute, that it can't be confined within any Bounds: But the more Juſt and Honourable it ought to be in its Proceedings, to give an Example to inferiour Courts; and though their Power can't be deny'd, yet the Exerciſe of it hath been often cenſured and condemned; and Acts that have paſſed in one Parliament, have been in the ſame Reign repealed; and ſometimes, ſeveral branded; Id poſſumus, quod jure poſſumus. 'Tis certain, here is a defect of legal Evidence: We are not tied here to the Forms of Weſtminſter-Hall; but certainly, with Submiſſion, we ought to tie our ſelves up to the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall, eſpecially when they are founded upon Common Juſtice, which is the ſame, is not mutable, and ought to be univerſal.

By the Law of the Land, no Perſon ought to be convicted in Caſes of Treaſon; but upon two Witneſſes; the Law of God is the ſame. However, if you will paſs this Bill, all Perſons muſt acquieſce; and there is no diſputing of your Power afterwards. It hath been an Argument uſed to Day, That the Security of the Government requires the paſſing of this Bill, which I think to be a good one too, if they can make it appear, that unleſs you proceed in this Way, the Government is in Danger; though I muſt obſerve, it was not that Conſideration, but the Vindication of an honourable Perſon's Reputation, that brought this Matter firſt before you.

It does not appear to me, That Sir John Fenwick's Life or Death, can endanger the Government. You have been told of a Deſign that he hath been engaged in, and is carried on at this Time: That an Invaſion from France ſeems to threaten us: The former Deſign hath been happily diſcovered and defeated; and 'tis not probable that Sir John Fenwick ſhould have any great ſhare in any that is carrying on at preſent: And as far as I can learn, he is not ſo conſiderable a Man in his own Perſon or Intereſt, that we need fear him.

An honourable Perſon ſaid, if we do not paſs this Bill, they that ſent us here, would give us no Thanks: 'Tis not a good way of arguing; but I believe, if thoſe look forward, they will thank us. Sir, in the Act for declaring the Rights and Liberties of the People, you have it ſaid, That the late King James, by the Aſſiſtance of divers evil Councellors, &c. How comes it to paſs, that we have never attainted any of them? And if we are for proceeding in this way of Attainder, becauſe it pleaſes them that ſent us hither, I dare ſay, the Attainting one of thoſe Men, would gratifie thoſe that ſent us hither, more than the Attainting Twenty ſuch as Sir John Fenwick. It was pretty well known what ſhare ſome Gentlemen had in bringing in of Popery and Arbitrary Power; and I will take the Liberty to ſay, That there is never a Gentleman in this Houſe, but believes them to be the worſt of Criminals.

Upon the whole Matter, I do not think you have any occaſion to exert a Power, that no Body denies; I ſee no Security this will be to the Government, and conſequently, no Neceſſity of it: I think you are making a moſt dangerous Precedent, and that it will be of ill Conſequence to you, and therefore I am againſt this Bill.

Mr. Smith. Sir, I will be as ſhort as I can, and if it had not been for ſomething in this Day's Debate, I ſhould not have troubled you. As to what was ſaid by the Gentleman that ſpake laſt, of making Examples of ſome that had been Criminal in the laſt Reign; how that came to happen, that no ſuch Examples were made, I ſhall not now entertain you; but I believe moſt of the Gentlemen in the Houſe, know pretty well.

But I take the Matter before you is, what Evidence you have to prove Sir John Fenwick to be guilty, and whether there be not an Extraordinary Occaſion at this Time, to exert the Legiſlative Power.

I ſhall not enter into the Matter of Precedents, thoſe are out of my Province, but I have read ſome; however it ſhall not paſs upon me for a Rule, becauſe ſome Bills have been reverſed, no others ſhall be brought in; it is poſſible that the reverſing of them, may be worſe than the firſt bringing of them in.

But to apply my ſelf to the Evidence, I can't but obſerve one Thing that ſeems this Day extraordinary: We are told by ſome Gentlemen, they are againſt our Proceeding upon this Bill, becauſe it does not quadrare to the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall; and at the ſame time, Gentlemen take Liberty to make Exceptions here againſt that Evidence that Weſtminſter-Hall has allowed: That they ſhould take Exceptions to that Evidence which the Law of England allows to be good! For it is notorious, it hath been admitted in Weſtminſter-Hall; And Gentlemen might have as well have told you, That thoſe Men that ſuffered, died innocent, as to have denied it; and I think there is a further ſtrengthening of his Evidence; for there is not one Man, who hath died upon his Evidence, but hath acknowledged himſelf guilty of what he hath charged him with.

As to the Matter of the other Evidence. Sir, I do not ſay that it is Evidence that will come at Weſtminſter-Hall; but at the ſame time, give me leave to tell you, They ſeem to lay a little ſtreſs upon it, when they tell you, they believe it was falſe Evidence; and inſtance in what Cook ſaid to a Gentleman of this Houſe, after his Condemnation; but I think thus far I may ſay, That when you ſent ſome of your Members to examine Sir John Freind, he did own all thoſe Perſons to be at that Place, and that is a much better Argument for the Validity of Goodman's Teſtimony: But as to the Matter before you, ſome Gentlemen have made it a Queſtion, Whether Sir John Fenwick be ſo conſiderable a Man, as you ſhould proceed in this extraordinary manner with? Though they all ſay, you may do it; yet at the ſame time they tell you, this was never put in execution; but they were in the wrong that did it.

Now, Sir, the Queſtion is, Whether you ſhould make uſe of this Power at this time? Say ſome, The Plot is over; I wiſh it was: But when a Conſpiracy hath been laid ſo deep and general as this was, 'tis not the Hanging of one or two that will make us ſafe: When 'tis apparent to you, here is all the Artifice in the World; all the Endeavours in the World, by Sir John Fenwick's Friends, to remove Goodman out of the Way; 'tis ſome Argument that he had ſomething to ſay to him: And when we ſee Priſons broke open daily; we have known Perſons murthered in the Streets for giving Evidence. Very notorious is the Caſe of Dodſworth; you have Plots all about you, and yet can you think there is no occaſion to make Uſe of this Extraordinary Power.

I would have as great a Conviction upon my Conſcience as I could, but 'tis very hard a Man muſt throw his Conſcience aſide in the Caſe; 'tis very hard to believe, That if there be two Witneſſes produced, though I don't believe the Witneſſes, yet I am ſafe if I condemn the Man; and if there be but one Witneſs, I am to acquit the Man, though I believe him to be guilty.

And though they go to Scripture, to tell you there muſt be two Witneſſes, yet they don't go ſo far as to tell you there have been very extraordinary Things done, even by God himſelf, for the preſerving a Community.

And there is the Reaſon of it, that one Witneſs may take away a Man's Life in one Caſe, and not in another. There was a Thing ſaid, that was one Thing that occaſioned my ſtanding up: A Gentleman ſaid, truly, it ſeemed to him to be a better way to put an End to the Plot, to have an Act of Indempnity, than the Conviction of Sir John Fenwick would be. Sir, there ſeems very little Reaſon for Acts of Indempnity, when we have ſeen an Act paſſed ſo lately, which has not reſtrained Perſons, nor brought them to a Senſe of their Duty; and we have heard Perſons own at your Bar, That the Fact was committed juſt after the Act of Indempnity.

Sir, I do heartily, according to my Conſcience, Vote for this Bill.

Mr. Harcourt. Sir, I am ſenſible it is very difficult to ſay any Thing, and not ſeem tedious at this Time of Night; but I take it to be my Duty not to be ſilent in this Matter.

All the Arguments that I remember have been made uſe of in any former Debate, or in this Day's, may be reduced in ſhort, to theſe two Heads; the Danger of the Government, and Gentlemen's private Opinion.

Sir, as to the Danger of the Government, if any Body will convince me there is ſuch danger, (I promiſe him, if it be worth his while ſo to do) I will be his Proſelyte, and Vote for this Bill: But, to tell me the Government is in Danger, and that the Fate of England and Europe depends upon this Bill, is certainly rather offered to amuſe, than to convince.

It hath been asked, Can the Circumſtances that Sir John Fenwick is in admit of any Danger to the Government, which hath Power over his Liberty every Day, and may reſtrain him of his Liberty during his Life? A Man, by the Account I have had of him, of little Intereſt, not worth Ninepence. (I have no Acquaintance with him, and ſo I may eaſily miſtake his Circumſtances.) But, Sir, whatever his Circumſtances are, he is in ſafe Cuſtody, and no doubt there he will be kept; and to ſay the Government is in danger by ſuch a Man, ſure, that can't be thought by any Man living: And God forbid this ſhould be the Caſe of the Government, that it can't ſupport it ſelf without taking away this unfortunate Gentleman's Life, contrary to the Rules of Law.

For the Argument of private Opinion, 'tis almoſt as dangerous as the Precedent you are making. I will not urge it from the Caſe of the People, Enthuſiaſts and Madmen; but I will urge it in the Caſe of Men that ſate in Judgment: if Opinion is to juſtifie the Condemning of a Man, let us never more call the Verdicts againſt Mr. Corniſh, Mr. Sidney, Lord Ruſſel, and others, Murthers. Ask the Jury, no doubt none of them are ſo ſilly, but in his Opinion they were guilty; but if Opinion may condemn a Man without Proof, why not acquit him as well where there is Proof? Such a Practice, I am ſure, would never be endured.

The propereſt Method, I think, was propoſed by the Gentleman that began the Debate; and I beg leave to follow the ſame Steps, to conſider his guilt, How it appears to us, and whether there be any Reaſon for this extraordinary Manner of Proceeding.

The Recital of that Bill are the Arguments for it; and thoſe we ſend up to the Houſe of Lords, for the Paſſing of this Bill: And firſt, it ſays, That Sir John Fenwick was indicted by the Teſtimony of Porter and Goodman, &c. It ſays that ſeveral Days were appointed for his Tryal; and at one of thoſe Days the Tryal had come on, if it had not been for the Diſcovery that he pretended to make; but it does not ſay it was put off at any other Days or Times, for that Reaſon: But it goes on, and ſays, he hath made ſeveral Reflections, &c. inſtead of making an ingenuous Diſcovery; and then it recites how that Goodman is withdrawn.

I would beg leave to put Gentlemen in mind of what was a great Inducement to bring this Bill in: It was ſaid, That Sir John Fenwick, and his Relations had done it; That they would prove that Goodman was withdrawn by his Means. Give me leave to ſay, That there was no Proof of it, unleſs the Hearſay of Clancy, and the Actions of my Lady Fenwick are to be Evidence, contrary to the known Laws of England, to affect this unhappy Gentlemen in the Caſe of his Life. I ſay, if any Gentlman had been of another Opinion, no doubt, he would have offered that Amendment to the Committee.

As to the Diſcovery that Sir John Fenwick hath made, it does not appear to me, whether it be true or falſe: It is one Thing to give a Vote to clear a Gentleman's Reputation, and another Thing to carry it ſo far, as to give Judgment, That the Perſon that made thoſe Reflections ſhall die, and that before any Proof of their Falſehood.

Here is an Indictment found, and here is an Evidence withdrawn, that is all I am ſatisfied in: And ſuppoſing the Perſon guilty, it is no manner of Inducement from theſe Arguments, to proceed in this extraordinary manner.

But I would conſider the Matter of the Amendment made at the Committee (of which Treaſons he the ſaid Sir John Fenwick is guilty.) I can't ſay that; and therefore I can't vote for the Bill. If he be guilty, it does not appear ſo by legal Evidence, and there I am to judge him as he appears to me an innocent Man. The Law requires two Witneſſes to convict a Man of this Crime. 'Tis the greateſt Crime, and the Law is ſo merciful, that it won't expoſe a Man to ſuch great Penalties, without demonſtrative Evidence.

The firſt Act of Parliament that requires two Witneſſes is, 1 Edward 6. The next is, 5 Edward 6. And upon that Act, give me leave to take Notice: That Act goes a little further than the Firſt; for the 5 Edward 6. does not only ſay there ſhall be two Witneſſes; but it goes on, and ſays: —— which two Witneſſes; (they are there called Accuſers, but mean the ſame Thing) ſhall be produced in Perſon before the Party at his Arraignment; and ſhall there before his Face, maintain and avow what they have to ſay. So the Parliament particularly provided, That there ſhould not only be two Witneſſes; but that they ſhould appear in proper Perſon, in open Court.

I beg leave to obſerve, That after the making of the firſt Act, in the 2 or 3 Year of Edward 6. there was an Attainder of Sir Thomas Seymour, in Parliament, without hearing of him; and that very ſelf ſame Parliament, within two Years afterwards, ſeems ſo to have reſented that Matter, that they made that Proviſion I have mentioned, in the 5 Edward 6. And to ſecure, That that ill Precedent ſhould do no harm, they put in that Clauſe. If this Act paſſes, I wiſh we do not repent in it leſs time than that Parliament did the Attainder of Sir Thomas Seymour. Let us be guided by the Reaſon, the Juſtice, and the Diſcretion of that Act; though we are not bound in our Legiſlative Capacity, by the Power of it; I can't but obſerve, that from the making of that Act, no Perſon has been attainted in any other manner, till the Duke of Monmouth. So great a Veneration has that Law always had in all Reigns, though multitude of Conſpiracies have happened in them all. I do not think it ſo material that there ſhould be two Witneſſes, as that theſe Witneſſes ſhould be heard Face to Face, and croſs examined. It hath been told you, that 'tis Natural Juſtice and Reaſon, that there ſhould be be two Witneſſes: A Gentleman asked you, where that natural Juſtice was before the Statute of Ed. 6. Sir, the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. ſays, That every Perſon that is Attainted, ſhall be provablement Attaint; and ſomewhat may be from thence inferr'd more than that the Crime ſhould be prov'd, for ſo muſt every Crime. But as to the Proof required by that Act, and the Acts of Ed. 6. all thoſe Acts, by very learned Opinions, have been thought declarative of the common Law; but that's ſcarce worth the Enquiry, ſince 'tis certain how the Law ſtands at this Day.

An honourable Gentleman took notice, That ſuch Evidence as we have had, and ſuch Proceedings as theſe, would not be reaſonable in Caſe of Impeachment; but diſtinguiſhed between that proceeding and this; but certainly, the Reaſon is the ſame: 'Tis true, the ſame Perſons that accuſe in one Caſe, give their Judgment in the other; but in each Caſe, ſuch Priviledges as are juſt and reaſonable, ought to be allowed to the Party accuſed.

I ſhall add no more, but that we are making a Precedent which can't be made without breaking through all the Fences of the Law; and when 'tis made, we know not who may ſuffer by it.

Sir Rich. Temple. As to the Evidence you have before you, I appeal to any Man, whether at the common Law, if there was but one Witneſs againſt a Man, Whether he was not at liberty of demanding Tryal by Battle? Thoſe Acts that have been made ſince, are made certainly to provide, That in no Caſe whatſoever, a Man ſhould be ſo much as accuſed without two Witneſſes of the Treaſon.

As to what hath been ſaid of the particular Evidence before you; what hath ben obſerved here, is a good Objection in the Courts below. I do not ſay it does diſable a Man from being an Evidence, becauſe he his not pardoned, but he is not ſo good an Evidence as if he was pardoned: But that I ſtand upon is this; Shall you come here and make a Precedent in this Place to condemn a Man to the higheſt Penalties, upon leſs Evidence than you will allow any Body elſe to do it? That is what was never done in Parliament before. Will you make a Precedent in Parliament, that at any Time they may bring in a Bill here, and judge a Man to Death for Treaſon upon one Evidence?

As to this Bill it ſelf, conſider what a Precedent you will make. There is nothing that any Bill was condemned for in Parliament, that is not in this Bill. All Mankind muſt perceive, That you have but one Evidence, and ſuch a one as I have told you. And whatever any Man's private Perſuaſion is, 'tis the Proof muſt govern you. Then this is a Law ex poſt Facto, and that hath always been condemned; you make that Evidence that was not ſo before. Sir, this is, beſides making a Law in a particular Caſe, againſt the common Law of England, and the Right that every Subject has. It is making a Law to hang a Man without a Tryal; 'tis making a Law here, that was introduced here upon a Pretence to make him an Evidence: Every one ſaid, That they did not ſeek his Blood, and if that be the ſecret Inducement in this Caſe, 'tis a dangerous Precedent: The Earl of Exeter, when he brought the Rack into the Tower, every Body knows the Fate that came upon him afterwards.

Let any Body ſhew me there was any Reaſon for reverſing any Act of Parliament; they are all againſt this Bill.

Then to the Neceſſity of it, I can't imagine any Thing that hath been ſaid to you upon that, is a ground for this Bill. Pray conſider firſt, how this Matter came before you; it was for an honourable Perſon's Vindication, and it was not tranſmitted to you by the King, but by the honourable Secretary: He told you, That if you had a Mind to ſee theſe Papers, and required it, he had leave to let you have them; but if it had been a Thing of this Conſequence, That the Government had been in the utmoſt Danger, Would it have been tranſmitted only at the Requeſt of a private Gentleman, and left unto you, whether you would proceed upon it or no?

But 'tis obſerved, That the Plot may go on ſtill; pray if this Gentleman he cut off, does that cure it? You are ſecure of him now, that he can't Act in it; ſo that I have not heard the leaſt ground to convince me, That the Government would be in leſs Danger, if this Gentleman was cut off.

Sir, we are told here of going according to our Conſciences; give me leave to ſay to you what was Inſtanced in the other Day, That in the worſt of Times, when they did not ſtick at murthering of the King, yet they ſtuck at this. They would not allow any Man to ſuffer upon one Witneſs: And they did not admit of Depoſitions againſt my Lord Mordent, and my Lord Mordent ſaved his Life by it.

You have depoſed King James for breaking in upon the Law; and did any Body believe that Mr. Hampden was not guilty of the Treaſon he was charged with; He owned it before this Houſe; and yet he was tryed only for Miſdemeanour, there being but one Witneſs againſt him: and they that ſtrained all other Laws, ſtuck at this, and would not violate this Law; ſo that I think there is no Neceſſity for making ſuch a Precedent, and I think it would be the worſt of Precedents.

Mr Boſcawen. I have obſerved upon this Debate, That ſome Perſons deny that 'tis juſtifiable at any Time, to proceed upon Bills of Attainder, and yet they don't diſpute the Power of Parliaments; but at the ſame Time ſay, they ought to go according to the Rules of Weſtminſter-hall.

Another ſays, 'tis the ſame Thing whether we proceed by Way of Impeachment, or Bill of Attainder; I think him much out of the Way; for in that Caſe, the Lords only are Judges, and you are the Proſecutors; and you don't uſe your legiſlative Power in that.

A worthy Friend of mine ſaid, he had often been miſtaken, in his own Conſcience; when he thought himſelf very much in the Right. That might be ſo, and if there was any room rationally to ſuppoſe, That Sir John Fenwick was not guilty, I ſhould be of Opinion to be of the more favourable Side; but I take it, there is no room for any Man to believe but he is guilty.

Now I would examine what grounds we have to believe him guilty. Upon Tryals, when they charge a Jury with a Priſoner, one Part of their Charge is to enquire, whether he fled for it or no? 'Tis notorious, That Sir John Fenwick fled for this, which is no ſmall Argument of his Guilt. Another is, That he was here at the Bar, and did not deny the Fact; if he had confeſſed it, no doubt but you would have concluded him guilty; and when he does not deny it, this is next Door to it.

It hath been told you, many Bills of Attainder have been reverſed as unjuſt; It hath been as notorious, That the Verdicts of twelve Men, and when Men have been tryed by their Peers, have been reverſed too, I will Inſtance in two or three. The firſt I begin with, was that of the Duke of Somerſet; but no Body could ſay, but he was guilty of the Fact, for he confeſſed it: But there was a powerful Enemy, the Duke of Northumberland. The next is, the Duke of Norfolk, who was attainted in Queen Elizabeth's Time; and they were not by Parliament, and yet both were reverſed. And I think, as this Matter ſtands now, ſome Gentlemen are of Opinion, by the Evidence they have heard, That he is guilty: But I think no Body hath ſaid, That it appears to him by the Evidence he hath heard, That he is Innocent. Now I deſire to know, whether every Man muſt not uſe his Conſcience to Judge, whether there be ſufficient Evidence? I acknowledge there is not ſufficient Evidence to convict him in Weſtminſter-hall; but there is more to ſatisfie my Conſcience, and the World abroad, than if Goodman was here; beſides his not denying it, you have the Evidence of the Perſons that died, who owned the ſame Thing: And I mention that, the rather, becauſe they confeſſed it to Perſons ſent from this Houſe; and did not only confeſs themſelves to be guilty, but acknowledged, That there was ſuch a Conſpiracy: and Sir William Parkins acknowledged in particular, That he was to raiſe a Troop of Horſe, and that the French were to be invited over: Is this nothing, for the legiſlative Power, that is to ſecure the Peace and Welfare of the Government?

Gentlemen ſay, there is a great deal of Danger in this Matter: Some, If you acquit him; others, if you condemn him. If you are ſatisfied he is guilty; by this Bill, you ſet up a Land-mark, that others may take care they do not come into this Predicament. On the other Hand, if you reject this Bill, you will give advantage to your Enemies; when they ſhall ſee a Man that is ſo notoriouſly concerned in calling in a French Army, the worſt of your Enemies, to be Scot-free. If he be guilty, what Danger is there of the Precedent? When a Perſon in the like Nature, that hath fled for it, that does not deny it: When living Perſons confeſs it, and dying Perſons confirm it, then there will be danger to ſuch a Perſon.

Upon the whole Matter, I think there is no Man that ever I heard That does not believe him to be guilty; and 'tis ſtrange you ſhould want Evidence, and yet every one think him guilty; and I think no Man muſt be acquitted or condemned, but according to a Man's Conſcience.

An honourable Perſon ſaid Porter was no good Witneſs: If Goodman was here, he would not be ſo much; and yet we muſt acquit him becauſe Goodman is not here: And therefore, upon the whole, I think you will give your Enemies a great Advantage, if you acquit him; and if you condemn him, you will do your ſelves right.

Mr. Cooper. Sir, being concerned in Proſecutions of this Nature without Doors, I have hitherto declined concerning my ſelf in any Debate of this Evidence, though unconcerned in the Conduct of the Evidence againſt Sir John Fenwick; but being to give my Opinion and Vote as a Judge, I ſhall crave leave to give my Senſe of this Matter.

I would beg leave in the firſt Place, to make uſe of a Diſtinction, which, I think, will ſerve to anſwer ſeveral of the Arguments that have been made uſe of: I think there are two Things to be conſidered; Firſt, his Crime, and the Proof of that Crime, and then the other Matters done by him ſubſequent, &c.

The Crime and Proof of it that hath been given againſt him at your Bar is, the ground by which, I think, before God and Man, I ought to give my Affirmative to this Bill, by which you judge him to die. What he hath done ſubſequent, convinces me in my Judgment, That we are here in a proper Method and Courſe of Proceeding againſt him; therefore let no Man ſay, That you have condemned him becauſe he hath protracted his Tryal: No, you have condemned him for having been guilty of high Treaſon, manifeſtly proved againſt him: Then let them not ſay on the other Hand, Will you condemn any Man that is at any Time guilty of high Treaſon? No; but when a Man is guilty of the worſt of Treaſons, and this would have been manifeſtly proved againſt him in the ordinary Courſe of Proceedings; but that he undertaking to atone for his Crime, and ſerve his Country, hath protracted his Tryal till one of the Evidences is gone: And then, though he pretended to have a reſerve, which he would make known to the King's Perſon, yet when he thinks he is out of the ordinary Reach of Juſtice, he ſets the Juſtice of his Country at defiance. Theſe are grounds, not why he is to die, but to juſtifie our Proceeding in this Manner.

Sir, I would beg leave in a few Words, to take notice of a few Things ſaid in this Matter; Gentlemen are afraid, That this will be made uſe of by Poſterity, to the diſadvantage of honeſt Men: And you have been told, That Precedents have begun with the Puniſhment of the guilty, and then have been carried on to the Puniſhment of thoſe that have not been ſo. 'Tis true, there hath been a very bad uſe made of very juſt Acts in relation to the Publick: But what do Gentlemen infer from that? Muſt we have no ſuch Thing as Juſtice? Muſt not the Guilty be puniſhed becauſe the ſame Methods may be made uſe of for the Puniſhing of honeſt Men?

I am not afraid of what uſe Poſterity will make of it; if there come Times of Violence when there are no Parliaments, they will not want this Precedent. There are others that have been cited, that will much more juſtifie thoſe Proceedings; nay, this may protect the Innocent: If a Bill come to be proceeded in againſt another, he may ſay, Sir John Fenwick was heard perſonally, and by his Council: That the Evidence was produced before him, and confronted with him. An Innocent Man may ſay, There was that extraordinary in his Crime, which is not in mine. He would have introduced a foreign Army, and afterwards have aggravated his Crime, by endeavouring to abuſe the King, and creating a Jealouſie between the King and his Miniſters.

Sir, in the next Place it is ſaid, That here is not legal Evidence, which I think is a Miſtake: And ſay ſome, Though here is an Evidence that really convinces them in their Conſciences (I am not aſhamed to make uſe of that Word) yet they are not for paſſing this Bill, becauſe there is not a legal Evidence: With Submiſſion, that is a Miſtake; before 1 Ed. 6. one Witneſs was a good Evidence in high Treaſon; but there was variety of Opinions touching Treaſon before that Time; but neither the 1 nor 5 Ed. 6. in the Penning or Wording of them, nor in the Reaſon of them, were intended to extend to the High Court of Parliament; ſo that, for ought that hath been ſaid, though one Witneſs corroborated by Circumſtances, as this Caſe is, and the Confeſſion of the Party, would not be legal Evidence below; yet, with ſubmiſſion, it is a legal Evidence in Parliament, even according to the ſtrict Rules of Law, becauſe no Law hath made two Witneſſes requiſite in this Caſe; ſo that 'tis a convincing Evidence: I think it may be juſtified to be a legal Evidence, and as it convinces me that I can't reſiſt the belief of it, I muſt be for this Bill; notwithſtanding what ſome Gentlemen have ſaid, by Way of endeavouring to explode Conſcience as a Rule not to walk by in this Caſe. One Inſtance given againſt it was, becauſe a Hangman has not a diſcretionary Power to execute a Man according to his Conſcience, and put him to what ſort of Death he pleaſes; as if we had not a better and more legal and diſcretionary Power in the High Court of Parliament, than the Hangman has.

But we are told of ſeveral Inſtances, where mad, and hair-brain'd Men have made uſe of their Conſcience, to palliate their Extravagancies: No doubt it hath; and let me tell you, Religion hath been made uſe of, as a pretence to the worſt of Villanies in all Ages; and yet I hope they will not argue that there ought to be no Religion neither, for a Guide to Men's Actions.

When Men come to be Judges, I would know what Rule they can have better than a ſedate, well informed Conſcience? Below, when a legal Evidence is given; yet the Jury are not bound to go by that legal Evidence; they are, when they have heard it, Judges of the Fact, and are to go by no other Rule, than what is ridiculed here, even the Rule of their own Conſcience.

It was ſaid early in the Debate by a Member of great Reputation; That this (except Monmouth's Caſe) is the firſt Precedent of a Bill of Attainder, that began in this Houſe. It ſeems the antient Way was, for the Lords to give the Witneſſes their Oaths, and when they thought fit, they ſent down a Bill, and the Commons were to proceed upon it: But I think, with ſubmiſſion, this is a much better Way; and I had much rather give my Conſent upon hearing convincing Evidence, and that the Party has nothing to ſay for himſelf, than upon any Bill tranſmitted from the Lords; and no other Evidence, than that they thought fit to paſs it.

Some Gentlemen have ſet a great Weight, or rather miſtaken the Argument: Say they, Sir John Fenwick is not a Man ſo conſiderable as to endanger the Government. Admit that thoſe that have ſpoke for the Bill, have not made that uſe of the Argument; but this is that I lay my finger upon in particular; 'tis plain he was to be General, and knew a great many of the Officers. I am ſatisfied he hath not made that Atonement to his injured Country, that he ought to have done. I am ſatisfied that unleſs this Bill proceed ſteadily againſt him, you will have none of that Diſcovery——

[Here he was interrupted by the Noiſe of ſome Gentlemen, ſhewing diſſatisfaction at that Way of Arguing.]

Mr. Cooper proceeds. Don't let Gentlemen pervert this Argument, and ſay, Will you hang a Man if he don't confeſs? No; but when I have heard Proof, that he is guilty of the worſt of Treaſons, and hath aggravated his Crime in that manner which he hath done, he deſerves to die; unleſs he will merit his Life by a Diſcovery of what he knows. I think it of the higheſt Importance to you, that can be, that you ſhould come to the further Knowledge of the other Branch of the Conſpiracy; the Meeting of the French King's Forces in England. I think you are in a proper Method, and perhaps may have a better Iſſue of this Bill than his Death: But if not, he will but pay the Debt, which he owes to the Juſtice of his Country.

Mr. Paget. Sir, I can't believe but I ſhall be heard, as to the little I have to ſay, with ſome uneaſineſs, after ſo long a Debate. But, Sir, ſince I did take the Liberty to give my Opinion, why I was againſt this Bill before; I think it as reaſonable to give you my Reaſons, why I don't ſtand convinced by the Arguments I have yet heard. And that I may the better give you my Reaſons, I ſhall, as well as I can remember, repeat ſome of the Arguments that have been urged for the Paſſing of it.

If I miſtake not, ſome of the Arguments have run upon the Power and Prerogative of Parliaments; ſome upon what was proper Evidence in this high Court of Parliament, other than what would be in other Places; others upon the Extraordinarineſs of the Occaſion.

As to the Firſt of theſe Arguments; ſince Gentlemen much more experienced in Rules of Parliament, do not think fit to deliver their private Opinion, what Rules Parliaments may in Reaſon be ſuppoſed to have; I ſhall not ſay any Thing to that.

As to the Arguments of what Evidence ſhall be ſufficient to adjudge a Man to Death in this Houſe: I confeſs, I ſhall at all Times be very careful, how I give my Opinion in Matters of Life and Death; becauſe I think the greateſt Caution is to be uſed in that Caſe. And for this Reaſon, I can't conſent to give my Opinion in one Caſe, that I ſhall think fit to retract in any Caſe afterwards.

If I underſtand the Meaning of the Houſe, 'tis not in favour to Sir John Fenwick himſelf, that Gentlemen oppoſe this Bill; but for fear of uſhering in a Precedent, that may be made uſe of againſt a better Man.

I confeſs, here is a worthy Member that ſpake laſt, ſaid ſomething in his Argument that hath ſome weight with me. I did apprehend by the general Debate of the Houſe, That the Parliament had no Rules at all, but what they would fix to themſelves; But I have a great Regard for his Opinion. But if he ſays true, The Evidence before you is not legal Evidence in Weſtminſter-hall; but 'tis legal Evidence according to the Rules of Proceeding in the high Court of Parliament: But I think truly, if they may be preſumed to have any Rules to go by, nothing is ſo plain to me, as that a Rule of their own of ſo late date, as the Act for regulating Tryals in Caſes of Treaſon, ſhould be a Rule to them: And 'tis ſaid in that Act, That after ſuch a Day, no Perſon ſhall be brought to Tryal in any Caſe of Treaſon, &c. but he ſhall be condemned upon the Evidence of two Witneſſes; and I muſt needs ſay, that Act that was paſſed laſt Seſſions, is ſo much for the Liberty of the People of England, that I think it will be very hard to repeal that ſubſtantial Part of the Law ſo ſoon after it was made.

As to the Extraordinarineſs of the Caſe, I am ſenſible what ſtreſs hath been laid on that Argument, as if the Strength of this Government did in ſome Meaſure depend upon your Diſpoſal of this Matter one Way or the other; and ſince that is the Caſe, I ſhall ſpeak tenderly of it; for I do as much abhor Acts of Treaſon againſt the Government, as any Man that hath ſpoke for this Bill: I think, as the Crime is to be diſtinguiſhed from all others, as being a more than ordinary Crime; ſo I think the Perſon that is concerned, muſt be extraordinary: And I think, with ſubmiſſion, there is ſome difference between Principals and Seconds in an Act of Treaſon. When you can't come at a Man being the Head of a Rebellion, it may be reasonable to proceed by Bill of Attainder: but I think 'tis not to be used upon all Occasions, or when you may come at a Person another Way; which I think, is the Case of this Gentleman. I am of Opinion, that there does not depend more upon Sir John Fenwick now, than when he was first taken. Why he was not tryed, I shall not examine the Reason; I suppose it was because he gave some Assurance of his Confession: truly, I have heard no other Reason for proceeding against him now, but those Papers which have been adjudged scandalous, and are so to all intents and purposes, I do think truly: But the Liberty of the People of England is very much concerned in the Revocation of that Act, which was promoted for the Liberty of the People; and none of the Arguments that have been used can convince me, That I ought to give Judgment upon less Evidence than is provided by that Act.

Man

Mr. Sloane. Sir, I hardly thought I should have needed to have troubled you with my Thoughts in this Matter, but that this honourable Gentleman that spake last, has gone so far in his Reason, as to speak to Matter of Law; he seems to extenuate the Fault of Sir John Fenwick; and gives it as a Reason why he should not be attainted by this Bill, for that he was none of the Principals but only an Accessary; there is no Gentleman of the Gown, but will tell you, That there is no Accessaries in Cases of Treason, but they are all Principals, and equally guilty; and there is no Evidence in this Case to make him Accessary, but he is either Principal or nothing.

When I have made this Observation, give me leave to tell you my own Thoughts; as every Man is to be saved by his own Faith, so may my Salvation depend, upon my Opinion according to my Conscience in this Matter, which is for passing this Bill.

The last Time I gave you my Reasons why I was for this Bill; and yet I have not heard them answered, though a Gentleman said I answered my self; but I will state the Case, and desire him to reply to me. I did say then, Sir, and do so again, That I do not think those scandalous Papers any Reason to provoke you to pass this Bill; and I do think, if he should be threatned, it would be a Blemish upon his Confession. Another Thing I put out of the Case, That he is a Man so dangerous to the Government, that if he escape, we are all undone. I do take him, that in his Person, Interest and Friends, he is not so; and would not have that be a Motive for the passing of this Bill: But take it upon the Evidence that is before us, and in the Nature of our Proceedings; Then I will say, we have great Reason to proceed upon this Bill, for the Preservation of the Government, and for this Reason; whereas it is insisted on one side, That here are the Laws and Liberties of England at Stake, and no Body knows whose Case it may be next. Sir, if we don't go upon good Grounds and Reasons, that we don't fear any Bodies following, God forbid we should make this a Precedent: But pray turn the Tables on the other side, and see what the Case will be; that here is a Gentleman that every Body of the House does believe guilty; that he hath been in a Conspiracy to bring in the French, and depose the King; and the Man came before us, and we had no Power to reach him; What will be the Precedent on the other Side? It will be easie to take off one of the Witnesses by Men of great Estates, and then there is no coming at them, even by the Parliament themselves: This Parliament was of Opinion, That they could not come at Sir John Fenwick, though they were of Opinion that he was guilty.

But now, Sir, to that which is the Question, 'Tis allowed by every Body, you may do what you please; but without straining your legislative Power, I shall offer my Thoughts and Reasons for it, upon these three Points; That the Fact is Treason; that he is plainly guilty; and that we have a plain Jurisdiction in this Case, in the ordinary Methods and Proceedings of Parliament.

Sir, the Fact is Treason, the Meeting at several Times, and conspiring, and consulting to bring in a french Power to depose the King: You have been told by several Persons, and the Council at the Bar, That such Meetings without some other Overt-Act, is not Treason; but I affirm, the contrary, for that is an Overt-Act of compassing the Death of the King; and Sir Bartholomew Shower, who did insist upon it at the Bar, did otherwise act his Part upon it at the Tryal of Mr. Cook; for he offered it at first, but afterwards he deserted it as a Thing he could not stand upon; for 'tis the Opinion of all the Judges, upon a late Resolution.

Then, Sir, the Fact being Treason, is no Act ex post Facto. We are not making that Treason which was not so, but we are only judging of the Fact that was Treason before; though if it was a doubt whether it was Treason or no, the Parliament hath a Power by 25 Ed. 3. to judge that Treason, that the Courts below have no Power of.

The next Thing is, Whether there be sufficient Evidence of his Treason before us? I will put out of the Case, as no conclusive Evidence at all, what Goodman hath said upon his Oath (further than that there was such a Witness that did and could swear such a Thing, and that he was examined before the Jury;) and this I will take upon me to say; (and I will give my Reason for my Opinion) That the Parliament is not obliged to two Witnesses by any Law now in being.

It hath been told you, That from the Time of Ed. 3. one Witness was sufficient till the Statute of Ed. 6. Now I will prove to you, from the Statute of Phil. and Mary, That by the common Law, and all the Time between the Reign of Ed. 3. and Ed. 6. one Witness was sufficient for this Treason. For that Statute of Phil. and Mary does say, That any Person that shall bring from beyond Sea, any false and counterfeit Coin, or be accused or impeached of any Offence concerning the Impairing, Counterfeiting, or Forging of any Coin current within this Realm, shall, and may be indicted, arraigned, convicted, or attainted by such-like Evidence, and in such-like Manner as was accustomed before the first Year of K. Ed. 6. Now, What was the Reason of that Statute before the Statute of Ed. 6.? Those Counterfeits were to be tryed by one Witness; and therefore at this Day all the Counterfeiters, and Utterers of false Coin, have been attainted by one Witness.

'Tis said again, That there is the Law of Nations, and the Law of God to the contrary, Gentlemen have said several Times already, That in Murther and Felony, one Witness is sufficient, which saving some little Parts of the Judgment as to the Forfeiture and Attainting of the Blood, is the same Penalties. We are not in the Land where that Law was in Force; for by that Law, as to common common Felons, there was Reſtitution only: But I would put a Gentleman that ſits by the Bar this Caſe, by the ſame Law of Deuteronomy and Numbers, that he hath quoted; Adultery is Death: Will you be contented, that That ſhould be ſo here? They are either all of them in Force, or none of them in Force?

I do ſay, That by the Statute of Ed. 3. and ever after till the Statute of Ed. 6. one Witneſs was ſufficient to convict any Man of Treaſon. And I do ſay; That the Statutes of Ed. 6. does not conclude the Parliament from any Method of ptoceedings.

The Statute ſays, That no Man ſhall be indicted, &c. nor ſhall they proceed upon ſuch Indictment; from which Words in the Statute, I do plainly make it appear to any Gentleman that will read it, 'Tis confined only to the Courts of Weſtminſter-hall: For certainly, you can't call a Bill of Attainder, to be a Proceeding upon an Indictment. What I ſay, is only to diſcharge my own Conſcience, and to ſalve the tender Conſciences of them that hear me; and therefore, I deſire them never to ſay, That there ought to be two Witneſſes, before they anſwer what I have ſaid upon that Statute.

Then, Sir, you have need but of one Witneſs, and you have had Capt. Porter before you; who, I think, nothwithſtanding all that hath been ſaid, is a credible Witneſs. A Gentleman made ſome Objections to his Credit, and told you, he was not to be believed, becauſe he was in the ſame Conſpiracy, and had been in ſuch a villainous Action: But, Sir, the ſame Gentleman hath often confined you to the Rules of Weſtminſter-hall; and he hath told you, 'Tis a wrong Place here, and that a Man has not ſo good a Tryal here, as in Weſtminſter-hall. Why? the Thing that was ſpoke of, of his being concerned in the Aſſaſſination, and of his being a fellow Conſpirator with them, which is now urged as an Objection before you, is no Objection in Weſtminſter-hall?

I would only take notice of another Objection this Gentleman made to the Witneſs, which he ſaid he had from the Bar; which was, That Capt. Porter was not pardoned, and he was now drudging for his Pardon; but that is ſo far from what ought to be quoted, that he that ſaid it, ought to be reprimanded for it.

He made another Objection againſt his being a good Witneſs, and compared it to the Caſe of an Hundredor; but he did not remember, that the Man that was robbed is a good Witneſs; and the Reaſon is, becauſe of the Neceſſity of the Thing, and that no others can be; and the Defendant in an Hundred can't be a Witneſs, becauſe there may be others; and that is the Reaſon of this Caſe.

And for the Precedents in Richard 3d's and Henry 4th's Time, no Gentleman can inſiſt upon them conſidering the difference of the Crown, and the one Attainted the other; and they were not reverſed upon the Point of Juriſdiction, but becauſe of the different Rights of the Kings; and no Body had pretended to Anſwer the Caſe of the Regicides, they were not left to the Law; I mean ſuch as were actually Tryed before the Parliament: But the Parliament paſſed different Judgments on them; and ſome of them were in Cuſtody. What was told you of Cromwell's Caſe and others, they go upon the ſame Reaſon; That they were not heard though they were in Cuſtody.

Col. Wharton. A Gentleman lately told you, we had lately paſſed an Act for Tryals in Caſes of Treaſon, and how we are in this Proceeding, about doing ſomething that is contrary to it; that is a Thing that would ſtick with me, if I could not anſwer it, but I appeal to every Gentleman in this Houſe, whether that Act hath any ſort of Relation to Tryals in Parliament; for that is only to direct the Courts in Weſtminſter-Hall.

I have only this to ſay, I think the Evidence very full before you; I think you have had one very good Witneſs, and the Council for the Priſoner, had liberty to confront him: If he had not been guilty, the Priſoner at the Bar would have deny'd it; I am convinced of the Truth of it, and my Conſcience is to make a Judgment upon it, and that is all we can go by here.

Mr. Jefferys. A worthy Gentleman of the long Robe hath taken Pains to find out Precedents to juſtifie our Proceedings; and another ſays there is no Act to circumſcribe our Proceedings; but ſince Gentlemen differ ſo much, it gives me a great deal of Caution. This I know, there is a Law of the Land, by which Perſons ought to be governed: I take this to be an extraordinary Method of Proceedings, and I hope the Lords will take more Care of the Matter, than the Commons.

Mr. Edward Harley. Sir, I can't ſatisfie my ſelf to be for this Bill, and in a few Words, I ſhall give my Reaſon for it: It hath been ſaid, That the Parliament is unlimited; I do agree that we are not tied to the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall; I ſhall only mention the Reaſon why two Witneſſes are required in Caſes of High-Treaſon. If any will look into the Hiſtory of England, they will find it hath been often the Deſign of the Crown, to trump up Plots upon the Subject; and therefore theſe Acts took particular Care there ſhould be two Witneſſes to prove the Fact; this is the Reaſon of the Law, and I think, upon it the Liberty of the Subject is founded, and therefore I can't be for this Bill.

Then the Queſtion for paſſing this Bill was put, and the Houſe divided.

The TRYAL of Captain THOMAS VAUGHAN.

Die Sabbati, triceſimo primo Octobris, Annoque Regni Regis Willhelmi Octavo, Annoque Domini. 1696.

The Court being ſate, at which were preſent, Sir Charles Hedges, Judge of the High Court of Admiralty, the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, the Lord Chief Juſtice Treby, the Lord Chief Baron Ward, Mr. Juſtice Turton, and others of his Majeſties Commiſſioners. The Court proceeded on this manner.

Cl. of Arr. MAKE Proclamation.

Cryer. O Yes, O yes, O yes. All manner of Perſons that have any Thing more to do, &c. and were adjourned to this Hour, draw near, and give your Attendance. God ſave the King.

Then the Grand Jury were called over, and the Appearances mark'd. And Witneſſes being Sworn in Court to give Evidence to them, againſt Thomas Vaughan, they withdrew to hear the ſame.

Then the Keeper of Newgate was ordered to bring his Priſoner Thomas Vaughan to the Bar. (Which he did.)

Cl. of Arr. Tho. Vaughan, Hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Thou ſtandeſt Indicted, &c.

How ſay'ſt thou, Tho. Vaughan, Art thou guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, or not guilty?

T. Vaughan. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Culprit, How wilt thou be try'd?

T. Vaughan. By God, and this Country.

Cl. of Arr. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

And then the Court proceeded to the Tryal of the Pirates, and gave notice to Mr. Vaughan to prepare for his Tryal on Friday next, the 6th of November, 1696.

Die Veneris, ſexto Novembris. Annoque Regni Regis Willhelmi Octavo, Annoque Domini, 1696.

Cl. of Arr. CRYER, make Proclamation.

Cryer. O Yes, O yes, O yes, All manner of Perſons that have any Thing more to do at this Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer, adjourned over to this Day, draw near and give your Attendance. And you Sheriffs of the City of London, return the Precepts to you directed, upon Pain and Peril which will fall thereupon.

Then the under Sheriff returned the Precepts.

Cl. of Arr. Make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes, You good Men of the City of London, ſummoned to appear this Day, to try between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Priſoner at the Bar, anſwer to your Names, as you ſhall be called, every one at the firſt Call, and ſave your Iſſues.

The whole Pannel was called over, and the Appearances of thoſe that anſwered, recorded, and the Defaulters were again called over.

Mr. Phipps. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to order, that two Men may be brought from the Marſhalſea, in the behalf of the Priſoner?

L. C. J. Holt. You ſhall have an Order.

Then the Court went on the Tryal of the Six Pirates, and after the Tryal was over, Thomas Vaughan was called to the Bar.

T. Vaughan. My Lord, my Irons are very uneaſie to me, I deſire they may be taken off.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, ay, take them off.

Mr. Phipps. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, we have ſome doubts as to the Indictment.

L. C. J. Holt. If you have any Exceptions, you ought to have made them before the Priſoner pleaded to it.

Mr. Phipps. I thought you had allowed it, my Lord, in former Caſes.

L. C. J. No, we did not allow it as of Right due to the Priſoner; the Exceptions ſhould have been made before the Plea. You were indulg'd in being heard at firſt in the Caſes of Rookwood, Cranburne, and Lowick, but it was not the Intent of the Act, to alter the Method of the Proceeding; and ſo upon conſideration hath it been determined. The Priſoner hath Time given by the the Act to make any Exception to the Indictment before he pleaded, but you may move what you will afterwards in Arreſt of Judgment, if it be material.

Cl. of Arr. Thomas Vaughan, Thoſe Men that you ſhall hear called, and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon Tryal of Life and Death; if therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to ſpeak unto them as they come to the Book to be ſworn, before they be ſworn.

Mr. Phipps. There was one Man here that deſired to be excuſed, becauſe he was on the Grand Jury; therefore it ſeems there are ſome returned upon this Jury that were on the Grand Jury, which I think ought not to be.

L. C. J. Challenge them then.

Mr. Phipps. We do not know the Men.

Then the Pannel was called over, and a great many Challenges made, and the Twelve Men that were Sworn, were theſe.

Edward Leeds	Caleb Hook
Nath. Green	Joceline Roberts
Hen. Sherbrook	Tho. Parker
Jo. Sherbrook	Peter Gray
Tho. Emms	Roger Poſton
Peter Parker	——Woolley.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, Make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes, If any one can inform my Lords, the King's Juſtices and the King's Serjeant, the King's Attorney-General, the King's Advocate, in his High Court of Admiralty, before this Inqueſt be taken of the High-Treaſon, whereof Thomas Vaughan, the Priſoner at the Bar, ſtands indicted, let them come forth, and they ſhall be heard, for now the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands upon his Deliverance; and all others that are bound by Recognizance to give Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, let them come forth and give their Evidence, or elſe they forfeit their Recognizance.

Cl. of Arr. Thomas Vaughan, Hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) You that are ſworn, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Cauſe. He ſtands Indicted by the Name of Thomas Vaughan.

Whereas, That before and until the 8th Day of July, in the 7th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord King William III. there was open War between our ſaid Lord the King, and Lewis the French King. And that the ſaid War continued on the ſaid 8th Day of July, in the 7th Year aforeſaid, and doth ſtill continue. And that for all the Time aforeſaid, the ſaid Lewis the French King and his Subjects, were, and at preſent are Enemies of our ſaid Lord the King that now is: And that at the Time of the ſaid War, and before the ſaid 8th Day of July in the 7th Year aforeſaid, the ſaid Lewis the French King, ſet out, amongſt others, a certain ſmall Ship of War called the Loyal Clencarty, of which Thomas Vaughan, a Subject of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, was Commander, with ſeveral French Subjects, Enemies of our ſaid Lord the King, to the Number of 15 Perſons, in a Warlike manner to take and deſtroy the Ships, Goods, and Moneys of our ſaid Lord the King, and his Subjects, and againſt our ſaid Lord the King, to wage War upon the High-Seas, within the Juriſdiction of the Admiralty of England. And that at the Time of the ſaid War between our ſaid Lord the King, and the aforeſaid Lewis the French King, Tho. Vaughan, late of Galloway, in the Kingdom of Ireland, Mariner, being a Subject of our ſaid now Lord the King, as a falſe Rebel againſt the ſaid King his Supreme Lord, and not having the Fear of God before his Eyes, nor conſidering the Duty of his Allegiance, but being moved and ſeduced by the inſtigation of the Devil, and altogether withdrawing the cordial Love, and true and due Obedience which every true and faithful Subject of our ſaid Lord the King, ought, by Law, to have towards the ſaid King; and the ſaid War, as much as in him lay, againſt our ſaid Lord the King, deſigning and intending to proſecute and aſſiſt. The ſaid Tho. Vaughan on the ſaid 8th Day of July in the ſaid 7th Year of the King, being a Soldier aboard the Ship of War called the Loyal Clencarty, in the Service of the ſaid Lewis the French King, And being then on the High-Seas, within the Juriſdiction of the Admiralty of England, about Fourteen Leagues from Deal, did then and there by Force and Arms, falſely, maliciouſly, wickedly, and traiterouſly, aid, help, and aſſiſt the Enemies of our ſaid Lord the King, in the Ship of War called the Loyal Clencarty. And afterwards the ſaid Thomas Vaughan, in the Execution and Performance of his ſaid aiding, helping, and aſſiſting, maliciouſly, falſely, and traiterouſly ſailed a Cruiſing to ſeveral Maritime Places within the Juriſdiction aforeſaid, by Force and Arms to take the Ships, Goods, and Money of our ſaid Lord the King, and his Subjects, againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, the Peace of our ſaid Lord the King, and alſo againſt a Statute in that Caſe made and provided.

And the ſaid Jurors for our ſaid Lord the King, upon their ſaid Oaths, farther repreſent, That the aforeſaid Thomas Vaughan, as a falſe Traytor againſt our ſaid Lord the King, further deſigning, practiſing, and, with his whole Strength, intending the common Peace and Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to diſturb. And War and Rebellion againſt the ſaid King upon the High-Seas within the Juriſdiction of the Admiralty of England, to move, ſtir up, and procure. And the ſaid Lord the King, from the Title, Honour, Royal Name, and Imperial Crown of his Kingdom of England, and Dominions upon the High-Seas, to depoſe and deprive, and miſerable ſlaughter of the Subjects of the ſaid Lord the King, of this Kingdom of England, upon the High-Seas, and within the Juriſdiction aforeſaid, to cauſe and procure, on the ſaid 8th Day of July, in the ſaid 7th Year of the King, upon the High-Seas, about Fourteen Leagues from Deal, and within the Dominion of the Crown of England, and within the Juriſdiction of the Admiralty of England aforeſaid, falſely, maliciouſly, deviliſhly, and treacherouſly by Force and Arms, with divers others falſe Rebels and Traytors, (to the Jurors unknown) War againſt our ſaid now Lord the King, prepared, promoted, levyed, and waged. And that the ſaid Thomas Vaughan in performance of his ſaid War and Rebellion, then and there by Force and Arms, maliciouſly, wickedly, and openly aſſembled and joined himſelf with ſeveral other falſe Traytors and Rebels (to the Jurors unknown) to the Number of Fifteen Perſons, being Armed and Provided in a Warlike Manner, with Guns and other Arms, as well offenſive as defenſive. And the ſaid Thomas Vaughan, then and there being aboard the ſaid Ship of War, called the Loyal Clencarty, aſſembled with the other falſe Rebels and Traytors as aforeſaid, maliciouſly, wickedly and trayterouſly ſailed a Cruiſing to ſeveral Maritime Places, with the aforeſaid Ship of War, called the Loyal Clencarty, with an intent to take, ſpoil, and carry away the Ships, Goods, and Money, of our ſaid Lord the King, and his Subjects, by Force and Arms, upon the High and open Seas, within the Juriſdiction aforeſaid; againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, the Peace of our ſaid Lord the King, his Crown and Dignities; and likewiſe againſt the Form of a Statute in this Caſe made and provided.

Thomas Noden, } Jurors.
Samuel Oldham, }

Upon this Indictment he hath been Arraigned, and upon his Arraignment he hath pleaded not guilty, and for his Tryal he hath put himſelf upon God and his Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is to enquire whether he be guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty. If you find him guilty, you are to enquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements he had at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince. If you find him not guilty, you are to enquire whether he fled for it. If you find that he fled for it, you are to enquire of his Goods and Chattels as if you had found him guilty. If you find him not guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to ſay ſo, and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Whitaker. May it pleaſe you, my Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, The Priſoner at the Bar, Thomas Vaughan, ſtands indicted for High-Treaſon, That whereas on the 9th of July, there was a War between his Majeſty the King of England, and Lewis the French King; amongſt other War-like Preparations, that the French King did make, he did ſet forth a Ship called the Loyal Clencarty; That the Priſoner at the Bar, as a falſe Traytor, did liſt himſelf aboard this Ship; And on the High Seas, about Eleven Leagues from Deal, did traiterouſly aid the King's Enemies, to take the King's Ships. This is ſaid to be againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, and the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. He ſtands further Indicted, for that he, the ſaid Thomas Vaughan, with ſeveral other falſe Traytors, did levy War, and Arm themſelves with Arms, Offenſive and Defenſive, and was cruiſing on the High-Seas, off of Deal, with an Intent to take the King's Ships, and to kill and deſtroy the King's Subjects, againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, and the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. To this Indictment he has pleaded not guilty. We ſhall call our Witneſſes, and prove the Fact, and doubt not but you will do your Duty.

Dr. Littleton. Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard the Indictment opened, and alſo what ſort of Crime the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands charged with, viz. That he being a Subject of the Crown of England, has, together with his Accomplices, armed himſelf in a Military Way, to murther and deſtroy his fellow-Subjects, and as much as in him lay, to ruin his Native Country, by ruining the Trade and Traffick, which is the great Support and Riches of the Nation. And that his Crime might be conſummate, he, with his Accomplices, has done what in him lay, to dethrone, and diſpoſſeſs his ſacred Majeſty, as well knowing it was in vain to expect to make the Nation unhappy, as long as we enjoy ſo great and good a Prince. So that you are to look on the Priſoner as an Enemy and Traytor to his own Country; and not only ſo, but as one of the worſt and moſt dangerous Enemies: Since he being a Subject of theſe Iſlands, was the better able to ſpy out our Weakneſſes and Defects, and thereby to do us the greater Miſchief. It is not to be expreſs'd what Ruin and Deſolation it would have cauſed to this Nation, had this Man and his Accomplices brought their wicked Intentions to effect; and all this was done to aid and aſſiſt the Grand Enemy of Chriſtendom; and of our own Country in particular, the French King. Therefore as you are Lovers of your King and Country, and your fellow-Subjects, whom the Priſoner and his Accomplices would have deſtroyed; I am ſure you will take care to do the Nation Juſtice, and that he be brought to condign Puniſhment. Gentlemen, there is one Thing further that I muſt not omit, viz. That the Priſoner at the Bar being in Cuſtody for theſe very Crimes about a Twelve-month ſince, did not think fit to truſt to his Innocency, nor to his pretended French Extraction, but the Day before he was to be Tryed, he thought fit to break Priſon, withdraw from Juſtice, and run his Country: Which though not a Confeſſion and full Proof, yet is a great Evidence of his Guilt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoner at the Bar, Thomas Vaughan, ſtands Indicted for two Sorts of Treaſon. The one is for levying War againſt the King, the other is for aiding and abetting the King's Enemies. And to prove the firſt, the levying of War, we ſhall prove that he was a Captain of a French Ship, call'd the Granado of St. Maloes, and that with that Ship, he took and carried away many of his Majeſty's Subjects, and took ſeveral Merchant Ships, and carried them to France. We ſhall likewiſe prove that he was Captain of another French Ship, called the Loyal Clencarty, with which he was cruiſing off of Deal, where we had ſeveral Ships lying at the ſame Time: And there he being on Board the ſaid Ship Clencarty, was taken Priſoner, with a Commiſſion, by which he was conſtituted Captain of the Loyal Clencarty, under the Hand of Lewis the French King.

And to prove him aiding and abetting to the King's Enemies, we ſhall prove againſt him this particular Fact; that he and his Accomplices did in the Year 1692, come to London, and went to Tower-Wharf, to enquire what Veſſels were ready to go down the River; and there was one laden with Piece Goods, and he put himſelf, and ſeveral other of his Accomplices into this Veſſel, to go down the River; but they had contrived the Matter, and brought it ſo to paſs, that they fell on thoſe Men who had the Government of the Ship, and carried away this Veſſel to France. Now if this be true, the Priſoner is certainly guilty of aiding the King's Enemies: And to prove he was guilty of this, we will prove to you, that even in France, where he was at perfect Liberty, he owned he was the Contriver of all this, and that he had a thouſand Pound for his Share of what was taken from our Merchants. If we prove theſe two Facts againſt him, I doubt not but you will find him guilty. We will call our Witneſſes.

Cl. of Arr. T. Eglington, Rich. Crouch, Samuel Oldham, John Bub, Noden (Who appeared, and were ſworn.)

T. Vaughan. With Submiſſion to your Lordſhips, and the honourable Bench, I beg that they may be put aſunder, out of hearing of one another.

L. C. J. Let it be ſo, though you cannot inſiſt upon it as your Right, but only a Favour that we may grant.

Mr. Cowper. Set up Richard Crouch. Is your Name Richard Crouch?

R. Crouch. Yes, Sir.

Mr

Mr. Cowper. Give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what you know of the Ship Coventry taking of the Clancarty, and what you know concerning the Priſoner at the Bar in taking of her.

R. Crouch. We weighed our Anchor about four a Clock.

Mr. Cowper. Where were you?

R. Crouch. At the Nore.

Mr. Cowper. In what Ship?

R. Crouch. The Coventry. After we had been under Sail a matter of an Hour, we came to an Anchor with a little Wind; ſo, Sir, this Thomas Vaughan met with a Couple of Pinks, they were ſmall Veſſels that he deſigned to take; but he ſaw us, and ſo lay by all Night.

Mr. Cowper. Who lay by?

R. Crouch. Thomas Vaughan, the Priſoner at the Bar.

Mr. Cowper. In what Veſſel was he?

R. Crouch. In a Two-and-twenty-Oar Barge, he lay by at the Gunfleet; the next Morning we weighed Anchor at Day-light; we ſaw him, and chaſed after him; and we made them, and he made us, and we made what haſte we could, and coming up we fired a Gun at him, and then we fir'd another, and then he went aſhore.

Mr. Cowper. What, do you mean that he run his Veſſel on the Sands?

R. Crouch. Yes, and then we fired another Gun at him, and then he got off again; and then we fired another Gun, and could not bring him to, and then he got off the Sands again; and when we came up to him, we Manned our Long-Boat, and Pinnace, and Barge, and had him at laſt. When he came on Board, he ſaid I cannot deny but I am an Iriſh-man, and that my Deſign was to burn the Ships at the Nore.

Mr. Cowper. Did he himſelf confeſs it?

R. Crouch. Yes he did, that is the Man, I know him well enough.

L. C. J. When you took him, in what Ship was you?

R. Crouch. In the Coventry.

L. C. J. Out of what Ship was he taken?

R. Crouch. The Two-and-twenty-Oar Barge.

L. C. J. What Ship did it belong to?

R. Crouch. I reckon it was my Lord Barclay's Barge.

L. C. J. Who did it belong to then?

R. Crouch. To the King of France.

L. C. J. What Company was there in her, how many Men had ſhe aboard?

R. Crouch. About five and twenty Hands.

Mr. Cowper. Did you ever hear him ſay any Thing of a Commiſſion he had?

R. Crouch. I heard he had a French Commiſſion, but I did not ſee it.

Mr. Cowper. Did you hear him ſay any Thing of it?

R. Crouch. No.

Mr. Cowper. But he told you his Deſign was to burn the Ships at the Nore?

R. Crouch. Yes.

Mr. Cowper. What Ships?

R. Crouch. The Engliſh Ships; there were ſeveral Ships there then.

L. C. J. Were there no Frenchmen aboard the Barge.

R. Crouch. No, that I can tell.

Mr. Lechmere. From whence did he come, from England, or France?

R. Crouch. From Calice in France.

L. C. J. Prithee hear me, this Two-and-twenty-Oar-Barge, did it belong to any other Ship?

R. Crouch. No, not that I can tell.

L. C. J. Did he call that Veſſel the Loyal Clancarty?

R. Crouch. Yes, my Lord.

Then Edmund Courtney was called.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Courtney, pray tell my Lord and the Jury what you know of the going away of a Cuſtom-Houſe Boat?

Ed. Courtney. I will tell you, if you pleaſe.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, I think they ought not to examine to that, becauſe it is not laid in the Indictment. The carrying away of the Cuſtom-Houſe Barge is not mentioned in the Indictment, and by the new Act for regulating Tryals in Caſes of Treaſon, no Evidence is to be admitted or given of any Overt-Act, that is not expreſsly laid in the Indictment.

L. C. J. Nothing elſe? Suppoſe a Man be indicted for levying War againſt the King, or adhering to the King's Enemies, can't they prove any Act that makes out a levying of War, or an Adherence to the King's Enemy?

Mr. Phipps. With Submiſſion, not by that Act, my Lord, unleſs it be laid in the Indictment.

L. C. J. Levying of War is the Treaſon; may they not prove that levying of War, without being confined to any ſpecial or particular Act?

Mr. Phipps. With Submiſſion, by the 25 of Edward the III. Levying of War, as well as imagining the Death of the King, muſt have the Overt-Acts, that are to prove it, expreſs'd in the Indictment.

L. C. J. Levying War is an Overt-Act.

Mr. Soll. Gen. The Buſineſs of Overt-Acts is, where the Compaſſing and Imagining the King's Death is a Crime and Queſtion, and this muſt be diſcovered by Overt-Acts. But if Treaſon be falſifying of the King's Money, this is Treaſon, but there can be no Overt-Act of that, for that is an Overt-Act it ſelf; but there muſt be an Overt-Act to prove the Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King, and in no other Sort of Treaſon.

L. C. J. Levying of War that is an Overt-Act, ſo is Adhering to the King's Enemies. Now Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King is not an Overt-Act in it ſelf, but is a ſecret Imagination in the Mind, and a Purpoſe in the Heart; but there muſt be external Acts to diſcover that Imagination and Purpoſe.

Mr. Phipps. What is the Meaning of the New Act then, that there ſhall be no Evidence of any Overt-Act, but what is laid in the Indictment?

L. C. J. What Overt-Acts are there in Clipping and Coyning?

Mr. Phipps. That is not within the new Act of Parliament.

L. C. J. That is moſt true, the one is excepted, the other is not comprehended; but the Queſtion is upon the Statute of 25. Ed. 3*d*. to which the late Act doth refer. Now proving the Adherence to the King's Enemy, is proving an Overt-Act. Suppoſe it be the Killing of the Chancellor, or Treaſurer, or Judge in the Execution of his Office, What Overt-Acts will you have then? Adhering to the King's Enemies, is a Treaſon that conſiſts in doing an Overt-Act.

Mr. Phipps. Yes, my Lord, I take it that it is for the new Act, by ſaying that no Evidence ſhall be admitted of any Overt-Act that is not expreſsly laid in the Indictment, muſt be intended of ſuch Treaſons, of which by Law Overt-Acts ought to be laid. Now the Killing the Chancellor, or Treasurer, or Judge, in the Execution of his Office, are not such Treasons of which it was necessary to lay any Overt-Acts in the Indictment, and so not within the Meaning of this new Law. But levying War, and adhering to the King's Enemies, which are the Treasons in this Indictment, must by the express Purview of the 25 Ed. 3. be proved by Overt-Acts, which are to be alledged in the Indictment.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The new Act does not alter the Law in this particular, what was Law before, is Law now, it leaves the Overt-Acts as they were before; and it says not that an Overt-Act need to be expreſt, where it was not needful before. Now if a Man be Indicted for compassing the Death of a private Person, there ought to be some Overt-Act to prove his Design; but if there be an Indictment for Murther, there needs no other Overt-Act to prove it, but the Murther it self.

L. C. J. But the Force of the Objection lies in this, viz. To say a Man levyed War, or adhered to the King's Enemies, is no good Indictment; but it is necessary to alledge in what manner he levyed War, or adhered to the King's Enemies; as that he appeared in such a War-like manner, or did adhere to and assist the King's Enemies, by joyning Forces with them, or otherwise assisting them, or confederating with them, that must be specified. But if you Indict a Man generally for adhering to the King's Enemies, and not say how and in what manner he did adhere to them, that is not a good Indictment; therefore if you particularize what Enemies, and how and in what manner he adher'd to them, no Evidence can be given of any other Kind of adherence, but that which is so specified in the Indictment.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we must put all our Evidence into the Indictment.

Mr. Phipps. So you must, as to the Overt-Acts.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That will be the same Thing as to put in all our Evidence, if we must give Evidence of no Overt-Act but what is expreſt in the Indictment. But I do not take it, that the Act requires all Overt-Acts to be put in the Indictment.

Mr. Phipps. The Act says so. Suppose you had left out the Overt-Act, would the Indictment have been good?

Mr. Sol. Gen. We did not intend to put in all the Overt-Acts, but only what related to that Part of the Treason.

Mr. Phipps. The Treason must be proved by Overt-Acts, and the Overt-Acts that prove the Treason, must be mentioned in the Indictment.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What! the Overt-Acts of the Treasons before mentioned, as Counterfeiting the King's Money, and the like, are all to be mentioned?

L. C. J. Consider, if you can make that a good Indictment, to say, that the Prisoner adhered to the King's Enemies, without mentioning any Overt-Acts to manifest such an adherence, then your Answer to Mr. Phipps is full; but if it be not a good Indictment, without alledging particular Acts of Adherence, then it necessarily follows, that if Particulars are alledged, and you do not prove them as is alledged, you have failed in the Indictment, and so his Objection will lie hard upon you.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we framed our Indictment according to the Letter of the Statute.

L. C. J. In compassing the Death of the King, you must shew how that is manifested by the Overt-Acts.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But compassing and imagining must be discovered by some Overt-Acts.

L. C. J. Treby. This is a doubt I have often thought of, I thought it most natural that the Word Overt-Act should relate to the first Article, viz. compassing and imagining of the King's Death: For Overt-Act seems to be opposed to something of a contrary Nature: Act is opposed properly to Thought, Overt is properly opposed to secret. And that sort of Treason consisting in secret Thought and Internal Purpose, cannot be known, tryed, and judged of, without being disclosed and manifested by some external open Act. Wherefore it is pertinent and reasonable, in order to attaint a Man of such Treason, that the Indictment should charge and set forth the Act, as well as the Thought. And so it hath been used to be done.

But, such order or manner doth not seem so natural or necessary, in framing Indictments for other Treasons, where the Treason consists in visible or discernible Facts; as levying War, &c.

Nevertheless I think an Overt-Act ought to be alledged in an Indictment of Treason for adhering to the King's Enemies, giving them Aid and Comfort. And the Overt-Act, or Acts, in this Case, ought to be the particular Actions, Means, or Manner by which the Aid and Comfort was given.

My Lord Cook declares his Opinion to this purpose. His Words (which I read out of his Book here) are these. The Composition and Connection of the Words are to be observ'd, viz. [thereof be attainted by Overt Deed] This, says he, relates to the several and distinct Treasons, before expres'd, and especially to the Compassing and Imagining of the Death of the King, &c. for that it is secret in the Heart, &c. Now the Articles of Treason, before expreſt in the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. are four. 1. Compassing, &c. 2. Violating the Queen, &c, 3. Levying War, and 4. This of Adhering, &c. (And yet it is hardly possible to set forth any Overt-Act concerning the 2d. otherwise than the Words of the Statute, That Article expressing so particular a Fact.)

I do observe also, that these Words [Being thereof Attainted by Overt Fact] do, in this Statute, immediately follow this Article of Adhering, &c. And it would be a great Violence to construe them to refer to the first Article only, and not to this last, to which they are thus connected. If they are to be restrained to a single Article, it were more agreeable to the strict Rules of Construing, to refer them to this of Adhering only.

L. C. J. That which I insist on is this, whether the Indictment would be good, without expressing the special Overt-Act. If it be, then this is a surplusage, and we are not confin'd to it; but if it be not a good Indictment without expressing it, then we are confin'd to it.

Mr. Phipps. I believe Mr. Sollicitor never saw an Indictment, of this Kind, without an Overt-Act laid in it.

L. C. J. Can you prove the Facts laid in the Indictment? For certainly the Indictment without mentioning particular Acts of Adherence, would not be good.

Mr. Cowper. Yes, my Lord; and as to the Evidence before you, we would only offer this; whether in this Case, if the Indictment were laid generally, for Adhering to the King's Enemies in one Place, and in another Place levying of War, and nothing more particular, it would be good; I doubt it would not. But when there is laid a particular Act of Adhering, we may give in Evidence matter to ſtrengthen the direct Proof of that particular Act of Adhering to the King's Enemies, tho' that matter be not ſpecially laid in the Indictment: For the Act goes only to this, That the Priſoner ſhall not be convicted, unleſs you prove againſt him the Overt-Acts ſpecially laid in the Indictment; But whether it ſhall not be heard, to make the other Overt-Act which is laid, the more probable? Now we have laid a ſpecial Overt-Act in the Indictment; and we have produced Evidence of it, and we would produce likewiſe collateral Evidence, to induce a firmer Belief of that ſpecial Overt-Act, by ſhewing you that he hath made it his Practice, during the War, to aid and aſſiſt the King's Enemies; But if the Jury do not find him guilty of the ſpecial Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment, they cannot find him guilty by the Proof of any other Overt-Act not laid in the Indictment. But if we prove he has made this his Practice, in other Inſtances, during the War, whether that Proof ſhall not be received?

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, I deſire the Act may be read. It expreſsly contradicts what Mr. Cowper ſays; for it ſays, That no Evidence ſhall be given of any Overt-Act, that is not expreſsly laid in the Indictment. [The Act was Read.]

L. C. J. That is, you may give Evidence of an Overt-Act, that is not in the Indictment, if it conduce to prove one that is in it. As if conſulting to kill the King, or raiſe a Rebellion, is laid in the Indictment, you may give in Evidence an acting in purſuance of a Conſult, that is an Evidence that they agreed to do it, tho' that doing of the Thing is, of it ſelf, another Overt-Act, but it tends to Prove the Act laid in the Indictment.

Mr. Phipps. The Overt-Act laid in this Indictment, is his Cruiſing in the Clancarty; and this Overt-Act you would prove, is no Evidence of that; nor relates to it, but it is a diſtinct Overt-Act of it ſelf.

L. C. J. You cannot give Evidence of a diſtinct Act, that has no relation to the Overt-Act mentioned in the Indictment, tho' it ſhall conduce to prove the ſame Species of Treaſon.

Mr. Cowper. We would apply this Proof to the Overt-Act laid in the Indictment.

L. C. J. Any Thing that has a direct tendency to it, you may prove.

Mr. Cowper. We have laid the Overt-Act, that he did voluntarily put himſelf on Board this Veſſel of the French King, the Loyal Clancarty, and did go to Sea in her, and Cruiſe, with a Deſign to take the Ships of the King of England, and his Subjects. Now Part of the Overt-Act, is his Intention, in the Act of Cruiſing, we do not charge him with taking one Ship, ſo that his Intention is a Member of the Overt-Act, and it muſt be proved, to make his Cruiſing Criminal, that he deſign'd to take the Ships of the King of England. Now we think it a proper Intention, to ſhew, that during this War, before and after the Time of the Treaſon laid in the Indictment, he was a Cruiſer upon, and Taker of the King's Ships, and this fortifies the direct Proof given of his Intention.

L. C. J. I cannot agree to that, becauſe you go not about to prove what he did in the Veſſel call'd the Loyal Clancarty; but that he had an Intention to commit depredation on the King's Subjects: So he might, but in another Ship. Now, becauſe a Man has a Deſign to commit depredation on the King's Subjects in one Ship, does that prove he had an Intention to do it in another?

Mr. Phipps. He was Cruiſing in the Clancarty, that is the Overt-Act laid in the Indictment; and the Overt-Act you would produce, is his being in another Veſſel.

L. C. J. Go on, and ſhew what he did in the Clancarty. You the Priſoner, will you ask this Man any Queſtions?

Mr. Phipps. Crouch, you ſaid, that the Priſoner did ſay he could not deny but he was an Iriſh-man; how came you to talk about it?

R. Crouch. He ſaid, I cannot deny but I am an Iriſh-man.

L. C. J. Did he ſay he was an Iriſh-man? What were the Words he uſed?

R. Crouch. He told the Lieutenant he was an Iriſh-man.

Mr. Phipps. What Diſcourſe was there? How came he to ſay that?

R. Crouch. I went by only, and heard the Words ſpoken to the Lieutenant.

L. C J. Did he ſpeak Engliſh?

R. Crouch. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. If he ſpoke Engliſh, that is ſome Evidence he is an Engliſh-man, tho' the contrary may be proved by him.

T. Vaughan. That would no more prove me an Engliſh-man, than if an Engliſh-man were in France, and could ſpeak French, would prove him a French-man, becauſe he could ſpeak French.

L. C. J. You ſhall be heard by and by to ſay what you will on your own behalf.

Mr. Phipps, Were there any French-men on Board the Clancarty.

R. Crouch. No, Sir.

Mr. Phipps. Mr. Vaughan, will you ask him any Queſtions your ſelf?

Mr. Cowper. Call T. Noden.

T. Vaughan. How did you know that there were no French-men aboard? Did I addreſs my ſelf to you when I came aboard?

R. Crouch. No, Sir.

T. Vaughan. Did I not addreſs my ſelf to the Captain when I came aboard? How came I to tell you I was an Iriſh-man?

R. Crouch. They were all Scotch-men, Engliſh-men, and Iriſh-men.

Mr. Phipps. Mr. Vaughan, you need not take up the Time of the Court about that Matter. Mr. Cowper, you may go on.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did the Priſoner own that he acted by the French King's Commiſſion? Did you know any Thing of his having a French Commiſſion?

R. Crouch. Yes, I heard he had one, but I did not ſee it, but I heard ſo by the Company.

L. C. J Were there any French-men aboard?

R. Crouch. No, not that I know of. They were Dutch-men, and Engliſh-men, and Scotch-men, and Iriſh-men.

M. Cowper. Call T. Noden (Who appeared and was Sworn,) Do you give my Lord and the Jury an Account of taking the Veſſel, call'd the Two-and-Twenty-Oar-Barge.

T. Noden. Laſt Year, about June or July, to the beſt of my Remembrance, I belong'd to his Majeſty's Ship the Coventry, and we took the Two-and-Twenty-Oar-Barge.

L. C. J. How many Dutch-men were aboard?

T. Noden. I do not know of above one.

L. C. J. Treby. What were the Reſt? Were there any French-men?

T. Noden. Yes, there were ſeveral French-men aboard. I belong'd to the Coventry. And as we were ſailing by the Nore, and the Gunfleet, our Captain ſpy'd a ſmall Veſſel ſailing by the Sands, and he

he ſuppos'd her to be a French Privateer, and he fir'd a Gun to make them bring to, and they did not obey; and at laſt fir'd a Gun, Shot and all, and they would not come to. Then the Captain order'd to man the Boat, and row after them: So the Barge, and Pinnace, and Long-boat were mann'd; and they came pretty near them. This Barge we took, was aground alſo, and they got her afloat, and ſhe run aground again: And as they were aground, moſt of them out of the Boat, our Long-boat ſtruck aground; and waded after them near half a League, and when we came to the Barge, there was this Captain Vaughan, and two or three and Twenty more. And there was two Dutch-men, and, as I apprehended, ſome French-men; there was in her a Blunderbuſs, and ſmall Arms, and a conſiderable Quantity of Hand-Granadoes.

L. C. J. What Veſſel was you aboard?

T. Noden. The Coventry.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Country Man did Captain Vaughan ſay he was?

T. Noden. I did not hear any Thing of it. Our Captain examin'd the Dutch-man what Country-man the Commander was, and he ſaid he was an Iriſh-man; but I did not hear it my ſelf. When Captain Vaughan was brought aboard the Coventry, was put aboard the Prize we had taken.

M. Cowper. Had you any Diſcourſe with Captain Vaughan.

T. Noden. No.

L. C. J. Did they endeavour to take your Ship?

T. Noden. No, but endeavoured to get away from us.

L. C. J. What Guns or Ammunition had they?

T. Noden. I cannot tell particularly, there was ſome Convaſs Bags, every Man had a Carteridge Bag, and there were ſome Hand-Granadoes,

Mr. Whitaker. What Fire-Arms had they?

T. Noden. I cannot ſay how many, but they had Muskets and Piſtols, and two Blunderbuſſes.

Mr. Cowper. Did you underſtand whence this Ship the L. Clancarty came?

T. Noden. The Dutch-men ſaid they came from Calis. As near as I can gueſs, we ſpy'd them about Eleven a Clock, and we weigh'd Anchor in the Afternoon, on Sabbath day, and they took us to be a light Collier, and endeavour'd to board us, as the Dutch-man ſaid; but when they knew what we were, they endeavour'd to eſcape from us.

Mr. Cowper. Call Sam. Oldham. (Who appear'd and was Sworn.) Mr. Oldham, was you aboard the Coventry, when ſhe took the Ship call'd the Clancarty?

Sam. Oldham. Yes, I was.

Mr. Cowper. Pray give an Account what you obſerved of the Priſoner T. Vaughan then?

Sam. Oldham. We weigh'd our Anchor firſt at the Boy and Nore, ſo we ſaw a Prize in the Morning, the Captain ſaid it was a Prize, and we made Sail after him, and they ran on the Goodwin-Sands: And the Captain ſeeing the Barge run aground, we fir'd at her to bring her to; we fir'd a Second, and ſhe would not come to, but ran aground again. When ſhe was aground, by the Captain's Order, we Mann'd our Boats, and out we went after her.

Mr. Cowper. Did you take her?

Sam. Oldham. We went and our Long-Boat ran aground; I was in the Long-Boat, and we waded, I believe, a Mile and half after her.

L. C. J. What French-men were aboard?

Sam. Oldham. I cannot juſtly ſay whether there were any.

L. C. J. Were there any?

Sam. Oldham. I think one or two.

Mr. Cowper. Were there any Dunkirkers or Walloons aboard?

Sam. Oldham. There was a Dutch-man, who they call'd a Fleming, and I diſcours'd him.

L. C. J. How many Outlandiſh-men were there aboard? was there a dozen, or how many?

Sam. Oldham. I cannot ſay the Quantity.

Mr. Cowper. Was there more than two or three.

Som. Oldham. Yes, more than two or three.

L. C. J. What Forreigners?

Sam. Oldham. Yes. And there were two Engliſh-men.

Mr. Cowper. What did you obſerve of the Priſoner at the Bar, at the taking of the Ship?

Sam. Oldham. I did not come aboard along with the Priſoner, but with his Man, and his Man ſaid he was an Iriſh-man, and that he was Commander of the Boat.

Mr Sol. Gen. What was there Deſign in that Ship Clancarty?

Sam. Oldham. I cannot tell that.

Mr. Cowper. Did they reſiſt, in their being taken?

Sam. Oldham. I cannot tell that, I ſaw no Arms.

Mr. Cowper. You were in the Action, was there any reſiſtance made?

Sam. Oldham. I ſaw no reſiſtance, they offered to run, they were aground once, and got off again.

Mr. Phipps. You ſay there were Forreigners, what Country-men did you believe thoſe Forreigners to be?

Sam. Oldham. I cannot juſtly ſay, I believe Dutch-men.

L. C. J. How many Dutch-men were there?

Sam. Oldham. I cannot ſay.

Dr. Oldiſh. But you ſaid there were ſome two or three French-men, and that they ſpoke French; do you underſtand French?

Sam. Oldham. No Sir.

Dr. Oldiſh. Then how do you know they were French-men, and ſpoke French.

Sam. Oldham. They ſaid they were, they did not ſpeak Engliſh, ſeveral of the Ship's Company ſaid they were French.

L. C. J. If they were all Dutch-men, and appear in a hoſtile Manner againſt the King of England's Subjects, they are Enemies, tho' we are in League with Holland, and the Reſt of the ſeven Provinces.

Mr. Phipps. The Indictment runs, That the French King, quandam Naviculam vocat' The loyal Clancarty; cum quamplurimis Subditis Gallicis Inimicis Dom. Regis nunc ad numerum quindecim Perſonarum replet' preparavit.

L. C. J. Suppoſe it doth.

Mr. Phipps. It is Subditis Gallicis, my Lord.

L. C. J. They will be Subjects in that Matter, if they act under his Commiſſion: They are Enemies to the King of England, and they have made themſelves the French King's Subjects by that Act.

Mr. Phipps. It appears not that they are French-men, my Lord.

L. C. J. If Dutch-men turn Rebels to the State, and take Pay of the French King, they are under the French King's Command, and ſo are his Subjects. Will you make them Pirates when they act under the Commiſſion of a ſovereign Prince? They are are then Subditi to him, and ſo Inimici to us.

Mr. Phipps. It does not take away their Allegiance to their lawful Prince. They may go to the French King, and ſerve him, yet that does not transfer their Allegiance from their lawful Prince to the French King, and make them his Subjects. But however, to make them Subjects within this Indictment, they muſt be Gallici Subditi; ſo they muſt be French men as well as Subjects.

L. C. J. Acting by Vertue of a Commiſſion from the French King, will excuſe them from being Pirates, tho' not from being Traitors to their own State, but to all other Princes and States againſt whom they do any Acts of Hoſtility, they are Enemies: And their ſerving under the French King's Commiſſion, makes them his Subjects as to all others, but their own Prince or State. And tho' they be not French-men, yet they are Gallici Subditi; for it's the French Subjection that makes them to be Gallici Subditi.

Mr. Phipps. Pray, my Lord, ſuppoſe a Subject of Spain ſhould go over to the French and fight againſt England; I take it, he may be termed an Enemy of the King of England, tho' his Prince be in League with ours, but with Submiſſion, he cannot properly be ſaid to be a Subject of the French King: For ſuppoſe an Indictment of Treaſon againſt a Forreigner, ſhould ſay, that he being a Subject, did commit Treaſon; and it be proved he is not a Subject, with Submiſſion, he muſt be acquitted.

Mr. Cowper. There is a local Allegiance while he is in the Country, or Fleets, or Armies of the French King.

L. C. J. Dutch men may be Enemies, notwithſtanding their State is in Amity with us, if they act as Enemies.

Mr. Cowper. Call R. Bub. (He was ſworn) Was you aboard the Coventry, when ſhe took the Clencarty?

R. Bub. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Cowper. Give an Account what you know of the Priſoner, Tho. Vaughan, at the taking of that Ship.

R. Bub. We came aboard the Coventry, and were at the Nore at Anchor, our Pennant was taken down to be mended. So in the Night Captain Vaughan, with his Two-and-twenty-Oar Barge, rounded us two or three Times. In the Morning we weigh'd Anchor, and fell down in order to go to the Downs: and we came up with them, and fir'd at Captain Vaughan, and he would not bring to. With that our Captain order'd to have the Barge, and Pinnace, and Long-Boat, to be Mann'd, to go after him. They follow'd him, and at laſt came up with him, and came up pretty near; but could not come ſo near with the Long-Boat, but were fain to wade up to the middle a Mile and a half. We hoiſted our Colours; in order to fight them, and bore down ſtill upon them; and they would not fight our Men. And we took them out, and when they came aboard, the Engliſh-man that was a Pilot was to have his Freedom, to Pilot them up the River. He confeſt to the Captain, that Captain Vaughan intended to burn the Ships in the Harbour. And the next Day after the Pilot had confeſſed it, Captain Vaughan himſelf confeſſed it on the Deck, that he came over with that Deſign.

Mr. Cowper. Who did he confeſs it to?

R. Bub. To the Boat-ſwain and Gunner, as he was on the Deck, on the Lar-Board ſide, that he came on purpoſe to burn the Shipping in the Harbour.

L. C. J. Did he confeſs that himſelf?

R. Bub. Yes, my Lord.

L. C J Whereabout was this, at the Buoy in the Nore?

R. Bub. In the Downs, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where did the Ships lye, that were to be burn'd?

R. Bub. At Sheerneſs.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He own'd himſelf to be an Iriſh-man, did he not?

R Bub. Yes.

Mr Cowper. And that he came from Calis?

R. Bub. Yes.

Mr. Cowper. Had you any Diſcourſe with him about a Commiſſion?

R. Bub. No. But our Lieutenant and Captain had, but it was not in my hearing; I will not ſpeak further than I heard, and what I can juſtify.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Will you ask him any Queſtions?

Mr. Phipps. No.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then call Mr. Jo. Crittenden, Marſhal of Dover Caſtle, (who was ſworn) Mr. Crittenden, Pray what did you hear the Priſoner at the Bar confeſs of his Deſign in coming to England?

Mr. Crittenden. I did not hear him ſay any Thing of his Deſign.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did he confeſs?

Mr. Crittenden. He confeſt he was an Iriſh-man?

Mr. Whitaker. Upon what occaſion did he confeſs that?

Mr. Crittenden. When I enter'd him into my Book, I ask'd him what Countryman he was.

Mr. Cowper. What are you?

Mr. Crittenden. I am the Marſhal of Dover-Caſtle.

Mr. Cowper. By what Name did he order you to enter him.

Mr. Crittenden. Thomas Vaughan an Iriſh-man.

L. C. J. Upon what Account did you enter him;

Mr. Crittenden. As a Priſoner.

Mr. Cowper. Did he ſpeak any Thing of a Commiſſion?

Mr. Crittenden I did not hear him ſay any Thing of that.

Mr. Phipps. Have you your Book here?

Mr. Crittenden. Yes, Sir.

Dr. Oldiſh. Was he not in Drink when he ſaid ſo?

Mr. Crittenden. I believe he was not very ſober indeed.

Mr. Phipps. Did you ever after hear him ſay he was an Iriſh-man?

Mr. Crittenden. The next Day he deny'd it.

Mr. Cowper. When he had conſidered the Danger of it.

Mr. Crittenden. The next Day he was Examined by ſome of the Juſtices of the Peace.

Mr. Sol Gen. Was you by when he was Examined by the Juſtices?

Mr. Crittenden. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did he then ſay?

Mr. Crittenden. Then he ſaid he was of Martenico.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Set up Mr. Bullock (who was ſworn) Mr. Bullock, do you know the Priſoner at the Bar.

Mr. Bullock. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray what have you heard him ſay of his Deſign that he came into England for?

Mr. Bullock. He came to Dover about the 14th of July 1695, as I remember: I went with ſeveral others, who were brought by the Captain of the Coventry, and the Lieutenant, and ſome others: And when we came thither, he there owned himſelf ſelf an Iriſh-man? but when he went the next Day to be Examined, he ſaid he was of Martenico. He told me he had that Barge from the Duke of Bulloign, and came on the Coaſt, and was Chaſed into the Flatts, where they took him.

L. C. J. Did you ever hear him ſay he had any Commiſſion from the French King?

Mr. Bullock. I know nothing of that; it was late, and we did not examine him then; but the next Day, when he came to be examined, he ſaid he was of Martenico.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did he ſay his Deſign was?

Mr. Bullock. He ſaid, that ſeeing the Boat at Bulloign, he bought it of the Duke of Bulloign; and the Duke ask'd him what he would do with her; And he ſaid, he would fit her up, and go and take a Ship at Sea, that is upon our Coaſts.

Mr. Phipps. We are in your Lordſhip's Judgment, whether we need give any Evidence; for we think they have not proved their Indictment: For the Indictment ſets forth, That the French King fitted out the Loyal Clencarty, of which Thomas Vaughan was Commander; and that very many French-men, Subjects of the French King, were put on Board. Now the firſt Witneſs ſwears, there were no French-men; and another ſwears there was one or two; another, that they were Forreigners, But does not believe they were French-men: So there is no Proof of that Part of the Indictment; nor is there any Proof that he was Captain of the Loyal Clencarty: So that none can ſay, it is the ſame Veſſel mentioned in the Indictment: Nor is any Act of Hoſtility proved; for all the Witneſſes ſay, that Vaughan never pretended to attack them, but run from them. So that all they depend on, to ſupport the Indictment, is to prove that he had a Deſign to burn the Ships at Sheerneſs; Which will not ſerve their turn; for the Words of the Indictment are, ad prædandum ſuper altum Mare. Now Sheerneſs is not ſuper altum Mare, but infra Corpus Comitatus, and then not within the Indictment.

Mr. Cowper. The Words, Ships at Sheerneſs, do not imply, that the Ships lay within the Town of Sheerneſs, but off of Sheerneſs, which is altum Mare.

Mr. Phipps. Then it is not in your Indictment; for that ſays, at Sheerneſs.

Mr. Cowper. No, off of Sheerneſs.

Mr. Sol. Gen. It is no Contradiction, to ſay the Sea is within Part of a County.

Mr. Phipps. The Indictment ſays, at Sheerneſs.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Off of Sheerneſs, is the high Sea.

Mr. Phipps. Sheerneſs is not the Buoy in the Nore. Then you muſt prove he was Captain at this Time: For the Indictment ſays, Ad tunc fuit Capitaneus & Miles.

L. C. J. One Overt-Act of Adhering to the King's Enemies, is, that he put himſelf as a Souldier on Board the Ship.

Mr. Phipps. You will make one Part agree with another, that the French King did ſet out a Ship, and gave him a Commiſſion to be Captain of her.

L. C. J. The Witneſſes have proved he acted as a Captain.

Mr. Phipps. He was taken, and ſure if he was taken, he muſt have his Commiſſion with him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Examine the Marſhal, he took an Account of him: and by Direction of Mr Vaughan himſelf, he entered him as Captain; and he enter'd ſeveral Men in the Ship as French-men, by their own Direction. (Mr. Crittenden was call'd) Mr. Crittenden, have you got your Book in which you made the Entry?

Mr. Crittenden. Yes, I have it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. By whoſe Order did you enter them?

Mr. Crittenden. By the Direction of Captain Vaughan, the Priſoner at the Bar.

Mr. Cowper. How did you know he was a Captain?

Mr. Crittenden. Becauſe he told me he was Captain, and I enter'd him as ſuch in my Book.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Captain of what?

Mr. Crittenden. The Loyal Clencarty.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray read your Entry in your Book.

Mr. Crittenden. Thomas Vaughan, Captain, Iriſh-man, the 14th of July 1695; and ſo of all the reſt of the Ship's Crew.

Mr. J. Turton. Did you write theſe in the preſence of Captain Vaughan?

Mr. Crittenden. Yes, in the ſame Room where he was.

Mr. Phipps. Did you write it by his Direction?

Mr. Crittenden. For his own Part, by his Direction; and for the reſt, by their Direction.

L. C. J. Take all the Circumſtances together, it is great Evidence, conſidering what they were about, and what Veſſel they had. Mr. Crittenden, can you tell how many French-men were there.

Mr. Crittenden. I will tell you preſently (he counts them in his Book) there were thirteen.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did Captain Vaughan hear any of them bid you enter them as French-men?

Mr. Crittenden. I cannot be poſitive in that, I ſuppoſe he did, he was in the ſame Room.

L. C. J. Do you expect Witneſſes from France, to teſtify where they were Born and Chriſten'd?

Mr. Phipps. One Witneſs ſays there was not one French-man there.

L. C. J. Not to his Knowledge.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What do you know of his having a French Commiſſion?

Mr. Bullock. I did not ſee it.

Mr. Whitaker. Did he own his having any French Commiſſion?

Mr. Bullock. I cannot tell.

Mr. J. Turton. He own'd himſelf a Captain.

Mr. Phipps. He might be a Captain in another Ship, but not in this Ship; they ought to prove he was Captain at that Time, in that Ship, by the French King's Commiſſion.

L. C. J. All the Witneſſes ſay he acted as a Captain at that Time.

Mr. Cowper. He own'd himſelf the Captain of the Loyal Clencarty.

Mr. Bar. Powis. What can be plainer, than that he owned himſelf Captain?

Dr. Oldiſh. This ſeems to me a very ſtrange Proof, to be built only upon the Sayings of theſe Perſons, that they were French-men, and this to a Man who had no Authority to examine them, when it might have been eaſily proved in a regular Way, in Caſe they had been ſo; they might have been examined before a Magiſtrate, and thereby it would have appeared whether they were French or no. And 'twas abſolutely Neceſſary in this Caſe, becauſe of the Contrariety of the Witneſſes; for the firſt Witneſs ſaid, there was no French-men aboard; the next ſaid there were two French-men and a Dutch-man; and Crittenden ſaid, there were thirteen. Now how can theſe be reconciled, unleſs there had been a legal Examination of the Parties? But the Thing we would chiefly go on is this, this, I think they have fail'd in the Foundation of the Treaſon; that is, to prove the Priſoner a Subject of this Crown; neither is there the leaſt Colour of Proof thereof. At Night he came to Mr Crittenden, and is in Drink; there he ſays he is an Iriſh-man; the next Morning, when he is examin'd before the Juſtices, then he comes in a Kind of Judgment, and then ſuch a Confeſſion would be of Moment; but then he confeſſes himſelf to be a French-man of Martenico. Now, my Lord, what Credit is to be given to theſe Confeſſions; when before the Marſhal he ſhall ſay, I am an Iriſh-man; and the next Day, when he is on Examination, he declares himſelf a French-man; in one Confeſſion he is in Drink, in the other Sober? Now, my Lord, I ſay, what Proof is here? Here then the Foundation of the Treaſon fails: For the Indictment is, That he being a Subject of the King of England, levies War. Now, my Lord, if this Quality be not proved, all the Reſt of the Indictment falls to the Ground: for it is impoſſible for him to commit Treaſon, where he is not a Subject, becauſe there can be no Violation of Allegiance. So that if he be a French-man, as he declared before the Juſtices, he cannot be guilty of Treaſon. So that here they have fail'd in the Foundation of all; that is, to prove him a Subject of England. And becauſe they affirm him to be ſo, it lies on thoſe that affirm it, to prove it. But perhaps now they will ſay, that theſe little Confeſſions of his will throw the Burthen of Proof on him. By no Means; when here is a ſtronger Preſumption on the other Side; a meer extrajudicial Saying to Seamen, that he is an Iriſh-man, cannot ballance his Confeſſion Examined before the Juſtices, wherein he ſays he is a French man; and ſo can never throw the Burthen of Proof on him. Therefore it lies on them that aſſert this, to prove it. But, my Lord, tho' it doth not lie on him, yet we will prove him to be a French-man, and Born at Martenico, by thoſe that were at the Chriſtening of him, and have known him from Time to Time ever ſince. And becauſe they ſay he can ſpeak Engliſh, if you pleaſe to examine him, you ſhall hear him ſpeak natural French; ſo that That cannot prove him to be a natural Iriſh man.

Mr Phipps. Such a Saying of a Foreigner will be of no great Weight; becauſe if a Man go into a foreign Country, he may ſay he is that Country man to get the more Favour.

L. C. J. What, to hang himſelf?

Mr Phipps. No, my Lord, a Man that comes into a ſtrange Country, may very well think he ſhall find better Uſage, by pretending to be of that Country, than by owning himſelf to be a Foreigner. But we will prove Vaughan to be a French-man. Call Robert French. (Then Robert French was ſworn.) Mr French, Pray give the Court and Jury an Account, whether you know Mr Vaughan, the Priſoner at the Bar, and how long you have known him, and what Countryman you take him to be, and the Reaſon why.

Rob. French. I have known him this fourteen Years.

Mr Phipps. Where did you ſee him then?

Rob. French. I ſaw him in Saint Chriſtophers.

Mr Phipps. Pray give an Account how you came to know him.

Rob. French. About ſixteen Years ago I was at Mount-Surat, and I came to St. Chriſtophers, and there I chanc'd to come into Engliſh Ground, among the Factors; and ſo they brought me to the French Ground; and coming there, I was in Company with ſeveral others that Night, and it happened I was told there was one Mr Vaughan there; and I coming acquainted with him, he ſhewed me this Youth (he was a Youth then;) He told me he was his Son, and recommended him to me, becauſe he look'd on me to be a Man in Truſt and Buſineſs.

Mr Phipps. From that Time what has he been reputed?

Rob. French. A Sea-faring Man.

Mr Phipps. But what Countryman?

Rob. French. To be Born in Martenico.

Mr Phipps. In whoſe Dominions is that?

Rob. French. In the French King's Dominion.

Mr J. Turton. What Occaſion had you to Diſcourſe of the Place of his Birth?

Rob. French. Becauſe his Father was look'd upon to be a French-man?

Mr J. Turton. His Father was a French-man?

Rob. French. Yes, my Lord, and lived at Martenico.

Mr Cowper. How old might he be at that Time?

Rob. French. About fifteen or ſixteen.

Mr Cowper. How came you to be talking of his Birth, and with whom?

Rob. French. One that was talking with me, told me, his Name was Vaughan, and that he was Born there.

Mr Cowper. What introduc'd this Diſcourſe? How came he to tell you this, that he was born in that Place?

Rob. French. His Father told me ſo.

Mr Cowper. You were talking of one Vaughan of his Name: How many were in Company when there was this talk?

Rob. French. There were many of them.

Mr Cowper. Name them.

Rob. French. It is ſo long ago I cannot remember them.

Mr Cowper. Name as many as you can of them, as many as you do remember.

Rob. French. One Mr Bodiken, a Factor.

Mr Cowper. Who elſe?

Rob. French. Several others.

Mr Cowper. you named one Vaughan before.

Rob. French. Yes, I did.

Mr. Cowper. But you had forgot him now.

Rob. French. No, there was one Vaughan.

L. C. J. Were there any more?

Rob. French. Yes, there was, I remember the Company that went along with me.

L. C. J. Who were they?

Rob. French. There were ſeveral Paſſengers that went over with me.

L. C. J. How came you to talk of this Man's Nativity?

Rob. French. Becauſe his Father ſaid, he had not been out of the Iſland in twenty Years; (at which the People laught.)

Mr Cowper. What Place was this Diſcourſe in?

Rob. French. At St. Chriſtophers.

Mr Cowper. How did his Father's ſaying, he had not been out of that Iſland in twenty Years, prove his Son was Born there?

Rob. French. Becauſe he recommended him to me as a Sea-faring Man.

Mr Cowper. What is that a Reaſon of? What is that to his being Born at Martenico?

Mr J. Turton. What Countryman are you?

Rob. French. I am an Iriſh-man Born.

L. C. J. His Father acknowledg'd himſelf to be an Iriſh-man Born, did he not?

Rob. French. No, my Lord, he did not ſay where he was born: I do not know.

Mr Juſtice Turton. Have you continued any Acquaintance with Mr Vaughan ſince? How long did you ſtay at St. Chriſtophers?

Rob. French. I ſtay'd but Four and twenty Hours, to take in Water.

L. C. J. How long was it after this, before you ſaw this Gentleman, Captain Vaughan?

Rob. French. I never ſaw him ſince, till I ſaw him in London. (Then the People laughed.)

L. C. J. Pray Gentlemen have Patience. How do you know now that this is the ſame Man, that you ſaw fourteen Years ago? For there muſt be a great Alteration in a Man in fourteen Years time, from what was at that time, being but fifteen Years of Age.

Rob. French. I believe in my Conſcience this is the Man.

L. C. J. Can you take it upon your Oath he is the Man?

Mr Bar. Powis. In what Language had you this Diſcourſe?

L. C. J. How long were you in Company with him and his Father?

Rob. French. I believe five or ſix Hours.

Mr Bar. Powis. In what Language was this Diſcourſe with his Father?

Rob. French. My Lord, he ſpoke Engliſh, a ſort of broken Engliſh.

L. C. J. Where do you live your ſelf?

Rob. French. I live in Ireland.

L. C. J. How long have you lived there?

Rob. French. Nine or Ten Years.

L. C. J. Whereabout in Ireland?

Rob. French. In Connaught.

L. C. J. Nine or Ten Years?

Rob. French. Yes, my Lord.

Dr Littleton. Did not Captain Vaughan, nor his Father ſpeak Iriſh to you in that ſix Hours?

Rob. French. No, my Lord.

Mr Juſtice Turton. How long have you been in England?

Rob. French. Not above two Months.

Mr Juſtice Turton. Did you hear of Captain Vaughan being to be try'd?

Rob. French. No, my Lord.

Mr Juſtice Turton. How did he come to hear of you then?

Rob. French. I heard he was in Town.

L. C. J. It is a ſtrange Thing, you have a moſt admirable Memory, and Captain Vaughan has as good a Memory as you; that you ſhould never have any intercourſe for fourteen Years, and yet ſhould remember one another after ſo long a Time; it is a wonderful Thing too, that when he could not know you were in Town, yet he ſhould call you a Witneſs on his Behalf, ſure he muſt have the Spirit of Prophecy.

Rob. French. He did not ſend to me at all.

L. C. J. How did you come to be here then?

Rob. French. I will tell you. It was my Cuſtom always to go and ſee Priſoners, and I heard there were Priſoners in Newgate, ſo I went to Newgate, and I met with one Dwall, and I asked him of another Gentleman that was there; and I went to the other Side by Chance, and I met with Captain Vaughan.

L. C. J. What was thy Deſign? Why didſt thou viſit Newgate?

Robert French. Becauſe it was my Cuſtom, becauſe it was an Act of Charity.

L. C. J. Did you go to Newgate out of Charity?

Rob. French. I went to ſee my Friend, and carried a Letter to him. I went out of Charity.

Mr. Phipps. You were in the Weſt-Indies, upon the French Ground; don't they ſpeak Engliſh on the French Ground, and French on the Engliſh Ground?

Rob. French. Yes.

Mr. Cowper. So they do here. Did you ever ſee Captain Vaughan before that Time?

Rob. French. No.

Mr. Whitaker. Did you viſit lately any other Priſoners in Newgate, beſides Captain Vaughan?

Rob. French. Yes.

Mr. Whitaker. Give their Names.

Rob. French. I have viſited Mr. Noland, and another Gentleman that is with him, and I went into the Houſe and drank with him there.

Mr. Whitaker. What is that other Gentleman's Name?

Rob. French. I do not remember his Name at preſent, but he is a Companion of Mr. Noland's.

Mr. Whitaker. Do you know him if you ſee him?

Rob. French. I, I would.

L. C. J. Treby. How long have you been in England?

Rob. French. But two Months.

L. C. J. Treby. Have you uſually viſited Priſoners in former Years?

Rob. French. My Lord, where-ever I have been, it was my Cuſtom to do ſo.

L. C. J. Treby. But how doth it conſiſt, that you, who are an Iriſh-man, ſhould come hither to viſit Priſoners in Newgate?

Rob. French. I can prove under my Lord-Mayor of Dublin's Hand, that I came here upon Buſineſs; and I went to the Priſon to viſit the Priſoners for Charity-ſake, and did beſtow it according as I was able.

L. C. J. You had beſt ſtay there, and not go away, for we may have Occaſion to ask you ſome Queſtions.

Mr. Cowper. Do you not uſe, out of Charity, to be Evidence for them?

Rob. French. No, never before in my Life.

Mr. Whitaker. What other Priſons have you viſited, beſides Newgate?

Rob. French. I did viſit none.

L. C. J. Treby. Had you no Charity for other Priſons?

Mr. Bar. Powis. When you ſo viſit Priſons, on what Account is it? Is it to give Ghoſtly Advice?

Rob. French. Upon a charitable Account, my Lord.

L. C. J. Ghoſtly Advice, is Charity.

Mr. Phipps. Where is Mr. Lefleur? (He did not appear.) Call Mr. Gold, (who appeared.)

Cl. of Arr. That Man is attainted, but pardoned.

Mr. Phipps. Mr. Gold, how long have you known Captain Vaughan?

Mr. Gold. I never knew Mr. Vaughan, before I ſaw him in the Marſhalſea.

Mr. Phipps. Is Monſieur Lefleur here? Is Mr. Deherty here? (Mr. Deherty appeared and was ſworn.)

Mr. Phipps. Do you know Mr. Vaughan, the Priſoner at the Bar?

Mr. Deherty. Yes.

Mr. Phipps. How long have you known him?

Mr De-

Mr Deherty. Five Years.

Mr Phipps. What has he been reputed all along, ſince you have known him?

Mr Deherty. A Frenchman.

Mr Phipps. Did you know him in France?

Mr Deherty. Yes, and he was reputed a Frenchman there.

Mr Juſtice Turton. What Occaſion had you to enquire into that, the Place of his Nativity?

Mr Deherty. I did not enquire at all, but one that was his Servant, was my Comrade a great while.

Mr Phipps. Now we will prove where he was Chriſtened, by one that was at his Chriſtening, Mr. Daſcine. (He appeared, and ſtood up, being ſworn, and ſpoke in French to the Court, pretending he could not ſpeak Engliſh)

L. C. J. If he cannot ſpeak Engliſh, there muſt be an Interpreter.

Mr Soll. Gen. They muſt find an Interpreter, he is their Witneſs.

Then a Perſon in Court ſtood up, and told the Court he could ſpeak Engliſh as well as he, that he had been a Bailiff's Follower for ſeveral Years.

L. C. J. You can ſpeak Engliſh, can you not?

Mr Daſcine. I will ſpeak as well as I can.

King's Meſſenger. I am a Meſſenger to the King, do you know me?

Mr Daſcine. Yes.

L. C. J. Prithee ſpeak Engliſh.

Mr. Daſcine. As well as I can, my Lord, I will ſpeak.

Mr. Phipps. Are you ſworn?

Mr. Daſcine. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Phipps. Do you know Captain Vaughan?

Mr Daſcine. In 1669, I was in St. Chriſtophers; I went from Rhoan, and from thence I went with Hats and Cloth to Crebeck, and had a Letter to one Thomas Williams, a Factor in Martenico. And after I had done, as I was coming away, Mr Williams deſired me to go to a Chriſtning, a Mile and half from Port-Royal. He told me, there was one Mr Vaughan had a Plantation there, and deſired him to be Godfather. And about two Days after, I went from Port-Royal to St. Chriſtophers again, and I came to Rhoan again in a Ship called St. Joſeph. So in 1677, I went to St. Chriſtophers again, and from thence to Matenico, to Mr Williams; I asked him, what is become of that young Man we were at the Chriſtening, and ſo he ſhewed me him that is here (pointing to the Priſoner.)

L. C. J. That was in 1677.

Mr Daſcine. In 1677. So I came from Port-Royal; I went to St. Chriſtophers, and ſo took Sail, and came to France again. And 13 Years ago I went to St. Chriſtophers again, and to Mountſerat, and Martenico; and ſo when I was at Martenico, and asked Mr Williams of this young Man, that I was at his Chriſtening, and he ſaid, he is at ſuch an Houſe, and I ſaw him there.

L. C. J. Thirteen Years ago.

Mr Daſcine. And we went and drank Punch together, and I came back for Rhoan.

L. C. J. When did you ſee him ſince that?

Mr Daſcine. Never till I ſaw him here a Priſoner.

L. C. J. How do you know he is the Man?

Mr Daſcine. He has a Bruiſe in his Side.

Mr Phipps. What was the Gentleman's Name, at the Chriſtening of whoſe Child you were?

Mr Daſcine. Thomas Vaughan.

Mr Phipps. What was the Child's Name?

Mr Daſcine. Thomas Vaughan.

Mr Phipps. When you went the next time to Martenico, did Mr. Williams, you ſpeak of, that was the Godfather, preſent this Perſon, Captain Vaughan, to you, as the Man who was then Chriſtened?

Mr Daſcine. Yes, the next time.

Mr Phipps. Now, is Captain Vaughan, that ſtands at the Bar, that very Gentleman?

Mr Daſcine. I am ſure it is he.

L. C. J. You ſay this Meeting was about 1669.

Mr Daſcine. Yes.

Mr Soll. Gen. Pray what was the Reaſon you were ſo inquiſitive to know what became of that Perſon that was Chriſtened when you was there?

Mr Daſcine. Becauſe I being at the Chriſtening, I ask'd him how the Child did.

L. C. J. How came you to take ſuch extraordinary Obſervation of that Child? Was he ſuch a remarkable Child?

Dr Newton. Where were you born?

Mr Daſcine. In France.

Mr Whitaker. What are you?

Mr Daſcine. A Barber by Trade.

L. C. J. What Employment have you?

Mr Daſcine. An Officer in the Marſhal's-Court ſometimes.

Mr Juſtice Turton. What was this Man's Father, what ſort of Man was he?

Mr Daſcine. A tall Man.

Mr Baron Powis. What was his Father's Name?

Mr Daſtine. Thomas Vaughan.

Mr Juſtice Turton. Was his Father living when you was there the ſecond time?

Mr Daſcine. The laſt time I was there I did not ſee his Father, but I ſaw his Father the ſecond time?

Mr Juſtice Turton. But you ſaw Mr Williams, his Godfather?

Mr Daſcine. Yes.

Mr Phipps. Call Simon Danneaun.

Tho. Vaughan. My Lord, he is ſick, and not able to come out of his Bed.

Mr Phipps. Call Francis Harvey. (Who was ſworn.)

Mr Phipps. Do you know Captain Vaughan?

Francis Harvey. Sir, In the Year 1693, I was in France, with one Captain Bontee, who was taken Priſoner in Auguſt the ſame Year; and my Captain he had the Liberty to go up to Paris with a Guard, for his Pleaſure, and to learn the Speech. And, as it happened, we came to lodge in a Street, called Dolphin-ſtreet, at the Sign of the Crown. And there was ſome Gentlemen, that were there to learn the Speech, that were my Countrymen; and there was a young Man there, and he was acquainted over the Way, where this Gentleman, Captain Vaughan, lodged; He lodged at his Aunt's, that ſold Silks, her Name was Madam Wotton; I ſaw this Gentleman there; I am ſure it is he; and with that I came acquainted with him, as well as the reſt.

Mr Phipps. What was he reputed there?

Fr. Harvey. A Captain of a Ship.

Mr Phipps. What did he go for there? A Frenchman, or an Engliſhman, or an Iriſhman?

Fr. Harvey. He went for a Frenchman, as I heard; One time his Aunt, ſhe ſaid, that he was born in the Weſt-Indies, at Martenico, and that he was her Siſter's Son, that lived in Martenico.

Mr Soll. Gen. You ſay he was a Captain of a Ship; what Ship?

Fr. Harvey. That I cannot tell.

Mr Soll. Gen. When was that?

Fr. Harvey. In 1693.

Mr Phipps. Is Mr Lefleur here?

Cl. of Arr. He is a Priſoner in the Savoy; he was taken in the ſame Ship with Mr Vaughan.

Mr Phipps. It is reaſonable he ſhould have been here, to give an Account of the Priſoner.

L. C. J. Then they ſhould have taken care to have had him here. Have you any more Witneſſes?

Mr Soll. Gen. I think we have given ſufficient Evidence that he is an Iriſhman: But now we ſhall ſhew you, that all your Witneſſes have given a very extravagant Evidence to prove that he is a Frenchman. All he hoped for was, that the Proſecutors for the King could not be able to prove him an Iriſhman; He believed there were but three Men could prove him ſo; that was David Creagh and two more; and ſo he writes to David Creagh, and tells him, That his Life was in his Power, and he hoped he and the other two would not diſcover it. This David Creagh was his Neighbour in Ireland; We will call him to prove that Captain Vaughan was born at Galloway in Ireland.

Mr Whitaker. And here is his Letter under his Hand. Bring David Creagh, (Who was ſworn)

Mr Cowper. I deſire, before he give his Evidence, he may look upon thoſe that have given Evidence about the Priſoner, one by one. (Then he look'd upon Robert French.) Mr Creagh, do you know him.

Dav. Creagh. No. (Then he looked upon the reſt.)

Mr Cowper. Have you had any of theſe Men come to you on a Meſſage?

D. Creagh. No, Sir.

Mr Soll. Gen. Do you know Thomas Vaughan, the Priſoner at the Bar,

D. Creagh. Yes, I do.

Mr Soll. Gen. How long have you known him?

D. Creagh. About two Years.

Mr Soll. Gen. Was that your firſt Acquaintance with him?

D. Creagh. Yes.

Mr Soll. Gen. What Place was he born at, as you have heard?

D. Creagh. At Galloway in Ireland.

Mr Soll. Gen. From whom did you hear it?

D. Creagh. From all Perſons that I have heard ſpeak of him.

Mr Soll. Gen. Did he ever own to you that he was born there?

D. Creagh. Yes, oftentimes in my Company.

Mr Soll. Gen. Did you ever receive a Letter from him about your giving Evidence in this Matter?

D. Creagh. Yes, Sir.

Mr Soll. Gen. Do you know this Letter? (which was ſhown him.)

D. Creagh. Yes, Sir.

Mr Soll. Gen. Do you know his Hand?

D. Creagh. Yes, I partly know it.

Mr Whitaker. Did you ever ſee him write?

D. Creagh. This is the Letter I received from him.

L. C. J. Read it. Do you think it is his Hand.

D. Creagh. I cannot ſwear it; but I believe it is his Hand.

Mr Phipps. Have you ſeen him write?

D. Creagh. I have ſeen him write ſeveral times.

L. C. J. Do you believe it is his Hand?

D. Creagh. Yes, my Lord, but I cannot ſwear it.

Then the Letter was read.

To Mr David Creagh, in Newgate, Theſe.

Mr Creagh,

I Have ſome Aſſurance that Mr Whitaker has no Witneſs to prove me a Subject of England, but you, and Two more, which I am glad of with all my Heart: I hope I may have none againſt me that wiſh me worſe than you and Captain Etherington. If Mr Whitaker has not ſworn you yet, I hope you will not appear againſt me. I declare, if I had more than my Life, I would lay it in your Hand. I am like to be ſent to Newgate this Day, and it is like you and ſome more will be ſent here, that we may not talk together. The Dutch Dogs took from me Eleven Hundred Dollars in Money, which certainly troubles me more than the Thoughts of Death, which I value not a Straw; but I hope in four or five Days to be ſupplied. I fear they will keep me cloſe. I have all the Liberty imaginable here to write, and my Friends ſuffered to ſee me. I can ſay nothing that is comfortable, but that I am very well in Health, and nothing concerned, if my Money come in time.

Friday Morning. T. Vaughan.

Mr Phipps. Is that Letter proved? That is not to the Purpoſe. Nor of any Weight conſidering who proves it.

L. C. J. No, that none could prove him a Subject, but he and two more?

Mr Soll. Gen. We will produce only one Witneſs more, call Mr. Jo. Rivet. The Court being informed by ſome Gentlemen then on the Bench, that there was a Gentleman then in Court one Mr Rivet, who being of Galloway; could probably give ſome Account of the Priſoner, he was immediately called, and required to depoſe what he knew.

Jo. Rivet. My Lord, I am ſorry I am called, where Life is concerned, when I came hither only out of Curioſity; but the Service I owe to this Government, obliges me to ſpeak what I know, now I am called to it. (Then he was ſworn.)

Mr Soll. Gen. Do you know the Priſoner at the Bar? What Countryman is he?

Jo. Rivet. I have known him a great many Years, we were Children together in the ſame Town, we lived in Galloway in Ireland. I knew his Father, and Mother, and Brothers, and Siſters; and I remember him a Child, as long as I can remember any Thing, I cannot determine to a certain Number of Years; and I remember him not only a School-boy, but alſo an Apprentice to one Mr Coleman. And I wonder very much at what Mr French ſays, for by the Name and Place of his Birth, he muſt have ſworn what he knows to be otherwiſe: For the French's are a Family in Galloway; his Father was an honeſt Gentleman, and went over into Ireland in the Rebellion in 1641. and he there married a Woman, a Native of Galloway, and had ſeveral Children, one of which, in the latter End of King Charles's Reign, turned Papiſt, and I believe the Grief for it haſtened his Father's Death. I own part of the Evidence may be true, about his being in the Weſt-Indies, but his Mother, I believe, was never out of Ireland in her life.

Dr. Oldiſh. What was his Father's Name?

Jo. Rivet. John.

L. C. J. You ſay, you knew this very Gentleman an Apprentice to one Tho. Coleman at Galloway.

Jo.

Jo. Rivet. I did ſo, my Lord.

L. C. J. How long is it ſince you ſaw him?

J. Rivet. I cannot be poſitive, I think at the Reduction of Galloway in 1691. I cannot ſay whether at or after; but I ſaw him about that time, and knew him, and have known him from a Child; I knew him a School-boy, and knew his Brothers.

Mr Juſtice Turton. What Year did you know him firſt?

J. Rivet. I dare not be poſitive, I remember him particularly well.

L. C. J. Are you ſure this is the Man?

J. Rivet. I know him as well as any Face I ever ſaw. I came accidentally into Court out of Curioſity; and one that knew me, that was of Galloway, gave Account to the King's Council, and ſo I am called to give Evidence.

L. C. J. Do you know this Robert French?

J. Rivet. I cannot ſay I know him, for I ſee him but in the Dark; if I ſaw him in a better Light, it may be I may. (Then Robert French was ſet up for Mr Rivet to ſee him) I think I recollect the Face, I am not certain.

L. C. J. Do you know this Gentleman?

Rob. French. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where did you live?

Rob. French. In Connaught.

L. C. J. Did you know John Vaughan of Galloway?

Rob. French. I have heard of him, my Lord.

Mr Baron Powis. What Trade was the Priſoner's Father?

Jo. Rivet. He had the Market ſeveral Years, he lived very well, and kept a Publick Houſe in the Town.

Mr Phipps. Did you know any other Tho. Vaughan but this?

Rob. French. No, not in Galloway.

Jo. Rivet. This may be a Confirmation of what I ſay; if it be the ſame Gentleman, his Hair is reddiſh.

L. C. J. Pull off his Peruke (which was done.)

T. Vaughan. My Hair is not red.

L. C. J. How are his Eye-Brows?

T. Vaughan. A dark brown, my Lord, the ſame as my Wig.

Mr Bar. Powis Let ſome Body look on it more particularly, (then an Officer took a Candle, and look'd on his Head, but it was ſhaved ſo cloſe, the Colour could not be diſcerned.)

Mr Phipps. We can give an Anſwer to this, my Lord; we ſhall prove, that there was one John Vaughan at Galloway, and he had a Son Thomas, that died ten Years ago. As for Mr Rivet, he is a meer Stranger to us, we know nothing of him; and by what I can perceive, he comes in as a Volunteer, not ſub-pena'd by either Side. And for Mr Creagh, we ſhall ſhew he is not to be credited in any Thing, for we ſhall prove him guilty of Felony, and that he ſwore, that if his Brother would not ſupply him with Money, he would ſwear Treaſon againſt him, and ſhop him in Newgate; and that he ſhould not come out till he came upon a Sledge; and if ſo, there is no Body ſurely can believe he will ſtick at Perjury, or Forgery, or any Thing elſe which may be for his Advantage; Call Mr Chriſtopher Creagh. (who was ſworn.)

Mr Phipps. Pray do you know David Creagh?

C. Creagh. Yes.

Mr Phipps. Is he any Relation to you?

C. Creagh. Yes, he is my Brother.

Mr Phipps. Give the Court and the Jury an Account what you know of your Brother.

C. Creagh. It is an unnatural Thing to come on this Occaſion, and I am ſorry I am called upon this Account.

David Creagh. Speak what you have to ſay.

Mr. Phipps. What do you know of your Brother, whether you have not found him guilty of ſtealing any Thing?

C. Creagh. My Lord, I am upon my Oath, I have known ſomething of it, he has ſtolen ſome Gold from me.

L. C. J. You pretend to be ſo very nice, you are to anſwer to what you know of his Reputation in general, and of his Way of living.

C. Creagh. His Reputation has been but very ſlender, I am very ſorry for it; ſeveral in the Court can give Account of it, as well as I. He ſerved a Relation of his in New-Caſtle, he ſerved there ſome Time, and came to Town, and came to me, and depended upon me, and I ſubſiſted him; and he took an Opportunity one Day, when I and my Wife were gone abroad, and no Body at home but the Maid, and went up Stairs, where my Wife's Room is, and there being a Saſh-Window, he opens it, and took out of my Wife's Cloſet ſeveral Pieces of Gold.

L. C. J. How did you know that he did it?

C. Creagh. I found it out afterwards; he was my Brother and therefore I did not proſecute him. I did not know he had it, till afterwards, that I found to whom he had diſpoſed of the Gold. I enquired who was in the Houſe, and thought the Maid had it; and ſhe ſaid none had been there, but my Brother; and he at laſt owned the Fact, and I had it again.

L. C. J. Have you any more to ſay of your Brother?

Mr Phipps. Did he ever threaten to ſwear againſt you?

T. Vaughan. Or me?

C. Creagh. He has been confined in Newgate Eighteen Months, and I ſubſiſted him in Charity, I allowed him all along; and he has been ſending to me by ſeveral Meſſages, that if I ſubſiſted him not with more Money, than I did allow him, he would ſwear me into a Plot.

L. C. J. Did he tell you ſo?

C. Creagh. No, but he has ſent me Word ſo.

L. C. J. Is the Man here that he ſent this Word by?

C. Creagh. Yes, the Man is here.

Mr Phipps. Let him ſtand up.

L. C. J. Where do you live?

C. Creagh. In Watlin-ſtreet, I am a Merchant; I declare it is not in Favour or Affection, but only in Conſcience, that I declare this.

D. Creagh. This is only to hinder me from giving my Evidence againſt a Merchant that I have taken up.

T. Vaughan. What Character had he in Spain?

Then David Creagh ſpoke but was not heard.

L. C. J. What do you ſay of the Gold?

C. Creagh. He had it, my Lord.

D. Creagh. Why did you not proſecute me then, if I had it?

L. C. J. You are not ſure he took the Gold.

C. Creagh. I was ſo ſure he had it, becauſe I had it from him again by another hand.

L. C. J. Did he tell you ſo, that he had it?

C. Creagh.

C. Creagh. No, but I had a Letter about it.

L. C. J. Where is that Letter?

C. Creagh. I have it not here.

L. C. J. Give not an Evidence of a Letter, without the Letter were here, it ought to have been produced.

Mr Phipps. Call Chriſtopher Heyden (he was ſworn.) Do you give the Court an Account what David Creagh has ſaid to you of ſwearing againſt any Body.

C. Heyden. Several Times, when my Maſter has ſent me to him, to pay him Five Shillings a Week, or Five and Six-pence a Week to ſubſiſt him.

Dr Oldiſh. Who are you Servant to?

C. Creagh. He is my Servant.

C. Heyden. This David Creagh has often told me, that I ſhould tell his Brother, that if he would not ſupply him with more Money, he would ſwear againſt him. When I came to the Seſſions Houſe, when the Pyrates were tried the firſt time, I was going through the Bail-Dock, where this David Creagh called to me; and I asked him what he did there? He ſaid he was to be Evidence againſt Captain Vaughan. No certainly, ſaid I, you do not know him; do you? Says he, here's the Thing, it had been better for me, that I had been an Evidence againſt him before this, and I am forced to be an Evidence againſt him, to ſave my ſelf: And he bid me tell his Brother, God damn his Soul to all Eternity, if he did not ſend him Supply that Day, he would have him in Newgate, and that he ſhould not come out again, till he came out upon a Sledge.

L. C. J. Did he ſay ſo?

C. Heyden. Yes, my Lord.

D. Creagh. How long is it agone, Mr Heyden?

C. Heyden. It was the Day the Pyrates were tryed; more than that, here was Mr Wroth's Man was with me at the ſame time; and becauſe he ſhould not hear what you ſaid, you took me to the Door.

Mr Phipps. Is Daniel Bryan here? (He appeared and was ſworn.)

Daniel Bryan. I was ſubpena'd here for I know not what: For I know not Captain Vaughan.

Mr Phipps. Give me leave to ask you a Queſtion. Do you know, or have heard of David Creagh?

Daniel Bryan. Yes, Sir.

Mr Phipps. Will you give an Account of what he has ſaid of Swearing againſt any Body?

Daniel Bryan. He has threatened his Brother ſeveral times, that if he would not ſend him relief, he would bring him in for ſomething, and would inform againſt him.

Mr Phipps. Did he ſay he would ſwear againſt him?

Daniel Bryan. He did ſay he would inform againſt him.

Mr Phipps. What did you hear him ſay of ſwearing againſt any one?

Daniel Bryan. He ſaid, he had rather others ſhould periſh, than himſelf.

Mr Whitaker. This Man was Condemned for the ſame Crime.

Mr Phipps. Mr Vaughan, have you any other Witneſſes? Call Creighton (who was ſworn.) What Countryman are you?

Creighton. A Connaught Man, I was born in Galloway, I believe Mr Rivet knows me.

Mr Phipps. Did you know one John Vaughan, that lived at Galloway?

Creighton. I knew him very well.

Mr Phipps. Do you know the Priſoner at the Bar?

Creighton. No.

Mr Phipps. Do you remember, that That John Vaughan had a Son Thomas, and what became of him?

Creighton. Yes, he had a Son Thomas, but I underſtood that he went ſomewhere into the Country, and there died, and it was ſpread all about the Town.

Mr Phipps. Do you know what he died of?

Creighton. I cannot tell.

L. C. J. How long ago did he die?

Creighton. About ten Years ago. I knew all the Brothers.

Mr Phipps. Did you know that Thomas Vaughan?

Creighton. I knew him very well.

Mr Phipps. Is that Gentleman, the Priſoner, he?

Creighton. No.

Mr Phipps. Do you believe that is not the Man?

Creighton. I believe not.

Mr Phipps. Did you ever know any other Thomas Vaughan?

Creighton. No.

Mr Juſtice Turton. Had not John Vaughan a Son Apprentice at Galloway to one Thomas Coleman?

Creighton. No as I know of.

Mr Juſtice Turton. How old was that Son, Thomas Vaughan, when you knew him?

Creighton. I was born at the next Door to that Thomas Vaughan that was reputed to be dead.

Mr Juſtice Turton. Was not that Thomas Vaughan Apprentice to Mr Coleman?

Creighton. I cannot certainly tell.

Mr Juſtice Turton. How old was that Thomas Vaughan when he went away from Galloway?

Creighton. I cannot tell.

Mr Juſtice Turton. What is your own Age?

Creighton. My Age is about Five and Twenty.

L. C. J. You have not ſeen him in Ten Years?

Creighton. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Can you take it upon your Oath, this is not the Man you ſaw ten Years ago, that Thomas Vaughan that you knew?

Creighton. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. How old was he when you were acquainted with him?

Creighton. I cannot tell certainly; I believe he might be about fifteen.

L. C. J. How long is that ſince?

Creighton. Ten Years.

L. C. J. What is your Name?

Creighton. Creighton.

Mr. Cowper. You ſay you knew him ten Years ago; Pray what ſort of Perſon was he, and how did he differ from this Man?

Creighton. He was better Set, and not quite ſo Tall as this Man, and full of the Small-pox; he was the quarrelſomeſt Boy in the whole Town.

Mr Soll. Gen. You ſay he was not quite ſo Tall as this Man.

Creighton. No, he was not quite ſo Tall.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Do you think he might not grow ſince? This was Ten Years ago, when he was but fifteen Years old.

Mr Cowper. You knew him at fifteen; How long had you known him?

Creighton. From my Infancy, till he departed the Town.

Mr

Mr Cowper. During all that Time what Employment was he in? Tell ſome Circumſtances.

Creighton. I think this Vaughan went to one Mr Ruſſel's School.

Mr Cowper. What to do?

Creighton. To learn to write and read.

Mr Cowper, And was he not an Apprentice in that time?

Creighton. I cannot tell.

Mr Cowper. Were you acquainted with him?

Creighton. Yes.

L. C. J. You lived next Door to him, Sure you muſt be acquainted with him?

Creighton. He was a fighting Boy, for I remember he did once thraſh my Coat ſoundly.

L. C. J. Where do you live now?

Creighton. At the Caſtle and Falcon in Alderſgate-ſtreet.

L. C. J. What Trade are you?

Creighton. A Shoemaker.

Mr Baron Powis. How long have you lived here?

Creighton. This Ten Years.

Mr Baron Powis. What did that Thomas Vaughan die of, that you ſay was dead before you came away, as it was reported up and down?

Creighton. I cannot tell.

Mr Cowper. Juſt now you ſaid he went away from Galloway, and it was reported then that he was dead ten Years ago; now you ſay you have been in England ten Years.

Creighton. I came into England about ten Years ago.

Mr Cowper. Did you hear it at Golloway before you came away?

Creighton. I heard it at Galloway before I came to London, and there are many can teſtifie that there was a Report that he was dead.

Mr Juſtice Turton. How long was he gone from Galloway before you came away?

Creighton. I cannot ſay to an Hour; I heard he was dead.

L. C. J. Well, well, he went away from Galloway.

Mr Juſtice Turton. Have you not been here twelve Years?

Creighton. I think not; I came a little before the Revolution.

Mr Juſtice Turton. That is eight Years ago. Juſt now you ſaid you had been here ten Years.

Mr Phipps. Call John Kine. (who was ſworn) John Kine, Did you know one John Vaughan in Galloway?

John Kine. Yes, I lived with him.

Mr Phipps. What Children had he?

John Kine. Four Sons.

Mr Phipps. Had he any one of thoſe Sons that was named Thomas?

John Kine. Not of thoſe four.

Mr Phipps. Had he a Son Thomas?

John Kine. Yes, he had; he died about ten or eleven Years old of the Small-pox.

Mr Phipps. You ſay you lived with this John Vaughan; look upon the Priſoner at the Bar, is he any of thoſe Sons?

John Kine. No, Sir, I never ſaw this Man till now.

Mr Phipps. How long did you live with him?

John Kine. About Eight or Nine Years.

Mr Phipps. But how long have you been come away from him?

John Kine. About Ten Years.

Mr Juſtice Turton. How well do theſe two Witneſſes agree together? The other ſaid he died at fifteen, and was pitted with the Small-pox. This Man ſays he died at ten, and of the Small-pox.

L. C. J. Where do you live now?

John Kine. I live in the City.

L. C. J. How long have you lived there?

John Kine. Twelve Years.

L. C. J. How long was this Thomas Vaughan dead before you came hither?

John Kine. Really I cannot be poſitive, I believe about eight or nine Years.

L. C. J. Did Thomas Vaughan die of the Small-pox?

John Kine. Yes.

L. C. J. That you are ſure of.

John Kine. I am ſure that was the Diſeaſe he died of.

L. C. J. You know him well, I believe.

John Kine. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. How old was he when he died?

John Kine. About ten Years.

L. C. J. Where was he buried?

John Kine. At Galloway.

Mr Juſtice Turton. Why does not the Officer take Care? There is one talking with the Witneſs. Can you now reconcile your Evidence? (To the Priſoner's Council.)

L. C. J. Have you any more Witneſſes?

Mr Phipps. No, my Lord.

Mr Juſtice Turton. What were the Names of all the Sons?

John Kine. The eldeſt was John Vaughan, the other William Vaughan, another Edward Vaughan, and another James Vaughan; that was all that he has alive.

Mr Whitaker. There is never a Thomas Vaughan among theſe.

Mr Cowper. Thomas died up and down in ſeveral Places.

Mr Phipps. Mr Rivet, Do you know the Sons of that John Vaughan?

Mr Rivet. He had all theſe Sons, John, William, Thomas and James. He ſpeaks of a Son Edward, I cannot exactly remember whether there was ſuch a Son or no; though I have a rude Idea of it, but am not certain. I knew this Thomas, I went to School with him, and I ſaw him in the Year 1691. about the Surrender of Galloway.

Jury-man. Is that Man at the Bar the ſame Thomas Vaughan?

Mr Rivet. I am poſitive of that.

L. C. J. You ſaw him at the Surrender of Galloway?

Mr Rivet. I did; it was about that time.

Thomas Vaughan. I am a Subject of the moſt Chriſtian King, and I deſire, though I ſpeak Engliſh, that I may be examined in French, in a Matter that touches me ſo near. And you may ſee by my Commiſſion, my Lord, that I am a French-man; which I deſire may be read.

L. C. J. We ſhall not trouble you with that.

Thomas Vaughan. I can ſhew you my Commiſſion, wherein the King, my Maſter, declares me to be a Subject of France.

Dr Oldiſh. Mr Vaughan, I think, you need not trouble the Court to read the Commiſſion; the Commiſſion is the ſame as for all other Subjects of the French King, wherein he is look'd upon as a Natural born Subject of France; and ſo he owns himſelf upon his Examination before the Judge of the Admiralty.

L. C. J. Have you any more to ſay? As to the Examination, who can prove that?

Mr Cawley.

Mr Cawley. I can prove that, my Lord. (Mr Cawley was ſworn.)

L. C. J. Is that Thomas Vaughan's Examination?

Mr Cawley. Yes, my Lord, it is ſigned by him; and taken before Sir Charles Hedges the 25th of July, 1695.

L. C. J. Read it. Then Mr Cawley read the Examination of Thomas Vaughan.

The 27th of July, 1695.

Officium Domini contra Thomas Vaughan Capuem' Navicule, The Loyal Clencarty.

The Examination of Thomas Vaughan late Commander of the Ship, the Loyal Clencarty, aged Twenty Six Years, taken before the Right Worſhipful Sir Charles Hedges, Kt. Judge of the High Court of Admiralty of England.

THIS Examinate ſaith, That he was born at Martenico within the Dominions of the French King, and is his Subject, but refuſes to anſwer of what Parents he was born; That he came laſt from thence about four Years ago as Commander of a Ship called the Hare, which had been before taken from the Engliſh, and came in her to Nants in France, and hath ever ſince been in France, or cruizing in French Ships; That he hath been a Commander ever ſince he was Sixteen Years of Age, and hath Commanded ſeveral French Privateers, and was Cammander of a Privateer of St. Malo, called the Granada of 36 Guns, which about two Years ago took the Diamond, and the Examinate was never till now taken. Being asked, Whether he ever lived in England, or in Ireland? he refuſes to anſwer. Being asked, Whether he knew any Thing of the taking and carrying of a Cuſtom-Houſe-Boat from the Downs to Bulloigne? Or, Whether he was then in London, or did give directions to any Perſons, or knew of her being carried off? he anſwered nothing, but ſaid, That if any Perſon would prove it againſt him, he was preſent to anſwer it: But ſaith, That in France he heard of her being brought to Bulloigne; and he the Examinate bought her at Bulloigne of the Men that carried her away, and that ſhe coſt him 900 and odd Livres, and was then called the Elizabeth and Anne, or Michael and Anne, but which doth not remember; That he the Examinate ſtill hath the ſaid Veſſel at Bulloigne; That he cannot tell the Names of the Perſons he bought her of, and that took her away, but believes they had a Commiſſion; That ſomething above three Weeks ago the Examinate went with a Commiſſion from the French King on Board a Two-and-twenty-Oar Barge, called the Loyal Clencarty then at Bulloigne as Commander thereof, and on Monday laſt was a Fortnight was taken by the Coventry Man of War at the Buoy in the Gunfleet; And that the Commander of the Coventry took away this Examinate's Commiſſion; being asked upon what Deſign he came out with the Barge, replied that it was not to take the Air; That the Barge formerly belonged to the Lord Danby, and was taken by a French Privateer about a Year ago; That before he came out, he met with two Engliſh Seamen upon the Court of Guards at Bulloigne, who told the Examinate, That they had been taken Priſoners, and the Examinate took them in upon Charity; and afterwards met another Engliſh Man, who told the Examinate that he had been taken in Land-Service, and believes it was before Fort Kenoque; and the ſaid Perſon ſitting upon a Stone at Bulloigne, and not knowing what to do with himſelf, the Examinate took him on Board for charity, and deſigned to put the ſaid three Perſons aſhore in England. Being asked whether he did not put in a Claim for the ſaid Cuſtom-Houſe-Boat by reaſon of her Captain? Or, whether the Perſons that took her had any Commiſſion from him? He the Examinate anſwered, That they that took her muſt anſwer for what they did, and he muſt anſwer for his Actions only.

Eodem die Capt'
coram me.
C. Hedges. Thomas Vaughan.

L. C. J. Mr Vaughan, Have you any more to ſay?

Tho. Vaughan. It is very hard Circumſtances I am under; if an Engliſh Man was in France, under the ſtraights that I am here, it would be very hard for him to prove himſelf an Engliſh Man.

L. C. J. You have had a very fair Tryal, and you ſhall have Juſtice, be it for you, or againſt you.

Thomas Vaughan. I hope your Lordſhip will do me Right.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, The Priſoner at the Bar, Thomas Vaughan, ſtands Indicted for High-Treaſon, for adhering to the King's Enemies, viz. That he put himſelf as a Soldier in the Service of the French King, in a Veſſel called the Loyal Clencarty, with diverſe other Perſons on Board her, that were Subjects to the French King, and Enemies to the King of England, with a Deſign to burn the King's, and his Subjects Ships; and for that purpoſe went in that Ship. That the Priſoner was on Board the Ship, and with ſuch a Deſign, is proved, without all Contradiction, by ſeveral Witneſſes that have been produced; that is, that the Two-and-twenty-Oar Barge, which is the ſame called the Loyal Clencarty, lay hovering about the Buoy in the Nore; thoſe Men in the Coventry imagined they had ſome Deſign of Miſchief to the Ships, and they made after him with the Coventry. It was apprehended by Captain Vaughan and his Crew, that the Coventry would be too hard for them, and ſo they did ſubmit, and were taken. And being examined on what Account he came on our Coaſts, it is confeſt by him, That he came with a Deſign to burn our Ships. You may obſerve what ſort of Men were a Board. You have heard it proved to you, that Crittenden, the Marſhal of Dover, entered thoſe Perſons taken a Board the French Veſſel, of what Nation, and what Quality they were; and there were about a Dozen of theſe French Men, for they were entered as ſuch. Now for a Subject of England to join with the King's Enemies, in purſuit of a Deſign to burn or take any of the King's, or his Subjects Ships; that is, an Adherence to the King's Enemies. But it appears, not only that Captain Vaughan was in their Company, but that he was their Commander; which commanding the Veſſel, on Board which were French Subjects Enemies of the King and the Kingdom of England, is High-Treaſon, and the particular Fact of Treaſon for which he is indicted. And it appears that he had a Commiſſion from the French King to Command this Veſſel, the Loyal Clencarty.

Now

Now the Priſoner having this Commiſſion to be Commander of this Veſſel, though they who ſerved under him were not Native French-men but other Foreigners, yet their ſubjecting themſelves to him, acting by Virtue or Colour of that Commiſſion, makes them to be the French King's Subjects, during their continuance in that Service; for otherwiſe all Prizes, which they ſhould take, would make them to be Pirates; which none will pretend to maintain, when they acted by a Commiſſion from a Sovereign Prince, that was an Enemy. And if they ſhall cruize upon our Coaſts with a Deſign to take, or deſtroy any of the King's, or his Subjects Ships, they are Enemies, though they were the Subjects of a Prince, or State in Amity with the King of England. But at this Time there is no neceſſity of entring upon this Queſtion, becauſe it is proved that diverſe, who were on Board this Veſſel were French-men, the joyning with whom, in Proſecution of ſuch a Deſign, is that kind of High-Treaſon of adhering to the King's Enemies. So that if Captain Vaughan was a Subject of England, he is proved guilty of High-Treaſon, if you believe the Evidence.

But now it is inſiſted on by Mr Vaughan and his Council, That though he was exerciſing Hoſtility againſt the King of England, and deſigning Miſchief to his Subjects; yet, ſays he, I was not a Subject of England, I was Born a Subject to the French King. If that be true, then is he not guilty of High-Treaſon; he is an Enemy, but not a Traytor: And that is the Point you are now to conſider of, whether he be a Subject of England or France?

Now as to that, he being taken under ſuch Circumſtances, and ſpeaking Engliſh, it is reaſonable to be preſumed that he is a Subject of England, unleſs he proves the contrary. But then you have heard by ſeveral of the Witneſſes, That when he was at firſt taken, he acknowledged himſelf to be an Iriſh-man; and he did not only acknowledge it to them that aſſiſted in apprehending him, but being carried to Dover, when the Marſhal entered him in his Book as a Priſoner, he entered him not as a French-man, but he declared at that Time he was an Iriſh-man. It may be he did not conſider the Conſequence of it, for the next Day he was carried before the Mayor of Dover, and then having conſidered better of it, that it was not for his Intereſt to acknowledge himſelf an Iriſh-man, he ſaid he was born a Subject to the French King, and at Martenico. There were Scotch-men and Iriſh-men taken at the ſame Time, and they were entered as of the Nation they belonged to, and ſo were diverſe entered as French-men. So that unleſs he hath given ſufficient Evidence to the contrary, this is ſufficient to induce you to believe him an Iriſh-man Born.

But he has endeavoured to take off this Evidence that hath been given. Firſt, he ſays, It was when he was in Drink that he did confeſs himſelf to be an Iriſh-man; but when he was ſober, he ſaid he was a French-man. And beſides that, he calls a Witneſs, whoſe Name is Robert French, to give an Account of him. And French ſays, That about fourteen Years ago he was at St. Chriſtophers, on French Ground, and he did then ſee this Thomas Vaughan, he did take him then to be about the Age of fifteen, He ſays he ſtay'd there about four and twenty Hours, and that he was in the Company of this Vaughan and his Father about five or ſix Hours. He ſays his Father told him at that Time, that this Young Man, who was then about fifteen Years of Age, was born at Martenico. He ſays farther, That his Father Did recommend this Son to him to be a Sea-faring Man, being the Imployment he intended him for; and he is ſure this is the Man. This Robert French was ask'd, whether he ever ſaw this Vaughan from the Time he firſt ſaw him at St. Chriſtophers until this Time; He ſays he never ſaw him ſince that Time, till about two Months ago. He gives you this Account how he came to meet with him; he ſays he came to Town, and being a charitable Man, he uſed to viſit the Priſons; and he came to Newgate to one Knowles, and there he ſaw Captain Vaughan; and though he had not ſeen him for fourteen Years before, yet he knew him again, and is poſitive that he is the ſame Perſon.

Another ſwears he knew the Priſoner about five Years, and he was reputed a French-man.

There has been another Witneſs produced which is that Daſcine, who came up as a French-man, and talked French, pretending he could not ſpeak Engliſh; but on examination it was diſcovered that he had an Imployment in England, and was a Bayliff's Follower, and it appears he can ſpeak Engliſh very well; and notwithſtanding his pretence has given his Evidence in Engliſh. And he tells you, That he about the Year 1669 did go to St. Chriſtophers, and afterwards to Martenico, and there he went to one Williams, who had a Friend whoſe Name was Vaughan, at whoſe Houſe there was a Chriſtning to be of his Son, to whom Williams was to be Godfather; and this Witneſs was carried thither, and the Child was Chriſtned Thomas. He tells you he went over again to St. Chriſtophers, and to Martenico in the Year 1677, and that then he enquired for this Child, and did ſee him. Then he ſays, after that, he went over again to St. Chriſtophers and to Martenico about thirteen Years ago, and then ſaw him again, and, I think, never ſaw him ſince until very lately; and this Priſoner, he undertakes to tell you, is the very Perſon.

But then one Harvey tells you he ſaw him in France in the Year 1693. and there he was taken to be a French-man, and he lived with a Woman that ſold Silk that ſaid he was her Nephew, her Siſter's Son, and that he was Born at Martenico. This is the Evidence he gives you to induce you to believe he is a French-man.

Now in the firſt Place, before I open the Evidence in Anſwer to it, I deſire you to obſerve the Weight and Import of this Evidence that hath been produced by the Priſoner. Firſt, for this French that ſays he ſaw Captain Vaughan fourteen Years ago, when he was about fifteen Years of Age; he had no former Acquaintance with him, ſtay'd in his Company but ſix Hours, and came away within four and twenty Hours after his arrival, and never ſaw him again in fourteen Years; it is a ſtrange Thing that he ſhould know him again ſo well as to be poſitive that he is the ſame Perſon, for in fourteen Years there is a great Alteration in a Man: For a Man that has known one at the Age of fifteen, and not ſeen him in fourteen Years after, though before he was very well acquainted with him, cannot ſo eaſily know him again. But however he is poſitive, upon his Oath, that he is the ſame Perſon that he ſaw at Martenico.

Then as for Daſcine, you may conſider him that he ſhould take notice of a little Child that he ſaw Chriſtned ſeveral Years before, and that he ſhould now remember him when he had not ſeen him in thirteen Years; ſure he had a great liking to this Child, that when he went to Martenico many Years after he ſhould be ſo inquiſitive after him; I muſt leave theſe Things to you to conſider of: That he might have an Aunt in France that is very poſſible too.

But now conſider how this Evidence hath been endeavoured to be anſwered; two Witneſſes have been produced to contradict that which they have ſworn. The firſt is David Cray, who tells you he has known the Priſoner for two Years, and ſays he was always reputed to be an Iriſh-man, and Born in Galloway; he has often diſcourſed with him about his Country, and he told him that he was an Iriſh man, and Born at Galloway. Then you hear what a Letter is produced writ to Cray when he was to come upon his Tryal, he mentions what his Defence was, and that it was impoſſible that any could do him any harm but he and two more. Cray ſwears it is his Hand; that he hath ſeen him write, and he believes it is his Hand.

Then there is a Gentleman, Mr Rivet, that came here by chance, who is a Galloway man, he ſaith he knew the Priſoner's Father, who was reputed to come thither about the Time of the Rebellion in Ireland, in 1641. and lived at Galloway; and that this Priſoner, Mr Vaughan, was his Son, and he knew him of a Child, was well acquainted with him, lived hard by him, remembers him an Apprentice in Galloway, and tells you to whom, and ſays he is ſure this is the very Man; and that he ſaw the Priſoner in 1691, about the Time of the Reduction of Galloway; and he is confident that the Priſoner is the Son of John Vaughan at Galloway, and he gives you a particular Account of him and his Family; viz. of the Reputation and Manner of living of his Father, and what other Brothers he had; ſo that there is no Objection againſt his Credit, and it is hard to believe, ſince he is ſo poſitive and circumſtantial, that he can be miſtaken.

But the Priſoner and his Council have endeavoured to anſwer all this Evidence; and firſt they have called Cray's Brother to prove that he is an ill Man, for that he came into this Town where his Brother lives, who ſubſiſted him and took him into his Houſe, and one Day when he and his Wife went abroad, he made bold with ſome of his Money; but they thought the Maid had it, and he charged her with it, but to his ſatisfaction it did afterwards appear that David had it.

Then there is another, Chriſtopher Hyden, Chriſtopher Cray's Servant, who ſays, he heard D. Cray ſay he was forc'd to be an Evidence againſt Vaughan to ſave himſelf; and that he uſed to threaten his Brother, that if he would not give him more Money he would ſwear againſt him. Bryan ſaith much to the ſame purpoſe. Theſe are produced to take off the Credit of D Cray's Teſtimony.

But then Gentlemen, as to the Place of the Priſoner's Birth, two other Witneſſes are produc'd to give you ſatisfaction that this Captain Vaughan was not the Son of that Mr Vaughan of Galloway, whoſe Evidence I will open to you, and then you will ſee how coherent they are in their Teſtimony. The firſt is Creighton, a Shoemaker, he ſays he knew Thomas Vaughan, the Son of John Vaughan of Galloway, about ten Years ſince; he was a Galloway-man Bred, and lived the next Door to John Vaughan that had a Son Thomas. He ſays he has been here about ten Years in England. He ſays he thinks that Thomas Vaughan, the Son of John Vaughan, was about the Age of fifteen Years, but that this Priſoner is, not he, for that Thomas Vaughan was disfigured with the Small-pox; he remembered him well, he had reaſon for it, for he once baſted him ſoundly, and that he went away from Galloway when he was about fifteen Years of Age, and was reported to be Dead; and if it were ſo this Priſoner cannot be the Perſon.

The other Witneſs is as poſitive as Creighton, for he ſaith, He knew this John Vaughan of Galloway, and his Son Thomas; and that Thomas Vaughan, Son of John Vaughan, died about ten Years ſince of the Small-pox. So that they have found two Thomas Vaughans; one tells you of one that was fifteen Years Old, and was disfigured with the Small-pox; and the other tells you of Thomas Vaughan who died of the Small-pox when he was ten Years of Age.

You are therefore to conſider the Evidence on both Sides. The Queſtion principally is, Whether the Priſoner be a Subject of the King of England? If you are ſatisfied that he is not an Engliſh Subject, but a French-man, then he is not guilty of this High-Treaſon; but if you are ſatisfied, by the Series of the whole Evidence, that he is an Iriſh man, and that he had a Commiſſion from the French King, and that he cruized upon our Engliſh Coaſts, in Company with the King's Enemies, with a Deſign to take, burn, or deſtroy any of the King's or his Subjects Ships, you are to find him guilty of the high Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, otherwiſe you are to acquit him.

Cl. of Arr. Swear an Officer to keep the Jury; (which was done.)

After a ſhort ſtay, the Jury returned into Court, and gave in their Verdict.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, anſwer to your Names. E. Leeds.

Mr. Leeds. Here.

Cryer. Vous avez, and ſo of the reſt.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. Thomas Vaughan, Hold up thy Hand. (which he did) Look upon the Priſoner. How ſay you, is he guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements had he at the Time of the Treaſon committed.

Foreman. None to our Knowledge.

Cl. of Arr. Then hearken to your Verdict as the Court hath recorded it: You ſay that Thomas Vaughan is guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, but that he had no Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements at the Time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince to your Knowledge, and ſo you ſay all.

Jury. Yes.

Tho. Vaughan. My Lord, let me beg one Favour, that I may be uſed like a Gentleman, that I may be ſent to a Chamber, and not to a Dungeon, and that my Friends may come to me.

L. C. J. Captain Vaughan, they ſay you once made an eſcape, and therefore the Keeper muſt keep you with Humanity, but with all Security.

Tho. Vaughan. I deſire I may be kept like a Chriſtian.

L. C. J. The Keeper muſt do his Duty.

Cl. of Arr. Thomas Vaughan, hold up thy Hand, (which

(which he did) Thou ſtandeſt convicted of High-Treaſon againſt our Sovereign Lord the King; What haſt thou to ſay for thy ſelf why Judgment ſhall not paſs againſt thee to dye according to the Law?

Tho Vaughan. I am altogether a ſtranger to the Law, my Lord, I refer my ſelf to my Council.

L. C. J. Well, then you refer your ſelf to your Council. You have had a fair Tryal, and have no reaſon to complain of it: If your Council have any Thing to ſay in arreſt of Judgment they ſhall be heard.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, the Indictment has two ſorts of Treaſon laid in it; the one for adhering to the King's Enemies, the other levying of War; and, with ſubmiſſion, I take it that the firſt is not well laid, for it ſays that the Priſoner did adhere to the King's Enemies, but ſays not againſt the King. Now every Body knows that the French King is in War, not only with England but Holland, and Spain, and the Emperour: But if a Man joyn with the French againſt any of them, he adheres to the King's Enemies, and yet it cannot be ſaid to be againſt the King; therefore they ought to have laid it that he did adhere to the King's Enemies contra Dominum Regem; it muſt be aiding and comforting them againſt the King that makes the Treaſon.

L. C. J. It does ſay ſo.

Mr. Phipps. No, my Lord, it only ſays that Captain Vaughan did adhere to the King's Enemies, and does not ſay it was againſt the King; and if that be Treaſon, is what we deſire to know.

L. C. J. If he adhere to the King's Enemies, it muſt be againſt the King, though he aſſiſt them only againſt the King's Allies, for thereby the King's Enemies may be more encouraged and enabled to do miſchief or Damage to the King: Suppoſe you aſſiſt the French King againſt the King of Spain, that is now in Alliance and League with the King of England, and the French in actual Enmity, that is to adhere to the King's Enemies againſt the King.

Mr Phipps. Would that be Treaſon my Lord?

L. C. J. Yes certainly, though that is not a Point in this Caſe, and ſo not neceſſary to be determined now; for the Act of Parliament of 25 of E. 3. defines Treaſon in adhering to the King's Enemies, and expreſſes the Overt-Act in giving them aid or comfort; it is ſufficient to alledge the Treaſon in the Words of the Statute, adhering to the King's Enemies. An Overt-Act alledged, ſhews it to be againſt the King; and in purſuance of that adherence he did ſo and ſo; he was a Captain and Soldier in the Ship, did joyn with the King's Enemies, &c. with a Deſign to deſtroy the King's and his Subjects Ships; ſurely that is moſt manifeſtly an adherence to the King's Enemies againſt the King.

Mr Phipps. The Overt-Act, if it were alledged ſufficiently, would not help it; for if there can be an adhering to the King's Enemies that is not Treaſon, they ought to alledge ſuch adhering as is Treaſon, and if the Treaſon it ſelf is not well alledged, the Overt-Act will not help it.

L. C. J. There is an Overt-Act to ſhew it to be againſt the King. It is ſaid all along, he being in this Veſſel Clencarty, cum diverſis Subditis.

Mr Phipps. But then that Overt-Act is not well alledged, for 'tis ſaid only he went a cruizing; whereas they ought to have alledged that he did commit ſome Acts of Hoſtility, and attempted to take ſome of the King's Ships; for cruizing alone cannot be an Overt-Act, for he might be cruizing to ſecure the French Merchant Ships from being taken, or for many other purpoſes, which will not be an Overt-Act of Treaſon.

L. C. J. I beg your Pardon. Suppoſe the French King, with Forces, ſhould come to Dunkirk with a Deſign to invade England, if any one ſhould ſend him Victuals, or give him Intelligence, or by any other Way contribute to their Aſſiſtance, it would be High-Treaſon in adhering to the King's Enemies.

Mr Phipps. If the French King had deſigned an Invaſion upon England, and Captain Vaughan had aſſiſted in his Veſſel in forwarding the Invaſion, it would have been Treaſon; but here is nothing mentioned but cruizing.

L. C. J. Cruizing about the Coaſts of England with a Deſign to deſtroy the King's Ships.

Mr Phipps. That Deſign ought to be made appear by ſome Act of Hoſtility; for in the Caſe of Burton and Bradſhaw, and others, which my Lord Coke cites, the agreeing to riſe and pull down Incloſures, and meeting and providing Arms for that purpoſe, is agreed not to be levying of War; and they were indicted for conſpiring to levy War upon the Statute of Queen Eliz. And in this Caſe, here being only a Conſpiring, and nothing attempted, it can be no more Treaſon than it was in that Caſe.

L. C. J. When Men form themſelves into a Body, and March Rank and File with Weapons offenſive and defenſive, this is levying of War with open Force, if the Deſign be Publick. Do you think when a Ship is armed with Guns, &c. doth appear on the Coaſt, watching an opportunity to burn the King's Ships in the Harbour; and their deſign be known, and one goes to them, and aids and aſſiſts them; That this is not an adhering to the King's Enemies? Here are two Indictments, one for levying War, and the other for adhering to the King's Enemies; but the adhering to the King's Enemies is principally inſiſted on, and there muſt be an actual War proved upon the Perſon Indicted in the one, yet need not be proved in the other Caſe.

Mr Phipps. The ſame certainly is neceſſary in one as well as the other; for barely adhering to the King's Enemies is not Treaſon, but there muſt be an actual aiding and comforting them; and a meer Intention to aſſiſt the King's Enemies, is not an adherence within the Statute of 25 Ed. 3.

L. C. J. If there be not High-Treaſon in the Act alledged, that is, if it do not make out an adherence to the King's Enemies, than your Objection would hold good.

Mr Phipps. The going to cruize, my Lord, does not make out an adherence to the King's Enemies; for his cruizing might be for other purpoſes as well as to take the King's Ships, and your Lordſhip will intend the beſt in favour of Life.

Mr Whitaker. To burn the King's Ships.

L. C. J. Treby. The Indictment is laid for adhering to, and comforting and aiding the King's Enemies. You would take that to be capable to be conſtrued adhering to the King's Enemies in other Reſpects; but I take it to be a reaſonable Conſtruction of the Indictment, to be adhering to the King's Enemies in their Enmity. What is the Duty of every Subject? It is to fight with, and ſubdue, and weaken the King's Enemies: And contrary to this, if he confederate with, and ſtrengthen the King's Enemies, he expreſsly contradicts this Duty of his Allegiance and is guilty of this Treaſon of adhering to them. But then you ſay here is no aiding, unleſs there were ſomething done, ſome Act of Hoſtility. Now here is going aboard with an intention to do ſuch Acts; and is not that comforting and aiding? Certainly it is. Is not the French King comforted and aided, when he has got ſo many Engliſh Subjects to go a cruizing upon our Ships? Suppoſe they man his whole Fleet, or a conſiderable part of it; Is not that aiding? If they go and enter themſelves into a Regiment, Liſt themſelves and March, though they do not come to a Battel, this is helping and encouraging; ſuch Things give the Enemy Heart and Courage to go on with the War; or elſe, it may be, the French King would come to good Terms of Peace. It is certainly Aiding and Comforting of them, to go and accept a Commiſſion, and enter into their Ships of War, and Liſt themſelves, and go out in order to deſtroy their Fellow-ſubjects, and ruin the King's Ships; theſe are Actings of an hoſtile Nature. And if this be not Adhering, &c. it may as well be ſaid, That if the ſame Perſons had made an attack upon our Ships and miſcarried in it, that had not been ſo neither, becauſe that in an unproſperous Attempt there is nothing done that gives aid or comfort to the Enemy. And after this kind of Reaſoning they will not be guilty, till they have Succeſs; and if they have Succeſs enough, it will be too late to queſtion them.

Mr Phipps. Intending to levy War is not Treaſon, unleſs a War be actually levied.

L. C. J. Treby. Is it not actual levying of War, if they actually provide Arms, and levy Men, and in a Warlike manner ſet out and cruize, and come with a deſign to deſtroy our Ships?

Mr Phipps. It would not be an actual levying of War, unleſs they commit ſome Act of Hoſtility.

L. C. J. Yes, indeed, the going on Board, and being in a Poſture to attack the King's Ships. As to the Fault you find with the Indictment, there is a Fault, but not in point of Law; they might have laid it more generally, ſo as to have given more Evidence.

Mr Baron Powis. However it is well enough.

But for you to ſay, becauſe they did not actually fight, it is not a levying of War; Is it not plain what they did intend? That they came with that Intention, that they came in that Poſture, that they came armed, and had Guns, and Blunderbuſſes, and ſurrounded the Ship twice, they came with an armed Force; that is a ſtrong Evidence of the Deſign.

L. C. J. You would make no Act to be aiding and aſſiſting but fighting.

Mr Phipps. Then next I am in your Lordſhip's Judgment, whether the Statute of 28 of Hen. 8th. by which Captain Vaughan is tried, is in force, and be not repealed by the firſt and ſecond of Philip and Mary, which ſaith, that all Tryals, in Caſes of Treaſon, ſhall be at the Common-Law. Now by the Common-Law before the Statute 28 Hen. 8. Treaſon done upon the Sea, was tried before the Admiral, or his Lieutenant, and my Lord Coke in the 12 Rep. in the Caſe of the Admiralty, ſaith the Juriſdiction of the Admiralty is by the Common-Law. By the Statute 33 Hen. 8. Treaſon confeſſed before three of the Privy-Council might be tried in a foreign County, but that Statute is repealed by the Statute 1 and 2 of Philip and Mary; for by the Statute 33 Hen. 8. c. 4. Treaſon committed in trales, might be tried in what County the King would aſſign; but ſince the Statute of Philip and Mary, it muſt be in the proper County; ſo that we are in your Lordſhip's Judgment, whether the Statute of 28 Hen. 8. be in force; and whether, ſince the Statute of 1 and 2 Philip and Mary, Treaſons done upon the Sea, ought not to be tried before the Admirals, or anciently at the Common-Law?

L. C. J. This is Treaſon by the Common-Law, and the Trial is by the Method of the Common-Law.

Mr Phipps. 'Tis true that my Lord Coke, and other Authorities ſay, That the Statute 35 H. 8. for trying Treaſons committed beyond Sea, is not repealed by the Statute of 1 and 2 Philip and Mary, but they do not ſay that this Statute is not repealed by the Statute of Philip and Mary; and the Books being ſilent in this, is the Reaſon why I propoſe this Queſtion for your Lordſhip's Judgment.

L. C. J. It is no more a Queſtion than the Tryals of foreign Treaſon, and then the Determination of the Tryals upon the 35th determines the Queſtion upon this.

Dr Oldys. We muſt have two Witneſſes by the Rules of the Civil-Law, an extrajudicial ſaying of a Party may be retracted by them at any time, that is the Civil-Law, and ſo there can be but one Witneſs.

L. C. J. That is not the Law of England.

Dr Oldys. I do humbly conceive that the Civil-Law is not taken away in this Caſe; for though the Statute preſcribes the Form of Proceedings according to the Rules of the Common-Law, yet as to the Crimes and Proofs the Civil-Law is ſtill in force, and then the Party may retract his Confeſſion in Judgment, much more any extrajudicial ſaying.

Mr Whitaker. You are arraigning the Verdict.

L. C. J. That you ſhould have taken notice of before the Verdict was given. But we think there is no danger in hearing this Objection, becauſe it is ſo eaſily anſwered. How many Witneſſes were to the Confeſſion?

Sir Charles Hedges. We are not in a Court that proceeds according to the ſtrict Rules of the Civil-Law; but if we were, that Law is not ſo abſurd as to allow that a Party may retract his Confeſſion at any time, ſo as to make it have no Effect.

Dr Oldys. There muſt be two Witneſſes at any time.

Sir Charles Hedges. So there are here to the Confeſſion; but you miſtake if you think that every particular is to be proved ſtrictly as the Civil-Law requires, for the end of the Statute which directs the Proceedings of this Court was to facilitate the Method of making Proofs, that being found difficult by the Courſe of the Civil-Law; and therefore was that Statute made, as plainly appears, by the Preamble thereof.

Dr Oldys. There is a new Statute that revives that Statute again, and that requires two Witneſſes; whereby it is reduced to the Rules of the Civil Law again.

L. C. J. Two Witneſſes there muſt be; but then conſider it is not neceſſary to have two to every individual Overt-Act: For ſuppoſe there be two Overt-Acts laid in the Indictments, for one Species of Treaſon, Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King; if there be one Witneſs that he bought a Dagger, and ſaid he would kill the King, and he is ſeen, it may be, going to the King's Bed-chamber with the Dagger; another Wit-

Witneſs ſays, he ſaid he would kill the King with a Piſtol, and bought a Piſtol, and he ſtood waiting to kill the King as he came by; that is another Overt-Act of the ſame Treaſon. If one Witneſs prove one, and another Witneſs prove the other, this is ſufficient Proof with us.

Dr Oldys. It is another Queſtion, Whether he be a Subject?

L. C. J. That is not an Overt-Act; if there be one Witneſs to that, it is enough, there needs not two Witneſſes to prove him a Subject; but upon the Tryal there were above two Witneſſes to prove it: That was Crittenden, the Marſhal of Dover, Cray and Rivet. I muſt tell you, as to the Doctrine of the Civil Law, it is not univerſally received in all Countries; it is received in ſeveral Countries as they find it convenient, and not as Obligatory in it ſelf.

Dr Oldys. Yes, in all Places, as to Proof; for 'tis the Law of God and Nations, ex ore duorum, vel trium, &c. And one Witneſs is no Witneſs.

Sir Charles Hedges. Two Witneſſes may be neceſſary to convict a Man of any capital Crime, but then it doth not follow that there muſt be two Witneſſes to prove every particular Fact and Circumſtance. In this point, touching the Place of the Nativity of Thomas Vaughan, was there not ſufficient in his own Confeſſion, together with the other Proofs on the King's behalf, to throw the Burden of Proof upon the Priſoner? You your ſelves ſeem to have been of that Opinion; you undertook to prove it, and 'tis you that have failed in that particular.

L. C. J. Our Tryals by Juries are of ſuch Conſideration in our Law, that we allow their Determination to be the beſt, and moſt advantagious to the Subject, and therefore leſs Evidence is required than by the Civil-Law. So ſaid Forteſcue in his Commendation of the Laws of England.

Dr Oldys. Becauſe the Jury are the Witneſſes in reality, according to the Laws of England, being preſumed to be ex vicineto; but when it is on the High and open Seas, they are not then preſumed to be ex vicineto, and ſo muſt be inſtructed according to the Rules of the Civil Law by Witneſſes.

Mr Baron Powis. This is not a Tryal by the Civil Law; for that Statute was made to avoid the Niceties of your Law.

Mr J. Eyres. He is tryed with like Evidence, as in other Caſes of High-Treaſon.

Dr Oldys. No, the late Act requires two Witneſſes.

Cl. of Arr. Make Proclamation of Silence.

Cryer. All manner of Perſons are commanded to keep Silence, while Judgment is giving, upon Pain of Impriſonment.

And then Judgment was given, according as the Law directs in Caſes of High-Treaſon.

The Commiſſion of Captain Thomas Vaughan, which he had by Order of the French King.

Lord High Steward. Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure that the Judges may be covered?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then the Judges put on their Caps.

Clerk of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serjeant at Arms. O yes, O yes, O yes, chief Governor of the Tower of London, bring forth the Body of Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, your Priſoner, forthwith, on Pain and Peril will fall thereon.

[Then the Earl of Warwick was brought to the Bar by the Deputy-Governor of the Tower of London, having the Ax carried before him by the Gentleman Jaylor, who ſtood with it at the Bar, on the right Hand of the Priſoner, turning the Edge from him; the Priſoner at his Approach to the Bar making three Bows, one to his Grace the Lord High Steward, the other to the Peers on each Hand; and his Grace and the Peers returned the Salute.]

Lord High Steward. My Lord of Warwick, your Lordſhip is brought before this great Judicature, in order to your Tryal. You ſtand Indicted by the Grand Inqueſt for the County of Middleſex, as Guilty of the Murther of one of the King's Subjects, for whoſe Blood Juſtice requires a ſtrict Inquiſition ſhould be made.

Your Lordſhip is call'd to anſwer this Charge before the whole Body of the Houſe of Peers aſſembled in Parliament. It is a great Misfortune to be accuſed of ſo heinous an Offence, and it is an addition to that Misfortune, to be brought to Anſwer as a Criminal before ſuch an Aſſembly, in Defence of your Eſtate, your Life, and Honour. But it ought to be a Support to your Mind, ſufficient to keep you from ſinking under the Weight of ſuch an Accuſation, that you are to be Try'd before ſo noble, diſcerning, and equal Judges, that nothing but your own Guilt can hurt you. No Evidence will be received, but what is warranted by Law; no Weight will be laid upon the Evidence, but what is agreeable to Juſtice; no Advantage will be taken of your Lordſhip's little Experience in Proceedings of this Nature; nor will it turn to your Prejudice, that you have not the Aſſiſtance of Council in your Defence, as to the Fact, (which cannot be allowed by Law) and their Lordſhips have already aſſigned you Council, if any Matters of Law ſhould ariſe.

Your Lordſhip, throughout your whole Tryal, may aſſuredly promiſe your ſelf, to find all the Candor and Compaſſion which is conſiſtent with impartial Juſtice; beyond that, nothing is to be expected: Their Lordſhips can never ſo far forget themſelves, as to depart from what is Right, and to draw the Guilt of Blood upon their own Heads, but if your Lordſhip is Innocent you are ſafe.

My Lord, It will be requiſite for you to recollect your ſelf upon this Occaſion, in the beſt Manner you can. You ought to hear with Temper, what the King's Council have to ſay, without interrupting them, and to hearken carefully to the Witneſſes produced againſt you, that you may be ready to Croſs-examine them if you find Cauſe, and to make your Obſervations upon the Evidence when the proper Time comes for your Lordſhip to make your Defence; of which I will not fail to give you Notice, and when that Time does come, your Lordſhip may be aſſured, your Self and your Witneſſes will be heard with great Patience and Attention; and when my Lords have heard and conſidered the whole Matter, the Judgment will unqueſtionably be according to the Rules of Juſtice, and ſuch as will become the Honour of this High Court.

Read the Indictment to my Lord.

Earl of Warwick. My Lord, I beg I may have the Uſe of Pen, Ink, and Paper.

Lord High Steward. Will your Lordſhips pleaſe to allow my Lord Warwick Pen, Ink, and Paper?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Lord High Steward. Carry Pen, Ink, and Paper to my Lord. (Which was done by the Clerk.)

Lord High Steward. My Lord, your Lordſhip will do well to give Attention while the Indictment is read to you. Read it to my Lord in Engliſh.

Clerk of the Crown. YOur Lordſhip ſtands Indicted by the Name of Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, late of the Pariſh of St. Martin in the Fields in the County of Middleſex, for that your Lordſhip, together with Charles Lord Mohun, Baron Mohun of Oakehampton in the County of Devon, late of the Pariſh aforeſaid in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, Richard French, late of the Pariſh aforeſaid in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, Gent. Roger James, of the Pariſh aforeſaid in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, Gent. and George Dockwra, late of the Pariſh aforeſaid in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, Gent. not having the Fear of God before your Eyes, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil the 30*th Day of* October, in the tenth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord William the Third, by the Grace of God King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. with Force and Arms. &c. at the Pariſh aforeſaid in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, in and upon one Richard Coote Eſq; in the Peace of God, and of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, then and there being Feloniouſly, Voluntarily, and of your Malice afore-thought, did make an Aſſault, and that your Lordſhip, the ſaid Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, with a certain Sword made of Iron and Steel of the Value of five Shillings, which you the ſaid Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, in your right Hand then and there had and held drawn, the aforeſaid Richard Coote in and upon the left Part of the Breaſt of him the ſaid Richard Coote, near the Collar Bone of him the ſaid Richard Coote, then and there Feloniouſly, Voluntarily, and of your Malice afore-thought, did Strike, Stab, and Thruſt in, giving to the ſaid Richard Coote, then and there with the Sword drawn aforeſaid, in and upon the left Part of the Breaſt of him the ſaid Richard Coote, near the Collar Bone of him the ſaid Richard Coote, one Mortal Wound of the Breadth of half an Inch, and of the Depth of five Inches, of which ſaid Mortal Wound the aforeſaid Richard Coote then and there inſtantly died: And that the aforeſaid Charles Lord Mohun, Richard French, Roger James, and George Dockwra, then and there Feloniouſly, Voluntarily, and of their Malice afore-thought, were preſent, aiding, abetting, comforting, aſſiſting, and maintaining you the ſaid Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, the ſaid Richard Coote, in Manner and Form aforeſaid, Feloniouſly, Wilfully, and of your Malice afore-thought, to Kill and Murther, and ſo you the ſaid Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, and the ſaid Charles Lord Mohun, Richard French, Roger James, and George Dockwra, the aforeſaid Richard Coote, in Manner and Form aforeſaid, Feloniouſly, Voluntarily, and of your Malice afore-thought, did Kill and Murther, againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, that now is, His Crown and Dignity, &c.

How ſay you Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, are you guilty of this Felony and Murther whereof you ſtand Indicted, or not guilty?

Earl of Warwick. Not Guilty.

Clerk of the Crown. Culprit, How will your Lordſhip be tryed?

Earl of Warwick. By God and my Peers.

Clerk of the Crown. God ſend your Lordſhip good Deliverance.

Then at the Motion of ſome Lords who ſate towards the upper end of the Houſe, and by reaſon of the diſtance could not diſtinctly hear the Clerke, the Indictment was read again, the Clerk ſtanding near the upper end of the Houſe.

C. of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms make an O Yes.

Serjeant at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes, If any one will give Evidence on behalf of our Sovereign Lord the King, againſt Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, of the Felony and Murther whereof he ſtands Indicted, let them come forth, and they ſhall be heard, for now he ſtands at the Bar upon his Deliverance.

L. H. St. Will your Lordſhips give me leave to go down to the Woolpack that I may hear the better.

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Then his Grace removed to the Woollpack, and delivered the White Staff to be held by the Gentleman Uſher of the Black Rod, who during the whole Tryal always received and delivered back the white Staff upon his Knees.

L. H. St. Mr Attorney, are you ready to proceed?

Mr At. Gen. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. St. Then begin Sir.

Mr Serj. Wright. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips.

L. H. St. Pray, Mr Serjeant, raiſe your Voice as much as poſſible you can, that my Lords towords the upper end of the Houſe may hear.

Mr Serj. Wright. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, this noble Lord Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, the Priſoner at the Bar, ſtands Indicted for the felonious Killing and Murther of one Richard Coote Eſq; and the Indictment ſets forth, That upon the 30th Day of October, in the tenth Year of His Majeſty's Reign, at the Pariſh of St Martin in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, the Priſoner at the Bar, the Earl of Warwick, together with Charles Lord Mohun Baron of Oakehampton, Richard French, Roger James, and George Dockwra, Gent. Feloniouſly, Voluntarily, and of their Malice afore-thought, did make an Aſſault upon the ſaid Richard Coote, in the Indictment named, and the Indictment chargeth, that the Earl of Warwick, at the ſame Time and Place, with a Sword, Feloniouſly, Voluntarily, and of his Malice afore-thougbt, did give unto the ſaid Richard Coote, in or upon the left Part of the Breaſt of him the ſaid Richard Coote, near his Collar Bone, one mortal Wound of the Breadth of half an Inch, and of the Depth of five Inches, of which ſaid Wound the ſaid Richord Coote then and there inſtantly died; and the Indictment further charges, that the ſaid Charles Lord Mohun, Richard French, Roger James, and George Dockwra, the Earl of Warwick, to commit the Felony and Murther aforeſaid, were then and there aiding, aſſiſting, comforting, and abetting; and ſo the Jurors charge, that he the ſaid Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, Charles Lord Mohun, Richard French, Roger James, and George Dockwra, the ſaid Richard Coote, Feloniouſly, Voluntarily, and of their Malice afore-thought, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, did Kill and Murther, againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. To this Indictment this Noble Lord, the Priſoner at the Bar, Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, has pleaded not Guilty, and for his Tryal hath put himſelf upon my noble Lords his Peers here preſent: We ſhall call our Evidence, and if we prove this Fact for the King, we do not doubt but your Lordſhips will give ſuch Judgment for the ſame as ſhall be juſt.

Mr At. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, I am of Council in this Cauſe for the King againſt this noble Lord Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland; The Priſoner at the Bar, who ſtands Indicted by the grand Jury of the County of Middleſex, has been arraigned, and is now to be tryed before your Lordſhips for the felonious Killing and Murthering of Mr Coote, in the Indictmeut named, the Evidence to make good this charge againſt this noble Lord, it comes to my turn to open to your Lordſhips.

My Lords, the Caſe as to the Fact, according to my Inſtructions, is this: Upon Saturday the 29th of October laſt, at Night, my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mohun, Mr French, Mr Dockwra, and Mr Coote, the unfortunate Gentleman who was killed, met together at one Lockett's, who kept the Greyhound Tavern in the Strand, and there they ſtayed till it was very late; about twelve of the Clock at Night, or thereabouts, a Meſſenger was ſent by the Company to fetch another Gentleman, Mr James; and Mr James coming to them, in what condition your Lordſhips will be told by the Wit-

Witneſſes: About One of the Clock in the Morning, on Sunday the 30th of October, they all came down out of the Room where they had been ſo late, to the Bar of the Houſe, and there, as the Witneſſes will tell your Lordſhips, Swords were drawn, and Chairs were called for, and two Chairs which were neareſt at Hand came, and two of the Company went into thoſe Chairs; who they were, and what paſt at that Time, the Witneſſes will tell your Lordſhips; Thoſe that got into thoſe Chairs came out again, and more Chairs were called for. But I muſt acquaint your Lordſhips, that my Lord Mohun, when the two Gentlemen that went into the Chairs ordered the Chairmen to take them up, and carry them away, ſpoke to them to ſtop and go no further, for there ſhould be no quarrelling that Night, and that he would ſend for the Guards and ſecure them; and after this they came out of the Chairs again; It will appear there were Swords drawn amongſt all of them, and ſome Wounds given: More Chairs being called for, and brought this noble Lord that is here at the Bar, my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mohun, and the other four Gentlemen, went all into the Chairs, and gave the Chairmen Directions whither they ſhould carry them, at leaſtwiſe the Foremoſt had Directions given them, and the reſt were to follow them; it was a very dark Night, but at laſt they came all to Leiceſter Square, and they were ſet down a little on this Side the Rails of the Square, and when the Chairmen had ſet them down they went away; but immediately ſome of them heard my Lord of Warwick calling for a Chair again, who came towards the Rails, and there they found two of the Gentlemen that had been carried in ſome of the other Chairs holding up Mr Coote between them, and would have had the Chairmen carried him away to a Surgeon's, but they found he was dying, and ſo would not meddle with him; afterwards my Lord of Warwick and Mr French were carried by two of the Chairs to Mr Annys, the Surgeon at the Balneo in Long-acre, where Mr French being wounded, was taken care of, particularly by the Recommendation of my Lord of Warwick, and the Maſter of the Houſe was called up, it being very late. Mr Coote's Sword was brought to that Place, but by whom it was brought we cannot exactly ſay, while my Lord of Warwick and Capt. French were there, and my Lord of Warwick had given Orders for the Denying of himſelf, and forbid the opening of the Door. There came the other two Gentlemen, Mr James and Mr Dockwra, and upon their knocking at the Door they were let in by my Lords Order, after he had diſcovered who they were, looking through the Wicket. Mr James had his Sword drawn, but it was broken. My Lord of Warwick's Hand was ſlightly wounded, and his Sword bloody up to the Hilt when he came in, as will be proved by the Teſtimony of the Servants in the Houſe. There was a Diſcourſe between my Lord, Mr James, and Mr Dockwra, about going into the Country, but before they went the Swords were all called for to be brought to them, and upon enquiry there was no blood found upon Mr French's Sword, but a great deal upon my Lord of Warwick's, of which great notice was taken at that Time. Mr Coote, who was killed, had received one Wound in the left Side of his Breaſt, half an Inch wide, and five deep, near the Collar Bone; he had likewiſe another Wound upon the left Side of his Body; both which your Lordſhips will hear, in the Judgment of the Surgeon, were mortal Wounds, and the Evidence will declare the Nature of them.

My Lords, the Evidence does chiefly conſiſt of, and depend on Circumſtances, the Fact being done in the Night, and none but the Parties concerned being preſent at it, we ſhall lay the Evidence before your Lordſhips as it is for your Judgment, and call what Witneſſes we have on behalf of the King, againſt this noble Peer the Priſoner at the Bar, and take up your Lordſhips Time no further in opening; and we ſhall begin with Samuel Cawthorne; he is a Drawer at the Tavern where thoſe Lords and Gentlemen were together, and he'll give you an Account of the Time they came there, how long they ſtaid, what happened in the Houſe during there being there, and what Time they went away.

L. H. St. Give him his Oath. (Which the Clerk did.)

Mr Att. Gen. My Lords, I doubt the Witneſs is ſo far off, that it will be difficult for him to hear the Queſtions that we are to ask him, unleſs we could have him nearer to us.

L. H. St. Mr Attorney, My Lords ſeem to be of Opinion, that it will be more for your advantage and theirs, that the Witneſſes ſtand at the Diſtance they do, which will oblige you to raiſe your Voice ſo loud, that they may hear the Witneſſes and you too.

Mr Att. Gen. Is your Name Samuel Cawthorne.

Cawthorne. Yes my Lord.

Mr Att. Gen. Where do you live?

Cawthorne. With Mr Lockett at Charing-croſs.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you live with him at the Greyhound Tavern in the Strand the latter end of October laſt?

Cawthorne. Yes I did.

Mr Att. Gen. Well, pray will you acquaint my Lords with the Time when my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mohun and Mr Coote were at that Houſe, how long they ſtayed, what happen'd while they were there, and when they went away.

Cawthorne. It was Saturday Night the 29th of October laſt.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray tell my Lords the whole of your Knowledge in the Matter.

Cawthorne. There came my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mohun, Capt. Coote. Capt. French, and Capt. Dockwra, the 29th of October laſt, in the Evening to my Maſter's Houſe at the Greyhound Tavern in the Strand.

Mr Att. Gen. How long were they there, and what Time of Night came they in?

Cawthorne. About Eight a Clock at Night, my Lord Warwick, my Lord Mohun, Capt. French, and Capt. Coote, came in.

Mr Att. Gen. What Day do you ſay it was?

Cawthorne. Saturday the nine and twentieth Day of October laſt.

Mr Att. Gen. How long did they continue there?

Cawthorne. It was between one and Two the next Morning before they went away.

Mr Att. Gen. Was any Body ſent for to come to them there?

Cawthorne. Yes, Mr James.

Mr Att. Gen. What Time was that?

Cawthorne. About Twelve of the Clock.

Mr Att. Gen. Did he ſtay with them till they went away?

Cawthorne. Yes.

Mr Att. Gen. What did you obſerve paſt in the Company while they were there?

Cawthorne. I did not obſerve any Thing of quarrel, nor ſo much as an angry Word amongſt them, till they came down to the Bar and were going away; when they came down to the Bar they order'd me to call them Chairs, or Coaches, and there were no Coaches to be had, and so I went for Chairs, and two Chairs came, for the Porter that went to call the Coaches was a great while before he came back, and as I said, I going for Chairs, there came two, but that they said was not enough, so more Chairs were called for, and at length there were more Chairs gotten; in the first three Chairs, my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mohun, and Capt. Coote went away in; and my Lord Warwick and my Lord Mohun bid the Chairmen carry them home.

Mr Att. Gen. Were there then any other Chairs at the Door?

Cawthorne. There were two more Chairs at the Door, and another was called for.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you hear any Directions given where they should carry them?

Cawthorne. My Lord Warwick, and my Lord Mohun bid them carry them home.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you hear my Lord Warwick or my Lord Mohun particularly, and which, say whither they would be carried.

Cawthorne. I did hear my Lord Mohun say Capt. Coote should go and lye with him, or he would go and lye with Capt. Cooote that Night, for there should be no quarrelling.

Mr Att. Gen. Did they upon that go away?

Cawthorne. Mr French and Mr Coote were in Chairs before my Lord Mohun or my Lord Warwick, or any of the rest.

Mr Att. Gen. What then happen'd upon their going into the Chairs?

Cawthorne. My Lord Mohun came out to them and swore there should be no Quarrel that Night, but he would send for the Guards and secure them.

Mr Att. Gen. What happen'd then?

Cawthorne. Upon that, both of them came out of their Chairs and came into the House, and there they came to the Bar, three of them in the Passage by the Bar, and three of them behind that Passage.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray will you tell what did really pass throughout the whole Transaction, what was done after they came in again into the House.

Cawthorne. After that I was bid to call for six Chairs, if I could get no Coaches, and so I did, and when I had brought what Chairs I could get, and returned to the Bar, I heard the Swords clash; when the Swords were drawn, I cannot say, nor by whom, it might be, by all the six for ought I know, because I was in the Street to call the Chairs, and when I came back to the House, I was in hopes all had been quieted, for their Swords were putting up: And when they went away in the Chairs, I did hope they went away friendly.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray how did they go away, who went together?

Cawthorne. My Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mohun, and Capt. Coote went in the first three Chairs, them three together, and bid the Chair-men go home, the sixth Chair was not then come.

Mr Att. Gen. When that Chair came pray what Directions were given to it.

Cawthorne. I did not hear them give the Chairmen any Directions at all.

Mr Att. Gen. Do you know any Thing more that was done after this Time?

Cawthorne. No my Lord, not after they went away, after I return'd with the Chairs, it was in two Minutes Time that they went away.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lords, I suppose he knows no more of the Matter.

L. H. St. Will you then ask him no more Questions, Mr Attorney?

Mr Att. Gen. No, my Lords, unless this noble Lord shall ask him any Questions, upon which we shall have Occasion to examine him.

L. H. St. My Lord, has your Lordship any Questions to ask this Witness, for now is your Time, the King's Council having done examining him.

E. of War. I desire to ask him whether I did not bid the Chair-men go home?

L. H. St. If your Lordship please to propose your Question to me, I will require an answer to it from the Witness, and it will be the better heard by my Lords.

Earl of Warwick. My Lord, I desire to know of this Man, whether when I went away in the Chair from his Master's House, I did not bid the Chairmen go home.

L. H. St. Witness: You hear my Lord's Question, What say you to it?

Cawthorne. Yes: My Lord of Warwick did bid the Chair-men go home.

E. of Warwick. My Lord, I have another Question to ask him, Whether he knows of any Quarrel there was between me and Mr Coote at that Time, or any other Time, because we both used to frequent that House.

Cawthorne. No, my Lords, I never heard any angry Words between my Lord Warwick and Mr Coote in my Life.

[Then the Lords towards the upper end of the House complaining that they did not hear his Grace, the Lord high Steward was pleased to repeat the Question thus;]

L. H. St. When my Lord of Warwick bid the Chairmen go home, or at any other Time, did you observe that there had been any Quarrel between his Lordship and Mr Coote?

E. of Warwick. My Lord, I desire he may be asked, since we both used that House, Whether that Night when I went away, or before or after, I had any Quarrel with Mr Coote?

L. H. St. The Question my Lord desires you that are the Witness to answer, is, Whether you did hear any Quarrelling or angry Words to pass between my Lord Warwick and Mr Coote that Night before or after they came down, or when they went away, or at any other Time?

Cawthorne. No, my Lord, I never heard any angry Words pass between them then, nor ever at any Time before in all my Life, but I always looked upon them to be very good Friends.

E. of Warwick. I desire he may be asked, Whether Mr Coote did not come to that House in my Company, and whether he did not frequently come to that House?

Cawthorne. Yes, they used to be there every Day almost, and they came that Night together in Company.

E. of Warwick. I desire he may be asked, Whether I have not been frequently in his Company there?

Cawthorne. Yes, I say, very frequently, every Day almost, sometimes twice a Day.

L. H. St. Would your Lordship ask him any other Question?

E. of Warwick. My Lord, I desire he may be asked asked this Question, Whether he knows of any particular Kindneſs between Mr Coote and me?

L. H. St. Do you know of any particular Kindneſs between my Lord Warwick and Mr Coote the Gentleman that was killed?

Cawthorne. Yes, my Lord, there was always a great Kindneſs between them as I obſerved, it ever was ſo, and I never heard any angry Words paſs between them, but they were very good Friends conſtantly; I waited upon them generally when they were at my Maſter's Houſe, which was every Day almoſt.

E. of Warwick. I deſire to know of this Witneſs, Whether he does not remember, or can name ſome particular Kindneſſes that paſſed between Mr Coote and me?

L. H. St. Can you ſpecify any particular Inſtances of Kindneſs that paſſed between my Lord Warwick and Mr Coote?

Cawthorne. Yes, my Lord of Warwick uſed generally to pay the Reckoning for Mr Coote, and he did ſo at this Time.

E. of Warwick. My Lord, I deſire he may be asked, between whom he apprehended the Quarrel to be at this Time.

L. H. St. You ſay, Friend, there were Swords drawn, and a Quarrelling at the Bar; Can you tell between whom the Quarrel was?

Cawthorne. My Lord Warwick, my Lord Mohun, and Capt. Coote, were all on one Side, and the other three were on the other Side.

E. of Warwick. Who were the two Perſons that it was apprehended the Quarrel was between, I deſire he may be asked.

L. H. St. You ſay, there were three on the one Side, and three on the other, pray between whom did you apprehend the Quarrel to be?

Cawthorne. I believe the Quarrel was between Mr Coote. and Mr French.

E. of Warwick. My Lord, I deſire to know of this Witneſs, what Words he heard Mr Coote ſay, after he and Mr French returned into the Houſe and came out of the Chairs..

L. H. St. What do you ſay to the Queſtion my Lord propoſes?

Cawthorne. I heard Mr Coote ſay, He would laugh when he pleaſed, and he would frown when he pleaſed, God damn him.

E. of Warwick My Lord, I deſire to know who he thinks thoſe Words were addreſſed to.

L. H. St. To whom did Mr Coote ſpeak theſe Words?

Cawthorne. Whether he ſpoke them particularly to Mr French, or to the other two Gentlemen who were on the other Side of the Bar, I cannot directly tell.

E. of Warwick. I deſire to know of him, Whether Mr Coote was not one of the three that was on the other Side of the Bar?

Cawthorne. Yes, my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mohun, and Capt. Coote, were of the outſide of the Bar.

E. of Warwick. Was Capt. Coote with me in the beginning of the Night at that Houſe?

Cawthorne. Yes, he came at the beginning of the Night with my Lord of Warwick.

E. of Peterb. My Lords, I deſire to ask this Witneſs one Queſtion?

L. H. St. I think it is proper, my Lords, in Point of Method, to let both Sides have done before any Queſtions be asked by any of my noble Lords.

E. of Peterb. I did apprehend my Lord of Warwick had done.

L. H. St. No, my Lord, not as yet? pray, my Lord Warwick, what other Queſtions has your Lordſhip to ask of this Witneſs?

E. of Warwick. My Lord, I deſire he may be asked particularly this Queſtion, Whether he perceived any Quarrel particularly between me and Capt. Coote when we went out of the Houſe?

L. H. St. You hear the Queſtion, Did you perceive any Quarrel between my Lord Warwick and Mr Coote before they went out of the Houſe?

Cawthorne. No, I did not, nor ever ſaw any Quarrel between them in my life.

E. of Warwick. I deſire to know who paid the Reckoning that Night?

Cawthorne. The Reckoning was called for before I came in to take it; and tho' I think my Lord of Warwick paid for Mr Coote, yet I cannot ſo directly tell, becauſe it was collected before I came into the Room to receive it.

L. H. St. My Lord, have you any Thing more to ask this Witneſs?

E. of Warwick. No, my Lord, at preſent that I think of.

L. H. St. My Lord Peterborough, your Lordſhip deſired to ask a Queſtion, will you pleaſe to propoſe it now.

E. of Peterb. My Lord, this Witneſs ſeems to take notice of two Sides, who were on the one Side, and who were on the other, and that Mr Coote and my Lord of Warwick were on one Side; I deſire to know one Thing of him, what reaſon he had to apprehend that they two were of a Side?

L. H. St. Friend, you hear that noble Lord's Queſtion; you ſeem to ſay, there were three and three of a Side, What reaſon had you to apprehend, that my Lord Warwick and Mr Coote were of one Side? You muſt explain to my Lords how you come to make that Judgment, what reaſon you had to think ſo.

Cawthorne. They three, my Lord Mohun, my Lord Warwick, and Mr Coote, were on the one Side of the Bar; and Capt. James, Capt. French, and Capt. Dockwra were on the other Side of the Bar.

L. H. St. So you ſaid before; but the Queſtion which my noble Lord deſires to be ſatisfied in is this, How you come to ſpeak as if there was a Quarrel between three and three? What reaſon had you to think, that three were on one Side, and three on the other?

Cawthorne. Their Swords were all drawn, and they ſtood three on one Side of the Bar, and three on the other.

E. of Rocheſter. My Lords, I deſire to ask this Witneſs one Queſtion; I think he told your Lordſhip at firſt, That he did not perceive any angry Words among them; afterwards he comes to talk of Swords drawn amongſt them all, three on the outſide, and three on the inſide of the Bar; I deſire to know what was the Occaſion of thoſe Swords being drawn on the one Side or the other?

Cawthorne. Whatſoever Quarrel there was, was amongſt themſelves above Stairs, and I know no angry Words that paſſed between them when they came down to the Bar.

L. H. St. See what you ſay? How conſiſtent one Part of it is with another! You ſaid at firſt, you did not hear of any angry Words that paſſed between them, and yet you ſay, all their Swords were drawn, and three were on the one Side and three

three on the other: And when you were examined upon the Motion of that noble Lord, what you meant by three on the one Side, and three on the other, you ſaid, my Lord Mohun, my Lord Warwick, and Mr Coote, were on the one Side, Mr James, Mr French, and Mr Dockwra, were on the other Side: How could there be two Sides, unleſs there was a Quarrel?

Cawthorne. I ſaid, I did not hear any angry Words paſs between them before they came to the Bar, or while they were above Stairs, but there were three on the one Side of the Bar, and three on the other.

L. H. St. But you have not given a ſatisfactory Anſwer to that Queſtion which the noble Lord, my Lord Peterborough, asked you, What reaſon you had to apprehend, that the noble Lord the Priſoner at the Bar and Capt. Coote were of a Side?

Cawthorne. My Lord Mohun came to the Chair ſide when Capt. Coote and Capt. French were got into the two firſt Chairs, and told Capt. Coote, that there ſhould be no Quarrel that Night, but that they three, my Lord Warwick, my Lord Mohun, and he, ſhould go home together; and I took them three to be of a Side, becauſe they were on the outſide of the Bar together, and when they all went away, their three Chairs went away firſt all three together.

L. H. St. Is that all the Reaſon you can give why you ſay, they were three and three of a Side?

Cawthorne. Yes, my Lord, I did apprehend it ſo.

Mr Att. Gen. If my noble Lords have done with their Queſtions, I deſire to ask this Witneſs another Queſtion; My Lords, I think this Perſon ſays, That there was a Quarrel at the Bar of the Houſe, and Swords drawn, and as he apprehended, three were on the one Side, and three on the other; but if I take him right, I do not ſee that he has given your Lordſhips any Manner of Satisfaction, what reaſon he had to apprehend there were three and three of a Side, or, which will be very Material in this Caſe, if your Lordſhips can get to the Knowledge of it, which three were on the one Side, and which three were on the other, or indeed whether there were three and three of a Side, as your Lordſhips will have reaſon by and by to enquire a little further into that Matter: My Lords, I deſire he may be asked this plain Queſtion, What Words or other Paſſages he did perceive, that made him apprehend there was a Quarrel between them, and they were three and three of a Side?

Cawthorne. I apprehended it from the Words that Mr Coote ſaid, That he would laugh when he pleaſed, and frown when he pleaſed.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, I deſire he may be asked, Who thoſe Words were ſpoke to, and who they were applied to?

Cawthorne. They were ſpoke to Mr James, Mr French, and Mr Dockwra, who were withinſide of the Bar.

Mr Att. Gen. Did he apply thoſe Words to all thoſe particular Perſons?

Cawthorne. Yes, as I thought, for they three were within the Bar, my Lord Warwick, my Lord Mohun, and Mr Coote, were without the Bar.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray my Lord, I deſire he may be asked this Queſtion, Was that before the Swords were drawn, or afterwards?

Cawthorne. It was before.

Mr Att. Gen. Then I deſire he may be asked, Whether the Swords were drawn upon thoſe Words?

Cawthorne. No, my Lord, the Time of drawing the Swords was when I went out to call Chairs and Coaches; and I know not who drew the Swords firſt, or when they were drawn, but when I came back I found them all drawn, and I heard them Claſhing.

Mr Att. Gen. Upon the Oath you have taken, Was thoſe Words that you ſpeak of Mr Coote's, That he would laugh when he pleaſed, and frown when he pleaſed, before the Swords were drawn, or after the Swords were drawn?

Cawthorne. Before the Swords were drawn; for I did not ſee the Swords drawn till I came back.

L. H. St. Does either Side deſire to ask this Witneſs any Queſtions; if not, then you may withdraw, and you may proceed, Mr Attorney, to examine ſome other Witneſs.

Lord Wharton. My Lord, there was a Queſtion asked at the Bar about the Hindring of the Quarrel, and my Lord Mohun's deſire to part them, and make them Friends; I deſire the Witneſs, before he goes away, may be asked what he knows of that Matter.

L. H. St. It has been obſerved by my Lord that you ſaid, when they came down to the Bar, and the Quarrel happened, ſome Body would have prevented it; pray repeat that Matter again, Did you obſerve any of the Company were diſpoſed to take up the Quarrel, and make them Friends, and who they were?

Cawthorne. My Lord Mohun and my Lord Warwick ſaid they would ſend for a File of Muſqueteers, and my Lord Mohun did all he could to quiet and pacify them till the Quarrel was over; and my Lord Mohun particularly had his Finger prick'd with endeavouring to croſs their Swords, and keeping them from fighting, which was all he got by it.

L. H. St. Do you know that of your own Knowledge?

Cawthorne. His Hand was bloody, and he ſaid ſo at the Bar; but I was juſt coming in again when I heard him ſay ſo; but I cannot ſay that I ſaw him hurt, for I was without the Houſe at the Time when that was done.

Lord Godolphin. My Lords, I deſire to ask this Witneſs one Queſtion: I obſerve he has told my Lords, there was not an angry Word paſs'd between them before they came down to the Bar; I would fain ask him this Queſtion, Whether he was in the Room all the Time till they did come down to the Bar?

Cawthorne. I received the Reckoning juſt before they came down to the Bar.

Lord Godolphin. And I deſire he may be asked, How long he ſtay'd in the Room when he received the Reckoning?

Cawthorne. It was about two or three Minutes that I ſtay'd in the Room, and not longer.

Earl of Warwick. My Lord, this Witneſs that has been examined, told you, That when we firſt came down to the Bar there were two Chairs call'd for; and when they came, Mr Coote and the other Gentleman Mr French, went into the Chairs, and afterwards they came out again, and Mr Coote ſaid ſome Words; I deſire the Witneſs may be asked again, when it was Mr Coote ſpoke thoſe Words; whether it was before or after the Time that he came out of the Chair, for I take it to be very material.

Cawthorne.

Cawthorne. It was after Mr Coote came out of the Chair, for the Chairmen heard the Words as I verily believe.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, I desire he may be ask'd, Was there any Reply made to those Words by any of those Persons he says he apprehends were on the other Side?

Cawthorne. No, not one Word that I know of.

Earl of Warwick. My Lord, I must beg the Favour to have the Question asked again of him, Whether I did not at that Time endeavour to prevent any Quarrelling, and did not say I would call for the Guard if they did?

Cawthorne. Yes: My Lord of Warwick did say so, and so did my Lord Mohun, and so I think did Mr James.

L. H. St. How came you not to say so when you were asked that Question particularly before? Then you said my Lord Mohun endeavoured to prevent the Quarrelling, and make them Friends.

Cawthorne. Yes, my Lord Warwick did so, and so did Mr. James.

L. H. St. I cannot tell whether any Body else desires to ask him any Questions.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, he speaks of what this noble Lord, my Lord of Warwick said; but he does not tell you the particular Expressions, nor the Time when my Lord said them.

L. H. St. You say, my Lord, the Prisoner at the Bar, endeavoured to pacify the Quarrel between them; but you do not tell my Lords who the Quarrel was between, nor when the Endeavour was made by my Lord Warwick to pacify it.

Cawthorne. My Lord of Warwick did say he would have the Guards sent for.

L. H. St. What Time was that, before or after my Lord Mohun said so?

Cawthorne. Truly, my Lord, I do not know but that it was at the same Time.

L. H. St. Was it when the Swords were drawn, or before?

Cawthorne. They spoke it both before and after the Swords were drawn, as I remember, for the Swords were not drawn while I was in the House, till I came back.

L. H. St. Were the Swords drawn when my Lord Warwick spoke of sending for the Guards?

Cawthorne. Surely, my Lord, it was before the Swords were drawn, when I was sent for the Chairs.

L. H. St. You said there was no angry Words or Quarrel between them.

Cawthorne. Not above Stairs, my Lord: But I apprehended when they came down to the Bar there were three on one Side, and three on the Other.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, let him be asked this Question, Was it after they were three on the one Side, and three on the Other that my Lord Mohun and my Lord Warwick spoke those Words?

Cawthorne. I apprehend the Words were spoke by Mr. Coote, That he would Laugh when he pleased, and Frown when he pleased, before the Swords were drawn.

L. H. St. But that which my Lords desire to know is, What the Time was when my Lord Warwick and my Lord Mohun declared their Desire to part them and make them Friends: Whether before or after the Swords drawn?

Cawthorne. Before and after; for I was absent when the Swords were drawn.

Earl Rivers. He says, That after my Lord Mohun and my Lord Warwick threatned to send for the Musqueteers, They promised to be quiet: I desire to know who he means by They.

Cawthorne. Mr James call'd to me and said, I need not go and call for the Guards, for the Quarrel was over. There is one Thing more that I forgot, my Lord: After my Lord Mohun and my Lord Warwick were gone away in their Chairs, and Mr Coote, I heard Mr Dockwra say to Captain James and Captain French, they did not care a Farthing for them, they would fight them at any Time.

L. H. St. Who were together then?

Cawthorne. Captain James, Mr French, and Mr Dockwra, after my Lord Mohun and my Lord Warwick, were gone with Captain Coote.

L. H. St. Then Mr French was with them, when Mr Dockwra said so?

Cawthorne. Yes, my Lord.

Lord Wharton. If I apprehend him aright, as to what he says now, my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mohun, and Captain Coote were gone away at that Time.

Cawthorne. Yes, they were gone away in the three first Chairs, which my Lord Mohun bid go home.

Lord Wharton. Who does he say spoke those Words?

L. H. St. You hear my noble Lord's Question, Who spoke those Words? Repeat them again.

Cawthorne. When my Lord Warwick, my Lord Mohun, and Captain Coote were gone, I heard Mr Dockwra say to Mr French and Mr James, we don't care a Farthing for them, we will fight them at any Time.

Mr Att. Gen. I desire to know whether this Witness testified any Thing of this Matter, when he was examined before the Coroner?

Cawthorne. No, I forgot those Words when I was examined before the Coroner.

Mr Att. Gen. How soon after your Examination did you recollect your self as to what you now speak?

Cawthorne. The next Day after.

Mr Att. Gen. I pray my Lords that he may be asked, Whether he did in general give the same Evidence before the Coroner that he does now?

Cawthorne. Yes, as to all but only those Words of Mr Dockwra's declaring he did not care a Farthing for them, they would fight them at any Time.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, I beg he may be asked how long it was after the Fact was done, that he was examined before the Coroner.

Cawthorne. It was the next Day in the Afternoon.

Mr Att. Gen. Then I have this Question further to ask, if your Lordships please, Was he at the Tryal of Mr Dockwra, Mr James, and Mr French?

Cawthorne. Yes, I was.

Mr Att. Gen. Did he then give any Evidence of those Words of Mr Dockwra's, after when my Lord Warwick, my Lord Mohun, and Captain Coote were gone?

Cawthorne. No, I did not.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, I have one Question to ask him then more, How he came not to swear this Matter at that Tryal.

Cawthorne. It was out of my Mind at that Time, and I had like to have forgot it now.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, we have done with this Witneſs: Is it your Lordſhips pleaſure that we go on to call our other Witneſſes?

Lords, Ay, Ay.

Mr Att. Gen. Then our next Witneſſes, my Lords, will be the Chairmen that carried my Lord Mohun, my Lord of Warwick, and Captain Coote: We ſhall begin with Thomas Browne and John Gibſon, one of them carried Mr Coote, the other my Lord of Warwick.

[Thomas Browne was Sworn.]

L. H. St. What Queſtion do you ask this Witneſs Mr Attorney.

Mr Att. Gen. That he would acquaint your Lordſhips, whether he carried Mr Richard Coote, the Perſon that was ſlain, upon the 29th or 30th of October, from the Greyhound Tavern in the Strand, and to what Place he carried him?

L. H. St. You hear the Queſtion; pray ſpeak ſo loud that my Lords may all hear what you ſay.

Browne. My Lords, I was between the Hours of One and Two in the Morning, on Sunday the 30th of October laſt, with my Fellow and our Chair, at the Buffler's-Head Tavern at Charing-croſs, and I heard ſome People at Lockets at the Greyhound in the Strand, calling Coach, Coach, a pretty while; but there were no Coaches in the Street, nor that came to them; when they could not get Coaches then they called out for Chairs, and we coming to the Door with our Chair, there were four other Chairs there, and ſix Gentlemen ſtood in the Paſſage, and then it was ſaid, there was not Chairs enough, and there wanted one more, and they ſtood Diſcourſing, and the firſt Man came into my Chair who was Captain Coote, and my Lord of Warwick he got into another; when the Door of the Chair was ſhut up, we asked them whither we ſhould go, but my Lord Mohun came and bid open the Chair again, and we did ſo, and he returned into the Houſe, and there was ſome Diſcourſe between them ſtanding at the Bar in the Entry. Mr Coote came out again and came into my Chair, and my Lord Mohun and my Lord of Warwick went into two others; Mr Coote bid me carry him into Leiceſter-Fields, and to make all the haſte I could; my Lord of Warwick and my Lord Mohun being in the next Chairs, asked him, Whither are you a going, and called out twice, and he ſaid, To Leiceſter-Fields; Pray do not, ſays my Lord of Warwick, but come along with us, and let it alone till to morrow; but he bid us go on, and as we were turning up St. Martin's-Lane by the Croſs-Keys Tavern, my Lord Mohun, and my Lord Warwick called out to us to ſtop, and their Chairs came up to the Back-Door of the Croſs-Keys Tavern, and there all the three Chairs were ſet on a-breſt in St. Martins-Lane, and while they were talking together there came by three Chairs of the other Side of the Way, and Mr Coote bid us take up and make all the haſte we could before them into Leiceſter-Fields, ſo taking up the Chair again Mr Coote bid us make haſte, and if we could go no faſter he ſwore Damn him, he would run his Sword in one of our Bodies: There were two Chairs before me, and my Lord Mohun and my Lord Warwick followed in two Chairs after me; and when we came to the Corner of Leiceſter-Fields at Green ſtreet end, all the three Chairs were ſet down a-breſt again, and Mr Coote put his Hand in his Pocket, and took out half a Guinea to pay and ſaid he had no Silver, and my Lord of Warwick ſpoke to my Lord Mohun, who took out three Shillings out of his Pocket, who ſaid there was for my Lord Warwick, Captain Coote, and himſelf; and when they were gone out I took my Box and my Pipe, and filled my Pipe, and took the Lanthorn and lighted it, and by that Time I had lighted my Pipe, I heard a calling out Chair, Chair, again, towards the upper End of the Square, ſo I took my Chair, and there was one of the Chairs that was not gone, and ſo we came up to the upper End of the Fields, and they called to us to bring the Chairs over the Rails; we told them we did not know how to do that, for we ſhould not be able to get them back again; at laſt we did get over the Rails, and made up cloſe to the Place where we heard the Noiſe, for we could ſee nothing, it being a very dark Night, and when we came up cloſe to them, by our Lanthorn there were two Gentlemen holding up Mr Coote under their Arms, and crying out, My Dear Coote, my Dear Coote!

Mr Att. Gen. Pray who were thoſe two Gentlemen?

Browne. I did not know them, one was in Red Cloaths, and the other had Gold Lace, and they would have had me have taken Mr Coote into my Chair; but ſeeing him bloody, and not able to help himſelf, I ſaid I would not ſpoil my Chair, and ſo would not meddle with him, but they ſaid they would make me any Satisfaction for my Chair, and deſired me to take him in, but he gave himſelf a ſpring from them, and we found he was too heavy for us to lift over the Rails, and all we could do could not make him ſit in the Chair, but the Chair was broken with endeavouring to place him there; and they ſaid, if we would carry him to a Surgeon's, they would give us a hundred Pound Security; but we finding it impoſſible the Watch was called for, but no Body would come near, for they ſaid it was out of their Ward, and ſo they would not come anigh me; and I ſtayed about half an Hour with my Chair broken, and afterwards I was laid hold upon, both I and my Partner, and we were kept till next Night Eleven a Clock; and that is all the Satisfaction that I have had for my Chair and every Thing.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, I deſire he may recollect himſelf; for we do apprehend it is very Material who it was that deſired to take Mr Coote into the Chair.

Browne. I cannot tell who they were, it was ſo very dark I could only ſee their Cloaths.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you ſee the Earl of Warwick there?

Browne. No, Sir, he was not there, one of them I tell you had Officers Cloaths on, Red lined with Blue, and the other had Gold Lace on; there was no Body there that held him up but them two.

M. of Norm. He ſays he ſaw two Perſons holding up Mr Coote; it would be very well to have that Matter very well ſettled who thoſe two Perſons were, I deſire to know how he is ſure my Lord of Warwick was not one of them two?

Browne. I know my Lord of Warwick very well, and I am ſure he was neither of the Two.

D. of Leeds. I would know what Light he had to diſcern it ſo well by, that he can be ſure my Lord of Warwick was not there; for he ſays, it was a very dark Night, and yet he deſcribes the particular Perſons that held Mr Coote up.

Browne. Yes, my Lord, I am ſure my Lord of Warwick was none of them.

Duke of Leeds. How could you diſtinguiſh in ſo dark a Night the Colours of People's Cloaths?

Browne.

Browne. With the Candle that I had lighted in my Lanthorn.

Duke of Leeds. He could not know any of the Perſons unleſs he held a Lanthorn to their Faces, or knew them very well before.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Warwick, will your Lordſhip ask this Witneſs any Queſtions?

Earl of Warwick. My Lord, I deſire he may be asked, Whether I did not bid him ſtop at St. Martins-Lane End, and do all that I could to hinder Mr Coote from going any further, but to go home?

Browne. The Earl of Warwick, and my Lord Mohun, as they turned up the Lane, asked Mr. Coote, Whither he was going? and when he ſaid to Leiceſter-fields, they deſired him to let it alone till to Morrow; and my Lord Mohun ſaid he ſhould go home with him; but the other bid us go on, and ſaid he would not go to his Lodgings, but that they would make an End of it that Night; Still they called to him again, dear Coote let's ſpeak a Word with you, and as the Chairs came to the Back-Door of the Croſs-keys Tavern, there they ſtood all of a Breaſt, and they both of them ſpoke to him, and ſtood a pretty while there, and in the mean Time three Chairs paſſed by on the other Side, he Commanded us to take up, and carry him away to Leiceſter-fields immediately, and overtake the other Chairs, or he would run one of us into the Body.

Lord High Steward. Would your Lordſhip ask him any more Queſtions?

Earl of Warwick. No, my Lord.

Mr Attorney General. My Lord, I obſerve, he ſays they diſcourſed ſome Time together while they ſtopped in St. Martins-lane, I deſire that he may be asked, whether he can tell what that Diſcourſe was?

Browne. I could not well hear, they whiſpered together, but I could hear my Lord Mohun, and my Lord of Warwick, deſire Captain Coote to go home, and let the Buſineſs alone till another Time.

Mr Att. Gen. I deſire he may explain himſelf, what that Buſineſs was that they would have put off till to Morrow?

Browne. I know not what it was, I heard of no Anger betwixt them, but they were as good Friends, for any Thing I know to the contrary, as ever they were in their Lives, or as ever I ſee any Men.

L. Jefferys. He ſays there were Two went into Chairs at the Door of the Houſe, and afterwards went out again, and went into the Houſe, and there was Diſcourſe at the Bar of the Houſe, I would deſire to know what that was?

Browne. I did not hear the Diſcourſe that was in the Houſe, I was at the Door of the Houſe.

Mr Att. Gen. Our next Witneſs is William Crippes. (who was ſworn.)

Lord High Steward. What do you ask this Man, Mr Attorney?

Mr Attor. General. Pray will you give my Lords here an Account who you carried to Leiceſter-fields the 29th or 30th of October, and what happened in your Knowledge at that time?

Crippes. Captain Coote was the firſt Man that went into the Chair when we came to the Greyhound Tavern, afterwards he came out again, and when we took him up the ſecond Time he was the firſt Man that ſet out, and he bid us carry him to Leiceſter-fields, and when he came to the Corner of St. Martins-lane, we turned up that way; and my Lord of Warwick, and my Lord Mohun, called to us, being in Chairs behind, to know whither we were going, and deſired to ſpeak with Captain Coote, and he ſaid he was going to Leiceſter-fields; and when they asked what to do? he ſaid to end the Buſineſs; they deſired him to put it off till to Morrow; and while they were diſcourſing about it in St. Martins-lane there paſſed by other three Chairs, which when Captain Coote ſaw, he bid us take up and overtake them, and go faſter, or he would run one of us into the Body: So we went on, and at the lower end of Leiceſter-fields we ſet him down; and the other Two Gentlemen, my Lord Warwick, and my Lord Mohun, were there ſet down, and went lovingly together, for any Thing that I ſaw, up the Pavement of the Square, towards the upper end; and in a little Time we heard a Noiſe of Calling for Chairs towards the upper End, and when we came there with the Chair, we were bid to lift over the Chair within the Rails, and when we ſaid it was hard to be done, they inſiſted upon it, and we did come in, and when we came there we ſaw Two Gentlemen holding up Captain Coote, and would have had us taken him into the Chair; we ſaw there was a great deal of Blood, but I never heard how it came, and they would have had us carried him to a French Surgeon's, and proffered any Money.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, I deſire to know, who they were that deſired him to be carried to the Surgeon?

L. H. St. You hear the Queſtion, What ſay you?

Crippes. I cannot tell, my Lord, one of them had ſomething of Lace upon him, but it was ſo dark that I could hardly ſee my Hand, and therefore I cannot tell who they were; and when there was an Objection made, that the Chairs would be ſpoiled, they ſaid we need not queſtion our Chair, they would give us 100 l. Security to anſwer any Damages, if we would but carry him; ſo we endeavoured to put him into the Chair, but could not; and ſo we called out to the Watch, to have had ſome help, but they ſaid it was none of their Ward, and ſo they would not come to us; ſo the Gentlemen went away, and we left them, and went and called a Chirurgeon, who when he came ſaid, he was a dead Man, and we were ſecured till the next Day.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, I deſire he may be asked, Were there not other Chairs in that Place at that time?

Crippes. There was one in the Field beſides, and no more that I could ſee, they all went away but us two.

Mr Att. Gen. What diſtance of Time was there between their ſetting down in Leiceſter-fields, and their calling the Chairs again?

Crippes. Not a quarter of an Hour.

Mr Att. Gen. What became of the three Chairs that paſſed by you in St. Martins-lane?

Crippes. They got before us, but what became of them afterwards I cannot tell.

Mr Att. Gen. Did they come from the ſame Place, the Tavern in the Strand that you were at?

Crippes. Yes, I believe they did, my Lord, for Captain Coote bid us follow them, and threatened us if we did not make greater haſte.

Mr Att. Gen. Do you know my Lord of Warwick?

Crippes. Yes, he had whitiſh Cloaths on, and none but he had ſuch Cloaths on as thoſe were.

Lord High Steward. Will your Lordſhip ask this Witneſs any Queſtions?

Earl of Warwick. My Lord, I deſire he may be asked, whether I did not bid him ſtop? And,

Whether I did not ſay, they ſhould not go to quarrel that Night?

Crippes. Yes, both he and my Lord Mohun would not have had Captain Coote gone any where, but home to his Lodgings.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, I deſire to know of him, directly and down-right, Whether my Lord of Warwick was not one of them that held him when he was within the Rails in the Fields?

Crippes. No, he was not, he was neither of them, for the one of them was too big for him, and the other was too little for my Lord Mohun?

Mr Att. Gen. Now we ſhall call the Chairman that carried the Earl of Warwick into Leiceſter-fields. James Crattle. (He was ſworn.)

Mr Att. Gen. Will you tell my Lords what you know of any Perſon that you carried the 29th or 30th of October laſt from the Greyhound Tavern in the Strand, and who it was, and whither you carried him?

Crattle. I was going along Charing-Croſs, between One and Two in the Morning the 30th of October laſt, and I heard a Chair called for at Lockets at the Dog Tavern, and thither I and my Partner went, and we took up the Gentleman, and carried him to Leiceſter-fields.

Mr Att. Gen. Who was that Gentleman?

Crattle. It was my Lord of Warwick.

Mr Att. Gen. What time of Night do you ſay it was?

Crattle. It was about One or Two in the Morning.

Mr Att. Gen. What Day of the Week was it?

Crattle. It was Saturday Night and Sunday Morning.

Mr Att. Gen. Whither did you carry him?

Crattle. Into Green-ſtreet, towards the lower end of Leiceſter-Square.

Mr Att. Gen. What Chairs were there more there?

Crattle. There was one that Captain Coote was in, and another that my Lord Mohun was in, and we went away all together.

Mr Att. Gen. Were there no other Chairs?

Crattle. I did not know who went in the other Chairs, but there were three other Chairs that paſſed by us at St Martins-lane, and we followed after them to Leiceſter-fields.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray what became of you after you had ſet down your Fare?

Crattle. We were diſcharged and paid, the other three went up towards my Lord of Leiceſter's, but we were coming away, and in a little Time we heard the Noiſe of calling Chairs, Chairs, again, and there were Two Chairs did come up, Thomas Browne's and ours; my Lord of Warwick called our Chair, and we took him into it, and he bid us carry him to the Bagnio in Longacre, and when we came there we knocked at the Door, and his Hand was bloody, and he asked us if we had any Handkerchief to bind up his Hand.

Mr Att. Gen. Was there any other Chairs at the Door of the Bagnio, at the ſame time when you came there?

Crattle. Yes, there was another Chair there at the Door at the ſame Time, and we ſet down both together.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray whence came that Chair?

Crattle. Indeed I do not know.

Mr Att. Gen. Who were the Chairmen that carried that Chair?

Crattle. Indeed my Lord Mohun, and my Lord Warwick, were the only Perſons that I knew of all the Company.

Mr Att. Gen. What ſort of Gentleman was the other that went out of the other Chair into the Houſe?

Crattle. He was a pretty tall Man; when he was in we went away; I only can ſay I ſaw my Lord of Warwick go into the Houſe.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you take any notice of any Sword that my Lord of Warwick had in his Hand at that Time?

Crattle. No, I cannot ſay I did take any Notice of any Sword, only that there was a Handkerchief deſired.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, Did you hear no Noiſe at all in the Field, till you heard Chairs called for again?

Crattle. No, I cannot ſay I heard any Noiſe in the Field.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you apprehend there was any Fighting?

Crattle. No, I knew nothing at all of it, but upon the calling of Chairs again, and my Lord Warwick coming along, we took him in, and he bid us go to the Bagnio, and thither we went.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, we have done with this Witneſs.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Warwick, will you ask this Witneſs any Queſtions?

Earl of Warwick. No, my Lord.

Mr Att. Gen. Then, my Lord, our next Witneſs is John Gibſon, he was another of thoſe Chairmen that carried my Lord of Warwick to the Bagnio afterwards. Pray will you give my Lords an Account what you know, who you carried the 29th and 30th of October laſt, and whither you carried them? (who was ſworn.)

Gibſon. My Lord, I was at Charing-Croſs with my Partner the 29th of October laſt, at Night, and about One or Two a Clock in the Morning Chairs were called for to the Greyhound Tavern in the Strand, and when we came there, my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mohun, and Mr Coote, got into the three firſt Chairs, and we got my Lord Warwick into our Chair, and when we had him there we were bid to go towards Leiceſter-fields, as I apprehended, for thither the Chairs that went firſt was to go, and indeed my Lord Mohun, and my Lord Warwick, did call to ſtop at the end of St Martins-lane, and asked Mr Coote whither he was going? and he ſaid he was going to make an End of the Buſineſs, and they ſaid it ſhould not be to Night, but preſently after three other Chairs coming along, and paſſing before us, the Chair that Captain Coote was in, was bid to go on, and we were ordered to follow, which was done accordingly; Juſt at the Turning of Green-ſtreet we ſet down our three Chairs, and, I think, juſt about the Turning of Green-ſtreet End we ſtayed till there came another Chair again, and we and the other Chair upon my Lord Warwick's coming into us, went away from thence, and carried him to the Bagnio in Long-acre.

Mr Att. Gen. You talk of another Chair, pray, Whoſe Chair was that?

Gibſon. There was another Chair that was got there juſt before us, but indeed I do not know whoſe it was, nor indeed can I ſay who it was that was in it, but this I am ſure we went to the ſame place, and we met and lit juſt at the ſame Time, and my Lord of Warwick asked for a Handkerchief to bind about his Hand, which was bloody, which was given him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you not know who was in the other Chair at that time?

Gibſon.

Gibſon. No, indeed, I did not know, I will aſſure you.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, did you not know where that other Chair took the other Gentleman up?

Gibſon. No, indeed, Sir, I did not.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, What Time of the Night was it?

Gibſon. It was between One and Two of the Clock in the Morning.

Mr Att. Gen. You talk of his Hand being hurt, and that he called for a Handkerchief, Did you ſee his Hand bleed? and, pray, in what Nature was his Wound?

Gibſon. My Lord, all I can ſay is, there was Blood, and he wanted a Handkerchief, and had one, for he ſaid his Hand was hurt, but in truth I did not take any notice what that hurt was, I did not ſee it, if my Partner took notice of it, ſo, but elſe I can ſay nothing to it, but the Handkerchief was afterwards asked again, and could not be had.

Lord High Steward. Would my Lord of Warwick ask this Witneſs any Queſtions?

Earl of Warwick. No, my Lord.

Mr Att. Gen. Then, my Lord, our next Witneſſes are Robert Applegate, and Peter Catro, who will give your Lordſhip an Account who they carried at this Time.

Lord High Steward. Whom do you call firſt?

Mr Att. Gen. Robert Applegate. (who was ſworn.)

Lord High Steward. What Queſtions do you ask him, Mr Attorney?

Mr Att. General. I deſire that he would acquaint your Lordſhip, what he knows of what paſſed at the Greyhound Tavern in the Strand the 29th of October laſt, whom he carried, and whither he carried them?

Applegate. My Lord, about One or Two a Clock in the Morning, a Sunday Morning, the 29th or 30th of October laſt, I was going home with my Partner and my Chair, and I heard them calling at the Greyhound Tavern in the Strand, Mr Locket's, for Coaches and Chairs, there was no Coach to be had that could be heard of, but coming up to the Door, they ſaid they wanted ſix Chairs, and when we were there at the Door, there came out firſt my Lord Warwick, Captain Coote, and my Lord Mohun, Captain Coote got into the firſt Chair, and what Directions he gave them I cannot tell; my Lord of Warwick got into the next, and into ours, which was the Third, my Lord Mohun came in, and bid us take him up and carry him towards Weſtminſter, and he ordered us to follow the Chairs before; juſt as they turned at St Martins lane, my Lord Mohun called out, and deſired to ſtop, and at the Croſs-Keys Tavern Back-door all the three Chairs came up together, and then my Lord of Warwick, and Captain Coote, and my Lord Mohun talked together, and I could hear my Lord Mohun and my Lord of Warwick deſire Captain Coote to defer it, and put it by till another Day; what it was, indeed I cannot tell: But while they were talking there, Three Chairs more came up on the other ſide of the Way, and Captain Coote would needs go forward, and my Lord Mohun and my Lord of Warwick went with him, and ſo they were all ſet down at the lower end of Leiceſter-fields at Green-ſtreet end. But in truth I did not ſee where the other Three Chairs ſet down thoſe they carried.

Mr Att. Gen. What then happened afterwards, Can you tell?

Applegate. I cannot tell whether I had lighted my Pipe, or juſt lighting it, when I heard Chairs called again, upon which we run up with our Chair towards the upper end of the Fields, and there I did ſee my Lord of Warwick within the Rails, who bid us put over our Chair into the Fields, but we told him if we did, we could not get it over again, and ſo we went with our Chair to the corner of the Fields, and when we came there, there came out Captain French, who bid us open our Chair, and let him in, for he did believe he was a dead Man; and upon that we did take him in, and he bid us carry him with all the ſpeed we could to the Bagnio in Long-acre, and my Lord of Warwick got into another Chair behind, ſo we went to Long-acre, and when we came to the Door of the Bagnio, and Captain French came out of the Chair, he was ſo weak that he fell down upon his Knees; and when he came out, I asked who ſhould pay me, and deſired to be diſcharged, and the Earl of Warwick ſaid, Damn ye, call for your Money to Morrow; ſo they both went in at the Bagnio Door together.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray who called for the Chair firſt, Captain French, or my Lord of Warwick in the Fields.

Applegate. I cannot tell, but when I brought up my Chair, I firſt ſaw my Lord of Warwick, and he would have had me lifted the Chair over the Rails, and I told him we could not get it over again, and ſo went up to the upper end of the Fields.

Mr Att. Gen. If you firſt ſpoke with my Lord of Warwick, why did you not carry my Lord of Warwick?

Applegate. Indeed I cannot tell, but I ſuppoſe it was becauſe he did not come ſo ſoon out of the Fields as Captain French, or did not come the ſame Way.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray do you remember any Thing that happened juſt at their carrying Capt. French away?

Applegate. Before he went into the Chair he ſtopped, and would have pulled off his Cloaths, but we would not let him.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you ſee any Sword Capt. French had?

Applegate. I did ſee no Sword that I can ſay directly was a Sword, but Captain French had ſomething in his Hand, but what it was I cannot tell.

Mr Att. Gen. What was it that he ſaid to you, when he firſt went into the Chair?

Applegate. He deſired to be carrid to the Bagnio, for he ſaid he believed he was a dead Man.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, Friend, recollect your ſelf, if you heard him ſay any Thing at all when he firſt went into the Chair at the Greyhound Tavern?

Applegate. I did not hear him mention any Thing at all.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray what did you hear my Lord of Warwick ſay at that time?

Applegate. Truly I cannot ſay I heard him mention any Thing at all neither, but I did hear my Lord Mohun ſay, when he could not prevail in St Martins-lane with Captain Coote to go home, that if they did go he would go and ſee it.

Mr Att. Gen. If they did go, who did he mean by They?

Applegate. My Lord Warwick and Captain Coote that were in the other Chairs, there was no Body elſe to ſpeak to.

Mr Att.

Mr At. Gen. Was there any talk of Fighting or quarrelling?

Applegate. No indeed, I do not know of any difference there was between them.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Warwick, Will your Lordſhip ask this Witneſs any Queſtions?

Earl of Warwick. My Lord, I deſire he may be asked, Whether I did not endeavour to put off the going into Leiceſter-fields, and to have all Things let alone till to Morrow.

Applegate. My Lord, I cannot ſay any Thing of that, but I did hear my Lord Mohun beg heartily of Captain Coote to go home, and let the Buſineſs alone till another time; and indeed I think I never heard a Man beg more hearty for an Alms at a Door, than he did, that they might not go into the Fields then, but I cannot ſay that I heard any Thing that my Lord of Warwick ſaid about it.

L. H. Stew. Will your Lordſhip ask him any other Queſtions?

Earl of Warwick. No my Lord.

Lord High Steward. Did my Lord Warwick expreſs any Inclination to go on.

Applegate. Indeed I know not any Thing one Way nor other.

L. Jefferys. My Lords, if I am not miſtaken he did ſay, that he did not ſee any Thing of Inclination in my Lord of Warwick to go on; but I deſire if your Lordſhips pleaſe that he may be asked this Queſtion, Whether he did ſee any Thing in my Lord of Warwick that ſhewed any Inclination to the contrary.

Applegate. All that I can ſay is, I heard my Lord Mohun ſay, Pray let's go home and lie all together, and let us put off this Buſineſs to another time; but indeed I do not remember that my Lord of Warwick ſaid one Word of going any way backward or forward.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, who did my Lord Mohun ſpeak theſe Words to?

Applegate. My Lord Mohun ſpoke them to my Lord of Warwick and Captain Coote both.

Lord High Steward. Mr Attorney who is your next Witneſs?

Mr Att. Gen. Peter Catro. (who was ſworn.)

L. H. Stew. What do you ask him, Sir?

Mr Att. Gen. He was the other Chair-man that carried my Lord Mohun, Pray will you give my Lords an Account what you know paſſed at the Time when you carried my Lord Mohun to Leiceſter-fields?

Catro. I and my Fellow carried my Lord Mohun from the Greyhound Tavern in the Strand, till we came to the Turning up of St Martins-lane, where my Lord Mohun deſired that our Three Chairs might ſtop, and that they might go down to Weſtminſter, and that my Lord Warwick and Capt. Coote would go thither, and he would wait upon them to their Lodging; Captain Coote made Anſwer again ſomething, but what I cannot tell, and his Chair went on, and my Lord Mohun did ſay, if they went forward he would follow them, and ſee what would come of it.

Mr Att. Gen. What did you ſee happen while you were in St Martins-lane?

Catro. There were other three Chairs that went by while we ſtood at the Croſs-Keys Tavern Door, and Captain Coote's Chair going forward, we followed and went to the end of Leiceſter-fields at Green-ſtreet end, and there all three went out of their Chairs and walked up the paved Stones of the Square; my Lord of Warwick asked my Lord Mohun if he had any Silver, and three Shillings were given for the three Chairs, and they went from us, and bid us go about our Buſineſs, and in a little while after we heard a Noiſe from the upper end of the Fields calling Chairs again.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you obſerve any Thing of Quarrel or Difference between them, or any claſhing of Swords.

Catro. Indeed I heard nothing of any Quarrel, for we were at the lower end of the Square, at Green-ſtreet end, and when we heard them call for Chairs again, we went up towards the upper end of the Fields, and when we came there, we heard one bid us bring up the Chair over the Rails.

Mr Att. Gen. Who was that?

Catro. Indeed my Lord I cannot tell, for I was behind the Chair, and could not ſee who it was, but we ſaying that we could not get it over again if we did; we went up to the upper end of the Fields, and there was Captain French, I think it was, for I did not perfectly ſee him, being at the hind-part of the Chair, and we went on to the Bagnio in Long-acre; and I did ſee my Lord Warwick come out of his Chair at the Bagnio Door, for there they were ſet down.

Mr Att. Gen. You ſay you ſaw my Lord of Warwick at the Bagnio Door; Did you ſee any Sword as my Lord of Warwick had, or Captain French?

Catro. No, I did not ſee any Sword at all of either of them.

Mr Att. Gen. What do you know of Captain French his declaring he was wounded.

Catro. I think it was either when he went into the Chair, or in Newport-ſtreet end he called out to have the Chair opened, for ſays he I think I am a dead Man, and would have pulled off his Cloaths; and when we were at the Bagnio Door we tarryed a pretty while till they got them up to let them in, and asking if we ſhould wait, my Lord of Warwick bid us come to that Houſe to Morrow Morning for our Money, and they went in together into the Houſe, but I never heard any one Word of Quarrel or Diſſatisfaction paſſed between them.

Mr Att. Gen. This Witneſs ſpeaks to the ſame Purpoſe as the other did, and I think we need not trouble your Lordſhip any further as to that.

Lord High Steward. Would my Lord Warwick ask him any Queſtions?

Earl of Warwick. No, my Lord.

Mr Att. Gen. Then our next Witneſs is one John Palmer. (who was ſworn.)

Mr Att. Gen. Pray will you give my Lords an Account who it was you did carry in your Chair the 29th or 30th of October laſt, and whither you carried him?

Palmer. About one a Clock in the Morning, the 30th of October, we were called to the Greyhound Tavern in the Strand to Mr Locket's, and there we took up a Gentleman, one Captain French.

Mr Att. Gen. Whither did you carry him?

Palmer. He bid us go to Leiceſter-fields.

Mr Att. Gen. What did he particularly ſay to you?

Palmer. There were three other Chairs that were juſt gone before from the ſame Door, and he bid us get before all thoſe Chairs, and juſt as we came to St Martins-lane end, we ſaw there were three other Chairs ſet down before us over-againſt the Croſs-Keys Tavern Back-Door.

Mr Att. Gen. Well, what did you do then?

Palmer. So we went before according as we were bid unto Leiceſter fields, and at the upper end of the Fields by Leiceſter-houſe we opened the Door

Door, and Captain French came out, and he gave us a Shilling, and we went away about our Buſineſs.

Mr Att. Gen. Were there any more Chairs there that went with you?

Palmer. There were two more Chairs that ſet down two other Gentlemen by Leiceſter-houſe, and we came away when we were paid; that is all I know.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you ſee any other Chairs beſides your three when you came down again, or any other Gentlemen?

Palmer. We did ſee ſome Gentlemen walking up about the middle of the Square when we came down, but we made what haſte we could away home, it being late, and Sunday Morning.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you obſerve any fighting when you were in the Field?

Palmer. I did not hear or diſcern any fighting while I was there.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you hear of any Quarrel, or any Thing between any of them, and whom, before?

Palmer. No, I did not know of any Quarrel, or hear of any Thing at all I do aſſure you.

Mr Att. Gen. All that he ſays then, my Lord is, That he carried Captain French to the upper end of Leiceſter-fields, and there he left him.

L. H. St. Would my Lord Warwick ask this Witneſs any Queſtions?

Earl of Warwick. I deſire he may be asked, whether he knows who were in the Chairs that were in St. Martins-lane when they paſſed by?

L. H. St. You hear the Queſtion, What ſay you to it?

Palmer. There were three Chairs, but who they were that were in them I cannot tell directly, but as they ſaid when they ſet them down at Leiceſter-fields they were my Lord Warwick, my Lord Mohun, and Mr Coote.

Mr Att. Gen. Who was it that ſaid ſo?

Palmer. Some of the other Chairmen when I came by.

L. H. St. Mr Attorney, who is your next Witneſs?

Mr Att. Gen. We ſhall call next the Chairmen that carried Mr Dockwra and Mr James: Call Jackſon the Chairman. (who was ſworn.)

Mr Att. Gen. This Man carried Captain James: Pray acquaint my Lords, Who you did take up at Locket's in the Strand on the 29th or 30th of October laſt, and whither you carried him?

Jackſon. I carried Captain James from Lockett's in the Strand into Leiceſter-fields.

Mr Att. Gen. How many Chairs were you that went?

Jackſon. There were two more that went when I went, there were ſix in all that took up Gentlemen there, and we were the laſt but one.

Mr Att. Gen. Can you tell who were in the other there firſt Chairs?

Jackſon. I do not know who were in the other Chairs, but I heard my Lord Mohun at the Door of the Houſe deſire, That the Buſineſs might be deferred till to Morrow Morning: There were ſix Gentlemen at the Door, but truly who they all were I cannot tell.

Mr Att. Gen. Who did my Lord Mohun ſpeak that to?

Jackſon. Indeed I do not know who he ſpoke it to.

Mr Att. Gen. What Anſwer was made to my Lord Mohun?

Jackſon. Truly there was no Anſwer that I heard, but we all went away ſoon after that, and we were bid to go to Leiceſter-fields to follow the other Chairs, and when we came to the other end of Leiceſter-fields, we ſet down Captain James by the Standard Tavern, and he gave us a Shilling, and bid us go our Ways; ſo we went our Way, and I heard nothing afterwards, but came away down the Fields, and there were three Chairs that ſtood at the Bottom of the Fields, and we asked them, What they ſtayed there for? And they ſaid, To fill a Pipe of Tobacco: And preſently after we heard call Chairs again; but it was late, and it was Sunday Morning, and my Partner ſaid, Let us go away home and we did ſo, we went directly home.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you carry no Body back?

Jackſon. No, we carried no Body back.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, we have done with this Witneſs, our next Witneſs is one Richard Edwards, and he was one of the Chairmen that carried Mr Dockwra. (He was ſworn.)

Mr Att. Gen. Pray will you acquaint my Lords, Whether you carried any Body from Lockett's the 29th of October, and who it was, and whither you carried him?

Edwards. I do not know who I carried, but they were calling Coaches at the Greyhound Tavern in the Strand, and no Coaches coming, they called for Chairs, and ſo our Chair was brought up.

Mr Att. Gen. When you came there, who did you ſee there?

Edwards. Indeed I did not know my Lord of Warwick, nor my Lord Mohun, nor any of them.

Mr Att. Gen. Well, What do you know? Tell my Lords what happened.

Edwards. When we were there, there went two into two Chairs, and my Lord Mohun ſaid, or another Gentleman, I cannot tell which, that the Chairs ſhould not go away, that they would kill any Man that ſhould go away, and they went out of the Chairs, and went into the Houſe again.

Mr Att. Gen. And what happened after they went into the Houſe again.

Edwards. After they went out of the Chairs into the Houſe again, as I was told, my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mohun, and Mr Coote, went into three Chairs, and went away from the Door, and there were three Chairs of us that went laſt.

Mr Att. Gen. Whither did you go with your Chair?

Edwards. We went to the Standard Tavern at the end of Leiceſter-fields, and when we came to the Tavern Door, we asked him if we ſhould knock at the Door, he ſaid no, but he gave us a Shilling, and bid us go about our Buſineſs, and ſo we did, for we went ſheer away to Charing-Croſs.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray can you tell who were in the other Chairs?

Edwards. Truly I cannot tell any Man that was in our three Chairs, for I was the hind-Chairman, and did not know any of them.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, I deſire to know what he means by hind-Chairman.

Edwards. My Lord, Ours was the laſt Chair that went to Leiceſter-fields, and I was behind the Chair, and never could ſee any of them, it being ſo very dark after they took the Chairs, till we came to Charing-Croſs, at St Martins-lane, and then I could not ſee who the particular Perſons were that were in the Chairs; nor indeed, whoſe the Chairs were that carried them.

Mr Att.

Mr Att. Gen. What Hour was it?

Edwards. It was very late, between one and two in the Morning, it was paſt one before we were called out.

Mr Att. Gen. You ſay you went to the upper end of Leiceſter-fields, with two other Chairs; Pray did you ſee any other Chairs afterwards, and where?

Edwards. We ſaw three Chairs at the lower end of the Square, as we came down by Green-ſtreet end, and we asked them, What they ſtay'd there for, and they ſaid, to light a Pipe of Tobacco.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, Who had been carried in thoſe Chairs, Can you tell?

Edwards. I did not ſee them ſet down any Body, and I cannot tell who they carried; and as for the Perſon that we carried, I did not ſo much as ſee him to know him, nor know who he was, but we went away as ſoon as ever we were paid.

Mr Att. Gen. I have one Queſtion more to ask you; you ſay, That my Lord of Warwick at the Tavern Door bid you ſtay, and that none ſhould go away, and ſwore he would run any Man through that ſhould go away.

Edwards. It was my Lord Mohun; and then two that had gone into the Chairs went into the Houſe again.

Mr Att. Gen. Did not you ſay, that there was ſome talk of going to Weſtminſter?

Edwards. My Lord Mohun did talk of going to Weſtminſter when they went into the Chairs the Second time, and I think I heard Mr Coote ſay he would make an end of it then; and he would kill any Man that would not go forwards to Leiceſter-fields.

L. H. St. My Lord Warwick, will you ask this Witneſs any more Queſtions?

Earl of Warwick. No, my Lord.

L. H. St. Mr Attorney, have you any more Evidence to call?

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, the next Piece of Evidence that we ſhall apply our ſelves to, will be to what happened at the Bagnio in Long-acre, after my Lord Warwick and Captain French came there: And the Witneſs that we ſhall call is Pomfret, and he is a Servant at the Bagnio in Long-acre, and he will acquaint your Lordſhips who came thither the 30th of October laſt, and what happened there.

L. H. St. What is his Name?

Mr Att. Gen. Henry Pomfret.

L. H. St. Is he ſworn?

Mr Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. St. What is it that you examine him about? What Queſtions do you ask him Mr Attorney?

Mr Att. Gen. Who came to his Maſter's Houſe; and at what Time they came.

Pomfret. My Lord, on Sunday the 30th of October laſt, between Two and Three in the Morning, there came to my Maſter's Door the Earl of Warwick, and knocked at the Door, and there was Captain French with him; and when they were let in, my Lord of Warwick told me that Captain French was wounded, and he himſelf had a Wound, and he deſired that my Maſter might be called up for to dreſs the Wounds; eſpecially, becauſe Captain French was very much wounded, which accordingly was done in about a quarter of an Hour after they were brought in.

Mr Att. Gen. Did he deſire to be concealed when he was come in?

L. H. St. Of whom do you ſpeak, Mr Attorney.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord of Warwick.

Pomfret. He did deſire, that if any Body asked for him, it ſhould be ſaid he was not there.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray in what Condition did my Lord of Warwick ſeem to be in at that time.

Pomfret. He ſeemed to be very much concerned at that time, and his Right Hand, in which he had his Sword, and which was drawn, was very much bloody.

Mr Att. Gen. Was the Sword Bloody that he had in his Hand?

Pomfret. The Blade was Bloody; but whether it was all over Bloody I cannot tell; there was beſides ſome Blood upon the Shell, it was very near all over bloody, as I remember.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, Friend, Conſider what you ſwore at the Coroner's Inqueſt about the Blood upon the Sword.

Pomfret. Indeed I cannot ſay it was bloody all along the Blade; but there was Blood upon the Shell, and there was Blood upon the Inſide, it was ſo to the beſt of my remembrance.

Mr Att. Gen. What Condition was Mr French's Sword in?

Pomfret. He had a drawn Sword in his Hand, but I did not perceive it had any Blood upon it: it was a large Blade.

Mr Att. Gen. How do you know what ſort of Sword Mr French's was, and in what Condition it was?

Pomfret. He deſired me to take notice of it next Morning, and I did ſo, and there was no Blood upon it.

Mr Att. Gen. How came you to be deſired to take Notice of what paſſed there about the Swords?

Pomfret. My Lord, there was three of them the next Day, and one it was ſaid was Mr Coote's, and another of them was my Lord of Warwick's, which I do believe was bloody from the Point upwards, very near, but I cannot directly ſay but that was afterwards.

Mr Att. Gen. Who brought in that Sword that you ſay was Mr Coote's?

Pomfret. To the beſt of my Remembrance Captain Dockwra brought it in, it was almoſt half an Hour after my Lord Warwick and Captain French came into the Houſe, when they came thither.

Mr Att. Gen. They, Who do you mean?

Pomfret. Captain James and he.

Mr Att. Gen. Were they let in preſently?

Pomfret. No, My Lord of Warwick had deſired that they might be private there; but when they knocked at the Door, my Lord of Warwick deſired to know who they were; and when it was underſtood that they were Mr James and Mr Dockwra, they were let in by my Lord's Order.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, which of all the Four brought in any Sword in a Scabbard?

Pomfret. It was Captain Dockwra.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, did they appear to be all of a Party?

Pomfret. They were glad to ſee one another; and they talked a pretty while together, but indeed I cannot ſay I heard what they talked.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, do you remember my Lord of Warwick's Sword, and what there was upon it?

Pomfret. It was a Steel Sword Water-gilt, and as near as I can remember there was Blood upon it for the moſt part from the Point upward.

Mr

Mr Att. Gen. And what did appear upon Mr French's Sword?

Pomfret. There was Water and Dirt, but there was no Blood at all.

M. Att. Gen. How long did they ſtay there?

Pomfret. They all continued about half an Hour, and then went away, all but Mr French, who ſtaid there?

Mr Att. Gen. What then became of the others?

Pomfret. Mr James, and Mr Dockwra, and my Lord of Warwick, went away, and my Lord of Warwick deſired particularly, that we would all take care of Mr French, for he was his particular Friend, and Mr French continued there till Sunday about One of the Clock.

Mr Att. Gen. Was there any Diſcourſe at that Time about Mr Coote?

Pomfret. Not that I heard of, one Word.

Mr Att. Gen. Was there any notice taken of any Quarrel that happened between any Body, and who?

Pomfret. No, indeed, I did not hear them take notice of any Quarrel at all between any Body.

Mr Att. Gen. You ſay Mr French when he came into your Houſe was wounded, and there was care particularly taken of him becauſe he was wounded.

Pomfret. Yes, my Lord of Warwick deſired to take care of him.

Mr Att. Gen. Then pray, was there no Diſcourſe how he came to be wounded?

Pomfret. Indeed I do not know how he came to be wounded; nor did I hear one Word of Diſcourſe about it, indeed I cannot ſay any Thing who wounded him.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray will you recollect your ſelf, and tell my Lords what Sort of Handle had my Lord of Warwick's Sword when you ſaw it.

Pomfret. It had a Steele Handle.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, can you tell whether the Shell was open or cloſe?

Pomfret. I cannot tell juſtly; I ſaw it, and that was all.

Mr Att. Gen. If I apprehend you, you ſay my Lord had a Wound in his Hand.

Pomfret. Yes, my Lord, he had ſo.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, in what Hand was it that he was wounded?

Pomfret. To the beſt of my remembrance it was in his right Hand.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray did there appear much Blood there?

Pomfret. Yes, my Lord, indeed there did.

Mr Serj. Wright. You talk of Mr James and Mr Dockwra's Swords, pray in what Condition were they?

Pomfret. Mr Dockwra's Sword was by his Side, and not drawn.

Mr Serj. Wright. What did you obſerve of Captain James's Sword?

Pomfret. His Sword was naked, and he had loſt his Scabbard; but how that came I cannot tell, and there was dirt on one Side of the Sword, and he ſaid he had left his Scabbard behind him.

Mr Att. Gen. Was there any Blood upon his Sword?

Pomfret. No, there was no Blood that I did ſee upon it.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray did you ſee any Blood upon Mr Dockwra's Sword?

Pomfret. No, indeed, I did not ſee Mr Dockwra's Sword, it was in the Scabbard by his Side.

D. of Leeds, My Lords, There has been notice here taken of ſeveral Swords that this Witneſs ſaw, and he takes ſo far notice of my Lord of Warwick's Sword, that he tells you what Sort of Hilt it had, and how it was Bloody from the Point to the Hilt; I deſire he would give you an Account of the Length and Breadth of the other Men's Swords, Mr French, Mr James, and Mr Dockwra.

L. H. St. You ſaid juſt now, that you took notice of my Lord of Warwick's Sword, that it was bloody from the Point to the Hilt, what Sort of Sword was it?

Pomfret. It was a pretty broad Sword.

L. H. St. Did you take notice of the other Swords, what Breadth or Length they were of?

Pomfret. No, my Lord, I did not.

Mr Att. Gen. Which was that Sword that was Dirty as you ſay?

Pomfret. That was Captain French's

Mr Att. Gen. Was that a broad Sword or not?

Pomfret. No, it was not.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray was it over Night or next Morning that you ſaw the Swords?

Pomfret. It was in the Morning about three a Clock.

Mr Att. Gen. What Time did my Lord of Warwick, and Mr James, and Mr Dockwra go away?

Pomfret. My Lord of Warwick and they were gone ſeveral Hours before Mr French; and to the beſt of my remembrance Mr James broke his Sword upon the Floor after he came in.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, what Swords were there in all that you ſaw there?

Pomfret. There was Captain French's, Captain James's, my Lord of Warwick's, and one Mr Coote's, as Mr French ſaid when it was brought in.

L. H. St. Have you done with this Witneſs, Mr Attorney?

Mr Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord, we have.

L. H. St. My Lord Warwick, Will you ask him any Queſtions?

Earl of Warwick. No, my Lord.

L. H. St. Then, Mr Attorney, call your next Witneſs.

Mr Att. Gen. Our next Witneſs is Thomas Goodall, who is a Servant at the Bagnio in Long-acre, as well as this Man that was laſt. (He was Sworn)

L. H. St. What Queſtions do you ask him, Mr Attorney?

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, I deſire he would acquaint your Lordſhips, What Time it was my Lord of Warwick and Capt. French, came to his Maſter's Houſe?

Goodall. It was between One and Two of the Clock in the Morning.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, I deſire he would acquaint your Lordſhips what he ſaw and knows, that paſſed at that Time?

Goodall. All that I can ſay is, That I did ſee my Lord of Warwick's Sword bloody, and it was naked in his Hand, and I did ſee a Wound on his Hand: Indeed I did not ſee him when he firſt came in, for he had been there a pretty While before I ſaw him.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, in what Condition was my Lord when you ſaw him?

Goodall. He had his Sword in one Hand, and it was bloody at the Blade, and at the Hilt; but whether it was bloody all over, indeed I did not take notice of it, and ſo cannot give an Account.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, What Sort of Sword was it?

Goodall. Indeed I cannot give an Account what Sort of Sword it was, but it was either Steel or Silver gilt, as I remember, but I did take notice that there was Blood upon the Hilt, that is, upon the Shell.

Mr Att. Gen. Was it an open Shell, or a cloſe One?

Goodall. I think it was a cloſe One.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, Did my Lord of Warwick give any Order to be denied in the Houſe, or for any Concealment there?

Goodall. Indeed I did not hear of any Orders given for Concealing of any Body there, but my Lord walked up and down very much Concerned.

Mr Att. Gen. Did not Mr French come in with him?

Goodall, I do believe he might: But I cannot ſay I ſaw him when he came in.

Mr Att. Gen. Can you tell when Mr James and Mr Dockwra came in? How long was that after my Lord of Warwick was there, and Mr French?

Goodall. To the beſt of my Remembrance and Knowledge, it was half an Hour after my Lord of Warwick and Mr French came, that Mr James and Mr Dockwra came: I am ſure it was ſo before I ſaw them in the Houſe; but indeed I cannot ſay directly when they came in, or when they went out.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, Which Hand of my Lord of Warwick was it that was hurt, the Right or the Left?

Goodall. Indeed, I cannot poſitively ſay; but I think it was the Right Hand.

Mr Att. Gen: You talk of my Lord of Warwick's Sword, Did you take any notice of Mr French's Sword?

Goodall. No, indeed, I was buſie about the Affairs of the Houſe; I did ſee my Lord of Warwick's Sword, but that was by Chance, and it was bloody at the Hilt, and upon the Blade; but whether it were all over bloody, indeed I cannot tell.

Mr Att. Gen. I deſire to ask him, Whether he can tell who brought in Mr Coote's Sword thither?

Goodall. Indeed I cannot.

L. H. St. Mr Attorney General, Have you any more Queſtions to ask him?

Mr Att. Gen. No, my Lord, not I.

L. H. St. My Lord Warwick, Will you ask him any Queſtions?

Earl of Warwick. No, my Lord.

L. H. St. Mr Attorney, Who is your next Witneſs?

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, our next Witneſs is Mrs A. Goodall, this Man's Wife, (Who was ſworn)

L. H. St. What Queſtions do you ask this Gentlewoman?

Mr Att. Gen. I deſire that ſhe would acquaint your Lordſhips, Whether ſhe was at the Bagnio in Long-acre when my Lord of Warwick and Captain French came in?

A. Goodall. I was there when my Lord of Warwick came in.

Mr Att. Gen. Was Captain French with him?

A. Goodall. Yes, Captain French was with him.

Mr Att. Gen. About what a Clock was it that they came there?

A. Goodall. It was about Two a Clock, as near as I can remember.

Mr Att. Gen. In what Condition were they when they came in, pray?

A. Goodall. Mr French was very much wounded.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, How was my Lord of Warwick?

A. Goodall. My Lord had his Sword in his Hand, and it was very bloody, both at the Hilt, and upon the Blade.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you obſerve any Wound that my Lord had?

A. Goodall. I think, to the beſt of my Remembrance, my Lord had his Hand wrapped up in a Handkerchief, which was bloody; but I was buſy up and down in the Houſe, and I cannot ſo well tell what Hand it was; I was indeed up and down there while they were there.

Mr Att. Gen. Do you know of any Orders that were given by my Lord of Warwick to be concealed while he was there?

A. Goodall. He did deſire the Door might not be opened to any Body that asked for him, and that it might not be ſaid that he was there; and when the other Two Gentlemen came to the Door, he went to the Door himſelf, and when he ſaw who they were, he ordered them to be let in.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the Occaſion of his going to the Door himſelf?

A. Goodall. There was a Knocking at the Door, and he had a Mind to know who it was, and when it did appear it was Mr James and Mr Dockwra, he himſelf ordered them to be let in.

Mr Att. Gen. How came the Door to be open to them?

A. Goodall. Indeed I think he opened it himſelf.

Mr Att. Gen. How long was that after he and Capt. French came in?

A. Goodall. It was about half an Hour.

Mr Att. Gen. When they firſt came in, What Poſture were they in? Had they any Swords in their Hands?

A. Goodall. I did not poſitively take notice, Whether they had any Swords in their Hands, nor What they had when they came in.

Mr Att. Gen. What became of them afterwards?

A. Goodall. My Lord of Warwick, Mr James, and Mr Dockwra, went away within a little While, and my Lord of Warwick ordered particular Care to be taken of Mr French, as his Friend, and he was put to Bed after his Wounds were dreſſed; but I cannot tell what afterwards became of my Lord Warwick, and the other Gentlemen.

Mr Att. Gen. I think you were ſaying, that my Lord of Warwick was Wounded in the Hand, Which Hand was it?

A. Goodall. I cannot poſitively ſay, Whether it was the Right or the Left.

L. H. St. Will you who are of the King's Council, ask this Witneſs any further Queſtions?

Mr Att. Gen. No, my Lord, we ſhall ask her no other Queſtions.

Earl of Warwick. No, my Lord, nor I.

Mr Att. Gen. Then our next Witneſs is Henry Amy, who is a Surgeon, and lives at the Bagnio in Long acre, and he will give your Lordſhip an Account what paſſed within his Knowledge at this Time within his Houſe, and who came thither Wounded, and what particular Care was ordered to be taken of Mr French, and by whom.

(Mr. Amy was Sworn.)

Mr Att. Gen. I deſire you will give an Account to my Lords what happened at your Houſe early in the Morning, the 30th of October laſt?

Amy. He gave Directions, if any Body ſhould ask for him, they ſhould ſay he was not there.

Mr Att. Gen. Did any Body come and ask for him?

Amy. While we were taking Care of Mr French, and Dreſſing his Wound, there were ſome Perſons came and knocked at the Door, and my Lord of Warwick did Order, that no Body ſhould be let in; but he himſelf went to the Door, and when he found that it was Mr Dockwra and Mr James, my Lord Warwick ordered, that they ſhould be let in.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, Tell my Lords what followed after that?

Amy. After we had Dreſſed Mr French ——.

Mr Att. Gen. By the Way, was there any particular Directions, and by whom, to take Care of Mr French?

Amy. Yes, my Lord Warwick deſired me to take Care of him, as his Particular Friend.

Mr Att. Gen. Well then, after you had Dreſſed Mr French's Wound, What happened?

Amy. I Dreſſed my Lord Warwick's Wound.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, in what Condition was his Sword; Was it bloody?

Amy. It was without Blood, only a little Dirty.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, Did you obſerve that they talked of any Quarrel that had been between Captain French and my Lord, when they came in?

Amy. No.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you ask them any Queſtions about it, the one or the other of them?

Amy. No, I did not.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you hear them ſay, how they came by their Wounds?

Amy. No, I did not.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you hear them talk of any Body being killed, particularly Mr Coote?

Amy. I did not know of any Body being killed till next Day.

Mr Att. Gen. When they left French there, What Orders were left about him?

Amy. Only to take care of him, my Lord of Warwick deſired that.

Mr Att. Gen. What Reaſon did my Lord give for that?

Amy. I heard nothing of Reaſon, only that he was his particular Friend.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you hear them talk any Thing whither they would go, when they went away.

Amy. I did hear ſome talk about going into the Country.

Mr Att. Gen. Do you know whither they went, when they went away from your Houſe?

[An-

Another Witneſs was produced, that belonged to the Ship and Caſtle in Cornhill.

Mr Att. Gen. This Man will give you an Account what paſt at his Houſe at that time, and between whom; Pray will you tell my Lords who was at your Houſe the 30th of October laſt, and what paſt there then.

Witneſs. My Lord of Warwick, Capt. James, and Captain Dockwra, and when my Lord of Warwick came in, I thought my Lord was in a very great Concern, and called for Pen, Ink and Paper, and I feared there was ſome Quarrel in hand, but they ſaid no, the Quarrel was over, and ſays, my Lord of Warwick, I am afraid poor Coote is killed.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you obſerve any Deſire to be private?

Witneſs. No indeed, I cannot tell that.

Mr Att. Gen. Can you tell who went with my Lord Warwick?

Witneſs. No indeed, I cannot tell who went with my Lord Warwick; there came in a Gentleman in Black, whom I knew to be my Lord of Warwick's Steward, and he came and ſpoke ſome Words to my Lord of Warwick, about a quarter of an Hour after they came in, and then they went away, for after that I did not hear any farther Diſcourſe.

Mr Att. Gen. What became of the reſt of the Company?

Witneſs. They went away; I do not know what became of them, nor whither they went; ſome of them went in and out of one Room into another ſeveral times, two or three times, and came out again.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord we have done with this Witneſs.

L. H. St. My Lord Warwick, Will you ask him any Queſtions?

E. of Warw. No, my Lord.

L. H. St. Mr Attorney, who is your next Witneſs?

Mr Att. Gen. Mr Salmon the Chirurgeon, who by the Coroner's Order ſearched the Wound. (Who was ſworn.)

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, was you ordered by the Coroner to view the Body of Mr Coote?

Salm. Yes, I was ordered by the Coroner to inſpect the Body of Capt. Coote, and to give the Jury an Account of the Nature of the Wounds.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray upon the view of the Body, what Wounds had he?

Salm. There was two Wounds; one on the Breaſt near the Collar-bone running downwards very deep.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray what Part of the Breaſt was it, and how deep was it?

Salm. It was on the left part of the Breaſt near the Collar-bone and it penetrated four or five Inches.

Mr Att. Gen. Can you gueſs at what ſort of Sword it was that made the Wound?

Salm. No indeed, Sir, I cannot.

Mr Att. Gen. Was it a broad Sword, or a little Sword?

Salm. The Orifice was about the length of half an Inch, and about the Depth of five Inches.

Mr Att. Gen. Was that made with a broad Sword, or with a narrow Sword?

Salm. Indeed I cannot tell.

Mr Att. Gen. You ſay he had another Wound; where was that?

Salm. That was on his left Side too, near unto the ſhort Ribs, under the laſt Rib, which was about the length of an Inch, and of the depth of ſix Inches, and it run through the Diaphragma.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you take one of thoſe Wounds, or both of them to be mortal?

Salm. I did look upon either of them to be mortal, and to be the Occaſion of his Death.

Mr Att. Gen. Can you tell whether they were both made with one and the ſame Sword?

Salm. Indeed I cannot tell that, whether they were made with one Sword, or two.

Mr Att. Gen. Cannot you tell how they appeared to be? I ſuppoſe you probed them.

Salm. Yes, I probed them both; one was quite through the Diaphragma.

Mr Att. Gen. What Time was it that you viewed the Body by the Order of the Coroner?

Salm. I ſaw the Body at Seven a Clock on Sunday Night.

Mr Att. Gen. If my Lord of Warwick deſire to ask him any Queſtions, he may.

E. of Warw. My Lord, I deſire to ask him, whether any of the Wounds were large enough to be made by a Sword run up to the Hilt?

Salm. No, my Lord, ſure that they were not.

E. of Warw. My Lord, I deſire to know of him, whether both theſe Wounds were given before or behind?

Salm. I can only tell you the length and depth by following of the Probe; the one was downwards, and the other upwards.

Mr Att. Gen. Do you ſuppoſe both thoſe Wounds were given when the Perſon was ſtanding backward or forward?

Salm. 'Tis impoſſible to tell how they were given, becauſe of the Variety of the Poſtures of the Body in the divers Capacities thereby of receiving the Wounds?

Mr Att. Gen. Pray can you tell whether they were given by one and the ſame Sword or no?

Salm. Indeed I cannot tell.

Mr Att. Gen. Do you know any Thing to the contrary?

Salm. I cannot ſay any Thing for it, or againſt it.

E. of Kingſton. My Lords, this Witneſs, if I apprehend him right, ſays, the Wound on his Side was a large Wound.

Salm. Yes, a very large Wound, of the Length of about three quarters of an Inch at the Orifice, and five or ſix Inches deep.

E. of Kingſton. I deſire he may tell whether that Wound could be given by any other than a broad Sword.

Salm. I cannot tell that.

E. of Rocheſter. Indeed, my Lords, I would have him asked this Queſtion again; I know not whether he can anſwer it or no; but I cannot but think it is proper to have ſome Account of this Matter. In all Enquiries before the Coroner, there is a Judgment to be made of the Nature of the Wound, in order to form the Indictments, and that the Jury may know with what ſort of Weapon it was made; and it is his Profeſſion, as a Chirurgeon, to know ſuch Matters.

L. H. St. Mr Salmon, you hear what is required of you by my noble Lords, and the Obſervation which is made. You are the Chirurgeon ſent for by the Coroner, on purpoſe to inſpect this Body; and when you did ſo, it was incumbent upon you to conſider and give Information, as well with what ſort of Inſtrument the Wound was given, as the length and depth of the Wound, that the Jury might conſider upon all the Circumſtances of the Occaſion, and Manner of the Party's Death: And my Lords would know whether by the Orifices of the Wounds when you inſpected them, you can make a Judgment if they were made by ſeveral Swords, or the ſame Sword.

Salm. I cannot ſay that I ſaw any difference between the Orifices, as to the Nature of the Inſtrument they were given with, nor whether they were made by one and the ſame Sword or no, only the one Orifice was bigger than the other; that of the Side was bigger than that at the Collar-bone.

L. H. St. Then ſo far we have light (if I apprehend you rightly) the Orifice of the upper Wound was not near ſo wide as that of the lower; but it ſeems to be much in one of your Profeſſion not to be able to judge whether the Wounds were given with the ſame ſort of Sword, when there was ſuch a difference in the Orifice.

Salm. That below was a deeper Wound; and there was a conſiderable difference between the Largeneſs of one and the other.

Lord Audley. My Lords, I deſire he may tell your Lordſhips how far backward the Wound in the Side lay.

Salm. It was directly on the left Side, immediately under the two laſt Ribs, and paſt through the Diaphragma.

M. of Normanby. Pray, my Lords, let him point with his Finger whereabouts it was.

L. H. St. My Lords would have you ſhow them with your Finger whereabouts it was. (which he did.)

E. of Warw. It is a very material Queſtion for me that he ſhould anſwer, whether he did believe that one and the ſame Sword might not give both Wounds?

Salm. I cannot ſay any Thing of it one Way or other; but one Wound went much further than the other, becauſe it was in a fleſhy Part; and in ſuch a Caſe, the further the Sword goes in, it makes the Wound larger.

Mr Att. Gen. Then our next Witneſs is Stephen Turner, who was Mr Coote's Man, and he will give you an Account what Sword his Maſter had, and where he found it.

[He was Sworn, a Sword was ſhewn him.]

Turner. This was my Maſter's Sword, Mr Coote's, and I never ſaw it after he went out in the Morning, till I ſaw it in the Hands of the Conſtable, and afterwards before the Coroner.

Mr Att. Gen. What Time did you hear of your Maſter's Death?

Turner. It was about Nine a Clock next Morning that I heard he was dead.

Mr Att. Gen. Where was your Maſter's Body?

Turner. It was in St. Martin's Lane.

Earl of Tanckerville. I would deſire he might be asked one Queſtion, Whether his Maſter uſed his Left-hand or his Right?

Turner. I do believe he was a right-handed Man. I did never ſee him Fence. It was on the Sunday Morning that I went to the Round-houſe, where I found my Maſter dead.

Earl of Warwick. I deſire he may be asked, Whether he has not obſerved a particular Kindneſs and Friendſhip between his Maſter and me?

Turner. Yes, my Lord: I have ſeveral Times waited upon my Maſter, when my Lord and he was together, and they were always very civil and kind one to another; and I never heard one Word of any Unkindneſs between them.

Earl of Warwick. Whether he knows of any Quarrel that was between us?

Turner. No, I never did.

Earl of Warwick. I deſire he may be asked, Whether he did not uſe to lie at my Lodgings ſometimes?

L. H. St. You hear my Lord's Queſtion; What ſay you, Did your Maſter uſe to lie at my Lord of Warwick's Lodgings at any Time?

Turner. Yes; very often.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray call Pomfret again, and let him ſee the Sword.

[Then he came in, and two Swords were ſhewn him.]

Mr Att. Gen. I deſire he may acquaint your Lordſhips what he knows of thoſe two Swords.

Pomfret. Theſe two Swords were brought in by ſome of the Company that came to my Maſter's Houſe, and when they were ſhewn to Captain French in the Morning, he owned this to be his, and the other to be Mr Coote's; and he deſired that Notice might be taken that his Sword was Dirty, but not Bloody, and there was ſome Blood upon the other.

Mr Att. Gen. Who brought in Mr Coote's Sword?

Pomfret. Indeed I cannot tell.

Mr Att. Gen. Then our laſt Piece of Evidence, my Lord, will be that of Mr White the Coroner.

(Who was Sworn.)

L. H. St. What do you ask him, Mr Attorney?

Mr Att. Gen. From whom had he theſe Swords?

(The Swords were ſhewn him.)

White. May it pleaſe your Grace, theſe Swords were delivered to me by the Conſtable.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, I deſire he may be asked, Whether, upon his View of the Body, he looked upon the Wounds? and, Whether he did apprehend they were given by one and the ſame Sword.

White. May it pleaſe your Grace, when I had ſworn my Inqueſt, I ſent for the Chirurgeon that was here before, and gave him order to probe the Wounds, that the Jury might know the Nature of them, in order to the Drawing up the Inquiſition, and I did expreſsly ask him, Whether he found any ſuch Diſtinction between them, that they were given by one and the ſame Weapon, or different Weapons? He ſaid, as he ſays now, That he could not tell, Whether the Wounds were given by two Swords, or by one; but he did apprehend there was a great Difference between them, and ſo did I; but generally the Orifice of a Wound does cloſe up when the Body is cold: One of the Wounds were nearer the Left-ſide than the Other; to the beſt of my remembrance, it was almoſt behind him.

Mr Att.

Mr Att. Gen. We have done with our Evidence, until we hear what my Lord of Warwick ſays to it.

L. H. St. My Lord Warwick, will you ask this Witneſs any Queſtions?

Earl of Warwick. No, my Lord.

L. H. St. Make Proclamation for Silence.

Cl. of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serj at Arms. O yes, O yes, O yes, His Grace, my Lord High Steward of England, does ſtrictly charge and command all Manner of Perſons here preſent, to keep Silence, upon Pain of Impriſonment.

L. H St My Lord of Warwick, the King's Council have made an End of giving Evidence for the King; now is the proper Time for you to enter upon your Defence.

E. of Warwick. May it pleaſe your Grace, and you my noble Lords, my Peers.

I ſtand here before your Lordſhips accuſed of the Murther of Mr Coote, of which I am ſo innocent, that I came and voluntarily ſurrendred my ſelf ſo ſoon as I heard your Lordſhips might be at leiſure to try me; and had ſooner done it, but that the King was not then here nor your Lordſhips Sitting, and had no mind to undergo a long Confinement; and now I think I might well ſubmit it to your Lordſhips Judgment, even on the Evidence has been offered againſt me, whether there hath been any Thing proved of Malice propenſe, or my being any Actor therein, ſo as to adjudge me guilty. And I think I may with humble Submiſſion to your Lordſhips ſay, that my Innocence appeareth even from ſeveral of the Witneſſes who have been examined againſt me, which I will not trouble your Lordſhips to repeat, but ſubmit to your Memory and Obſervation.

But my Lords, the Safety of my Life does not ſo much concern me in this Caſe, as the Vindication of my Honour and Reputation, from the falſe Reflections to which the Proſecutor has endeavoured to expoſe me, and I ſhall therefore beg your Lordſhips Patience to give a fair and full account of this Matter; In which the Duty I owe to your Lordſhips, and to Juſtice in general, and the right I owe to my own Cauſe in particular, do ſo oblige me, that I will not in the leaſt prevaricate, neither will I conceal or deny any Thing that is true.

My Lords, I muſt confeſs I was there when this unfortunate Accident happened, which muſt be a great Misfortune in any Caſe, but was more ſo to me in this, becauſe Mr Coote was my particular Friend, and I did all I could to hinder it, as your Lordſhips may obſerve by the whole Proceedings.

It was on the Saturday Night when my Lord Mohun and I, and ſeveral other Gentlemen met at Locket's where the ſame Company uſed often to meet, and in ſome time after ſeveral of us had been there, Mr Coote came unexpectedly, and for ſome Time he and we were very friendly, and in good Humour, as we uſed to be with each other: But then there happened ſome reflecting Expreſſions from Mr Coote to Mr French, who thereupon called for the Reckoning; and it being paid, we left the upper Room, and I propoſed to ſend three Bottles of Wine to my own Lodging, and to carry him thither to prevent the Quarrel. But while the Company ſtop'd to call for a Glaſs of Ale at the Bar below, Mr Coote (whoſe unfortunate Humour was ſometime to be quarrelſome) did again provoke Mr French to ſuch degree that they there drew their Swords, but we then prevented them of doing any Miſchief; then Mr Coote ſtill inſiſting to quarrel further with Mr French, my Lord Mohun and I propoſed to ſend for the Guards to prevent them: But they had got Chairs to go towards Leiceſter-fields, and my Lord Mohun and I, as Friends to Mr Coote, and intending to prevent any hurt to him, did follow him in two other Chairs, and as he was going up St Martins lane ſtop'd him, and I extreamly there preſſed him to return and be Friends with Mr French, or at leaſt defer it, for that the Night was very dark and wet; and while we were ſo perſwading of him, Mr French in one Chair, and Mr James and Mr Dockwra in two other Chairs paſt by us, (which we gueſs'd to be them) on which Mr Coote made his Chairmen take him up again, and becauſe the Chairmen would not follow Mr French faſter, threatened to prick him behind, and when we were got to Green ſtreet, and got out of our Chairs, Mr Coote offered half a Guinea to be changed to pay for all our three Chairs, but they not having Change, he deſired Lord Mohun to pay the three Shillings, which he did. And in a few Minutes after, Mr Coote and Mr French engaged in the Fields, whither I went for the Aſſiſtance and in Defence of Mr Coote, and received a very ill Wound in my right Hand; and there this fatal Accident befel Mr Coote from Mr French, whom Mr Coote had dangerouſly wounded, and I muſt account it a great unhappineſs to us all who were there: But ſo far was I from encouraging of it, that I will prove to your Lordſhips that I did my utmoſt endeavours to prevent it; ſo far from any Deſign upon him, that I expoſed my own Life to ſave his; ſo far from propenſe Malice, that I will by many Witneſſes of good Quality and Credit prove to your Lordſhips a conſtant good and uninterrupted Friendſhip, from the firſt of our Acquaintance to the Time of his Death; which will appear by many Inſtances of my frequent Company and Correſpondence with him, often lending him Money, and paying his Reckonings, and about two Months before his Death lent him an hundred Guineas towards buying him an Enſign's Place in the Guards, and often and even two Nights before this, he lodged with me, and that very Night I paid his Reckoning.

And when I have proved theſe Things, and anſwered what has been ſaid about the Sword, and what other Objections they have made, I doubt not but that I ſhall be acquitted to the entire Satisfaction of your Lordſhips, and all the World that hear it.

Before I go upon my Evidence, I will crave leave further to obſerve to your Lordſhips that at the Old Bailey when I was abſent, Mr French, James and Dockwra, have been all tried on the ſame Indictment now before your Lordſhips, and it was then opened and attempted as now it is, to prove it upon me alſo; and by moſt of them the ſame Witneſſes who have now appeared; and they were thereupon Convicted only of Manſlaughter, which could not have been, if I had been guilty of Murther. And on that Trial it plainly appeared that Mr French was the Perſon with whom he quarrelled, and who killed him. And now I will call my Witneſſes.

L. H. St. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to go on to call your Witneſſes, for the Proof of what you have ſaid; that is the Method, and then you are to make ſuch Obſervations as you pleaſe.

E. of

E. of War. My first Witneſs is Captain Edmund Keeting, who was with me at Locket's, but went away before Captain Coote or any of them came, and he will tell you I was with him a while.

Then Captain Keeting ſtood up.

L. H. St. Captain Keeting, you are not upon your Oath becauſe the Law will not allow it. In Caſes of this Nature the Witneſſes for the Priſoner are not to be upon Oath, but you are to conſider that you ſpeak in God's preſence, who does require the Truth ſhould be teſtified in all Cauſes before Courts of Judicature, and their Lordſhips do expect that in what Evidence you give here, you ſhould ſpeak with the ſame regard to Truth as if you were upon Oath; you hear to what it is my Lord Warwick deſires to have you examined, what ſay you to it?

Captain Keeting. My Lord, I will tell your Lordſhip all the Matter I know of it. I met with my Lord of Warwick that Evening at Tom's Coffee-Houſe, and we continued there till about Eight at Night, I went away to ſee for a Gentleman that owed me Money, and afterwards I went to Locket's, and while I was there, the Drawer came up and told me my Lord of Warwick deſired to ſpeak with me, and when he came up into the Room, he ſaid he was to meet with my Lord Mohun there and Captain Coote, and he asked me if I knew where Captain French and Capt. James were; I told him I dined with Capt. Coote at Shuttleworth's; and in a while after Capt. Coote came in, and about an Hour and an half I think, I continued there, and Capt. French came in; Captain Dockwra and we drank together for an Hour and an half, and they admired about 10 a Clock that my Lord Mohun was not come, and I payed my Reckoning not being very well, and away I went home, Mr James came in juſt before I went away, but there was no quarrelling, nor any Thing like before I went away.

E. of Warw. My Lord, I deſire he may be asked, Whether we did not uſually meet there as Friends, eſpecially Capt. Coote and I?

Capt. Keeting. Captain Coote and my Lord of Warwick uſed to be almoſt every Day together at that Place.

E. of Warw. Pray did he ever know or obſerve any Difference or Quarrel between Captain Coote and me?

Capt. Keeting. No, my Lord, I never ſaw any Thing but the greateſt Friendſhip between my Lord of Warwick and Captain Coote that could be, I was with them and ſaw them together almoſt every Day.

L. H. St. Have you any Thing further to examine this Witneſs to?

E. of War. No, my Lord, I have no other Queſtion to ask him.

L. H. St. Who is your next Witneſs, my Lord?

E. of War. My Lord, I ſuppoſe I ſhall not need to trouble you to examine the Chairmen over again; Your Lordſhips have heard what they can ſay, I deſire Colonel Stanhope may be called.

Who it ſeems ſtood by the Chair of State, and it was ſome while before he could get round to come to the Place where the Witneſſes were to ſtand.

L. H. St. While this Witneſs gets round, if your Lordſhip has any other Witneſs ready to ſtand up, pray let him be called.

E. of Warwick. To prove the Kindneſs between Captain Coote and me, I deſire Colonel Bliſſet may be called.

Who ſtood up.

L. H. St. What is it your Lordſhip asks this Witneſs, or calls him to?

E. of Warw. To teſtifie what he knows of any Kindneſs or Unkindneſs between Captain Coote and me; whether he has not been often in our Company?

L. H. St. Have you been often in Company with my Lord Warwick and Captain Coote?

Col. Bliſſet. Yes, my Lord, I was very well acquainted with both of them for a twelve Month paſt before this Accident, and I have often been in their Company, and I always obſerved that there was a great deal of Friendſhip and Kindneſs between them.

E. of Warwick. My Lord, I deſire he may tell any particular Inſtance that he knows or can remember.

Coll. Bliſſet. I remember when Captain Coote had his Commiſſion in the Regiment of Guards, he was complaining of the Streightneſs of his Circumſtances; he was to pay for his Commiſſion 400 Guineas, and ſaid he had but 300 for to pay for it, and my Lord of Warwick did then ſay to him, do not trouble your ſelf about that; or let not that diſturb you, for I'll take care you ſhall have 100 Guineas, and he ſaid he would give Order to his Steward to pay him ſo much, and I was told afterwards that he did ſo.

E. of War. I deſire he may tell if he knows of any other particular Inſtances of my Friendſhip to Mr Coote.

Coll. Bliſſet. Once when he was arreſted by his Taylor for 13 l. my Lord lent him five Guineas, and uſed very frequently to pay his Reckoning for him.

E. of Warw. I deſire he may tell if he knows any Thing elſe; and whether he has not lain at my Lodgings, and particularly but ſome ſmall time before this Accident happened.

Coll. Bliſſet. About ten Days before this unhappy Accident happened, I was at my Lord of Warwick's Lodgings, and when I came there I found Captain Coote there a dreſſing himſelf; and I asked him how that came to paſs, and he told me they had been up late together, and that he had ſent home for his Men to dreſs himſelf there; upon which I did obſerve that they had been a rambling together over Night, and there was a very great familiarity between them.

E. of Warw. Did you obſerve any Quarrel between us?

Coll. Bliſſet. No; None at all; I never knew of any Quarrel between my Lord of Warwick and Captain Coote, but I obſerved there was a particular Kindneſs between them, and a great deal of Friendſhip I know my Lord of Warwick ſhewed to him, in paying of Reckonings for him, and lending him Money when he wanted.

E. of War. My Lord, I deſire he may be asked, whether he does not know that Captain Coote was ſtraitned for Money.

Col. Bliſſet. I did hear Captain Coote ſay, That he had not received any Thing from his Father for for thirteen Months, and his Father was angry with him, and would not ſend him any Supply, becauſe he would not conſent to cut off the Entail, and ſettle two or three hundred Pounds upon a Whore he had.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, will you conſider with your ſelf, and though you are not upon your Oath, anſwer the Queſtions truly, for you are obliged to ſpeak the Truth, though you are not Sworn, whenever you come to give your Teſtimony in a Court of Judicature: Pray acquaint my noble Lords here, Whether you did never hear my Lord Warwick complain of Capt. Coote?

Col. Bliſſet. No, I never did hear him complain of him.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you never hear the leaſt Word of any Quarrel between them?

Col. Bliſſet. No, indeed, I did never hear of any Quarrel between them.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you never hear of any Unkindneſs at all?

Col. Bliſſet. No, indeed, my Lord, not I: I never ſo much as heard of the leaſt Unkindeſs whatſoever.

L. H. St. Well then, my Lord, who do you call next?

Earl of Warwick. Now Colonel Stanhope is here, I deſire he may be asked the ſame Queſtion, Whether he does not know the particular Friendſhip that was between Captain Coote and me, and what Inſtances he can give of it?

L. H. St. You are to conſider, Sir, though you are not upon your Oath, you are in a great Court, and under no leſs ſtrict Obligation to teſtify the Truth and nothing but the Truth: You hear what my noble Lord asks you?

Col. Stanhope. My Lord, I have known my Lord Warwick and Captain Coote for about a Twelvemonth, and I did perceive that they did always profeſs a great Kindneſs for one another.

Earl of Warwick. I deſire to know of him, Whether he obſerved any particular Friendſhip between Capt. Coote and me, much about the Time of this Buſineſs.

Col. Stanhope. About eight or ten Days before this unhappy Accident, I went to wait upon my Lord of Warwick twice at his Lodgings: Once I found Captain Coote there, one of them was in Bed, and the other was dreſſing of himſelf; I thought they were very good Friends that were ſo familiar, and I had good Reaſon to think ſo, becauſe of that Familiarity: Both the Times that I was there, when I found them together, was within eight Days before the Accident happened.

Earl of Warwick. The next Witneſs I ſhall call will be Mr Diſney.

Mr Att. Gen. But before Colonel Stanhope goes, I deſire to ask him this Queſtion, Whether he did never hear or know of any Unkindneſs between my Lord of Warwick and Capt. Coote?

Col. Stanhope. No, indeed I did not, I always thought them to be very good Friends.

L. H. St. Will your Lordſhip go on to your next Witneſs?

Earl of Warwick. Yes, my Lord, there he is, Mr Diſney; I deſire he may be asked what he knows of any Expreſſions of Kindneſs and Friendſhip between me and Capt. Coote.

Mr Diſney. About the Time that Captain Coote was to have his Commiſſion in the Guards, my Lord of Warwick received a Letter from him, wherein he deſired him to lend him the 100 Guineas, according to his Offer, for he had but 300 by him, and he ſaid his Father was unkind to him, and he could have no Money from him, and he would be honeſt to him and pay it again as ſoon as he could; my Lord ſent for his Steward, and ordered him to provide 100 Guineas for Captain Coote while I was there; and all the Times that ever I ſaw them together, which was very frequently, there was the greateſt Kindneſs between them that could be; and ſeveral Times I have ſeen my Lord of Warwick pay Capt. Coote's Reckoning for him, and lent him Money when he wanted Money.

Mr Att. Gen. I deſire to ask you, Sir, this Queſtion, though you are not upon Oath, yet you are obliged to ſpeak the Truth in a Court of Juſtice as much as if you were upon Oath: Did you not know or hear any Thing of a Miſunderſtanding or Quarrel about the Time that this Buſineſs happened?

Mr Diſney. No, indeed: I was with them together but the Day before, and frequently, and I heard nothing of any Unkindneſs between them in my Life, nor never knew of any Quarrel between them, or any Reaſon for it.

L. H. St. My Lord, Who is it you call next?

Earl of Warwick. Colonel Whiteman. (Who ſtood up.)

L. H. St. What do you call this Gentleman for?

Earl of Warwick. It is to the ſame Effect, to acquaint your Lordſhips with what he knows of the Converſation between Captain Coote and me.

Col. Whiteman. My Lord, I know my Lord of Warwick and Captain Coote were conſtant Companions together; they dined together almoſt every Day for half a Year's Time almoſt; and as to this Time, when this Buſineſs had happened, I went to my Lord of Warwick, being ſent for by him, and found him at a private Lodging, where he expreſſed a great deal of Concern for the Death of his dear Friend Mr Coote, and he ſhewed me the Wound he had received in his Hand, and he deſired he might be private, and he told me he believed People would make worſe of it than it was, becauſe he did not appear; but he did but intend to keep himſelf out of the Way till he could be Tryed, and I took what Care I could to get him a Convenience to go to France.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, What Reaſon did he give for his going away?

Col. Whiteman. The King being at that Time out of England, and ſo the Parliament not Sitting, he ſaid he did not love Confinement, and had rather be in France till the Parliament ſhould meet and he might have a fair Tryal, which he thought he ſhould beſt have in this Houſe.

Mr Att. Gen. But pray, Sir, conſider, You are bound to tell Truth, and the whole Truth, in ſuch a Caſe as this: Are you ſure there was no Unkindneſs or Quarrel, between my Lord Warwick and Captain Coote about this Time?

Col. Whiteman. No, I never knew of any Quarrel or Unkindneſs between them in all my Life.

L. H. St. My Lord, Have you any more Witneſſes?

Earl of Warwick. I have a great many Witneſſes more to the ſame Purpoſe, but I think I need not trouble your Lordſhip with them; only I would call a Perſon that has been mentioned, that is my Steward.

L. H. St. What is his Name?

Earl of Warwick. Edmund Raymund. (Who ſtood up.)

L. H. St. What Queſtions do you ask him?

Earl of Warwick. I desire he may tell what he knows of any Friendship between Captain Coote and me, and what particular Instances he can give of it

Raymond. My Lord, I know that my Lord sent for me, and said Captain Coote had occasion for 100 Guineas to pay for a Commission in the Guards, which he had not Money to make up, and I know that they were constant Companions every Day, did eat together, and often did lie together, and I did provide the 100 Guineas for him; and I always did observe that there was a very great Friendship between them.

Earl of Warwick. My Lord, the next Witness I shall call will be Mr French, who, I hope, having been Tried and had his Clergy allowed him, will be a good Witness; I should be sorry to interpose any Thing that would be a Hindrance to your Lordships giving Judgment in this Cause presently; he is able to give your Lordships an Account of the whole Matter; and though, I hope, I have no need of calling him as a Witness, yet I humbly offer it to your Lordships.

L. H. St. What say the Council on the other Side?

Earl of Warwick. My Lord, I do not insist upon it; I think I have no need of it?

L. H. St. Your Lordship must judge for your self how far it is for your Advantage, to desire that this Matter should be debated.

E. of Warwick. I do not desire to take up your Lordship's Time, though I am very well advised, that he is a good Witness in Law.

E. of Roch. I apprehended it the Duty of the King's Council to make Objection against any Witness that should be produced by the Prisoner; I am loth to give your Lordships any unnecessary Trouble, yet I own, that I am not satisfied that a Witness should be offered and rejected, though the Objection be not made and argued, by my Lord, the Prisoner at the Bar: If a Witness be offered, and they think they have an Objection against him, if they do insist upon it, it will occasion a Debate, and then we must adjourn into the House of Lords.

L. H. St. It is not insisted upon by my Lord, as I apprehend. My Lord of Warwick, Have you any other Witness you would have called?

E. of Warw. I desire to ask Mrs. Amy a Question or two.

Then she stood up.

L. H. St. What does your Lordship ask her?

E. of Warw. What she remembers passed at her House about my Sword, or any Thing.

Mrs Amy. My Lord, when I came into the Room where my Lord of Warwick and Captain French were, in our House, I stood by Capt. French while his Wounds was dressing, and I saw my Lord of Warwick's Sword, and looked upon it, and the Hilt and all the Shell was full of Blood, and it ran down to the Bottom of the Sword Blade.

E. of Warw. I desire she may be asked, how soon that was after my coming in?

Mrs. Amy. It was a quarter of an Hour after my Lord came in.

E. of Warw. I desire she may speak what sort of Sword it was at the Hilt, whether it were open or close?

Mrs Amy. Indeed, I cannot say; but the Hilt was full of Blood, the Shell of it, and it ran down to the Bottom of the Blade.

L. H. St. Has your Lordship done?

E. of Warw. My Lord, I would only take notice that the three Gentlemen that were on the other Side, were tried at the Old-Bailey, and found guilty only of Man-slaughter; but now I being on his Side, and not having any Malice to him, but always a great deal of Friendship, I submit it to your Lordships, whether I can be thought any ways guilty of his Death; and I humbly hope your Lordships will hear my Council, if you make any doubt of that.

L. H. St. What is it your Lordship would have Council heard to?

E. of War. To this Case, my Lord, Whether there being Six Persons, Three of a Side, one is killed, and I being engaged on the Side of him that was killed, the Three of the other Side have been Tryed for the Death of that Man; whether I, who was of his Side be equally guilty with them, who were on the other Side, especially, I engaging particularly with another of the Three, that were of the other Side: That Question I desire my Council may argue, whether I be equally guilty with them that were on the other Side, and who, notwithstanding Death happened in the Case, yet were found guilty only of Man-slaughter.

L. Godolphin. My Lords, it has been moved by my noble Lord at the Bar, that his Council should be heard about Mr French's being Witness, whether he should be a Witness or no; I think it would be much for the clearing of the Fact one Way or other, if the Evidence of that Witness could be heard; but whether he can be heard, or not, according to Law, is a Question that must be debated amongst your Lordships, after your Lordships have heard the Council on both Sides, and perhaps, the Opinion of the Judges upon their Arguments; and therefore I think we must adjourn, to consider whether this Matter shall be argued or no?

L. H. St. What say you to this Matter, Mr Attorney?

Mr Att. Gen. My Lords, I should agree with the Motion that is made, if there were any Thing insisted upon by the Prisoner at the Bar, that would bear a Question or Argument; but my Lord of Warwick himself has waved the Objection, and so I think there is no need for any Argument on our Side.

L. Godol. I would agree with the Motion that was made for adjourning, in order to debate, but I desire to be thus understood, if he thinks it for his Advantage, that this Witness should be heard for him, which he knows best, whether it be or be not; then I do suppose your Lordships will adjourn, to consider of it in your own House amongst your selves; it will not be proper to enter into the Debate here, nor there neither, till you know what Objection the Council for the King make against this Man's being an Evidence, and therefore we would know, it is fit to be known, whether my Lord's waving, or not insisting upon this Man's Testimony, be free and voluntary, and absolute, or whether it be only in respect to the trouble it may put the House to for the Debate.

L. H. St. My Lord Warwick, some of my noble Lords observe you have desired Mr French should be examined, and that your Council may be heard to that point, whether he be by Law a Witness, or not; several of my Lords think it reasonable, Council should be heard, Whether he be a Witness or not; or at least, that that Question should be be conſidered amongſt themſelves, if inſiſted upon; therefore your Lordſhip is to declare, whether you do inſiſt upon it, or deſire to wave it.

E. of War. I wholly ſubmit my ſelf to your Lordſhips, but as I am adviſed by my Council, I hope he is a good Witneſs, and I deſire my Council may be heard to that Point.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lords, in truth I acknowledge, according to the Method of Law, the Objection ought to come of our Side, for I think we have very good reaſon to oppoſe that Gentleman's being a Witneſs in this Caſe, even upon that Objection which my Lord has made himſelf upon the Conſideration, that he has been found guilty of Man-ſlaughter, for the Death of this very Perſon. It is true, upon his Prayer, Clergy was allowed him, but the Burning of the Hand was reſpited, and he was not burnt in the Hand, and he is not pardoned; and how far he can be a Witneſs in this Caſe, is the Objection; If a Man Convicted of Felony, that is within Clergy, Prays his Clergy, and it is allowed him, but he is not burnt in the Hand, nor Pardoned, we apprehend he is no Witneſs; and that is the Objection we make againſt his Teſtimony to your Lordſhips.

L. H. St. My Lord Warwick, you hear what is ſaid by way of Objection againſt this Man's being a Witneſs. What ſay you to it?

E. of Warw. For Matter of Law, my Lords, I am not capable of ſpeaking to it, but I deſire my Council may.

L. H. St. That which Mr Attorney propoſes by way of Objection is Matter of Fact, and the Matter of Law does not ariſe till the Fact be ſetled, which muſt fall within your Lordſhip's own Knowledge, who produce him as a Witneſs, and therefore you muſt Anſwer to that Fact your ſelf.

E. of Warw. I deſire to know of your Lordſhips if a Man be convicted of Felony, that is within Clergy, and prays his Clergy, and it is allowed him, but the Burning of the Hand is reſpited, and there is a Warrant for his Pardon; whether he cannot be a good Witneſs: That his Clergy was allowed, and the burning of the Hand reſpited; I have the Record here to ſhew.

L. H. St. My Lords, my noble Lord at the Bar, inſiſting upon a Warrant for a Pardon, I muſt acquaint you with ſomething that has happened during your Lordſhips ſitting here this Day; ſince I came hither a Privy Seal was delivered to me, in order to paſs a Pardon for the Burning in the Hand of Mr French for the Man-ſlaughter, for which he was convicted at the Old Baily; ſo far I can acquaint your Lordſhips as to Matter of Fact.

Earl of Warwick. My Lord, I am adviſed by my Council, that he is a good Witneſs without a Pardon, or without burning in the Hand.

L. H. St. What ſay you, Mr Attorney, to the Law? Now you underſtand what the Fact truly is.

Mr Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord; and I do apprehend, with Submiſſion to your Lordſhips Judgment, That a Man convicted of Felony, tho' he prays his Clergy, and has it allow'd him, but is not burnt in the Hand, nor has any Pardon, can be no Witneſs.

L. H. St. That is the Caſe upon which you are to form your Objections: Here is a Man produced as a Witneſs, who has been convicted of Felony, within the Benefit of Clergy, has craved his Clergy, has had it allowed, but has not been burnt in the Hand, nor pardoned.

Mr Att. Gen. Then my Lords, with humble Submiſſion, upon the Matter of Fact ſo ſtated, I make this Objection, That he is no Witneſs in Point of Law: He has been Convicted, in one reſpect, for the very Offence for which the noble Lord, the Priſoner at the Bar, ſtands Indicted: Tho' not in the ſame Degree as the Indictment ſets it forth, yet it is for the ſame Fact. Upon this Indictment Mr French was indicted at the Seſſions at the Old Baily, and there he was found guilty of Man-ſlaughter, upon which, he pray'd the Benefit of his Clergy, which was allow'd him, but he was not burnt in the Hand: Thus ſtands the Caſe in Fact. Now, my Lords, the Allowance of Clergy of it ſelf, does not diſcharge the Party from the Offence, ſo far as to ſet him Rectus in Curia, and make him in all reſpects a Perſon fit to have the Benefit and Priviledges of a Probus & Legalis Homo, till he has paſs'd through thoſe Methods of ſetting himſelf right in the Eye of the Law, that the Law hath preſcribed; and in order to ſet this Matter in its true Light before your Lordſhips, it will be neceſſary for me to open to your Lordſhips, as far as I can, the Nature of this Benefit of Clergy, and what Advantage did accrue to the Party, by having that Benefit allow'd him, and likewiſe what Benefit he had by the Act that Enacted the Burning in the Hand, which was the Statute of the 4th of Hen. 7. And by that Act the Burning in the Hand was to be of no more Effect, but only to ſhew that he had had his Clergy allowed him; that unleſs he were within Orders, he ſhould have it no more than once. Before that Act of Parliament, a Perſon might have had the Benefit of Clergy ſeveral Times, but that Act limits it as to Time, that it ſhall be but once: And therefore, in order to the having of it known, whether a Man once had his Clergy allowed him, that did not produce his Orders, that Act provides there ſhall be a Mark ſet upon him at the Time of the Allowance of this Clergy, as a Token that it was allowed him, and he was never to have it allowed afterwards, but even at that Time he was to be delivered over to the Ordinary to make his Purgation; but ſince that Act, ſeveral Statutes have been made about this Matter. I ſhall mention one that relates to your Lordſhips, and that is the Statute of Edward the 6th, which indeed does Enact, That in Caſe where a Peer is convicted of Felony within the Benefit of Clergy, he ſhall be diſcharged without being burnt in the Hand, but then, and thus the Law ſtood till the Statute of 18 Eliz. cap. 7. by which 'tis Enacted, That after the Burning in the Hand the Priſoner ſhall not be delivered to the Ordinary, but he ſhall be diſcharged; by virtue of which Act, after burning in the Hand, the Priſoner hath made full Satisfaction to the Law, without that Sort of Purgation which was before requiſite to be made, but till he be burnt in the Hand, or has his Pardon, he is not to be diſcharged; it may be he may be Bailed out by the Judge, in order to get a Pardon, but ſtill he remains in ſtatu quo, as to his being a Witneſs, or any Thing of that Nature; his Credit is gone till it be reſtored by the King's Pardon, or his undergoing the Puniſhment that the Law requires; and no Man would ſay, that where one lies under a Conviction of Felony undiſcharged by burning in the Hand, or Pardon, that he can be a Witneſs; he remains juſt as he was before, the Conviction remains upon him, which diſabled him to be a Witneſs; and that we ſubmit to your Lordſhips as the Caſe of this Perſon, Captain French.

Mr Sol. Gen. My Lords, if your Lordſhips pleaſe to ſpare me one Word of the ſame Side: Sure at common Law there would be no Difficulty at all, that a Perſon convicted of Felony within the Benefit of Clergy, unpardoned, and undiſcharged, could be no Witneſs; and ſince thoſe ſeveral Statutes that have been mentioned by Mr. Attorney, unleſs there be an actual burning in the Hand, or a Pardon for that burning in the Hand; ſure it cannot be pretended, that one convicted of Felony can be admitted as a Witneſs. If my Lord of Warwick does inſiſt upon his Evidence as Matter of Right, we for the King do inſiſt upon it, that there is no Right at all in the Caſe; for French muſt be taken to be one convicted of Felony, and not diſcharged without either burning in the Hand, or Pardon, and then we are ſure it cannot be pretended in Law that he can be a Witneſs.

L. H. St. My Lords, the King's Council have ſtated their Objection, what is your Pleaſure to have done in it?

Earl of Rivers. I ſuppoſe, my Lords, that it will be neceſſary to hear what Anſwer my Lord of Warwick gives to this Objection.

L. H. St. Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure then, that the Council aſſigned for my Lord Warwick be heard what they have to ſay to this Matter?

Lords. Ay, ay, ay.

[Then Sir Thomas Powys came to the Bar, and ſtood by the Earl of Warwick, and ſpoke thus.]

Sir T. Powis. May it pleaſe your Lodſhips, I am by the Order of this Honourable Houſe, aſſigned of Council for this noble Lord at the Bar, in Point of Law; and, my Lords, as to the preſent Queſtion that has been ſpoken to by the King's Council, I am a little ſurprized to hear it ſhould be wondered at, that my Lord of Warwick ſhould inſiſt upon it, that this Gentleman ſhould be examined for him as a Witneſs, becauſe, with humble Submiſſion to your Lordſhips, I think the Authorities of Law will make for the Opinion on the other Side. Mr Attorney General ſays true, the firſt Statute that was made for Burning in the Hand, was that in 4 Hen. 7. before that Time the Benefit of Clergy, even for Murther, was uſed to be allowed upon the Prayer of the Party, and he was thereupon delivered over to the Ordinary to make his Purgation, and that not only once, but toties quoties, let him demand it as often as he would, and as often as he offended it was allowed: This was thought ſuch a Priviledge as ought to be reſtrained; that Statute of the 4th of Hen. 7. takes notice that an ill Uſe was made of it, and therefore does Ordain, That it ſhould be allow'd no more than once, unleſs to Perſons within Orders: And as a Means to know, Whether it had been before allowed, or not, the Act does direct, That the Party convicted ſhall be Burnt in the Hand, that is all the Act does appoint, it does no otherwiſe alter the Caſe; it does not impoſe it upon the Party as a Puniſhment for the Offence, but only as a Mark of Diſtinction, that if ever he came again before the Court, and being Convicted of the like Offence, ſhould Pray the Benefit of Clergy, then upon Inſpection it might be known whether before he had been allowed his Clergy or not; and ſo ſtood the Law without Alteration as to the Manner of Delivery of the Criminal over to the Ordinary to make his Purgation, with which the Temporal-Law, in the Manner of Doing thereof, did not intermeddle; and therein conſiſted, with reſpect to this Matter, the Benefit of Clergy. Afterwards, by the Statute of Edward the 6th, the Peers were exempted from the Burning in the Hand; and then comes the Act that we rely upon, which is, that of the 18th of Eliz. that takes notice of the former Act of the 4th of Hen. 7. which only ordered the Burning of the Hand for the Purpoſes aforeſaid, but left the Party to be delivered over to the Ordinary to make his Purgation; which was found to be a Matter attended with many Abuſes, and upon the Reformation thought fit to be aboliſhed, and taken away, becauſe it was only an outward Appearance and Shew of Purgation, and was often the Occaſion of very great Perjuries, therefore it is taken totally away, and by this Act the Party ſhall have the Benefit of Clergy without making Purgation, as fully as if he had actually made it. But, ſay they, There is ſtill left ſomething that the Law requires, which is, That he ſhould be firſt Burnt in the Hand, and if he be not Burnt in the Hand, or at leaſt Pardoned, he is not in that Condition that the Law calls for in ſuch a Caſe, to ſet him Rectus in Curia: If he be Burnt in the Hand, or Pardoned by the King, they agree on the other Side, that he may be a very good Witneſs. My Lords, that Act of Parliament of Queen Eliz. does impower the Court that Tries the Criminal, and before whom he is Convicted, not only to burn him in the Hand, purſuant to the Act of Henry 7. but alſo to detain him in Priſon for a Year after; but yet I think that doth not ſignify any Thing one Way or other, to reſtore him, or not reſtore him to his Credit; for I think the Burning in the Hand, which is a Mark of Infamy, was never intended as a Means, any more than Impriſonment for a Year of reſtoring a Man to his Credit; it was only to ſhew he had his Clergy once, and ſhould have it no more: The Allowance of Clergy by the Statute of Eliz. operates as a Pardon; only, ſaith the Statute, he ſhall not be delivered out of Priſon before he is burnt in the Hand, according to the Statute of Hen. 7. No Body can ſay, that the Continuing in Priſon for a Year, which the Court may order, though burnt in the Hand, would, as to reſtoring of Credit, have operated one Way or other: But that we inſiſt upon is, That the Allowance of Clergy ſets him right in Court, ſince Purgation is aboliſhed, and is the ſame Thing as if he had undergone the ceremonial Parts of a formal Purgation. It is the Allowance of Clergy that makes the Alteration or Operation in this Caſe, by virtue of this laſt Act of the 18th of Eliz. for we take it, that he is to have the ſame Benefit of his Clergy as if he had been delivered to the Ordinary, and Purgation had been made; and now the Allowance of Clergy by this Act, gives the ſame Benefit to the Party, as Purgation would have done before the Act, and he is in the ſame State and Condition as he would have been in Caſe of a Purgation, or of a Pardon by the King. The Authorities are all with us. There is a Caſe that is very well known among the Men of the Law in the fourth Report of my Lord Coke, Holcroft's Caſe, who was Indicted and Convicted of Manſlaughter, and he prayed the Benefit of his Clergy; the Judges thought fit to reſpite their Judgment therein, but his his Prayer was enter'd upon Record; and then an Appeal being brought againſt him, it came to be a Queſtion, How far he had had his Clergy? for by the Statute of the Third of Hen. 7. an Appeal will lie notwithſtanding a Conviction, if the Party have not had his Clergy; and in this Caſe it was adjudged, That the Party having prayed his Clergy, he ſhould have the ſame Benefit as if the Court had ordered every Thing to be actually executed, which ought thereupon to be done: And ſurely then it can be no Queſtion, Whether a Man ſhall be a Witneſs or no, who has had his Clergy allowed. It is ſo entred upon Record, That the Book was adminiſtred to him, and that he read as a Clerk, for the Party has done as much as he can; prayed the Benefit of his Clergy, and had it allowed, and ſo it is entred upon Record. The Reſpiting of the Burning of the Hand till the King's Pardon be obtained, ſhall not ſure put him in a worſe Condition than he would have been, if he had actually been burnt in the Hand. My Lords, I have in my Hand a Book which is of very great Eſteem, and that is, The Reports of my Lord Chief Juſtice Hobbart, wherein he declares his Opinion in this Point, and for whoſe Opinion every one of our Gown ever hath teſtified a very great Veneration and Reſpect; The Caſe is that of Searle and Williams, wherein my Lord Hobbart has ſpoken ſo fully to this Matter, that I think it ought to put an End to the Queſtion: He ſays, the Statute of Eliz. appointing the Burning in the Hand without Purgation, does operate as a Statute-Pardon to all Intents and Purpoſes, and the Party having now the Benefit of his Clergy allowed, is in all Reſpects in the ſame Condition as if he had been acquitted: That is the Opinion that he holds throughout that Caſe: I need not trouble your Lordſhips with reading all the particular Words that he uſes, but only thoſe which relate to the Thing now in Queſtion. Immediately before your Lordſhips he delivers his Opinion, That whoſoever ſpeaks Words of Accuſation, reflecting upon a Man for any Offence for which he was Indicted and Convicted, and had had his Clergy allowed, an Action lies as if he had been totally acquitted from it; 'tis not the Burning in the Hand, but the Allowance of Clergy, that ſets him right in his Credit in the Eye of the Law, and he is thereby in the ſame Condition, in that Reſpect, that he would have been, if he never had had any Conviction upon him. Towards the End of the Caſe, his very Words are theſe, Though the Statute ſaith, after burning in the Hand, according to the Statute in that behalf made, he ſhall be diſcharged, and there is no burning in the Hand, that makes nothing; for though it be a Caſe where the Hand ought to be burnt, yet it is not ſo eſſential but a Man may have the Benefit of the Statute, though he be not burnt; the King may pardon the Burning, for the Burning, even in an Appeal, is no part of the Judgment, nor ſo much as in the Nature of Puniſhment, but rather a Mark to notify that he may have his Clergy but once; Theſe are his very Words in this Caſe; ſo that the Statute of Queen Elizabeth doth aboliſh Purgation, but gives the Party all the Benefit thereof, as if he had gone through it, and inſtead of delivering the Party to the Ordinary to make his Purgation, it ſays, he ſhall be delivered out of Priſon; but leſt it might ſeem to repeal the Statute of Hen. 7. as to burning in the Hand, it adds, being burnt in the Hand, according to the Statute in that behalf provided: By the Statute of Hen. 7. he was firſt to be burnt in the Hand, and then delivered to the Ordinary to make his Purgation; but by the Statute of Eliz. he is firſt Pardoned his Crime by being allowed the Benefit of his Clergy, without making his Purgation, and afterwards to be burnt in the Hand before he be delivered out of Priſon; ſo that the Burning in the Hand is only a Condition precedent to his getting out of Priſon, not to his being reſtored to his Credit: The King may pardon the Burning in the Hand undoubtedly, and he has gone a great Way in this Caſe, for he hath given a Pardon as far as the Privy Seal, and that is ſufficient to ſhew his gracious Intention of Pardoning it throughout; and if there be need, we hope it may paſs yet forward. What we inſiſt on, is not only the Opinion of my Lord Chief Juſtice Hobbart, but he is followed therein by the Opinion of a Man of very great Authority, one no leſs eminent than he in his Profeſſion, and that is my Lord Chief Juſtice Hale, in a Book of his that is intituled, His Pleas of the Crown, which is but an Abridgement of what he intended upon that Subject under the Title of Clergy; when he comes to treat of the Conſequences of the Allowance of Clergy, and what the ſeveral Effects of Clergy allow'd, ſhall be, he ſays it gives him a Capacity to purchaſe Goods, and retain the Profits of his Lands, and reſtores him to his Credit, according to the Caſe I have mentioned before in Hobbart, of Searle and Williams; for that Caſe is particularly in that Book mentioned and referred to: Therefore I hope your Lordſhips will make no difficulty of hearing this Witneſs; for we think the Having his Clergy allow'd him, is that which reſtores him to his Credit. If they have any other Objections againſt him, I hope we ſhall hear it from the King's Council: But if this be ſtood upon in Point of Law as an Objection, That though Clergy was allowed, he was not burnt in the Hand, nor pardoned; I would have obſerved to your Lordſhips, That my Lord High Steward has told you it is ſo far gone towards the Pardon, that the King has ſhewn his Intention to pardon by the Privy-Seal; and we hope your Lordſhips will not let this noble Lord at the Bar ſuffer any Prejudice, by the not Perfecting of the Pardon by actual Paſſing of the Great Seal.

L. H. St. Mr Attorney General, what ſay you to the Matters which have been urged?

Mr Att. Gen. My Lord, we have ſtated our Objection; we think there is nothing given as an Anſwer to it, and we ſubmit it to your Lordſhip's Judgment.

Marq. of Hallifax. My Lords, I deſire that the Queſtion that is to be decided before your Lordſhips, may be ſettled truly what it is.

L. H. St. If there be ſix in Company, and one of them is killed, the other five are afterwards indicted, and three are tried, and found guilty of Manſlaughter, and upon their Prayers have their Clergy allowed, and the Burning in the Hand is reſpited, but not pardoned; Whether any of the three can be a Witneſs upon the Tryal of either the other Two.

Sir T. Powis. My Lords, with ſubmiſſion, though he were convicted of the Felony, yet upon Prayer of his Clergy, that being allowed him, That reſtores him to all the Capacities, we ſay, that he had before the Conviction, and particularly to his Credit; and for that we ſubmit our ſelves to your Lordſhips Judgment.

Marq. of Hallifax. I ſuppoſe your Lordſhips will have the Opinion of the Judges upon this Point, and and that muſt be in the preſence of the Priſoner.

L. H. St. It muſt certainly be in the preſence of the Priſoner, if you ask the Judges Opinions.

Marq. of Hallifax. But in theſe Caſes, my Lords, it is uſual to hear the King's Council to make a Reply: I deſire to hear what they would ſay to what has been offered by the Council for the noble Lord the Priſoner at the Bar.

Mr Serj. Wright. My Lords, I did apprehend that the very ſtating of the Objection would have ſet this Matter in its true Light: For the firſt Place, it is agreed on all Hands, That this Mr French, that is deſired to be a Witneſs, does ſtand convicted of Felony, and by the Law of England, while that Conviction remains upon him, till he be either purged or pardoned, he cannot be a Witneſs: By the Conviction his Credit is loſt; and till he be reſtored to his firſt Condition, he ſtands not ſo clear in the Eye of the Law that he can be an Evidence. The Council for the Priſoner have objected, That if he either be pardoned, or Clergy allowed, he is put in the ſame Condition as if he had been acquitted.

My Lords, I muſt admit a Pardon reſtores to Credit; and I muſt likewiſe admit, That allowance of the Benefit of Clergy, and Burning in the Hand upon it, amounts in Law to a Pardon, or is equivalent to a Pardon in this Matter: But the Fact here is not ſo; for here is neither actual Pardon, nor any burning in the Hand: The Benefit of Clergy was prayed, and allowed; but that alone is not ſufficient; there muſt be an actual burning in the Hand, or a Pardon of that burning in the Hand, otherwiſe it cannot be a Satisfaction in Law, ſuch as ſhould put him in the ſame Condition as if he were acquitted. Your Lordſhips have heard what was ſaid by his Grace my Lord High Steward, That as to the burning in the Hand, The King has been pleaſed to proceed ſo far as to grant a privy Seal for the Pardon of the burning of the Hand: But your Lordſhips very well know, and it cannot be inſiſted on to the contrary, by the Council on the other Side, That it is no Pardon until it be paſt under the great Seal of England: So that here is no actual Pardon; nor is the bare Allowance of Clergy, without burning in the Hand, equivalent to a Pardon. My Lords, it muſt be agreed, That at the common Law, Perſons that were convicted of Felony, were not reſtored to their Credit meerly by allowing the Benefit of Clergy to them; there was ſomething further to be done to regain Credit; the Party convicted muſt undergo another Trial before the Ordinary, which was commonly called Purgation; when any Man was convicted of Felony, he was upon his Prayer of the Benefit of Clergy to have it allowed to him, and if he could read as a Clerk, his Life was ſaved. He was not diſcharged of the Felony, and therefore was delivered over to the Ordinary to be kept in Priſon until he had, by a ſort of Trial before the Ordinary, made his Innocence appear, and purged himſelf of the Fact charged upon him; and if he could not make his Purgation, he was to lie perpetually in Priſon; and notwithſtanding the Allowance of Clergy, and delivery over to the Ordinary, yet was not the Credit reſtored, nor his former Capacities; he was not a legal Witneſs until he had purged himſelf of the Crime: It was the clearing themſelves of the Guilt, that reſtored ſuch Perſons to their Reputation and Credit, not the bare Allowance of Clergy: Some Criminals were delivered ro the Ordinary generally, thoſe might make their Purgation; others were ſpecially delivered, or delivered with a ſpecial Charge to the Ordinary, not to admit them to Purgation, Abſque purgatione facienda: Theſe latter could never be reſtored to Credit, except by the King's Pardon; for the Liberty of Purgation, which was the Means of regaining their Credit was taken from them; their Guilt occaſioned their loſs of Credit; taking away that Guilt doth conſequentially reſtore Credit again; and this Benefit of Clergy was to be allowed as often as any Man had occaſion for it.

Thus the Matter of Benefit of Clergy ſtood in common Law, in reſpect of Purgation and reſtoring of Credit, Till the Statute of 18 Eliz. c. 7. which was cited on the other Side by Sir Thomas Powis; by which Statute Purgation is abſolutely taken away, and ſet aſide: And the Party being burnt in the Hand, according to the Statute of 4. H. 7. is appointed by this Statute, 18 Eliz. to be diſcharged, and not to be delivered over to the Ordinary, as was before that Time uſed. The delivering over to the Ordinary was in order to Purgation, and that by the laſt Statute is quite taken away, and the Party is to have the ſame Benefit by the having the Benefit of his Clergy and burning in the Hand, as if he had made his Purgation; he ſhall be diſcharged: It is not his reading as a Clerk, and that pronounced by the Ordinary, that gives him the Benefit of a diſcharge, as if he had been purged of the Crime; but there muſt be the burning in the Hand, that is the very Terms of the Statute upon which he is to be diſcharged; that muſt actually be done before he can be put into the ſame Condition that he was in before the Conviction, and conſequently make him capable of being a Witneſs. As for the Caſe of Searle and Williams that was cited by Sir Thomas Powis, that Caſe doth not oppoſe in this Matter; there it was not needful to burn the Perſon convicted; he was a Clerk in holy Orders, and by Law exempt from burning in the Hand: ſo it was not neeedful to burn him, the Statute of 18 Eliz. not requiring any Perſon to be burned in the Hand that were not ſo liable before then. The moſt that is ſaid in that Caſe by the Chief Juſtice Hobbart is, That in Caſe where the Hand ought to be burnt, it is not eſſential; but the Party may have the Benefit of the Statute, i. e. be diſcharged without burning, and the King may pardon the burning; and no doubt if the King pardons the burning, it is as good and effectual as if the Hand had been actually burnt. The King might pardon the whole, and conſequently any Part; the Pardon of the Puniſhment ſupplies the Effect of it; no Queſtion but a Pardon may ſupply the want of burning in the Hand. Chief Juſtice Hales in his Book of Pleas of the Crown, Fol. 240 which I have here, ſays expreſsly, That burning in the Hand is now, ſince the Statute, 18 Eliz. the Conſequent upon the Allowance of Clergy, which hath this Effect: Firſt, it enables the Judges to deliver him. Secondly, It reſtores him to former Capacities. Thirdly, It reſtores him to his Credit, and ſo it puts him in the ſame Condition as if he were acquitted. What is it that hath this Effect? The Allowance of Clergy, and burning in the Hand: There is not to be a Delivery of the Criminal till all be done which is required by Law: The Law requires that the Party be burnt in the Hand, or that the King do pardon the burning in the Hand before the Party be diſcharged; and, with humble ſubmiſſion, it was never yet pretended, that any Perſon could have the full Advantage of the Benefit of Clergy, ſince the Statute of 4 H. 7. till he was burnt in the Hand, or the Burning in the Hand was pardoned. Now, my Lords, to apply this to the Caſe in Queſtion, it is on all Hands admitted, That Mr French was convicted of Felony and Manſlaughter, and is neither burnt in the Hand, nor pardoned; but he has prayed the Benefit of the Clergy, and has had the Book given to him, to try if he can read, and he certified he can read; this is all that is done. I think it cannot be pretended he ought to be diſcharged until he is burned in the Hand, or that Burning pardoned, as the Act requires; and if the Reading as a Clerk without burning in the Hand, or pardon of it, be not ſufficient in Law to entitle him to be diſcharged, Why ſhould it be ſufficient to reſtore his Credit? the whole together Works the Diſcharge, and reſtores the Party. In the Caſe of Burroughs and Holcroft that has been cited, there a Man was convicted of Manſlaughter, and prayed his Clergy; the Court did not allow his Clergy, but did adviſe upon it. This was held ſufficient to bar an Appeal; for if Clergy had been allowed, it had clearly been a good Bar; and the Act of the Court in adviſing upon the Prayer, and not allowing Clergy where it ought to be, ſhall not prejudice the Party convicted, but he ſhall be in the ſame ſtate as if the Clergy had been actually allowed: But that has no likeneſs to the Caſe now before your Lordſhips; for here it is not pretended that Mr French ever deſired to be burnt in the Hand, but that was reſpited in favour to him, which was done with Intention, it ſeems, to get the King's Pardon for the burning of the Hand, which is not yet obtained, and conſequently I take it he is not entitled to that Benefit which the Law would give him, if he was either pardoned or burned in the Hand; he is not fully diſcharged of the Conviction, and therefore I think he ought not to be admitted as a Witneſs.

L. H. St. What is the Reſolution your Lordſhips pleaſe to take upon this Matter? Is it your Lordſhips pleaſure to have the Opinion of my Lords the Judges, who are here preſent, upon this Point?

Lords. Ay, Ay, by all Means have the Judges Opinions.

L. C. J. Treby. Two Things have been mentioned at the Bar, which, I think, ought to be laid out of the Queſtion.

1. The Conſideration of a Peer, with reſpect to Burning in the Hand.

I ſuppoſe it is not (I am ſure it ought not to be) inſinuated, that, if any of your Lordſhips Degree ſhould have the Misfortune to fall into the like Condition as the Gentleman now produced, viz. to be once convict of a clergyable Felony, there could be any Doubt of receiving ſuch Peer, as a Witneſs, without his having been burnt in the Hand. Certainly there could not; For the Statute of 1. E. 6. exempts the Peers from ſuch Penalty, and virtually Repeals the Statute of 4 H. 7. as to ſo much. And the Statute of 18 Eliz. requires burning in the Hand only, according to the Statute in that behalf (before) Provided. And there being no Statute then, or now, in Force to ſubject Peers to ſuch Brand; they are, in ſuch Caſe, upon the Allowing the Benefit of the ſaid Statute of E. 6. (which is as much as Clergy without reading or burning) freed from Diſcredit and other Penalties of the Felony, as much as Commons are by having Clergy formally allowed and being burnt.

2. Here hath been mention of a Pardon of the burning this Gentleman in the Hand; and, it ſeems, the Proceeding hath been ſo far as to paſs the privy Seal. I do not queſtion the King's pardoning of the Burning's being as effectual as the Party's undergoing it. But, I ſay, Here is no Pardon (though great Preparation for one). For, the Sign Manual, the Signet, the privy Seal, are but Warrants in ſuch Caſes, and countermandable. But, it is the great Seal that ſpeaks the King's laſt and irrevocable Intent, and paſſeth the Pardon (or other like Thing) to be granted. And that hath not been obtained here.

Now the Queſtion is cleared, I take it to be this; Whether this Commoner being convicted of Felony, and having his Clergy allowed, but being unburnt and unpardoned, ſhall be received and allowed to be a Witneſs.

I am of Opinion he ought not.

For (whatever Quality or Credit he might Perſonally be of,) he is, by being and remaining a Felon convict, rendered Infamous in the Eye of the Law. Upon the Conviction, he loſt, by the Intendment of Law, That Credit which is neceſſary to a Witneſs. And is not reſtored to it by the bare Allowing of Clergy: But, is in the State as a Felon convict would have been, before Purgation, at common Law.

Clergy or (more properly called) Benefit of Clergy, is an antient Priviledge, whereby a Clerk charged with Felony was diſmiſſed from the temporal Judge, and delivered in Cuſtody to his Ordinary, before whom he was to purge himſelf, if he could, of the Offence; and if he failed in his Purgation, he was to remain in the Ordinary's Priſon.

I mean Generally. And I think it not proper to this Occaſion, to Diſcourſe of the ſpecial Caſes wherein the Delivery to the Ordinary was Abſque Purgatione.

This Priviledge took its Root originally from a Conſtitution of the Pope, exempting the Perſons of the Clergy from the ſecular Juriſdiction. This the Canon-Law is full in. But, that Law was not throughly received here in England. And this Matter was Moulded, Ordered, and Altered by our common and Statute-Law.

For Inſtance. The Cannon-Law gives the Priviledge only to Men in holy Orders: Our Law, in favour to Learning, and the Deſire of the Engliſh Biſhops, extended it to Lay-Clerks, as an old Statute calls them, i. e. any Lay-man, that, by reaſon of his Ability to read, was (other Circumſtances concurring) in a Poſſibility of being made a Prieſt. On the other Side; That Law would not ſuffer the Clergy to be tryed before ſecular Judges: But, ours hath, for ſeveral hundred Years, ſubjected them to ſuch Tryal.

But, the common Law was ever clear in this, That when a Man was convicted of Felony, though by the Allowing of Clergy, his Life, Land, and Blood were ſaved, yet, That Conviction laid him under divers Penalties and Porfeitures, ſome Abſolute, others Limited and Determinable.

He forfeited all his Goods and Chattels, which he had at the Time of his Conviction, Abſolutely; not to be reſtored by Purgation or Pardon.

He alſo forfeited and loſt, 1. His Liberty, being to continue a Priſoner. 2. His Capacity of Purchaſing more Goods or Chattels, and of Taking and Retaining the Iſſues and Profits of his Freehold Land to his own Uſe. 3. His Credit. ſo as not to be a Witneſs, Juror, &c. Under theſe three Penalties he remained till his Purgation. But, by that, they were determined. As ſoon as he had made his Purgation, he was reſtored to his Liberty, Capacities, and Credit.

not

Purgation was the Convict's clearing himſelf of the Crime, by his own Oath, and the Oaths or Verdict of an Inqueſt of twelve Clerks (as Compurgators.) The Proceeding was before the Ordinary. And, for the Manner of it, old Books ſpeak of their making Proclamation for Perſons to come in againſt his Purgation, and of their enquiring into his Life, Converſation, and Fame, and of other Formalities. In all which, ſeveral Statutes ſay, there were great Abuſes. But it is certain, that, upon his Acquittal, the Ordinary pronounced him Innocent, and abſolved from Infamy. And thereupon he was diſcharged from the Impriſonment, Incapacities, and Diſcredit Incident to the Felony.

The Statute 4 H. 7. brings in a new Thing, Appointing that every Perſon Convict of Felony, ſhould be marked in the Hand by the Goaler in open Court, before he ſhould be delivered to the Ordinary. And this, was partly that they might taſte of Corporal Puniſhment; But, principally to notifie that they had had their Clergy. For, the ſame Statute, taking notice that Men were emboldened to commit Murder, Rape, Robbery, and other Felonies, becauſe they had the Benefit of Clergy toties quoties, ordains that no Perſon, who was once admitted to that Benefit, ſhould ever have it again for a following Offence, unleſs he were within Orders and produced his Letters of his Orders, or a Certificate of them.

For this Act, Perkin Warbeck in his Declaration againſt H. 7. Brands him as an execrable Breaker of the Liberties and Franchiſes of holy Church.

Then comes the Statute 18 Eliz. C. 7. which, for ſo much as concerns this Queſtion, I deſire to read.

It is in theſe Words.

For the Avoiding of ſundry Perjuries and other Abuſes in and about the Purgation of Clerks convict, delivered to the Ordinaries, Be it enacted that every Perſon which ſhall be admitted and allowed to have the Benefit or Priviledge of his Clergy, ſhall not thereupon be delivered to the Ordinary as hath been accuſtomed, But after ſuch Clergy allowed, and burning in the Hand according to the Statute in that behalf provided [meaning that of 4 H. 7.] ſhall forthwith be inlarged and delivered out of Priſon by the Juſtices before whom ſuch Clergy ſhall be granted, that Cauſe notwithſtanding.

Then there follows a Proviſo to this Effect.

Provided nevertheleſs, and be it enacted that the Juſtices before whom any ſuch Allowance of Clergy ſhall be had, may for the further Correction of ſuch Perſons, detain and keep them in Priſon for ſuch convenient Time as the ſame Juſtices in their diſcretions ſhall think convenient, ſo as the ſame do not exceed one Year's Impriſonment.

This Statute refers to that of H. 7. and follows the Order of it, As that appointed that the Convict ſhould be burnt before he ſhould be delivered to the Ordinary to have the Benefit of Purgation, So this of 18 Eliz. Appoints that he ſhall be burnt before he ſhall be diſcharged by the Juſtices, and have the Benefit thereby intended (inſtead of Purgation.)

The Council for the noble Lord at the Bar ſay, that the Allowance of Clergy by vertue of this Act, freeth this Man, and makes him Rectus in Curia, as if he had made his Purgation; and that by this Statute he is firſt pardoned his Crime, by being allowed the Benefit of Clergy, without making his Purgation; and afterwards to be burnt in the Hand before he be delivered out of Priſon, and ſo the Burning is a Condition precedent to his getting out of Priſon, not to his being reſtored to his Credit.

But I am to ſeek for any Ground for this Notion in this Statute. It doth not require Clergy to be allowed, nor give any new Vertue or Operation to it, when allowed. It ſuppoſeth ſuch a Thing to be by Virtue of the common Law: But there it leaves it, if there be nothing more done. It is one Clauſe conſiſting of two Parts; 1. Negative; He that is allowed his Clergy, ſhall not be delivered to the Ordinary. 2. Affirmative; But after that, and burning in the Hand ſhall be delivered by the Juſtices.

Now, If it had ſtopped at the firſt Part, it had been ſo far from pardoning or reſtoring any Clerk Convict, that it had put all into the ſame Condition that thoſe were, who were without Purgation, viz. to be perpetually impriſoned, and infamous. Indeed, it had not been reaſonable to take away ſuch a Priviledge from the Subjects, without ſome Recompence; and therefore it did not ſtop there: But proceeds to the 2d Part, and Provides that thoſe who before were delivered to, and by the Ordinary, ſhall now be delivered by the Juſtices. But withal, it declares when, and upon what Terms, viz. After Clergy Allowed, and burning in the Hand. And this is a Satisfaction to be given to the Law, before they ſhall have the Benefit of it.

I agree if this Convict had made that Satisfaction to the Law, he might have been a Witneſs; for, in that Caſe, he would have been freed from his Diſcredit by Vertue of the laſt Words of the ſaid Clauſe. 'Tis true, the Words are only [ſhall forthwith be inlarged and delivered out of Priſon by the Juſtices,] which literally Import nothing but reſtoring his Liberty. But under this prime Inſtance, are implied and intended all other particulars which a Convict might be diſcharged of by means of Purgation. It was never the Intent of the Statute meerly to ſet him at large, and leave him a Fleon convict. But when it is ſaid delivered, 'tis meant delivered Free, freed from all incident further Penalties, as he might have been if delivered upon Purgation. This is a reaſonable Conſtruction: to a Man that obſerves the Oppoſition in the Words, the Senſe will appear to be as if the Lawmakers had ſaid, that inſtead of being diſcharged a Culpa et Pœnâ by the Ordinary, upon a tedious Proceeding to Purgation, he ſhall now be ſo diſcharged by the Juſtices, forthwith.

And this alſo is neceſſary to vindicate the Juſtice of this Law; for, ſince it takes from him the means he had of regaining his Credit, it is but juſt it ſhould reſtore it to him by this Way.

'Tis Objected, that it may as well be ſaid that he ſhall not be reſtored to Credit till he have ſuffered Impriſonment, not exceeding a Year, as that he ſhall not be reſtored till burnt. But that receives an eaſie Anſwer; for, if it were ſo, it would not avail this Perſon. But, I take it to be otherwiſe. A Convict is diſcharged from Impriſonment and all other Penalties incident to the Conviction, forthwith upon his burning in the Hand.

But

But if there be a Commitment made by Virtue of the Proviſo, it is a collateral and a new Thing, and the Party is not then in Priſon by Virtue of his Conviction, but by a freſh expreſs Order of the Judges, made upon the heinouſneſs of the Circumſtances appearing on the Evidence. They may, and generally do, forbear to commit at all. And when they do, it may be for a Month or two, at their Diſcretion. The Proviſo calls it a further Correction.

As to the Manner in which this Statute works this full Diſcharge, it hath been diſputed whether it be by ſupply of Purgation, or rather by a kind of Statute-Pardon. But, I think, that by Force of the Statute the Party is purged and freed of the Felony, and all Penalties incident to it in nature of a Pardon.

In what Manner ſoever the Statute works it, 'tis manifeſt that it doth it not but upon a Condition precedent, viz. After Clergy allowed, and burning in the Hand. Now, this Perſon hath his Clergy allowed, but is not burnt in the Hand, (nor has any Pardon for it.) And therefore is not yet Intitled to the Benefit of this Statute. My Lord's Council ſay he is, becauſe he hath his Clergy allowed. But, that is claiming the Advantage upon the Performing of one Part of a joint Condition, which ought not to be had but upon performing both. They might as well have pretended to it before the Performance of either; The Statute ſays, after both Clergy and Burning. They ſay alſo, that this Burning is no Part of the Judgment, as hath been held in the Caſe of an Appeal. Be it ſo. But, I ſay, 'tis a Part of the Condition in this Statute.

There is no Caſe in our Books againſt this Opinion. (But, on the contrary, there are Authorities for it.)

Holcrofts Caſe is in no ſort applicable to this Caſe; as was truly obſerved by the King's Serjeant.

The Opinion of my Lord Chief Juſtice Hobart in Searl and Williams Caſe, rightly conſidered confirms this. I have borrowed the Book from the Gent. at the Bar, and read it. He ſaith expreſsly that where a Convict is liable to be burnt in the Hand, he is not diſcharged and reſtored without it; becauſe the Statute ſays after burning, But from thenceforth the Statute frees him from all further Puniſhment. But, he ſaith, that where he is not liable to burning, he ſhall have the ſame Benefit immediately upon the Allowance of Clergy only. So it was in the Caſe before him; which was that of a Clerk in Orders: For, Searl was a Clergyman, Parſon of Heydon German in Eſſex, and convicted of Manſlaughter. So it is, he ſays, in Caſe where the King pardons the burning. And the laſt Words in the Caſe clearly ſhew his meaning, viz. where the Statute ſays, after burning, It imports where burning ought to be, &c.

To me the Law is evident. A Peer ſhall have this Benefit, without either Clergy or Burning. A Clerk in Orders, upon Clergy alone without Burning. A Lay-Clerk, not without both.

As I remember, there hath been but one Authority more mentioned, and that is of my L. C. J. Hale, in his Summary of the Pleas of the Crown; I have got hither that Book alſo. To my Underſtanding, he plainly declares the ſame Opinion, and cites the before-mentioned Caſe of Searl for Proof of it. His Words (ſo far as they relate to this Matter) are theſe;

What the Effect of Clergy allowed?

In ancient Time the Conſequent was Delivery to the Ordinary, either to make Purgation, or abſque Purgatione, as the Caſe required.

But by Stat. 18 Eliz. c. 7. Now only burnt in the Hand, which hath theſe Effects,

1. It enables the Judges to deliver him out of Priſon.

2. It gives him a Capacity to purchaſe Goods, and retain the Profits of his Lands. Foxley's Caſe, 5 Report.

3. It reſtores him to his Credit. Hob. Seales Caſe.

The Word [which] uſed here (whatever elſe it do, or do not refer to) doth certainly refer to the next Antecedent, that is, Burning in the Hand; and the two Books which this moſt learned Judge cites, are full Authorities that 'tis this Burning which enables the Court to Deliver him, and that That Delivering which is then due to him is, by good Conſtruction, in lieu of a Pardon, which reſtores him to his ſaid Capacity and Credit.

To conclude: This Condition Precedent, upon which the Reſtitution of this Perſon's Credit depends, is not performed (by his undergoing the ſaid Puniſhment) nor diſcharged (by the King's pardoning it;) and therefore he is not a legal Witneſs.

Earl of Rocheſter. If the reſt of my Lords the Judges be of the ſame Opinion; ſo: and I hope you will not oblige them to deliver their Opinions at large to take up your Lordſhip's Time with Arguments of any Length, for the Matter has been, I think, ſufficiently debated.

Lord Chief Baron. My Lords, I am of the ſame Opinion.

Mr Juſtice Nevill. And ſo am I.

L. H. St. My Lord Warwick, Have you any Thing more to ſay to this Queſtion?

Earl of Warwick. No, my Lord.

L. H. St. Then what is your Lordſhip's Pleaſure? Is this Man to be admitted a Witneſs, or not?

Lords. No, no; we think, by Law, he can't be a Witneſs.

L. H. St. My Lord Warwick, my Lords are of Opinion, That this Perſon cannot be admitted as a Witneſs for you.

Earl of Warwick. My Lords, I ſubmit to your Lordſhips Judgment in the Matter.

Earl of Nottingham. My Lords, I am very glad your Lordſhips have had this Matter debated by the Council, that ſo it might be ſettled: All my Lords the Judges that are here, it ſeems, are of Opinion, that this Man can be no Witneſs, and therefore his Teſtimony muſt be rejected. But there is another Propoſal that I have to make to your Lordſhips, of a Point that I think ought to be conſidered of: My noble Lord at the Bar did ſuppoſe that he had proved before your Lordſhips, that he went into the Field to fight on the Side of the Party that was killed, but not on the other Side; and indeed, that he went not to fight, but to prevent a Quarrel, and thereupon he did ſtart a Queſtion, Whether it ſhould not be a Preſumption in Point of Fact and Law, that he, being on the Side of the Party that was killed, ſhould not be reputed innocent of his Death? Now, I confeſs, upon the Starting of this Objection, I doubted of it, Whether if any one were preſent at the Killing of a Man, where ſeveral People were engaged in fighting, on what Side ſoever ſuch a Perſon ſon were, either on the Side of the Party that was killed, or on the other Side, yet whatſoever Crime it was in thoſe that killed him, it was the ſame Crime in thoſe that were preſent at the Action? My Lord of Warwick did deſire, that his Council might be heard upon that Point; if there be any Queſtion with your Lordſhips in that Caſe, and my Lord deſires his Council may be heard to that Matter, it may occaſion a Matter of Debate, which cannot be in this place openly, but muſt be between your Lordſhips among your ſelves: Indeed, I think it reaſonable, that Council ſhould be heard upon the Caſe.

L. H. St. My Lords, I think you are not arrived at that Queſtion yet; you are not to take for granted any Part of the Fact, but are to debate among your ſelves, after the Proof is over, what that Proof does amount to.

Earl of Rocheſter. Indeed, my Lords, I hope you will not ſuppoſe any Thing, and ſo take it for granted, that may occaſion any Debate, becauſe that is not to be done here in this Place, but we muſt adjourn to another Place for it: The bare putting of a Caſe by a Priſoner at the Bar, does not make that to be the Caſe truly in Point of Fact; for as far as I heard and underſtood the noble Lord's Propoſal at the Bar, what he deſired to have his Council heard to, was, That he being One of Six that went into the Field, but going with a Deſign to part them, and not with any Intention to promote the Quarrel, could not be in equal Degree of Guilt with thoſe that were on the other Side, who killed the Party: But now, my Lords, I take it, it is far from being granted on the other Side, that That is the State of the Fact; nay, my Lord himſelf owns that he was in the Field, and that he was engaged in the Combat with Mr James; and then the Queſtion muſt be that is to be debated, Whether a Party that is concerned in a Quarrel where a Perſon is killed, is in equal Degree guilty with thoſe that were on the other Side againſt the Perſon that was killed? And then the Queſtion would be far different from what it would be otherwiſe, and as his Lordſhip did propoſe it; and if there be a Doubt in Matter of Fact, That ought to be ſettled here in this Place, that afterwards it may be conſidered in another.

Earl of Nottingham. My Lords, I cannot but agree with that noble Lord, That the Matter of Fact ought to be ſettled, and then if any Debate ariſes thereupon, your Lordſhips are to return to your own Houſe, and there to debate what is your Judgment upon that Matter of Fact: But whatſoever Motion is made by the noble Lord at the Bar, wherein he deſires to have his Council heard, that I ſuppoſe may be conſidered here; and this Point having been ſtarted by my noble Lord at the Bar, as a Point of Law, and not of Fact, I deſire to remind him of it, to know whether he does inſiſt upon it; if he does not move to have the Matter argued, then there is an End.

L. H. St. My Lords, I do not think you will hear Council upon a Matter of Fact, and therefore it is not ripe (till the Fact be ſettled) for you to hear Council.

Earl of Warwick. My Lords, I humbly pray, That you will hear my Council as to that Point.

L. H. St. My Lord, this is a Matter of Fact undetermin'd, and not a Matter of Law: What Opinion their Lordſhips will be of, when they have conſidered the Proofs as to the Fact, is one Step; when that is over, it will be the proper Time, if any Doubt be remaining with their Lordſhips, in Point of Law, to hear Council, but upon bare Matter of Fact Council is not to be allowed.

Earl of Rocheſter. My Lords, if there be any Debate among the Lords, Whether it be a Matter of Fact, or a Matter of Law, we muſt go up to our own Houſe; but upon any Point of Law, where Council is to be heard, it muſt be in this Place in the Preſence of the Priſoner, and afterwards your Lordſhips will debate it among your ſelves.

Earl of Nottingham. I hope, my Lords, the Council would not ſtate the Caſe otherwiſe than as it is really in Point of Fact; nor can this noble Lord hope, that any Thing will make an Impreſſion upon my Lords, but what from the Fact rightly ſtated, but what is ſupported from the Evidence; and that which my Lord propoſes, is to have his Council heard to a Matter of Law, which your Lordſhips will be Judges of after you have heard it, whether there be any Weight in that which he ſuppoſes to be his Caſe, That a Perſon aſſiſting in a Combat on the Side of him that is killed, is in equal Degree of Guilt with them that are on the other Side; That poſſibly, if the Fact be agreed, may be a Point fit to hear Council to, before your Lordſhips go to Debate it among your ſelves.

Duke of Devonſhire. If I am not miſtaken, my Lord of Warwick owns his being one of them that fought, for he has offered Witneſſes to prove, That he received a Wound in his Hand by fighting: If my Lord of Warwick thinks, that there is a Difference between his being on Mr Coote's Side, and theirs that were on the other Side, and would have his Council heard, how far it will difference his Guilt, and the Nature of the Crime, from what it was with them on the other Side, I cannot think that can be to any great Purpoſe to have that argued; but if your Lordſhips pleaſe, you may hear his Council what they have to ſay to that Matter; but otherwiſe I cannot think, but that his Lordſhip will acknowledge that the Matter of Fact, that he was engaged in the Quarrel.

Earl of Peterborough. My Lords, I deſire, if this be a Point, that my Lord's Council ſhould be heard to, that it ſhould be ſtated as a Point of Law, and then your Lordſhips will conſider of it.

L. H. St. As well as I could apprehend it, as it was offered by my Lord Warwick, this was what he deſired to have his Council heard to: Tho' the Perſons engaged in the Quarrel on the oppoſite Party to Mr Coote have been tried, and found guilty of Manſlaughter, yet he is not in equal Degree of Guilt with them, he being engaged on Mr Coote's Side, and therefore his Lordſhip's Caſe differs from theirs who fought againſt Mr Coote. This Point he would have argued by his Council before your Lordſhips, as a Matter of Law founded upon the Fact; now the Fact of the Caſe muſt ariſe from the Evidence as it has been given, which has not yet been debated or ſettled by your Lordſhips, and till that be agreed to be the Caſe, no Queſtion of Law does properly ariſe.

Duke of Leeds. My Lords, if poſſible, I would put this Matter into its true Method, for indeed I think we have been all this While out of the Way. The noble Lord at the Bar has deſired to have his Council heard, this Houſe has allow'd him Council in Matters of Law, I would deſire that the Council would ſtate the Caſe ſo to your Lordſhips, that it may appear to be a Caſe fit to be argued, that ſo it may receive your Lordſhips Judgment thereupon. My Lord's own bare propoſing of ſuch a Thing, will not be enough to encline your Lordſhips to be of Opinion, perhaps, one Way or other; but I would pray your Lordſhips, That you would direct the Council that are aſſign'd for my noble Lord at the Bar, to propoſe that to your Lordſhips as a Point of Law that he ought to inſiſt upon; I think it is apparent to every Body, that no Point of Law can ariſe but upon Matter of Fact, which is agreed to be proved in any Caſe; now the Proofs of the Fact we have heard; now, that which I would propoſe to your Lordſhip is, That inſtead of hearing his Council to argue in Point of Fact, what is not yet agreed upon to be the Fact, they ſhould ſtate ſuch a Point of Law as they would argue upon; and then whether you would think it a Point of Law, or not a Point of Law, we muſt go into another Place, where it may be debated, whether it be ſuch a Point of Law as that Council ſhould be heard to it.

Earl of Peterborough. My Lords, I hope you will forgive me for interpoſing in this Matter, but that which I have to ſay to it is this: I am far from giving any Opinion as yet, as to the Matter of Fact, whether my Lord of Warwick was Mr Coote's Friend or his Enemy; I know it is not a proper Place for that Matter to be debated in, but my noble Lord at the Bar deſires to have his Council heard, upon that Point, as if the Fact was agreed: Truly, till the Fact be agreed, I queſtion whether we can give any Judgment or Opinion one Way or other: If I obſerv'd aright, the Evidence for the King aimed at ſomewhat elſe: I ſhall not ſay what my Opinion now is, till we come to debate it among our ſelves; but here is a Deſire of having Council heard, but there is no Queſtion of Law ſtated, but it depends upon a Matter of Fact, which is not yet determined by your Lordſhips, before whom the Conſideration of both Fact and Law doth lie, Whether a Perſon that is engaged on the Side of the Party that's kill'd in a Quarrel, where ſeveral Perſons on both Sides are concerned, be as much guilty as thoſe that are concerned on the other Side.

Marq. of Norm. My Lords, I do ſuppoſe that you may hear the Council to ſtate the Queſtion, without your determining any Thing upon it, as to your Opinion one Way or other; for your hearing of Council, is only in order to prepare your Lordſhips for the Debate among your ſelves, if there remains any Doubt with you. It ſeems my noble Lord at the Bar has propoſed that his Council ſhould be heard: If the Council will ſtate the Point to be argued upon, your Lordſhips may here conſider, Whether it be ſuch a One as it is fit to hear Council to, then, no doubt, you will hear Council to it. This, I ſuppoſe, you will hear from them, or otherwiſe your Lordſhips will not think fit to give your ſelves the Trouble to go and debate that which is no ſettled Queſtion to be debated of.

Earl of Rocheſter. My Lords, I am afraid, of Neceſſity, you muſt adjourn to your own Houſe; for I find my Lords are here arguing one with another; ſome are of Opinion, That the Council ſhould ſtate the Queſtion, that they ſhould be heard upon; others of my Lords are of Opinion, That it is only a Matter of Fact, not a Matter of Law, upon which Council ſhould be heard; then it muſt be debated between your Lordſhips, which is not proper for to do here, therefore I would humbly move your Lordſhips, that you would adjourn to your own Houſe.

Earl of Peterborough. I ſuppoſe your Lordſhips will be pleaſed to enquire of the Council, Whether they do inſiſt upon this Point, or no.

L. H. St. My Lord Warwick, if your Lordſhip inſiſt that your Council ſhould be heard upon the Point which you have offer'd, it ſeems there is ſuch a Difference of Opinion among my Lords, that for the Debating of what ſhall be done in the Caſe, my Lords muſt adjourn; but if you do not inſiſt upon it, they will go in the ordinary Method, to conſider of the Evidence that has been given, after it is ſum'd up on both Sides; for if you have no more Evidence to offer, you are to make your Obſervations upon the Evidence that has been given.

Earl of Warwick. I ſubmit it, upon the whole Matter to your Lordſhips, Whether my Council can be heard, or not, to that Point; how far, I being of Mr Coote's Side, can be guilty of his Death.

L. H. St. That is a Matter of Fact which is not yet determin'd, and therefore the Queſtion which you ſuppoſe to ariſe upon it, is not yet ripe to be reſolved. If you have no other Witneſſes to produce, that which remains, for I think I may properly acquaint you with the Methods of Proceeding, is, That you are now on your Part to ſum up the Evidence that has been given, which is your own Work, as not being allow'd Council as to Matter of Fact; you are at liberty to make ſuch Obſervations as you may think for your Advantage upon the Evidence, and ſo to cloſe your Defence.

Earl of Warwick. My Lord, I ſubmit it upon the whole Matter to your Lordſhips.

L. H. St. Mr Attorney General, my Lord of Warwick ſubmits the Matter, as it has been prov'd, to their Lordſhips, without any ſumming up of the Evidence; you who are of the King's Council, if you think fit, will ſum up the Evidence on yours, in Order to their Lordſhips Conſideration of it: This you know is the Time for doing it. Make Proclamation for Silence.

Cl. of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms make Proclamation.

Serj. at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes, My Lord High Steward of England, his Grace does ſtraitly charge and command all manner of Perſons here preſent, to keep ſilence, upon pain of Impriſonment.

L. H. St. Gentlemen, you that are of the King's Council, now is your Time to ſum up the Evidence for the King.

Then Mr Sollicitor began to ſum up the Evidence, but his Voice was ſo low, that he could not be heard by the Lords that ſate at the upper end of the Houſe.

D. of Leeds. My Lords, I think it of ſo great Importance to have a true State of the Fact and Evidence laid before us, and that we may hear what the King's Council do ſay at the ſumming up of the Evidence, that if my Lords be of my Opinion, we ſhall be very defective to know what Judgment we give when we come to give Judgment, unleſs we are thoroughly apprized of the Matter of Fact and the Proofs: I confeſs I am going to move, that which is a Thing, according to the Orders of the Houſe, much without the Rules of the Houſe,

That the Council ſhould be heard in any other Place but where they are, at the Bar of the Houſe; This is contrary indeed, I acknowledge, to the Orders of the Houſe, and ſo my Motion is irregular; but yet, in order to our Satisfaction, that we may be enabled to hear what the King's Council do ſay to us, eſpecially in ſumming up the Evidence, I cannot but offer this to your Lordſhips; for we can no more hear the Council here, than if we were quite out of the Houſe: Whether therefore your Lordſhips will pleaſe to Order, that any Perſon that has a ſtronger Voice ſhould ſum up the Evidence: Or whether you will diſpence with the Orders of the Houſe ſo far, as that Mr Sollicitor may come to the Clerk's Table, or ſome other Place within the Houſe, that he may be heard by all, I muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhips. It would be a great Satisfaction for us to hear him, in order to our Judgment; but I acknowledge in this I do make an irregular Motion, as to the Orders that are uſually obſerved by your Lordſhips: But I know not how to help it, in regard without hearing, it is impoſſible for us to form our Judgment.

E. of Roch. My Lords, I have a very great Reſpect for every Motion that That noble Lord who ſpoke laſt does make, and I am of his Opinion, That it will mightily tend to the Satisfaction of my Lords who are to give their Judgment in this Caſe, to hear both the Evidence and the Council, and what obſervations are made on both Sides; and that it is a great Diſadvantage that the Council ſhould have ſo low a Voice, that all my Lords ſhould not be able to hear him; but yet I hope that may be remedied ſome other Way than what is propoſed by that noble Lord; for if what he deſires were done, it will be obvious that in Point of Precedent many Inconveniencies will occur upon breaking the Orders of the Houſe, to comply with a Motion which is acknowledged by the noble Lord himſelf, to be irregular; for it would be impoſſible to hear any Body, if it be permitted to make ſuch a great Noiſe without; and it is that which renders the Difficulty of hearing the greater. If that were quieted, your Lordſhips might hear this Gentleman as well as thoſe of the other Council: Or if this Gentleman's Voice will not ſo well reach your Hearing, then there are other Gentlemen of the King's Council that have ſtronger Voices; and if any of them would ſum up the Evidence, I believe it would be better heard and conſequently better apprehended by your Lordſhips, for I had rather any Expedient ſhould be found out to comply with the Orders of the Houſe, and preſerve them, than that any irregular Thing ſhould be done for the breaking the Orders of the Houſe, upon any Account whatſoever.

L. H. St. Make another Proclamation for Silence.

Cl. of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serj. at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes; My Lord High Steward of England his Grace does ſtraitly Charge and Command all manner of Perſons here preſent to keep Silence, upon pain of Impriſonment.

E. of Bridgewater. Truly, my Lords, The Noiſe about the Court is ſo great, that we who ſit much nearer to the Bar, than the noble Lord who made the Motion for the removal of the Council into another Place, cannot hear Mr Sollicitor what he ſays, and therefore I think ſome of the Guard ſhould be ſent out to clear all the Paſſages about the Court, that there may be no Noiſe, for it is the Noiſe of the People without, that makes it ſo difficult to hear the King's Council.

L. H. St. Let ſome of the Guard without take care that there be not that Noiſe made; and whoſoever does make a Noiſe, let him be taken into Cuſtody.

Then another Proclamation was made for Silence; upon which there was a greater Quietneſs in the Hall.

L. H. St. Mr Sollicitor, There is hopes now ſince there is not ſo great Noiſe as there was, that you may be heard by my Lords: You muſt uſe the beſt Endeavours you can, that you may be heard.

E. of Roch. If that Gentleman cannot ſpeak out ſo well that he can be heard, thoſe of the King's Council that have better Voices, muſt ſum up the Evidence.

Mr Sol. Gen. My Lord, I ſpeak as loud as I can.

E. of Roch. There are others of the King's Council, pray let them do it then; Mr Attorney, he being nearer and within the Bar.

L. H. St. I know not whether Mr Attorney be prepared for the ſumming up of the Evidence, becauſe he examined the Witneſſes, and the King's Council uſually allot to themſelves the particular Parts, which they intend to take.

E. of Roch. Then let Mr Sollicitor go on.

Mr Sol. Gen. I would ſhortly obſerve to your Lordſhips, what Evidence hath been given to you on behalf of the King in this Caſe, againſt that noble Lord the Priſoner at the Bar for the Offence for which he ſtands indicted. The firſt Witneſs that was produced was the Drawer at the Greyhound Tavern in the Strand, where this Quarrel, that was the Occaſion of the Death of this Perſon that was ſlain, happen'd; and he tells you that That Night there was at his Maſter's Houſe my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mohun, Captain French, Captain Coote the Perſon that was kill'd, and Mr Dockwra, and after they had been there ſome Time that other Perſon that was the Sixth concerned in the Scuffle, Mr James, was ſent for, and he came in when it was pretty late; there they continued till One or Two a Clock, and then they came down to the Bar, and Orders was given for to call Coaches, but it being ſo late, and Sunday Morning, they could not find Coaches, and then there was Orders for the getting of Chairs; when ſome Chairs were brought, Mr Coote and Mr French went into two of the Chairs, but my Lord Mohun interpoſed, and ſaid there ſhould be nothing done that Night, and that if they went away he would call for a File of Muſqueteers from the Guard, and ſecure them, and thereupon they came out of the Chairs, and went into the Houſe, and there was the Noiſe of Swords claſhing heard at the Bar; Captain Coote ſaid he would laugh when he pleas'd, and frown when he pleas'd, and they parted; Three were on one Side, and three on the other of the Bar, my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mohun, and Captain Coote, were on one Side; Captain French, Captain James, and Mr Dockwra, were on the other Side: Indeed he ſays my Lord Mohun and my Lord Warwick did what they could to pacifie them, and threatned to ſend for the Guards, but away they went. The next Witneſs was Thomas Browne, and he was the Chairman that carried Mr Coote, and he ſays, that there was an Endeavour by my Lord of Warwick, and my Lord Mohun, to put off the Buſineſs at that Time, and that they did what what they could to have put it off, and that even after they were in their Chairs, when they were turned up St. Martins-lane, there they ſtopt at the Back Door of the Croſs-Keys Tavern, and that while they ſtood there with their three Chairs, three other Chairs came by, and then Captain Coote bid them put up, and follow after thoſe Chairs as faſt as they could to Leiceſter-fields.

The next Witneſs is William Crippes, who was the other Chairman that carried Captain Coote, and he gives your Lordſhips much the ſame Account that Browne gave before, and his Evidence was juſt to the ſame purpoſe, That my Lord of Warwick and my Lord Mohun endeavoured to pacifie the Matter, and that there ſhould be an end of the Buſineſs for that Night, and let it alone till another Time, and that my Lord Mohun threatn'd to ſend for the Guards, and ſecure them, and would have had them gone home, that is, Mr Coote either with him to his Lodging, or he would go to Mr Coote's, but he could not prevail: Then my Lord Mohun ſaid, If he would go on, his Lordſhip would go and ſee an end of the Buſineſs.

The next Witneſs was one Crattle, who was one of the Chairmen that carried my Lord of Warwick, and he ſays, That my Lord Mohun and my Lord of Warwick did endeavour what they could to put off the Matter till the next Morning, but that they could not prevail; That afterwards, when he carried my Lord from Leiceſter-fields to the Bagnio, my Lord borrowed a Handkerchief of him to wrap his Hand in, for he ſaid he was wounded, but by whom that Wound was given does not appear, nor how he came by that Wound any otherwiſe then as his Lordſhip himſelf ſays, that it was given him by Mr James.

The next was the other Chairman that carried my Lord of Warwick, which was John Gibſon, and his Teſtimony need not be repeated, becauſe it did not differ from the others. The next Witneſs was Robert Applegate, who was the Chairman that carried my Lord Mohun, and he ſays, that there was an Endeavour uſed by my Lord upon his ſetting down in St Martins lane, to quiet Captain Coote, and prevent any Quarrel at that Time, but he ſays, when they would go on, my Lord Mohun ſaid he would go and ſee the End of it, and thereupon they went on towards Leiceſter-fields to the end of Green-ſtreet, which is at the lower end of the Square.

The next Witneſs was Palmer, who was one of the Chairmen that carried Mr French to the Bagnio in Long-acre, and he tells your Lordſhips what happen'd upon his carrying of him thither, how immediately after his coming there my Lord of Warwick came thither, and they knock'd at the Door the ſame Time, and that Captain French was very much wounded, and they went into the Houſe together, and that French would have had them pull off his Cloaths to ſee his Wounds, for he believed he was a dead Man.

The next Witneſs was the Chairman which carried Mr James, and he only tells your Lordſhips, That he carried a Gentleman into Leiceſter-fields, that my Lord Mohun endeavoured to put off the Buſineſs for that Night, but who the Perſon was that he carried, he cannot ſo well tell, nor give an Account of; but when he had ſet him down at the further end of the Square, there he left him, and he knows no further.

Then there was the Surgeon at the Bagnio in Long-acre, who gives your Lordſhips an Account, That about Two of the Clock in the Morning on the Sunday, my Lord of Warwick and Captain French came in there, Captain French was wounded in the Body, and my Lord Warwick was wounded in the Hand, and my Lord Warwick did take extraordinary Care of Captain French, and would not have the Door open'd to any Body, nor his Lordſhip known to be there; That afterwards Captain James and Mr Dockwra came to the Door, and my Lord came to the Door himſelf, and when he ſaw who they were, he ordered them to be let in, and that there was a Diſcourſe about going into the Country, and that there was a Fear that Coote was kill'd. This is the Effect of the Teſtimony both of the Surgeon and his Servants; and it is to be obſerved, That when Captain French came in, his Sword was not bloody, but my Lord of Warwick's Sword was bloody almoſt all over, and that was taken notice of the next Day, and there are ſeveral Witneſſes both Men and Women of that Houſe that give your Lordſhips an Account much to the ſame purpoſe; Then there was Captain Duckingfield, who ſays, that my Lord Warwick came to his Lodgings, and they went in a Coach together to the Tavern in Cornhill, and then there was a Diſcourſe of going into the Country, and my Lord ſaid, that he was afraid his Friend Mr Coote was kill'd, but they had no abſolute News of his being kill'd at that Time, for it ſhould ſeem my Lord of Warwick forſook the Field as ſoon as the fatal Stroke was given, which by whom it was given, is left to your Lordſhip's Conſideration: Indeed it is pretended by my Lord, that the Wound that he had in his Hand was given him by Mr James, but nothing of that is made apparent to your Lordſhips upon the Proofs.

Then we came to give your Lordſhips an Account of the Nature of the Wounds that Mr Coote had in his Body, and for that we produced both the Surgeon that did probe the Wounds by the Order of the Coroner, and the Coroner himſelf; Indeed we could not get a poſitive Anſwer from either the Surgeon or the Coroner, whether the Wounds were given by one and the ſame Sword, or by different Swords, but then your Lordſhips have the Teſtimony of Mr Turner, who was Captain Coote's Servant, and who knows his Maſter's Sword, and it hath been ſhewn to him, and he ſays that is his Maſter's Sword that he went out with, and it can be eaſily Judg'd whether he could give himſelf thoſe Wounds by that Sword.

And your Lordſhips have likewiſe had brought before you another Sword, which was left at the Bagnio in Long-acre, that was Captain French's that had no blood at all upon it, but my Lord of Warwick's, it ſeems by all the Evidence, had a great deal of Blood upon it.

Then came the Witneſſes for the Priſoner at the Bar, this noble Lord, my Lord Warwick, and the Sum of the Teſtimonies that they have given is of a great deal of Kindneſs between my Lord Warwick and Captain Coote; That my Lord lent him a hundred Guineas to purchaſe his Commiſſion in the Guards, and he had but three of four hundred Guineas which was neceſſary to make the Purchaſe, and there are ſeveral of them that do teſtifie, that they always look't upon Captain Coote and my Lord of Warwick to be very good Friends, and that there never was any Quarrel between them; and that is the Sum of what the Evidence on that Side did teſtifie. And this, my Lords, I take to be the Sum of the Evidence that has been given on either Side, and when I have laid it thus before your Lordſhips, I muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhips Judgment what

Opi-

Opinion you will be of upon the whole Matter; only there is this one Obſervation that I would make to your Lordſhips upon this Evidence, That there is not one Witneſs that has given you an Account ſatisfactory by whoſe Hand theſe Wounds were given to Mr Coote; and therefore, tho' it is apparent my Lord of Warwick was in the Place, where the mortal Wound was given, yet by whoſe Hand it was given is not yet known; until that can be known every Perſon that was there muſt remain under the Imputation of the ſame Guilt, as having a Hand, and contributing to his Death; it is certain, and cannot be denied, that this noble Lord, my Lord at the Bar, was in the Field, wherein there was actual Fighting; for he does not deny it himſelf, but ſays, that he was engaged particularly with Captain James, when Captain Coote was engaged with Captain French, between whom, as it is alledged, the Quarrel was; but that is no Way in Point of Fact made appear to your Lordſhips, and there being ſuch Suſpicions and Circumſtances of the Blood upon my Lord of Warwick's Sword, and the great Concern that he was in when he came to the Bagnio, and deſiring to be concealed, and that no Body ſhould know that he was there, and the Care he took of Mr French, who is the pretended Perſon that did the Fact, is that which is to be ſubmitted to your Lordſhips; and it is to be obſerved, that Mr French's Sword was not bloody, but only dirty, but my Lord of Warwick's Sword was very bloody from the Hilt to the Point, and he was in a great Conſternation when he came into the Houſe.

There is likewiſe a Circumſtance which your Lordſhips will pleaſe to obſerve, that even Mr Coote's Sword was brought into the Houſe by ſome of the Company that were there, and whatſoever this noble Lord pretends of his Friendſhip to Mr Coote, yet, it ſeems by his Care that he took of Captain French, he had as much Friendſhip for him.

There is another Circumſtance that has been teſtified, which it will be fit for your Lordſhips to take into Conſideration, and make ſome Obſervation of; That is the Nature of the Wound: It ſeems he had two Wounds, one on the left Side of the Breaſt, near the Collar Bone, and that was downward, and yet his Man, that was here produced as a Witneſs, does teſtifie, that he was one that uſed his right Hand, and then it is a Wonder that he ſhould receive ſuch a ſort of a Wound in that Part; and the other Wound was on the left Side too, but it was upward, and how that could be given to one that was a Right-handed Man, is certainly a very great Wonder; and the Wounds being both given upon the ſame Side, it cannot but be concluded, that they were given by one and the ſame Sword.

Another Circumſtance which relates to my Lord of Warwick is, that when he came into the Bagnio after the Fact was over, he would have himſelf denied to be there, and went to the Door when James and Dockwra came in, and his declaring his deſire of going into the Country; Theſe we ſay, are Circumſtances that do induce a Doubt, That my Lord of Warwick had a Concern upon him of great Guilt of having a Hand in this Man's Death: It is indeed pretended by my Lord of Warwick, That Mr Coote was a Perſon that my Lord of Warwick had a Kindneſs for, but it is plain by the Evidence, that he left him dead in the Field, and did not take any Care of him, but took a great deal of Care of Captain French, who, it is pretended, was the Perſon that fought with Coote, when he came to the Bagnio, and there is nothing of Kindneſs at this Time pretended, nor any Thing of a Defence to this Matter offer'd by my Lord of Warwick, but only what the Chairmen ſay, that he endeavoured to put it off to another Time. Theſe, my Lords, are all the Obſervations that I ſhall make upon the Evidence in this Caſe; How far this Evidence, upon Conſideration, will weigh with your Lordſhips, I muſt ſubmit it to you. If my Lord of Warwick did do the Fact, as theſe Circumſtances, we think, may incline your Lordſhips to believe he did, it will ſurely be Murder; but how far the Evidence comes up to the Proof of that, we muſt humbly ſubmit to your Lordſhips, who are the Judges of it; and we leave it entirely to your Conſideration upon what you have heard.

L. H. St. Then it ſeems you have done on all Sides.

Council. Yes, my Lords.

Lords. Then Adjourn, Adjourn.

L. H. St. Is it your Lordſhip's pleaſure to Adjourn into the Houſe of Lords?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

L. H. St. This Houſe is adjourned into the Houſe of Lords.

Then the Lords went back to their own Houſe in the ſame Order they came into the Court in Weſtminſter-hall, and debated the Matter among themſelves, what Judgment to give upon the Evidence that had been heard, and in about Two Hours Time they returned again into the Court, erected upon a Scaffold in Weſtminſter-hall; and after they were ſeated in their Places, the Lord High Steward being ſeated in his Chair before the Throne, ſpoke to the Lords thus;

L. H. St. Will your Lordſhips proceed to give your Judgment?

Lords. Ay, Ay,

L. H. St. Your Lordſhips will give me leave, as I ask your Lordſhips your ſeveral Opinions, to take ſo much time as to write down the Opinion of every Lord.

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Then the Lord High Steward asked this Queſtion of every one of the Lords there preſent, beginning with the Puiſne Baron, which was the Lord Bernard.

L. H. St. My Lord Bernard, Is Edward Earl of Warwick Guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty?

Lord High Steward. My Judgment is, That my Lord of Warwick is not guilty of the Murder, but is guilty of Manſlaughter, upon my Honour.

Then the Lord High Steward reckoned up the Number of the Peers that were then preſent, and the Opinions that were given, and afterwards acquainted their Lordſhips with the Reſolutions that they came to, in this manner.

L. H. St. My Lords, your Lordſhips are Ninety Three in Number here preſent, and you have all acquitted my Lord of Warwick of the Murder whereof he ſtands indicted, but you are of Opinion that he is guilty of Manſlaughter; Is it your Pleaſure, that he ſhould be called to the Bar, and acquainted with your Lordſhip's Judgment?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Cl. of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serj. at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes; Chief Governour of the Tower of London, bring forth the Body of your Priſoner, Edward Earl of Warwick forthwith, upon Pain and Peril will fall thereon.

Then the Earl of Warwick was brought to the Bar.

L. H. St. My Lord of Warwick, your Lordſhip has been Arraigned upon an Indictment for the Killing Mr Coote, you have pleaded Not-guilty, and put your ſelf upon your Tryal by your Peers here preſent; my Lords have heard the Evidence given both againſt you and for you, and have conſidered of it, and are come to a Reſolution, and their Judgment is, That your Lordſhip is not guilty of the Murder whereof you ſtand indicted, but that you are guilty of Manſlaughter; What has your Lordſhip to ſay, why Judgment of Death ſhould not be pronounced againſt you according to the Law?

E. of Warw. My Lords, I deſire that the Benefit of my Peerage may be allowed me, according to the Statute of Edward the Sixth.

L. H. St. My Lord, your Lordſhip has demanded the Benefit of your Peerage upon the Statute of Edward the Sixth, and you muſt have it by Law; but I am directed by their Lordſhips to acquaint you, That you cannot have the Benefit of that Statute twice, therefore I am likewiſe directed by their Lordſhips to ſay, That they hope you will take a more than ordinary Care of your Behaviour for the future, that ſo you may never hereafter fall into ſuch unfortunate Circumſtances as you have been now under; my Lords hope this will be ſo ſenſible a Warning, that nothing of this kind will ever happen to you again; your Lordſhip is now to be diſcharged.

L. H. St. Is it your Lordſhip's Pleaſure to adjourn to the Houſe of Lords?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

L. H. St. This Houſe is adjourned to the Houſe of Lords.

Then the Lords went in Proceſſion, in the ſame Order that they came into the Court.

The TRYAL of CHARLES Lord MOHUN.

Serj. at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes, His Grace my Lord High Steward of England does ſtraitly Charge and Command all manner of Perſons here preſent to be uncovered.

Cl. of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation again.

Serj. at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes, Chief Governour of the Tower of London, bring forth the Body of your Priſoner Charles Lord Mohun forthwith, upon Pain and Peril will fall thereon.

Then my Lord Mohun was brought to the Bar.

L. High Steward. My Lord Mohun, your Lordſhip is now brought upon your Tryal for the Murder of Mr Coote, for which you ſtand indicted by the Grand Jury for the County of Middleſex. The King, who knows that Juſtice is one of the Pillars which ſupports a Throne, will have a ſtrict Account taken of the Blood of any of his Subjects, without Reſpect to the Quality of the Slain, or of the Perſon who ſtands Charged with his Death. There is not one of the Noble Peers here preſent, who are to be your Tryers, but does heartily wiſh your Lordſhip Innocent; But, on the other ſide, if you ſhould appear to be guilty upon the Evidence, you ought not to hope that any Conſideration of Relation, Friendſhip, or Pity, will prevail againſt Juſtice. And therefore ſince in your preſent Condition every Thing that is valuable in this World is at ſtake, it will be highly neceſſary for your Lordſhip to recollect your ſelf, and to have your beſt Thoughts about you. Facts of this Nature are frequently attended with ſuch unhappy Circumſtances, that a noble Perſon may be juſtly covered with Shame to have Faults and Weakneſſes expoſed to ſuch an Aſſembly as this, although he be not Conſcious to himſelf of the Guilt of Blood: But your Lordſhip ought not to be ſo far diſcompoſed with any Thoughts of this Kind, as to neglect your Defence againſt this heavy Accuſation of Murder. In order to this, it is neceſſary for your Lordſhip to hear with Temper what will be ſaid againſt you, and by no means to interrupt the Council or Witneſſes. I will take care to give your Lordſhip notice when the proper Time comes for you to make your Obſervations upon the Evidence, to examine your Witneſſes, and to ſay what you think proper for your own Defence; And when my Lords have heard, and fully and maturely conſidered the whole Matter, their Lordſhips will give ſuch a Judgment as the Law and Juſtice require.

L. H. St. Read the Indictment to my Lord.

Clerk of the Crown. Lord Mohun. Not guilty.

Cl. of the Crown. Culprit, How will you be tried?

Lord Mohun. By God and my Peers.

Cl. of the Crown. God ſend your Lordſhip good Deliverance.

Cl. of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serj. at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes, All manner of Perſons that will give Evidence on behalf of our Sovereign Lord the King, againſt Charles Lord Mohun, the Priſoner at the Bar, let them come forth and give their Evidence, for now he ſtands at the Bar for his Deliverance.

Lord Mohun. My Lords, I deſire I may have the Benefit of Pen, Ink, and Paper.

L. H. St. Your Lordſhips are pleaſed to permit my Lord Mohun to have Pen, Ink, and Paper?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

[Pen, Ink, and Paper were carried to my Lord, by one of the Clerks of the Houſe.]

Mr Cowper. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, my Lord Mohun, the Priſoner at the Bar, ſtands Indicted by the Grand Jury of the County of Middleſex before Commiſſioners of Oyer and Terminer in that County; and the Indictment ſets forth, That Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, Charles Lord Mohun, Baron Mohun of Oakehampton in the County of Devon, Richard French, Roger James, and George Dockwra, the 30th of October, in the tenth Year of his Majeſty's Reign, with Force and Arms, at the Pariſh of St. Martin in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, upon one Richard Coote Eſq; Feloniouſly, Wilfully, and of their Malice aforethought, did make an Aſſault, and that the ſaid Edward Earl of Warwick and Holland, with a drawn Sword then in his right Hand, the ſaid Richard Coote, upon the left Part of his Breaſt near the Collar-Bone, did Strike, Stab, and Thruſt, giving him thereby a Mortal Wound of the Breadth of half an Inch, and the Depth of five Inches, of which Wound he inſtantly died; that my Lord Mohun, Mr French, Mr James, and Mr Dockwra, Feloniouſly, Wilfully, and of their Malice afore-thought, were preſent, aiding, and abetting my Lord of Warwick and Holland, the ſaid Richard Coote, in manner aforeſaid, to Kill and Murder; and then concludes, ſo that the Earl of Warwick and Holland, the ſaid Lord Mohun, Richard French, Roger James, and George Dockwra, the ſaid Richard Coote, in Manner and Form aforeſaid, Feloniouſly, Wilfully, and of their Malice afore-thought, did Kill and Murder, againſt the Peace of the King, his Crown and Dignity. To this Indictment my Lord Mohun has pleaded not guilty, and for his Tryal has put himſelf upon God and your Lordſhips, his Peers. We ſhall call our Witneſſes, and produce what Evidence we have to give to prove my Lord Mohun guilty, and ſo ſubmit it to you.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lords, This Noble Lord, my Lord Mohun, the Priſoner at the Bar, ſtands indicted for the Death of Mr Coote, one of the King's Subjects, as your Lordſhips have heard in the Caſe that was before you Yeſterday, to which Indictment he hath pleaded not guilty, and for his Tryal has put himſelf upon my Lords who are his Peers; I ſhall very ſhortly open the Subſtance of the Evidence that we ſhall offer for the King againſt my Lord, the Priſoner at the Bar; we ſhall produce Evidence to prove, That at the Time laid in the Indictment, the 29th of October at Night, and the next Morning, which was Sunday, my Lord, the Priſoner at the Bar, and my Lord of Warwick, (who has been found guilty of Manſlaughter upon this Indictment before your Lordſhips) and thoſe other Perſons that are named in the Indictment, Captain French, Captain James, and Mr Dockwra, and the Gentleman that was killed, happened to be at the Grey-hound Tavern in the Strand, which was then kept by Mr Lockett, and continued there a great Part of the Night, indeed till the next Morning, about One or Two of the Clock in the Morning; there was my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mohun, Captain French, Captain Coote, and Mr Dockwra, but very late in the Night the other Gentleman, Mr James, was ſent for; A Meſſenger was ſent particularly to have him come to them; There they continued drinking till about one or two of the Clock in the Morning, then Coaches were ſent for; then the Drawer of the Houſe will acquaint your Lorſhips, that he went for them, and could not get any at that time, being a very dark Night; and when there could be no Coaches had, then there were Chairs called for, and the Drawer went to call Chairs; and, as we ſhall make it appear to your Lordſhips, when the Drawer came back, there did appear to be a Quarrel among them, for their was claſhing of Swords, and they ſeem'd to be divided into Two Parties; on the one Side were my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mohun, the Priſoner at the Bar, and Mr Coote; On the other Side were Captain French, Captain James, and Mr Dockwra; and firſt there were two Chairs came to the Door, into which Mr French, and Mr Coote went, and when they were in the Chairs my Lord Mohun came out, and ſaid he would kill any of the Chairmen that went away, and ſo they put up again, and the Gentlemen came out, and came into the Houſe, but afterwards Mr Coote went into the firſt Chair, and my Lord of Warwick into the next, and my Lord Mohun into the Third, and then they went away; and the other three Gentlemen went into the other three Chairs, and followed them. Your Lordſhips will hear whither they were all carried; When they came to the end of St. Martin's-lane in the Strand, my Lord Mohun would indeed have endeavoured to have perſwaded Mr Coote in particular to have gone home for that Night, and let the Buſineſs alone till another time, but Mr Coote would go on; and while the three Chairs that carried my Lord

Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mohun, and Mr Coote to St. Martin's-lane End, which were the three firſt Chairs that went away from Lockett's, the other three Chairs that went after them overtook them, and then by Mr Coote's Command, the Chairmen that carried him went forward towards Leiceſter-fields, and then this Noble Lord, my Lord Mohun, did ſay, If you do go on, I will go and ſee the End of it, and ordered the Chairmen that carried him to go after thoſe Chairs in which my Lord of Warwick and Mr Coote went, and accordingly they did go till they came to the hither End of the Square in Leiceſter-fields near Green-ſtreet End, where my Lord Mohun got out of his Chair, paid for all the three Chairs three Shillings. But we ſhall not be able to give to your Lordſhips an Account particularly as to my Lord Mohun, what he did afterwards, but we ſhall call our Witneſſes to prove what we have opened, and when our Witneſſes are heard, we ſhall leave the Matter to your Lordſhips Judgment.

Samuel Cawthorne, which was the Drawer at the Tavern at Lockett's, was Sworn, and gave his Evidence to the ſame Effect that he did the Day before.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, Will you acquaint my Lords who were at your Houſe the 29th and 30th of October laſt, Saturday Night and Sunday Morning?

Cawthorne. There were my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mohun, Capt. Coote, Capt. French, Mr Dockwra, and Mr James.

Mr Att. Gen. How long did they continue there?

Cawthorne. Till between one and two of the Clock in the Morning.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, Will you acquaint my Lords what happened at your Maſter's Houſe at that Time; you remember what Evidence you gave yeſterday; tell the whole Matter again, becauſe it relates to another Noble Lord that is now at the Bar.

Cawthorne. The Reckoning was called for about that Time, and I went up and took the Reckoning, and all the Gentlemen came down to the Bar, and Coaches were ſent for; I went for them, but no Coaches could be had; Then Chairs were ſent for, and I called for Chairs, and there came two Chairs to the Door, and into thoſe Two Chairs went Captain Coote, and Captain French, and my Lord Mohun and my Lord of Warwick endeavoured to quiet them, and to put off the Buſineſs till another Day, and thereupon they came out of the Chairs, and came into the Houſe again; My Lord Mohun did deſire there might be no Quarrel, and would have Mr Coote go home with him to his Lodgings at Weſtminſter, or he would go with Mr Coote, and ſaid there ſhould be no Quarrel that Night: There were then three of them of one Side of the Bar, and three of the other Side, and their Swords were all drawn: My Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mohun, and Mr Coote, were of one Side, and Capt. French, Capt. James, and Mr Dockwra, were of the other Side: I was without the Houſe when the Swords were firſt drawn, but I heard my Lord Mohun ſay, I have got a cut Finger by endeavouring to part them, and at firſt when the Chairs came on, my Lord Mohun ſaid, if they did quarrel, he would ſend to the Guards for a File of Muſqueteers, and ſecure them, ſo that he did what he could to prevent any Quarrel at all; and when he had received the Wound in his Hand, I helped him to a Napkin to wrap his Hand in upon the bleeding of it; Then my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mohun, and Captain Coote, went away in three Chairs, and my Lord Mohun gave Order to go down to Weſtminſter; and there were three Chairs called for by the other three Perſons, two did come, and Captain French and Captain James went into them, and the 6th not being come, they ſtayed till it did come, and then they three went away too; the Chairs were all ordered to go home with them; My Lord of Warwick, and my Lord Mohun gave Order to their Chairs to keep cloſe with Mr Coote; and the other three Chairs immediately followed.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, Will you conſider, and recollect with your ſelf, Was Mr James there at firſt?

Cawthorne. No, I was ſent for him about ten a Clock at Night, and there he continued with them till they went all away in the Six Chairs, and he was almoſt fuddled when he came in.

Mr Att. Gen. When James came in, was his Sword drawn?

Cawthorne. His Sword was in the Scabbard, but the Scabbard was broken, and he took and broke his Sword ſtamping upon it.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, can you tell, you being up and down in the Room, what was the Occaſion of the Quarrel?

Cawthorne. Indeed I can't tell, but ſome Words paſt when they were below Stairs by the Bar from Captain French, That he would laugh when he pleaſed, and frown when he pleaſed; and Mr Dockwra did ſay, that they would fight them whenever they pleaſed when they went away; but I did not obſerve that there was any Quarrel between them while they were above, nor any Swords drawn till after I came from calling the Chairs.

Mr Att. Gen. Were all the Swords drawn at once?

Cawthorne. They were all drawn when I came in from calling for the Coaches and the Chairs, and three were within the Bar, and three were without; They were putting up their Swords when I came in again; Indeed I do not know any Thing of the Quarrel.

L. H. St. My Lord Mohun, Will you ask this Witneſs any Queſtions?

L. Mohun. Indeed I think I need not ask him any Queſtion, but yet, if your Lordſhips pleaſe, I would ask him this, Whether directly or indirectly I was any ways concerned in the Quarrel? Or, Whether I did not endeavour all that ever I could to quiet them.

Cawthorne. Yes, indeed, my Lord Mohun did endeavour all that ever he could to prevent any Quarrel at that Time.

L. Mohun. Did I ſay any Thing tending to the promoting of a Quarrel or Fighting among them?

Cawthorne. No, my Lord Mohun did not promote any Thing of the Quarrel between them, but he did ſay two or three times that he would ſend for the Guards to ſecure them, and keep them from fighting, both at the Door of the Houſe, and at the Bar, and ask'd for a Napkin to wrap up his Hand in for the Wound which he ſaid he got in endeavouring to quiet and part them, and prevent their fighting.

L. Mohun. That is all that I would ask him, whether I did not endeavour all that I could to prevent any Quarrelling or Fighting at that Time.

Cawthorne. Yes, indeed, my Lord did ſo.

L. H. St. He has ſaid ſo already, my Lord, and therefore there does not need any further Examination of him to that Point: If both Sides have done with this Witneſs, let him go down. (Which he did.)

L. H. St. Then Mr Attorney, Who is your next Witneſs?

Mr Att. Gen. Our next Witneſs is Tho. Browne, who was one of the Chairmen that carried Mr Coote into Leiceſter-fields.

Then he was ſworn.

L. H. St. What is the Queſtion you would ask him, Mr Attorney?

Mr Att. Gen. My Lords, I deſire he may be ask'd and examin'd, and acquaint your Lordſhips, who it was that he carried from Lockett's the 29th of October laſt to Leiceſter fields, and what time it was of the Night?

Browne. I carried Mr Coote in my Chair.

Mr Att. Gen. Whither were you directed to carry him?

Browne. To Leiceſter-fields.

Mr Att. Gen. What Time of Night was it?

Browne. It was three Quarters paſt One, as near as I could gueſs.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, What other Chairs were there that went along with you?

Browne. There were Two other Chairs.

Mr Att. Gen. Who were in thoſe Chairs, pray?

Browne. There were my Lord of Warwick in one, and my Lord Mohun in the other.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you three go away from Lockett's together?

Browne. Yes, we did, and when we were bid to take up, we went to the end of St. Martin's-lane, and turning up at the End of St. Martin's-lane, there my Lord of Warwick and my Lord Mohun called out to Capt. Coote to ſtay, and to turn down to go to Weſtminſter, but Mr Coote would turn up the Lane, and my Lord of Warwick and my Lord Mohun made a ſtop at the Back Door of the Croſs-Keys Tavern, and both of them perſwaded Mr Coote to put it off till the next Morning, but he would not, he ſaid he would make an End of it that Night.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, recollect your ſelf, Did they name among them what their Buſineſs was that they would make an end of?

Browne. No, they did not.

Mr Att. Gen. Who was it that ſtop'd at St. Martin's-lane End?

Browne. When we were turning up at St. Martin's-lane End, my Lord of Warwick and my Lord Mohun call'd out to ſtop, and ask'd Mr Coote whither he was going, and when he ſaid to Leiceſter-fields, my Lord Mohun called out to us to ſet down, which we did, at the Back Door of the Croſs-Keys Tavern; They did both of them, my Lord Warwick, and my Lord Mohun, perſwade Mr Coote to go home to Weſtminſter, and not to end the Buſineſs that Night, but he would go on, and while we were there, there went three other Chairs up St. Martin's-lane on the other Side of the Way; then Mr Coote, who was in our Chair, bid us take up, and follow thoſe Chairs into the Fields, and ſwore damn him he would run his Sword into one of us, if we did not make haſte, and overtake thoſe other Chairs, and go before them; I think his Words were, Damn me, I'll run my Sword in your Breech, if you don't make haſte, and get before that other Chair.

Mr Att. Gen. You ſay then, they went all away together up to Leiceſter-fields?

Browne. Yes, they did ſo.

L. Mohun. I deſire he may be ask'd, whether I did not deſire him to go home with me to my Lodging at Weſtminſter.

Browne. Yes, you did, and beg'd of him as if it had been for an Alms, That he would put it off for that Night; but when the other Chairs paſt by us at Charing-Croſs in St. Martin's-lane, he would have the Chair taken up, and us to make what haſte we could to get before them thither, or elſe he ſwore damn him he would run his Sword into one of us, if we did not make haſte to get to Leiceſter-fields before the other Chairs that went up the other Side of the Way.

Mr Att. Gen. When the other Chairs were paſt by, and you went away to Leiceſter-fields, pray tell my Lords what happened then?

Browne. We went away to Leiceſter-fields, and when we came to Green-ſtreet End, and were entring upon the Square upon the Broad Stones, Mr Coote call'd out to us, and bid us to ſet him down, and ſo did the other two Chairs, and when he put his Hand in his Pocket to diſcharge us, my Lord of Warwick put his Hand in his Pocket to pay the three Chairs, and Mr Coote offered half a Guinea to diſcharge the Chairs, and my Lord Mohun did produce 3 s. and with it diſcharged all the three Chairs, and they all three walked away together forward upon the broad Stones on the right Hand ſide of the Way; It was ſo dark a Night, I could not ſee half a dozen Yards from me; It was the darkeſt Night, I think, that ever I ſaw in all my Life, and therefore I cannot tell what became of them after they went out of the Chairs.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, did you ſee my Lord Mohun afterwards.

Browne. No, I did never ſee my Lord Mohun afterwards till now here at the Bar.

Mr Att. Gen. You ſay it was ſo dark, that you could not ſee three Yards from you, pray, what did happen afterwards when you were in the Field?

Browne. A little while after we had ſet down theſe Gentlemen, I fill'd my Pipe out of my Box, and before I could light it, I heard a Calling of Chairs, Chairs, and I went up towards the End of the Square, where the Noiſe was, and when I came there, they would have had me lift the Chair over the Rails, and I told them, if I did I could not lift it over again: but they would needs have me lift it over, and I did ſo, and by the Light of the Lanthorn I ſaw Capt. French and Captain James holding up Captain Coote, and they did deſire me to take him into our Chair, but he was in ſuch a Condition that I could not get him into the Chair; I was before It could well light my Pipe the Chairs were called.

Mr Att. Gen. Who did call, can you tell?

Browne. No, indeed I cannot tell who did call Chairs, but it was a Voice from the upper end of the Fields, and we lifted our Chair over the Rails into the Fields, and there were two Gentlemen holding up another Man; I have heard it ſaid it was Captain French and Captain James, and they cried out, Dear Coote, Dear Coote, and would would have had him gotten into the Chair, but we could not; and my Lord of Warwick did then ſay, if any Damage did come to the Chair, tho' it were 100 l. we ſhould be ſatisfied for the Damage; but we were not able to get him into the Chair, and ſo there we left him.

Mr Att. Gen. You ſay you ſee two Gentlemen holding up Mr Coote, and 'twas a very dark Night, how could you tell who thoſe Gentlemen were?

Browne. I could not ſee any Thing of them till we came up with the Candle cloſe to them.

Mr Att. Gen. And what did they ſay when you came up cloſe to the Chair?

Browne. They offered me a 100 l. Satisfaction for any Damage to my Chair; but they could not get him in, for he was at that time dead, I believe, for we went to hale him up, and to get him into the Chair, but we could not do it.

Mr Att. Gen. Can you tell who the two Perſons were that held him up?

Browne. No, but by the Deſcription of the Perſons they had ſuch Cloaths on, as that they muſt be Captain French and Captain James, but indeed I cannot ſwear directly who they were that were there, nor who they were that called for Chairs at the upper End of the Field; but when our Chair was lifted over again over the Rails, and we came to the Corner to ſee who ſhould be taken in, there came one to us who bid us carry him to the Bagnio in Long-acre, and thither we did go accordingly.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray can you tell who the Perſons were that held up the Gentleman they would have to be got into the Chair?

Browne. No, indeed, I cannot.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray can you deſcribe 'em ſo as to know them, whether my Lord of Warwick, and my Lord Mohun were thoſe two Gentlemen?

Browne. My Lord of Warwick and my Lord Mohun were not there I'm ſure, for I know them very well; I was acquainted with them before; and when I came up to theſe Gentlemen with the Candle, there was one of them was bigger than my Lord of Warwick, or my Lord Mohun; and the Elder of them had other ſort of Cloaths than either of them had on at that time, as we could ſee when we came up cloſe with the Candle to them.

Mr Att. Gen. Were there any Lights of the Lamps, that are uſually in the Streets at that time, about the Square?

Browne. Yes, there were thoſe Lights; but it was a very dark Night, and we could not ſee two Yards before us, that I am ſure of, and there was no Body elſe that I ſaw at that time at the upper end of the Field, but thoſe two Gentlemen, holding up of Captain Coote, whom we had brought up before to the Square, and left him with the Earl of Warwick and my Lord Mohun, at the Bottom of the Square; but whither they all went, indeed I can't tell: We call'd Watch, but they ſaid it was not within their Ward, and therefore they would not come. When we ſaw how ill Mr Coote was upon our coming up, and that we could not get him into the Chair, we went away, lifted our Chair over the Rails again, and carried a Gentleman to the Bagnio in Long-acre.

Lord Mohun. I have a Queſtion to ask this Witneſs, and that is, how far the Place is whither he carried the Chair, that is, from Green-ſtreet End, to the Place whither the Chairs were called for again, at the upper End of the Pails, where he found the two Gentlemen holding up Mr Coote, and endeavouring to get him up into the Chair?

Browne. I believe it is about fifty Yards, as near as I can gueſs.

Lord Mohun. I deſire to know, whether he means fifty Yards from the upper End to the lower End of Leiceſter-fields?

Browne. Yes, I believe, my Lord, it is, and better.

Lord Mohun. I deſire to ask him, whether Green-ſtreet be not at the very lower End of the Square?

Browne. Yes, my Lord, the lower End of the Square, coming out of St. Martins-lane into Green-ſtreet.

Mr Att. Gen. But did you ſee three other Chairs in that Place?

Browne. Yes, while I was filling my Pipe out of my Box, three other Chairs did come by, and went away; but within a little while after the filling of my Pipe, or rather before I could well fill it, or light it, we heard calling for Chairs again towards the upper End of the Fields, and we carried up our Chair thither, and there we found, as I have told you, two Gentlemen holding up Mr Coote, and crying out, My dear Coote, my dear Coote.

Mr Att. Gen. Can you tell who it was that called for the Chairs the ſecond Time, when you were in the Fields?

Browne. No, indeed, I cannot; but they would have us bring our Chair over the Rails, and we did lift it over; and when we came up to them, I ſaw only two Gentlemen, whom I did not know who they were particularly, till we came up cloſe to 'em that we could ſee their Cloaths, by the Light of the Candle in our Lanthorn; and they would have had us put Mr Coote into our Chair, and he being very much wounded, they would have had us carry him away; we told them it would ſpoil our Chair, and we could not beſides lift him over the Rails again; they promiſed we ſhould have any Satisfaction for Damage to our Chair, even to the value of a Hundred Pounds; we went to heave him up to put him into the Chair, and did all we could to have got him into the Chair, but we could not; ſo we lifted the Chair over the Rails again; and when we came to the Corner of the Rails, at the Way that goes to Long-acre, there we took up a Gentleman whom we carry'd to the Bagnio in Long-acre; we called out to the Watch, but they ſaid it was not within their Ward, and they would not come.

Mr Att. Gen. Can you tell who were the Perſons that were at the upper End of the Fields?

Browne. No, indeed, I cannot tell who they were.

Mr Att. Gen. Was my Lord Mohun and my Lord Warwick the two?

Browne. No, my Lord Mohun was not there, nor my Lord Warwick; I know them ſo well, that it could not be them; one of the Gentlemen was bigger than my Lord of Warwick, and the other of them had other Cloaths than my Lord Mohun.

Mr Att. Gen. Was that the Way they walked up, when they came out of the Chairs, that led to that End of the Fields where you found Mr Coote wounded?

Browne.

Browne. Yes, it was.

Mr Att. Gen. My Lords, this is but the Repetition of the Evidence that he gave to your Lordſhips Yeſterday.

L. H. St. If you have done with this Witneſs, my Lord Mohun may ask him any Queſtions.

Lord Mohun. I deſire to have him ask'd, how far is the Place where he carried the Chair at firſt into Leiceſter-fields, from the Place where they put over the Chair within the Rails, and would have taken in Mr Coote?

Browne. It is about fifty Yards, as near as I can gueſs.

Lord Mohun. I deſire to know of him, whether the Place where we were ſet down, that came in the firſt three Chairs, from Lockett's into Leiceſter-fields, to the Place where he found Mr Coote ſupported by the two Gentlemen, be not from one End of the Fields to the other?

Browne. The Place were we ſet down Captain Coote, is at the lower End of Green-ſtreet, and the Place where we found him wounded, was at the upper End by Leiceſter-houſe.

L. H. St. I think it is underſtood, that Green-ſtreet, which comes out of St. Martin's-lane, is at one End of Leiceſter-ſquare, and Leiceſter-houſe is at the other End.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray where was it that you ſaw the two Gentlemen hold up Captain Coote, and cry out, My dear Coote, my dear Coote?

Browne. It was on one Side of the Croſs-way, that leads out of the Fields towards Newport-ſtreet, and by Leiceſter-houſe.

Mr Att. Gen. But you ſay, three Chairs did go up towards the upper End of the Fields?

Browne. Yes, they did ſo; but our three Chairs that came away firſt from the Greyhound Tavern, ſet down at Green-ſtreet End, and the three Gentlemen that came in our Chairs went up the Fails to them; but whither they went I can't tell, but ſoon after we heard calling for Chairs again, and ſo we went up, where we found the two Gentlemen holding up Captain Coote, and ſaying, My dear Coote, my dear Coote.

Mr Att. Gen. But when you were called the ſecond time, that is, into the Fields, where was the Place you ſay that you found them in?

Browne. It was within the Rails, one Side of the Croſs-way towards Leiceſter-houſe.

Lord Mohun. Pray was that the direct Way that I went from the Place that I was ſet down, that is the lower End of Green-ſtreet, to the Place that they afterwards went to, which was the Bagnio in Long-acre.

Browne. When Captain Coote, and my Lord Mohun were ſet down, and walked away upon the paved Stones of the Square, to the Place where I found the two Gentlemen holding up Capt. Coote, was the quite contrary Way from the End of Green-ſtreet to the Standard Tavern.

L. H. St. Who is your next Witneſs, Mr. Attorney?

Mr Att. Gen. The next Witneſs that we call, is Robert Applegate.

Who was Sworn.

L. H. St. What do you ask this Witneſs?

Mr Att. Gen. My Lords, this is the Chairman that carried my Lord Mohun to Leiceſter-fields from Locket's; he will give your Lordſhips an Account when he carry'd him, who he carry'd, and what happened afterwards, which is all but to the ſame Purpoſe with the Evidence that he gave Yeſterday. But pray, who was that whom you carried on the Thirtieth of October laſt to Leiceſter-fields?

Applegate. I carried my Lord Mohun from Locket's, at the Grey-hound Tavern in the Strand to Leiceſter-fields.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, How many Chairs were there of you that went away together?

Applegate. There were Three of us that went away together, one carry'd my Lord Warwick, we my Lord Mohun, and the third carry'd Captain Coote, which was the firſt Chair that went away.

Mr Att. Gen. Whither did you go?

Applegate. We went to the Corner of St. Martin's Lane.

Mr Att. Gen. Who do you ſay were in the other two Chairs?

Applegate. My Lord of Warwick, and my Lord Mohun.

Mr Att. Gen. When they came out firſt, What Orders or Directions were given?

Applegate. My Lord Mohun ſaid, That he and my Lord of Warwick, and Captain Coote, would go all three together down to Weſtminſter, and there they would all lie together, or be together that Night.

Mr Att. Gen. What Anſwer was given to what my Lord Mohun ſaid?

Applegate. Indeed I do not remember any Anſwer that was given at all; but after that my Lord Mohun went into the Chair, and ordered us to follow down the other two Chairs towards Weſtminſter, and we put up the Chair and came away; and when we came to St. Martin's Lane End, the Chair that carried Capt. Coote turn'd up the Lane, and we being ordered to follow the other Chairs, went up the Lane too; but my Lord Mohun perceiving that they were not going down to Weſtminſter, call'd out to ſtop, juſt when we were entred into St. Martin's Lane, over-againſt the Back-door of the Croſs-Keys Tavern, and made the other Chairs to ſtand, and all the three Chairs were ſet a-breaſt before that Place, and my Lord Mohun ask'd Capt. Coote whither he was going? and he anſwer'd, to Leiceſter-fields: He beg'd of him, as one would beg for an Alms, that he would not go that Night, for the Buſineſs could not be done that Night, and it was better to put it off till the next Morning.

Mr Att. Gen. Did they name what the Buſineſs was, that was to be done?

Applegate. No; but my Lord Mohun did ſay, 'twas impoſſible to be done that Night.

Mr Att. Gen. Well, and what happened afterwards, while you were in that Place?

Applegate. While we were there, three other Chairs paſt by us, on the other Side of the Way, and going forward up the Street, Captain Coote order'd their Chairs to follow, and ſo we did to Green-ſtreet End, and there we ſet 'em down.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray can you remember what was ſaid by my Lord Mohun at the Time when the other Chairs paſs'd by?

Applegate. He was then deſiring and begging of Capt. Coote to go home to Weſtminſter, telling him that it could not be done that Night, but it muſt be defer'd till the next Morning; but Captain Coote ſaid he would not delay it till the next Morning, but he would go to Leiceſter-fields that Night, and all three Chairs were ordered to go forward, and we did go on forward to Leiceſter-fields; my Lord Mohun, indeed, did beg and deſire as heartily as, I ſay, a Man for an Alms, that they would let it alone alone for that Night; but Captain Coote would not, and ordered his Chair to go forwards.

Mr Att. Gen. You ſay, my Lord Mohun beg'd as heartily as if it were for an Alms to defer it for that Night?

Applegate. Yes, he did do ſo; ſo that I do really think that he was not concerned in the Matter.

Mr Att. Gen. If he were ſo earneſt to defer and put off the Buſineſs, how came you to carry him thither that Night? What Expreſſions did he uſe, particularly in St. Martin's Lane, after the other Chairs were paſs'd by?

Applegate. He ſaid, If you muſt go, I'll go with you and ſee it; and he bid us take up and follow the other Chairs wherein Capt. Coote and my Lord Warwick were; and we did go.

Mr Att. Gen. And where did you ſet my Lord Mohun down?

Applegate. At the hither End of Leiceſter Square, at the Corner of Green-ſtreet, the lower Corner of the paved Stones, going up to Leiceſter Houſe.

Mr Att. Gen. What became of the three Gentlemen that you ſet down at the End of Green-ſtreet?

Applegate. They went all three together up the Stone-pavement, towards the upper End of the Square, towards the Standard Tavern, I think.

Mr Att. Gen. Did they go together, or did they go aſunder?

Applegate. They went together, I think; I did not ſee them part one from another.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray did you ſee my Lord Mohun afterwards?

Applegate. No, I did not.

Mr Att. Gen. What became of you afterwards?

Applegate. I ſtay'd a little at the lower End of the Square to take a Pipe of Tobacco, and when I had filled my Pipe, I heard calling Chairs, Chairs again, at the upper End of the Square; and when we brought up our Chair to the upper End of the Fields, the firſt Man that I did ſee was my Lord of Warwick, who would have had us put over our Chair within the Rails; but we told him we could not get it over again if any one was put in it: but if they would come out into the Square, there we were ready to carry 'em any where; and when we came to the upper End of the Square, there was Captain French, and we took him into the Chair, and he bid us carry him to the Bagnio in Long-acre; and at Newport-ſtreet End he would have had us ſtop and pull off his Cloaths, for he believed he was a dead Man.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, Who did you ſee there at the upper End of Leiceſter-fields?

Applegate. No Body, indeed, but my Lord of Warwick and Mr French.

Mr Att. Gen. No Body but them two.

Applegate. No; no Body but them two.

Mr Att. Gen. Where do you ſay that was, that the Calling for Chairs was, and where you brought your Chair?

Applegate. It was juſt at the upper End of Leiceſter-fields, by Leiceſter-houſe, and by the Standard-Tavern.

Mr Att. Gen. Who was it that you there took up?

Applegate. It was Captain French.

Mr Att. Gen. Whither then did you carry him?

Applegate. We were order'd to go to the Bagnio in Long-acre; and thither we, and another Chair that carried my Lord Warwick, did go; and when we came there, we did knock a good while before we could get any Body up; and when they were let in, we came away, and were bid to call for our Fare the next Morning.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray where was it that you took up Captain French?

Applegate. It was at the upper end of all Leiceſter-fields.

Mr Att. Gen. And you went away with him, did you?

Applegate. Yes, as ſoon as ever we took him up; it was as ſoon as ever we could, at the outſide of the Rails. I was the firſt Chair that, upon the calling for Chairs after they came thither, was by the Standard-Tavern; and from thence we went into Long-acre.

Mr Att. Gen. Whereabout is the Standard-Tavern?

Applegate. It is at the further end of the Fields by Leiceſter-houſe; it is by Cramburne-lane, which is the Street that leads into Newport-ſtreet, and ſo into St Martins-lane; and then we were to go to the Bagnio in the Long-acre.

L. H. St. My Lord Mohun will you ask this Witneſs any Queſtions?

Lord Mohun. Yes, my Lord, I have a Queſtion or two to ask him; I deſire to ask him, Whether, when we were going along, and the Chair, in which Captain Coote, was turn'd up St Martins-lane, I did not call out to have him ſtop, and know whither they were going?

Applegate. Yes, my Lord, you did.

Lord Mohun. Pray whither did I bid you go, when you firſt took me up at Locket's?

Applegate. My Lord Mohun bid me follow thoſe Chairs, but go down to Weſtminſter, for he ſaid they all three would go together, and lie together that Night.

Lord Mohun. My Lords, I deſire this Man may be ask'd, whether there were not ſeveral Ways of going out of the Fields, beſides thoſe of Green-ſtreet and the Standard-Tavern?

Applegate. Yes, my Lord, no doubt there are.

Lord Mohun. Then I'll leave it to your Lordſhips to make the Obſervation; for there is no Evidence that I was ever ſeen in the Field after I alighted out of the Chair at Green-ſtreet end; and I hope your Lordſhips do obſerve, That he has told you, I was as earneſt in begging Captain Coote to defer going to Leiceſter-fields till the next Morning, and begg'd as heartily of him for it, as any Beggar would do for an Alms.

L. H. St. My Lord, their Lordſhips, no doubt, have made that Obſervation; for he did ſay ſo.

Lord Mohun. My Lords, I have no more to ask him.

L. H. St. Mr Attorney, Who is your next Witneſs?

Mr Att. Gen. Our next Witneſs is Peter Ketro, who likewiſe was a Chairman that carried my Lord Mohun into the Place were the Fact was done.

Peter Ketro was Sworn.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray will you acquaint my Lords who you carried upon the Thirtieth of October laſt, from the Greyhound Tavern to Leiceſter-fields?

Ketro. Upon the Thirtieth of October laſt, in the Morning (which was Sunday) very early, we were call'd to the Door of the Greyhound-Tavern, and when we came there, there were ſeveral other Chairs there, for there was no Coach, it ſeems, to be had.

Mr Att.

Mr Att. Gen. And who was in your Chair?

Ketro. My Lord Mohun; and there were two other Chairs that went away together, wherein were Captain Coote and my Lord of Warwick.

Mr Att. Gen. And whither did you go from thence?

Ketro. We went along the Strand, and when we came to the end of St Martins-lane, the Chair that Capt. Coote was in, we ſuppoſed by his Order, turn'd up the Lane; for my Lord Mohun had given us Order to go down to Weſtminſter; and then when we came there, to the end of St. Martins-lane, he call'd out to ſtop, and to have the other Chairs ſtopt, and they ſtood ſtill at the Back-door of the Croſs-Keys Tavern, which is at the end of St Martins-lane, and all the three Chairs did make a ſtand at that Place, and my Lord of Warwick, and my Lord Mohun, and Captain Coote talk'd together; and my Lord Mohun did deſire Captain Coote to go down to Weſtminſter, and to put off the Buſineſs for that Night, for nothing of Buſineſs could be done; then my Lord of Warwick did ſay, if they did go on he would go on with them; but my Lord Mohun did endeavour to perſuade 'em to go down to Weſtminſter to Lodge, for nothing could be done that Night; but when the other three Chairs paſt by, on the other Side of the Way, and Captain Coote would needs go forwards to Leiceſter-fields, my Lord Mohun did bid us take up and follow them; and he ſaid, if they would go, he would go and ſee what came of it; ſo we took up, and followed the other Chairs, and went up the Lane, and into Green-ſtreet, to the lower end of Green-ſtreet, next the Square, and there our three Chairs ſet down my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mohun, and Captain Coote, and were diſcharged.

Mr Att. Gen. And what became of them after?

Ketro. There they went up upon the broad Stones, up towards the upper end of the Fields.

Mr Att. Gen. Did they go all together, or did they part?

Ketro. They went together, for any Thing I know; I ſaw no parting, and indeed it was ſo dark a Night, that I cannot tell what became of 'em after they went out of the Chairs: It was one of the darkeſt Nights that ever I ſaw.

Mr Att. Gen. Well then, pray what happened after that?

Ketro. I went to light my Pipe of Tobacco, and before we could light a Pipe of Tobacco, there was calling at the upper end of the Square for Chairs again, and ſo up we went with our Chair to the upper end of the Fields; and when we came there, ſome Body call'd out to have us lift our Chair over within the Rails, but we told 'em, if we did ſo, we could not get it over again, if any Body were put into it; and ſo we were bid to go to the end of the Rails, in Order to the getting out from that Place, and getting in of any Body that was to go into the Chair; and when we came to the end of the Rails, we took up Captain French, and he bid us carry him to the Bagnio in the Long-acre, and we did ſo, and at Newport-ſtreet end he would have had us have pull'd off his Cloaths, for, he ſaid, he believ'd he was a Dying Man; but we carryed him on to the Bagnio in Long-acre, and there came after us my Lord of Warwick in another Chair; and there we ſet 'em down.

Mr Att. Gen. I have a Queſtion to ask you, Friend, Did you not ſee my Lord Mohun after you ſet him down at Green-ſtreet end.

Ketro. No, indeed, not I; I did not, after he went out of the Chair.

Mr Att. Gen. Can you tell whither he went after he went out of the Chair?

Ketro. No, I can't tell whither he went; they all three went up the pav'd Stones together, but whither they went I can't tell.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you hear of any other Chair that was at that end of the Fields at that Time?

Ketro. There was another Chair at that Time, at the upper end of the Fields.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you hear 'em deſire to take Mr Coote into that Chair?

Ketro. No, I did not.

Mr Att. Gen. Nor do you know any Thing of their putting Mr Coote in a Chair?

Ketro. No, indeed not I; what they did as to the other Chair, that was before, they can beſt tell, for I can't.

L. H. St. Who is your next Witneſs, Mr Attorney?

Mr Att. Gen. Richard Edwards.

L. H. St. What do you call him to?

Mr Att. Gen. Becauſe we would not trouble your Lordſhips with the Repetition of every one of the Witneſſes that were here Yeſterday; this is the Man that carry'd Mr Dockwra into the Field.

Edwards was Sworn.

L. H. St. Mr Attorney, What do you ask this Witneſs?

Mr Att. Gen. Pray do you acquaint my noble Lords here, who you carried in your Chair to Leiceſter-fields?

Edwards. Indeed, I can't tell; there were three Chairs that took up three Perſons at the Greyhound Tavern in the Strand, after three other Chairs were gone away, and every one had a Gentleman in 'em: I, for my Part, did not know who was in our Chair; but when we ſhut up the Chair we were bid to go to the Standard Tavern in Leiceſter-fields, and thither we did go, and there we ſet down the Gentleman that was in our Chair, and away we went; and as we went up St. Martin's Lane, we paſs'd by the Three other Chairs that turn'd up before, at the Back-door of the Croſs-Keys Tavern.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you ſee the other three Chairs in Leiceſter-fields afterwards?

Edwards. No, indeed I did not; but went up to the Standard Tavern, and ſet down the Gentleman that was in our Chair, and there we left him, and went away.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, Can you tell who it was that you carried?

Edwards. Indeed, I cannot very well tell; but I believe it was Captain James, or Mr Dockwra.

Mr Att. Gen. When you came to the Standard Tavern, pray, What happen'd? What paſs'd there?

Edwards. To the beſt of my Knowledge, I took hold of the Knocker of the Door, and knock'd at the Door, and the Gentleman came out, and was ſet down there; and he gave me a Shilling, and away I went with my Chair.

Mr Att. Gen. When you ſet him down at the Standard Tavern, pray, What did he ſay?

Edwards. He gave me a Shilling, and bid me go about my Buſineſs; and ſo we went away.

Mr Att. Gen. Was you there when you heard 'em call Chairs back?

Edwards. No, we went away as ſoon as we had ſet 'em down at the Standard Tavern.

Mr Att.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you obſerve which Way they went after you ſet him down?

Edwards. No, indeed I did not; I never minded which Way they went, after we ſet him down.

Mr Att. Gen. Which Way did you go?

Edwards. We went away down towards Charing-croſs.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you ſee any other Chairs in the Square when you went down?

Edwards. Yes, there were other Chairs at the other End of the Square.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you ſee any Gentlemen as you came down, walking up towards the Standard Tavern, upon the pav'd Stones?

Edwards. No, indeed, my Lords, not that I remember; but I did ſee the other three Chairs as I paſs'd by at Green-ſtreet End; who were in 'em, or what was become of them that were in 'em, that I can't tell.

Mr Att. Gen. What did they ſay to you any of 'em at that Time?

Edwards. They ask'd us if we were going away, and we told them yes; we were diſcharg'd.

Mr Att. Gen. But pray, Did you not meet any of the other Gentlemen upon the pav'd Stones?

Edwards. No, indeed, I did not ſee, to the beſt of my Remembrance, any other Gentlemen upon the paved Stones.

Mr Att. Gen. What did the other Chairmen ſay to you?

Edwards. They ask'd if we were coming away; and we left 'em behind us.

L. H. St. Has my Lord Mohun any Queſtions to ask him?

Lord Mohun. No, I have not.

L. H. St. Mr Attorney, who is your next Witneſs?

Mr Att. Gen. Jackſon, who was the Chairman that carry'd Capt. James. (He was Sworn.)

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, Will you acquaint my Lords who you carry'd from Locket's to Leiceſter-fields?

Jackſon. Captain James: There were ſix Chairs in all: I do not know who went in the other Chairs, but in the three Chairs that went together, when we went, there was Captain Dockwra, Captain French, and Captain James.

Mr Att. Gen. And where did you ſet him down?

Jackſon. At the Standard Tavern in the Square of Leiceſter-fields.

Mr Att. Gen. What became of him after you ſet him down?

Jackſon. We knock'd twice at the Tavern Door, and then he gave us a Shilling, and we went away preſently, and went down on the left Hand upon the pav'd Stones, towards Green-ſtreet End.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you meet any Perſons coming up upon the paved Stones?

Jackſon. Yes, my Lord, I did.

Mr Att. Gen. Can you tell who thoſe Perſons were?

Jackſon. Indeed, I cannot tell.

Mr Att. Gen. How many were they in number?

Jackſon. They were two or three; but it was ſo dark, that I cannot tell how many they were.

Mr Att. Gen. Which Way were they walking?

Jackſon. They were going up towards the middle Street.

Mr Att. Gen. How far was that from the Standard Tavern?

Jackſon. It might be about ſixty Yards from the Standard Tavern.

Mr Att. Gen. You ſay there were three Chairs ſtanding at the End of Green-ſtreet when you came by?

Jackſon. Yes, there were ſo.

Mr Att. Gen. Had you no Diſcourſe with them?

Jackſon. No, indeed, I had not.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you not ask them why they ſtay'd there?

Jackſon. No, indeed, I did not; we paſs'd by and went home.

Mr Att. Gen. You know my Lord Mohun, don't you?

Jackſon. Yes, I do, very well.

Mr Att. Gen. Was not my Lord Mohun in that Company?

Jackſon. He was when the ſix Chairs were call'd to Lockets; but I did not hear any Diſcourſe, that I can remember, that paſs'd among 'em, nor do I know, or did hear, what became of my Lord Mohun afterwards.

Mr Att. Gen. Were thoſe the other three Chairs that went away from Locket's firſt, that you ſaw at Green ſtreet End?

Jackſon. Indeed, my Lords, I believe ſo; I cannot ſwear that they were thoſe three Chairs; when we had ſet down Captain James, we did not look back any Way at all, but went away home, it being ſo late and ſo dark.

L. H. St. My Lord Mohun, will you ask this Witneſs any Queſtions?

Lord Mohun. No, my Lord.

Mr Att. Gen. Then, my Lord, we ſhall call William Salmon who was the Surgeon that did ſearch the Wound by the Coroner's Command, when he took the Inquiſition upon the View of the Body.

Who was Sworn.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, Did you view the Body of Mr Coote after he was Dead?

Salmon. Yes, I did view his Body by the Command of the Coroner at the Watch houſe where it lay in St. Martin's Lane.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray then will you acquaint my Lords what Wounds you found upon the Body?

Salmon. There was one upon the left Part of the Breaſt, near the Collar-bone, which, upon probing, I found to be half an Inch in Breadth, and four or five Inches deep downward; the other was a Wound that was in his left Side, juſt under the ſhort Ribs, and that was upward; and upon probing of it, I found it was about the Breadth of an Inch at the Orifice, and about the depth of five or ſix Inches, and pierced through the Diaphragma.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, Did you obſerve any Difference in the Wounds, or in the Orifice of them?

Salmon. That below was a large Wound, larger than the other.

Mr Att. Gen. Were the Wounds, do you think, given with two Swords, or with one and the ſame Sword?

Salmon. Indeed, I can't tell.

Mr Att. Gen. Did you look upon either, and which of them to be Mortal?

Salmon. I look'd upon both to be Mortal.

L. H. St. If you have done with him, Mr Attorney, will my Lord Mohun ask him any Queſtions?

Lord Mohun. No, I ſhall ask him no Queſtions, for I think I need not, I was never prov'd to be in the Company, in the Place where the Fighting was.

Mr Att. Gen. We have done with calling of Witneſſes, till we hear what my Lord Mohun ſays to it.

L. H. St. My Lord Mohun, This is the Time (the King's Evidence being finiſhed) for you to call your Witneſſes, and make your Defence.

Lord Mohun. My Lords, I ſhall not call many Witneſſes, for I think there is nothing that fixes any Thing of Guilt, as to Capt. Coote's Death, as to me; but I ſhall call one Witneſs that was here (as I underſtand) Yeſterday, but not examined, and that is a Perſon that ſaw me afterwards, and knows that I had a Wound in my Finger laid open, and that Wound was received at Locket's, by endeavouring to part 'em when they were quarrelling there at that Time.

The Witneſs ſtood up.

L. H. St. Tho' you are not upon your Oath, yet you are as much obliged, in Juſtice and Conſcience, to ſpeak the exact Truth, as if you was upon your Oath, therefore have a Care what Teſtimony you give.

Witneſs. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. St. What is the Queſtion you would have this Witneſs ask'd?

Lord Mohun. What he knows of my being Wounded about this Time, and what I declared concerning that Wound, how I received it?

L. H. St. I will not refuſe to ask the Queſtion, but I muſt acquaint your Lordſhip that it ſignifies nothing in Point of Evidence at Law, what you your ſelf did declare after the Fact was over. It is Material what you did to prevent this Miſchief before it happened, but not what you ſaid or declared after the Thing was done. You hear my Lord's Queſtion, What ſay you to it?

Witneſs. I was at my Lord Mohun's ſeveral Days after this Buſineſs happened, at the Lodging where he lay, and where I ſaw him; he had a Hurt in his Hand, and it was laid open, it was in the Finger, and that he ſaid was all he got by endeavouring to part People from fighting.

Mr Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, when was this?

Witneſs. It was ſeveral Days after the Death of Mr Coote.

L. H. St. I told your Lordſhip before, that in Point of Law, ſuch Evidence would ſignify nothing; becauſe your declaring any Matter, after the Thing was done, in relation to the Fact, could not be admitted as legal Evidence; if any of my Lords be of another Opinion, I ſuppoſe they will declare it?

Lord Mohun. My Lords, I ſubmit it to your Lordſhips; I only deſire he may be ask'd, Whether he ſaw my Hand or no, and how it was?

Witneſs. I ſaw my Lord's Finger, and it had been laid open ſome Time before; and he ſaid, he had received that Wound by endeavouring to part Captain French and Captain Coote: That's all I know of the Matter.

Mr Att. Gen. But, pray, When was That that he declared ſo? How long after the Death of Mr Coote?

Witneſs. It was ſeveral Days after That.

L. H. St. You hear, in Point of Law, That can be no Evidence at all: If you have no other Witneſſes to call, your Lordſhip would do well to ſum up your Evidence, and make what Obſervations you think fit upon the Evidence has been given for the King?

Lord Mohun. My Lords, I hope I ſhall make my Defence, againſt this Accuſation, with all the Modeſty and Submiſſion to your Lordſhips, that becomes me: I am very much aſhamed to be brought before your Lordſhips upon any ſuch Account as this again, after having been once before your Lordſhips upon ſuch an Account before. I may very well ſay, I am not guilty at all of having any Hand in Mr Coote's Death; and I can aſſure your Lordſhips, I will avoid all Occaſions of giving you any Trouble of this Nature for the future: I do not doubt but to acquit my ſelf of all Guilt, in relation to this Matter; and, indeed, with Submiſſion to your Lordſhips, there has been no Evidence given, relating to me, that does infer any Guilt upon me, to prove that I was at the Place where this Fact was done; therefore I ſhall only make ſome few little Remarks upon what has been ſaid, and leave it all to your Lordſhips Conſideration.

The King's Council firſt have call'd the Drawer of the Houſe, and he has ſatisfied, that I did ſo far endeavour to part 'em, that I threaten'd to ſend for the Guards and ſecure 'em, if they would not go home; and when they went into the Chairs, I went into my Chair, on purpoſe to follow 'em down to Weſtminſter, whither I would have had them gone; the Prick that I got in my Finger, of itſelf ſpeaks, that I endeavour'd to part 'em, and ſo the Drawer he has told you; I am ſure it was the Occaſion of a great deal of Pain to me, it being forc'd to be afterwards laid open. The Chairman that carry'd Mr Coote, ſwears, That I, at the Door of the Tavern in St. Martin's Lane, did make 'em ſtand, and when I came up to 'em, I beg'd, as for an Alms, that they would go home; and I ask'd Coote whither he was going, which proves that I was not conſcious of any Deſign of going to fight at that Time: Your Lordſhips are likewiſe told, That when we came to Green-ſtreet End, I was ſet down upon the pav'd Stones. I was ſo, indeed, and I went up about five or ſix Yards, but that is all that's prov'd; but I did take the quite contrary Way to the Place where Mr Coote was wounded. Then there was another Chairman, one Applegate, and truly what Uſe they make of him, I cannot imagine, as an Evidence againſt me; for he ſays, I was very earneſt in St. Martin's Lane to hinder any Quarrel, and indeed at the Tavern-Door, at Locket's, I was ſo at firſt; and when we came to St. Martin's Lane End, he ſays, that I order'd 'em to make them ſtop, and ask Coote whither he was going, and he ſaying he was going to Leiceſter-fields, I endeavour'd all I could to perſuade him to the contrary, and did entreat him that he would go no farther, but go down to Weſtminſter to his Lodging, or lodge with me; but Mr Coote would not give me Time, at that Time the other Chairs coming by, to give him further Reaſons, but would go away: And then it is objected, that I ſhould ſay, That if they would go, I would go and ſee: That was, my Lords, I would go on till I could have a further Opportunity to prevent any Fighting among them: And the Witneſs Ketro ſays, my Lord of Warwick did bid the Chair to follow the other Chair in which Captain Coote was. My Deſign ſign was for Weſtminſter, to go to my Lodgings, and when we came to the End of the Square, if I did go up the whole Stones, it was directly the contrary Way to the Place where it is prov'd this Fact happen'd. For the next Witneſs, Edwards, he ſays he ſaw no Body walking upon the pav'd Stones; and truly, I did go the direct Way into Newport-ſtreet: And for my not appearing before, it was for avoiding Confinement; and I muſt ſubmit the whole Matter to your Lordſhips, how far any Guilt is fix'd upon me, not being prov'd to be in the Field at the Time when they fought, or ſeen to be in the Company when they came up and found Mr Coote wounded, and dying, or dead. It is a plain Caſe I could have no Hand at all in his Death; and ſo I think I need give no further Trouble to your Lordſhips, for I believe your Lordſhips cannot but be ſatisfied, that, as I have pleaded I am not guilty of killing this Gentleman: Nay, it is impoſſible that I ſhould go into the Field to be a Second, when my own right Hand was wounded, for I was not able to hold my Sword in my Sword-Hand, becauſe of that Wound. I ſubmit the Matter intirely to your Lordſhips, from whom I am ſure to meet with every Thing that will be ſuitable to Honour and Juſtice.

L. H. St. The King's Council are now to ſum up the Evidence for the King.

Mr Sollicitor General began to ſum up the Evidence for the King, but his Voice was ſo low, and the Noiſe in the Hall ſo great, that he could not be heard, and therefore the Lord High Steward moved the Houſe that he might ſtand by the Priſoner at the Bar, which was ſomething nearer than the Place where the King's Council ſtood, as was done the Day before; and it was order'd accordingly.

L. H. St. Mr Sollicitor, Pray raiſe your Voice as much as you can, that all my noble Lords may hear you.

Several of the Lords did move, That one that had a better Voice might ſum it up, and particularly Mr Cowper; but it being uſually the Part of the Sollicitor General, and he only having prepared himſelf, he was ordered to go on; but for the better Hearing of him, ſeveral of the Lords towards the upper End of the Houſe, removed from their Seats down, as they did the Day before, to ſit upon the Wooll-packs.

Mr Soll. Gen. My Lords, I am of Council for the King againſt this noble Lord, my Lord Mohun, the Priſoner at the Bar, who has been upon his Tryal this Day, and it comes to my Turn to ſum up the Evidence that has been given againſt him, which is but a Repetition of what your Lordſhips, no doubt of it, have taken exact Notice of; but I muſt ſhortly ſum up the Chief of the Particulars thereof, and make a few Remarks what of that Evidence ſticks particularly upon my Lord Mohun. The firſt Witneſs was the Drawer of the Houſe, at the Greyhound in the Strand, who gives you an Account who were at his Maſter's Houſe the Nine and twentieth of October laſt, and particularly, that my Lord Mohun was there in the ſame Company wherein this Gentleman was, that was unfortunately killed, and that he continued in that Company till very late that Night, or rather, very early the next Morning; when, after the Reckoning was paid, they came all down to the Bar and call'd for Coaches; and he tells you, that he was ſent out, and he tells you what he was ſent for, he was ſent for Coaches, and ſo cannot give any Account what paſs'd while he was gone; but when upon calling for Coaches none could be had, there was Order for Chairs to be call'd, and Chairs were brought to the Door; and when he came in again he heard the Claſhing of Swords, and there were Three on the one Side of the Bar, and Three of 'em on the Other: Indeed he does ſay, he did not ſee when the Swords were drawn, but at that Time they were putting up their Swords, my Lord Mohun was in the Company, upon which I would obſerve to your Lordſhips, that there had been ſome Fighting; for the Witneſs ſays, upon my Lord's Queſtion, that my Lord call'd for a Napkin to put his Hand in, for his Finger was cut; and he ſaid, This is all that I have got by endeavouring to part them; ſo that it ſhews there was a Quarrel, and my Lord Mohun was in it: When the Chairs were brought to the Door, they went into them, there went Mr Coote into One, into the Second my Lord of Warwick, and into the Third my Lord Mohun, ſo that ſtill my Lord Mohun was in the Company, and they went away together; and tho' it is pretended by my Lord, That he did all he could to prevent the Quarrel, yet he gave Directions to the Chairmen that carry'd him to follow the other Chairs, and your Lordſhips perceive what the Buſineſs was that they went about, and the other three Chairs followed after preſently, ſo that they all went away together; nay, my Lord himſelf does not diſown his being in the Company till they came into Leiceſter-fields. Next I would obſerve what fell from Brown, who carry'd the very Gentleman that was kill'd, Mr Coote, that my Lord Mohun was in One of the three Firſt Chairs, and that they all went together, till that my Lord Mohun call'd out to ſtop, upon the Turning up into St. Martin's Lane; and tho' they ſtop'd in St. Martin's Lane, and my Lord Mohun did intreat them to let it alone at that Time, yet it was only to let it alone till the Morning; and when the other three Chairs paſs'd by on the other Side of the Way, and Coote would have them go on; my Lord Mohun ſaid, If they would go on, he would go with them and ſee it. Applegate, the Chairman, that carry'd my Lord Mohun, ſays the ſame: And ſo it is plain my Lord Mohun did go on with an Intention to make one in the Affray; for Applegate ſays, That when my Lord Mohun could not prevail upon his perſuaſions, and when Coote went away after the other three Chairs were paſs'd by, my Lord Mohun ſaid, If you do go, I muſt go and ſee it; and they did go all together: And the Chairman ſays, he ſet my Lord Mohun down at the End of Green-ſtreet, at the lower End of the Fields, where the other two Chairs ſet down Captain Coote and my Lord of Warwick, and that they all three walk'd up together towards the Standard Tavern; ſtill all this proves my Lord did go there, and that he himſelf did ſay he would go and ſee it: And it is plain that my Lord Mohun did go as far as Leiceſter-fields, and it is only his Declaration concerning himſelf, without any Proof, that he went away, and did not go into the Fields, to the Place where the Fact was done; and we think it is ſufficient Proof that he was one of them that were concerned, becauſe we do prove, that he was all along in the Company till the very Time that they came into the Place where the Thing was done. Then there is the Chairman that carry'd Mr James, and he tells your Lordships, That the three First Chairs that went up St. Martin's Lane, went to the Standard Tavern, and there they knock'd at the Door, and paid the Chairmen, and went out of their Chair; and so says the other Chairmen that carry'd Capt. Dockwra and Capt. French; and they say also, That when they came down the paved Stones again, they heard Chairs call'd for, but they did not interpose at all in the Matter, but the other two Chairs it seems did, for they went up to the upper end of the Square, where there were two Persons holding up Mr Coote, and after they put the Chair over the Rails, in order to have him carried away in a Chair, but they could not get him into the Chair. I would likewise observe from the Evidence of the Surgeon, who gives you an Account of what nature the Wounds were, one was in the Breast, near the Collar-bone, on the left Side, the other was under the Short-ribs, on the left Side too, which could not be given him by the Person that he was fighting with, he being a right-hand Man, as was prov'd by his Servant: My Lord Mohun has call'd but one Witness, which is only about a little Circumstance of his being wounded in the Hand, and having the Wound laid open, but that was two Days after this Fact was done; my Lord Mohun could not but know that the Matters he was to answer, related to a Time before. It must be agreed to me, that they all three, my Lord of Warwick, my Lord Mohun, and Mr Coote, went all away together, that they were carried to Leicester-fields, that they were set down together, and walk'd up together upon the stone Pavement, when the others were gone towards the upper end of the Fields; so that in all probability, they all went together into the Place where the Fight was, and were all concern'd; and if so, my Lord Mohun must be equally guilty with the rest, my Lord Mohun knowing what Business it was they were going about. It must be left to your Lordships, whether he shall not be presumed to be there when the Fact was done, especially his saying, when he could not prevail in St Martins-lane, to put the Matter off till another Time, that if they did go on, he would go and see it; so that putting these two Circumstances together, his going in one of the Chairs with my Lord Warwick and Coote, and what he said after when the Chairs stopt in St Martins-lane, we think are Circumstances to induce your Lordships to believe, that he was present at the Time of the Fact committed, or very near the Place; and if that be so, how far he is guilty must be submitted to your Lordships consideration; and this is all that I shall trouble your Lordships with, without repeating the particular Evidence, which your Lordships, I am sure, very well remember.

Lord Mohun. My Lords, I desire I may say one Word in answer to what Mr Sollicitor has observ'd; I think your Lordships have had no Evidence given you where Mr Coote was kill'd, but only the Chairman that was desir'd to bring over his Chair within the Rails, says it was towards Panton-street, which is quite contrary to the Place where I was set down at Green-street end; I must then be at a very great Distance from the Place where the Fact was done.

L. H. St. If all have done on both Sides, then your Lordships have nothing left but to consider of the Evidence which has been given, which I suppose you will do among your selves;

Lords. Ay, Adjourn, Adjourn.

L. H. St. Is it your pleasure, my Lords, to Adjourn into the House of Lords?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

L. H. St. This House is Adjourn'd into the House of Lords.

[And the Lords went back in the same Order to the House of Lords, and there they stay'd for about two Hours Time, debateing the Matter among themselves, and afterwards returned again into the Court in Westminster-hall, and were seated all in their Places as they were before, and the Lord High Steward was seated in the Chair before the Throne.]

Cl. of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serj. at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes, My Lord High Steward of England, his Grace, does straitly charge and command all manner of Persons here present to be uncovered, and keep Silence, upon pain of Imprisonment.

L. H. St. Is it your Lordships pleasure to go on now to give your Judgment?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

L. H. St. Then I must pray your Lordships, to give me Time to write down your Opinions distinctly, that I may be able to acquaint you with certainty of the Numbers.

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Then the Lord High Steward stood up, and put the Question to every Lord, beginning with the Youngest Baron, to know what his Judgment was, and the Lord to whom he call'd, stood up in his Place uncovered, and laying his Right Hand upon his Breast, delivered his Judgment in the Manner following.

Then the Lord High Steward of England, ſtanding up uncovered, putting his right Hand upon his Breaſt, ſaid, My Lord Mohun is not guilty, upon my Honour.

Then the Lord High Steward ſeated himſelf again in the Chair, to take the Number of the Peers who had given their Judgment.

L. H. St. My Lords, Eighty Seven of your Lordſhips are preſent, and you are all unanimouſly of Opinion, That my Lord Mohun is not guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he ſtands Indicted.

Lords. Ay, Ay.

L. H. St. Let the Priſoner be call'd to the Bar.

Cl. of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serjeant at Arms. O yes, O yes, O yes, my Lord High Steward of England, his Grace, does ſtraitly charge and command all Manner of Perſons here preſent, to keep Silence, upon Pain of Impriſonment.

Then he was brought forth to the Bar, and the Lord High Steward addreſs'd himſelf to him in this Manner.

L. H. St. My Lord Mohun, you have been Indicted for the Murther of Mr Richard Coote, upon which Indictment your Lordſhip has been Arraigned, and upon your Arraignment has pleaded Not-guilty, and for your Tryal, you have put your ſelf upon your Peers, my Lords here preſent; ſent; and they have heard the Evidence, and have conſidered of it, and delivered their Judgment upon the whole Matter; and I am to acquaint your Lordſhip, they are all unanimouſly of Opinion, That your Lordſhip is not guilty of the Felony and Murther whereof you ſtand Indicted; and therefore your Lordſhip is diſcharged from your Impriſonment, paying your Fees.

Then the Lord Mohun made his Reverence to the Lords, and expreſs'd himſelf thus.

Lord Mohun. My Lords, I do not know which way to expreſs my great Thankfulneſs and Acknowledgment of your Lordſhips great Honour and Juſtice to me; but I crave leave to aſſure your Lordſhips, That I will endeavour to make it the Buſineſs of the future Part of my Life, ſo to behave my ſelf in my Converſation in the World, as to avoid all Things that may bring me under any ſuch Circumſtances, as may expoſe me to the giving your Lordſhips any Trouble of this Nature for the future: And then making his Reverences to the Lords, he went away from the Bar.

Clerk of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serjeant at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes, All manner of Perſons here preſent, are commanded to keep Silence, by my Lord High Steward of England, his Grace upon Pain of Impriſonment.

L. H. Steward. My Lords, The Tryal being at an End, there is nothing remains to be done here, but the determining the Commiſſion.

And then the White Staff being delivered to his Grace, the Lord High Steward, he ſtood up, and holding it in both his Hands, broke it in two; and then leaving the Chair, came down to the Wool-pack, and ſaid, is it your Lordſhip's Pleaſure to adjourn to the Houſe of Lords?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

L. H. St. This Houſe is adjourned to the Houſe of Lords.

And ſo they went back in the ſame Order that they came into the Court, and all the Aſſembly broke up.

The TRYAL of Spencer Cowper, Eſq; &c.

Die Mercurii 16 Julii, 1699.

Proclamation was made for all Perſons concerned to attend.

Cl. of Arr. YOU good Men that are empannelled to enquire, &c. Anſwer to your Names, and ſave your Fines.

Then Ellis Stephens, William Rogers and John Marſon being upon Bail, Proclamation was made for them to attend, which they accordingly did, and Mr Cowper was brought into Court by the Under-Sheriff.

Mr Cowper. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Culprit, How wilt thou be tried?

Mr Cowper. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

Then the other Three pleaded not guilty, and put themſelves upon their Country in manner aforeſaid.

Then Proclamation was made for Information.

Cl. of Arr. You the Priſoners at the Bar, Theſe Men that you ſhall hear called, and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon Trial of your ſeveral Lives and Deaths: Therefore if you will challenge them, or any of them, your Time to ſpeak is as they come to the Book to be ſworn, before they be ſworn.

Then the Pannel was called over.

Cl. of Arr. Do you deſign to join in your Challenges, or to Challenge ſeparately?

Mr Cowper. If we ſhould Challenge ſeparately, there muſt be ſo many ſeparate Tryals, and therefore to prevent the Trouble of the Court, I am willing there ſhould be but one Challenge for all.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, do you all agree to that?

Priſoners. Yes, yes.

Then after ſome Challenges, as well on the Part of the King as of the Priſoners, there not being a full Jury of the Principal Pannel:

Mr Cowper. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, the Pannel is now gone through, I deſire they may ſhew ſome legal Cauſe for their Challenges.

Mr Jones. I conceive we that are retained for the King are not bound to ſhew any Cauſe, or the Cauſe is ſufficient if we ſay they are not good for the King, and that is allowed to be a good Cauſe of Challenge, for what other Cauſe can we ſhew in this Caſe. You are not to ſhew your Cauſe, you Challenge peremptorily, ſo in this Caſe the King does.

Mr Cowper. My Lord, I ſtand at the Bar with ſome Diſadvantage, to encounter a Gentleman that hath no Concerment; but however, I do take it for Law, that there muſt be a Cauſe ſhewed, and that Cauſe muſt be a legal one, and what that Cauſe is they muſt certainly make out. I do think it ought to appear that there is ſome Relation, or ſome notorious Affection or Friendſhip, or ſomething of that Sort, or otherwiſe it is not a legal Cauſe of Challenge; and if there ſeem to be any Difficulty in this Particular, I hope your Lordſhip will aſſign me Council to argue it with the King's Council.

Mr Baron Hatſell. Mr Cowper, you are not under ſuch Diſadvantage as Men uſually are that ſtand where you now do. You have been educated in the Study of the Law, and underſtand it very well. I have ſeveral Times ſeen how you have managed your Clients Cauſes to their Advantage. As for this Matter of Challenge, Mr Jones, I think you ſhould ſhew your Cauſe of Challenge, tho' the Law allows the Priſoner Liberty to challenge twenty peremptorily.

Mr Jones. I don't know, in all my Practice of this Nature, that it was ever put upon the King to ſhew Cauſe, and I believe ſome of the King's Council will ſay they have not known it done.

Mr Cowper. In my Lord Chief Juſtice Hale's Pleas of the Crown, p. 259. it is expreſsly ſo, and in the Statute of 33 E. 1. 'tis ſaid the King ſhall not Challenge without Cauſe, and that muſt be legal.

Cl. of Arr. Call Daniel Clarke.

Mr Baron Hatſell. Mr Jones, if you can ſay any Juryman hath ſaid any Thing concerning this Cauſe, and given his Verdict by way of Diſcourſe, or ſhew'd his Affection one way or other, that would be good Cauſe of Challenge.

Mr Jones My Lord, then we ſhould keep you here while to morrow Morning.

Mr Baron Hatſell. If there hath been any great Friendſhip between any Jury-man and the Party, it will look ill if he be inſiſted upon.

Mr Cowper. My Lord, I do'nt inſiſt upon it, but I profeſs I know of no Friendſhip, only that Mr Clarke in Elections hath taken our Intereſt in Town; I know I have a juſt Cauſe, and I am ready to be tryed before your Lordſhip and any fair Jury of the County; therefore I do not inſiſt upon it.

Then the Jury ſworn was as followeth:

Evan. Loyd, Eſq;		Thomas Parrot,
William Watſon,		Sam. Wallingham,
John Prior,		Francis Cole,
John Harrow,	Jur.	Rich. Crouch,
George Holgate,		John Cock,
John Stracey.		Rich. Dickinſon.

Mr Cowper. My Lord, I humbly move that I may have Pen, Ink and Paper.

Mr

Mr Baron Hatſell. Ay, by all means.

Cl. of Arr. Hold up your Hand. (which he did.) And ſo of the reſt. You of the Jury look upon the Priſoners, and hearken to their Charge. They ſtand indicted by the Names of, &c. (Prout in the Indictment (mutatis mutandis)

Jury. My Lord, we deſire we may have Pen, Ink and Paper.

Cl. of the Aſſize. There are three of the Jury deſire Pen, Ink and Paper.

Mr Baron Hatſell. Let as many have it as will.

Mr Jones. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen that are ſworn, I am of Council for the King in this Cauſe, and it is upon an Indictment by which the Gentlemen at the Bar ſtand accuſed for one of the fouleſt and moſt wicked Crimes almoſt that any Age can remember; I believe in your County you never knew a Fact of this Nature; For here is a young Gentlewoman of this County murdered and ſtrangled in the Night time. The Thing was done in the Dark, therefore the Evidence cannot be ſo plain as otherwiſe might be.

After ſhe was ſtrangled and murdered, ſhe was carried down into a River to ſtifle the Fact, and to make it ſuppoſed ſhe had murthered her ſelf; ſo that it was indeed, if it prove otherwiſe, a double Murder, a Murder accompanied with all the Circumſtances of Wickedneſs and Villany that I remember in all my Practice, or ever read of.

This Fact, as it was committed in the Night time, ſo it was carried very ſecret, and it is very well we have had ſo much Light as we have to give ſo much Satisfaction: For we have here in a manner two Tryals, one to acquit the Party that is dead, and to ſatisfie the World, and vindicate her Reputation that ſhe did not murder herſelf, but was murdered by other Hands. For my Part, I ſhall never as Council in the Caſe of Blood aggravate; I will not improve or enlarge the Evidence at all, it ſhall be only my Buſineſs to ſet the Fact as it is, and to give the Evidence, and ſtate it as it ſtands here in my Inſtructions.

My Lord, for that Purpoſe, to lead to the Fact, it will be neceſſary to inform you, that upon Monday the 13th of March, the firſt Day of the laſt Aſſizes here, Mr Cowper, one of the Gentlemen at the Bar, came to this Town, and lighted at Mr Bareſoot's houſe, and ſtaid there ſome time, I ſuppoſe to dry himſelf, the Weather being dirty, but ſent his Horſe to Mrs Stout's, the Mother of this Gentlewoman. Some time after he came thither himſelf, and dined there, and ſtaid till four in the Afternoon; and at four when he went away, he told them he would come and lodge there that Night, and ſup.

According to his Word he came there, and had the Supper he deſired, after Supper Mrs Stout the young Gentlewoman and he ſat together till near 11 a Clock. At 11 a Clock there was Orders given to warm his Bed, openly to warm his Bed in his hearing. The Maid of the Houſe, Gentlemen, upon this went up Stairs to warm his Bed, expecting the Gentleman would have come up and followed her before ſhe had done, but it ſeems while ſhe was warming the Bed ſhe heard the Door clap together, and the Nature of that Door is ſuch, that it makes a great Noiſe at the clapping of it to, that any Body in the Houſe may be ſenſible of any One's going out. The Maid upon this was concerned, and wondered at the Meaning of it, he promiſing to lie there that Night; ſhe came down, but there was neither Mr Cowper nor Mrs Stout, ſo that we ſuppoſe, and for all that we can find and learn, they muſt go out together. After their going out, the Maid and Mother came into the Room, and the young Gentlewoman not returning, nor Mr Cowper, they ſat up all Night in the Houſe, expecting what time the young Gentlewoman would return. The next Morning after they had ſat up all Night, the firſt News of this Lady was, that ſhe lay floating and ſwimming in Water by the Mill-damm. Upon that there was ſeveral Perſons call'd; for it was a ſurprize how this ſhould come to paſs. There ſhe lay floating with her Petticoats and Apron, but her Night-rail and Morning-gown were off, and one of them not found till ſome time after; and the Maid will give you an Account how it came to be found.

This made a great Noiſe in the Country; for it was very extraordinary, it happening that from the time the Maid left Mr Cowper and this young Gentlewoman together, ſhe was not ſeen or heard of till next Morning, when ſhe was found in this Condition, with her Eyes broad open, floating upon the Water.

When her Body came to be viewed it was very much wondered at: For in the firſt Place it is contrary to Nature, that any Perſons that drown themſelves, ſhould float upon the Water. We have ſufficient Evidence that it is a Thing that never was, if Perſons come alive into the Water then they ſink, if dead then they ſwim, that made ſome to more curious look into this Matter. At firſt it was thought that ſuch an Accident might happen, though they could not imagine any Cauſe for this Woman to do ſo, who had ſo great Proſperity, had ſo good an Eſtate, and had no Occaſion to do an Action upon her ſelf ſo wicked, and ſo barbarous, nor cannot learn what Reaſon ſhe had to induce her to ſuch a Thing. Upon view of the Body it did appear there had been violence uſed to the Woman, there was a Creaſe round her Neck, ſhe was bruiſed about her Ear, ſo that it did ſeem as if ſhe had been ſtrangled either by Hands or a Rope.

Gentlemen, upon the Examination of this Matter, it was wondered how this Matter came about, it was dark and blind. The Coroner at that time, nor theſe People had no Evidence given, but the ordinary Evidence, and it paſs'd in a Day. We muſt call our Witneſſes to this Fact, that of neceſſity you muſt conclude ſhe was ſtrangled, and did not drown her ſelf; if we give you as ſtrong a Proof as can be upon the Nature of the Fact that ſhe was ſtrangled, then the ſecond Matter under your Enquiry will be, to know who, or what Perſons ſhould be the Men that did the Fact. I told you before, it was, as all wicked Actions are, a Matter of Darkneſs, and done in ſecret, to be kept as much from the Knowledge of Men as was poſſible.

Truly Gentlemen, as to the Perſons at the Bar, the Evidence of the Fact will be very ſhort, and will be to this Purpoſe.

Mr Cowper was the laſt Man unfortunately in her Company, I could wiſh he had not been ſo with all my Heart, 'tis a very unfortunate Thing, that his Name ſhould upon this Occaſion be brought upon the Stage; but then my Lord, it was a ſtrange Thing; here happens to be three Gentlemen, Mr Marſon, Mr Rogers, and Mr Stevent, as to theſe Three Men, my Lord, I don't hear of any Buſineſs they had here, unleſs it was to do do this Matter, to ſerve ſome Intereſt or Friend, that ſent them upon this Meſſage, for my Lord, they came to Town, (and in Things of this Nature, 'tis well we have this Evidence, but if we had not been ſtreightned in time it would have brought out more, theſe Things come out ſlowly) theſe Perſons, Mr Stevens, Mr Rogers, and Mr Marſon came to Town here on the 13th of March laſt, the Aſſize Day: My Lord, when they came to Town, they came to an Houſe, and took Lodgings at one Gurreys, they took a Bed for Two, and went out of their Lodging, having taken a Room with a large Bed in it, and afterwards they went to the Glove and Dolphin, and then about Eight a Clock one Marſon came to them there; in what Company they came, your Lordſhip and the Jury will know by and by; they ſtaid there, my Lord, at the Glove from Eight a Clock to Eleven, as they ſay. At Eleven theſe three Gentlemen came all in to their Lodging together to this Gurrey's; my Lord, when they came in, it was very obſervable amongſt them, unleſs there had been a ſort of Fate in it: Firſt, That they ſhould happen to be in the Condition they were in; And ſecondly, fall upon the Diſcourſe they did at that time; for my Lord, they called for Fire, and the Fire was made them, and while the People of the Houſe were going about, they obſerved and heard theſe Gentlemen talk of Mrs Sarah Stout, that happened to be their Diſcourſe; one ſaid to the other, Marſon, ſhe was an old Sweet-heart of yours: Ay, ſaith he, but ſhe caſt me off, but I reckon by this Time a Friend of mine has done her Buſineſs: Another piece of Diſcourſe was, I believe a Friend of mine is even with her by this time. They had a Bundle of Linnen with them, but what it was is not known, and one takes the Bundle and throws it upon the Bed, well, ſaith he, her Buſineſs is done, Mrs Saran Stout's courting Days are over, and they ſent for Wine, my Lord; ſo after they had drank of the Wine they talk'd of it, and one pulled out a great deal of Money, ſaith one to another, what Money have you ſpent to Day? Saith the other thou haſt had 40 or 50 l. for thy Share: Saith the other, I will ſpend all the Money I have, for Joy the Buſineſs is done.

My Lord, this Diſcourſe happened to be among them, which made People of the Houſe conſider and bethink themſelves, when the next Day they heard of this Mrs Stout's being found in the Water, this made them recollect and call to mind all theſe Diſcourſes.

My Lord, after theſe Gentlemen had ſtaid there all Night, next Morning truly it was obſerved (and I ſuppoſe ſome Account will be given of it) that Mr Cowper and they did meet together, and had ſeveral Diſcourſes, and that very Day went out of Town, and I think as ſoon as they came to Hoddeſdon, made it all their Diſcourſe and Buſineſs to talk of Mrs Stout.

My Lord, we will call our Witneſſes, and prove all theſe Facts that I have opened to your Lordſhip, and then I hope they will be put to give you ſome Account how all theſe Matters came about.

Call Sarah Walker. (who was ſworn.)

Mr Jones. Mrs Walker pray give an Account to my Lord and the Jury, of Mr Cowper's coming to your Houſe the 13th of March, and what was done from his coming there at Night to his going out.

Sarah Walker. May it pleaſe you, my Lord, On Friday before the laſt Aſſizes, Mr Cowper's Wife ſent a Letter to Miſtreſs Stout, that ſhe might expect Mr Cowper at the Aſſize time, and therefore we expected Mr Cowper at that time, and accordingly provided; and as he came in with the Judges, ſhe ask'd him if he would alight, he ſaid no, by reaſon I come in later than uſual, I will go into the Town and ſhow my ſelf, but he would ſend his Horſe preſently; ſhe ask'd him, how long it would be before he would come, becauſe they would ſtay for him; he ſaid, he could not tell, but he would ſend her Word, and ſhe thought he had forgot, and ſent me down to know, whether he would pleaſe to come: he ſaid, he had Buſineſs, and he could not come juſt then, but he came in leſs than a quarter of an Hour after, and dined there, and he went away at four a Clock, and then my Miſtreſs ask'd him, if he would lie there, and he anſwered yes, and he came at Night about nine a Clock, and he ſat talking about half an Hour, and then call'd for Pen, Ink and Paper, for that, as he ſaid, he was to write to his Wife, which was brought him, and he wrote a Letter, and then my Miſtreſs went and ask'd him, what he would have for Supper, he ſaid Milk, by reaſon he had made a good Dinner; and I got him his Supper and he eat it, after ſhe called me in again, and they were talking together, and then ſhe bid me make a Fire in his Chamber, and when I had done ſo, I came and told him of it, and he looked at me, and made me no Anſwer; then ſhe bid me warm the Bed, which accordingly I went up to do as the Clock ſtruck 11, and in about a quarter of an Hour, I heard the Door ſhut, and I thought he was gone to carry the Letter, and ſtaid about a quarter of an Hour longer, and came down, and he was gone and ſhe, and Mrs Stout the Mother, ask'd me the Reaſon why he went out when I was warming his Bed, and ſhe ask'd me for my Miſtreſs, and I told her, I left her with Mr Cowper, and I never ſaw her after that, nor did Mr Cowper return to the Houſe.

Mr Jones. How long did you ſit up?

Walker. All Night.

Mr Jones. What time next Morning did you ſee her?

Walker. About 7 a Clock.

Mr Jones. In the Water, or out?

Walker. Out of the Water.

Mr Cowper. Pray will you recollect a little, and be very particular as to the Time when I went out at Night.

Walker. Sir, it was a quarter after Eleven by our Clock, the difference between the Town Clock and ours was half an Hour.

Mr Cowper. But you ſay by your Clock it was a quarter after Eleven.

Walker. Yes, Sir.

Mr Cowper. Pray what Account did you give as to the Time to the Coroner's Inqueſt?

Walker. I ſaid then it was Eleven, or a quarter after Eleven, when I heard the Door ſhut.

Mr Cowper. Pray was Miſtreſs Stout preſent with the Coroner's Inqueſt when you gave that Account?

Walker. Yes, ſhe was.

Mr Cowper. Pray what Account did you give as to the Time before my Lord Chief Juſtice Holt?

Walker. I gave the Account that it was Eleven, or a quarter of an Hour after.

Mr Cowper. In her Depoſitions there is half an Hour's difference, for then ſhe ſaid it was half an Hour after 10.

Mr Baron Hatſell. Which Clock was earlieſt, yours or the Town Clock?

Walker. Ours was half an Hour faſter than theirs.

Mr Cowper. How came you to know this?

Walker. By reaſon that Dinner was dreſt at the Cook's, and it was ordered to be ready by Two a Clock, and it was ready at Two a Clock by the Town Clock, and half an Hour after Two by ours.

Mr Cowper. When you came down and miſs'd your Miſtreſs, did you enquire after her all that Night?

Walker. No, Sir, I did not go out of the Doors; I thought you were with her, and ſo I thought ſhe would come to no harm.

Mr Cowper. Here is a whole Night ſhe gives no Account of. Pray Miſtreſs, why did not you go after her?

Walker. My Miſtreſs would not let me.

Mr Cowper. Why would ſhe not let you?

Walker. I ſaid I would ſee for her: No, ſaith ſhe, by reaſon if you go and ſee for her, and do not find her, it will make an alarm over the Town, and there may be no occaſion.

Mr Cowper. Did your Miſtreſs uſe to ſtay out all Night?

Walker. No never.

Mr Cowper. Have not you ſaid ſo?

Walker. I never ſaid ſo in my Life.

Mr Cowper. Pray Mrs Walker did you never take notice that your Miſtreſs was under Melancholy?

Walker. I don't ſay but ſhe was melancholy; ſhe was ill for ſome time, and I imputed it to her illneſs, and I know no other Cauſe.

Mr Cowper. Have you not often told People that your Miſtreſs was a melancholy Perſon, upon your Oath?

Walker. I have ſaid ſhe hath been ill, and that made her melancholy.

Mr Cowper. I will ask you this Queſtion, pray did you ever purchaſe any Poiſon, more or leſs, within theſe twelve Months?

Walker. Yes, Sir, I did ſo, and can tell what it was for.

Mr Cowper. By whoſe Order?

Walker. By my own Order.

Mr Cowper. Did you buy Poiſon but once, upon your Oath?

Walker. I believe I might buy twice.

Mr Cowper. Where?

Walker. Of Mr Ludman.

Mr Cowper. Both times there?

Walker. Yes.

Mr Cowper. Of him?

Walker. No, of the young Man.

Mr Cowper. Did you ever buy any Poiſon at Luton?

Walker. No.

Mr Cowper. Did you ever buy any by your Miſtreſſes Order, or of one Mrs Crooke, upon your Oath?

Walker. No, I never did.

Mr Cowper. Pray at what time was it that you bought this Poiſon you ſpeak of?

Walker. I can't remember.

Mr Cowper. Pray recollect your ſelf.

Walker. It was within this half Year to be ſure.

Mr Cowper. What was the Name of the Poiſon you ask'd for?

Walker. I ask'd for white Mercury.

Mr Cowper. She ſaith, I paſs'd by her Miſtreſſes Houſe, and went directly to Mr Bareſoot's, pray did not you come to Mr Bareſoot's after me?

Walker. Yes, Sir.

Mr Cowper. Pray did you give the ſame Account before the Coroner, when this Matter was enquir'd into, that you have now done?

Walker. Yes, I did as near as I can tell.

Mr Cowper. Did you give this Account in Subſtance?

Walker. Yes, I did.

Mr Baron Hatſell. Mr Cowper, I ſuppoſe you don't mean in relation to the Poiſon.

Mr Cowper. My Lord I mean in relation to ſo much of the Evidence which ſhe now gives, and particularly reſpects me. For what End or Purpoſe did you buy it?

Walker. I bought it to Poiſon a Dog.

Mr Cowper. Why ſhould you poiſon the Dog?

Walker. It was a Dog that uſed to haunt our Houſe that did us a great deal of Miſchief, but that did not do, ſo I bought it a ſecond time.

Mr Cowper. Who gave it to the Dog?

Walker. 'Twas another Maid did give it the Dog.

Mr Cowper. Why did you then ſwear it was given the Dog.

Walker. Sir I ſaw it given.

Mr Cowper. Did your Miſtreſs know of it?

Walker. Yes ſhe did know of it afterwards.

Mr Cowper. How did you give it?

Walker. In warm Milk.

Mr Cowper. How did the Milk look?

Walker. It did not look diſcolour'd in the leaſt.

Mr Baron Hatſell. You ſaid juſt now your Miſtreſs was ill, and that made her melancholy, what Illneſs was it?

Walker. My Lord, ſhe had a great pain in her Head.

Mr Baron Hatſell. How long had ſhe been troubled with it?

Walker. Ever ſince laſt May was twelve Months was the beginning of it.

Mr Jones. Did you ever find her in the leaſt inclined to do her ſelf a Miſchief?

Walker. No, I never did.

Mr Cowper. You bought Poiſon twice, did you give all the Poiſon you bought to the Dog?

Walker. Yes.

Mr Cowper. The firſt and the laſt?

Walker. Yes the whole.

Mr Cowper. How much did you buy?

Walker. I am not certain how much I bought.

Mr Cowper. Pray what Miſchief did it do the Dog?

Walker. I cannot tell, he may be alive till now for ought I know.

Mr Cowper. What Miſchief did the Dog do?

Walker. A great deal, he threw down ſeveral Things and broke them.

Mr Jones. Did Mr Cowper, upon your Oath, hear Miſtreſs Stout give you Order to make his Fire and warm his Bed?

Walker. He knows beſt, whether he heard it or no; but he ſat by her when ſhe ſpake it.

Mr Jones. Did ſhe ſpeak it ſo as he might hear?

Walker. Yes ſhe did, for he was nearer than I.

Mr Jones. And did not he contradict it?

Walker.

Walker. Not in the leaſt.

Mr Jones. Was it the old or young Woman, that gave you the Order?

Walker. The young Woman.

Mr Cowper. Pray, Did the Dog lap it, or did you pour it down his Throat, upon your Oath?

Walker. No, he lapt it, upon my Oath.

Mr Jones. Did Mr Cowper ſend for his Horſe from your Houſe the next Day?

Walker. I can't ſay that; I was not in the Way.

Mr Jones. Did he come to your Houſe afterwards?

Walker. No, I am ſure he did not.

Mr Jones. Was the Horſe in your Stable when it was ſent for?

Walker. Yes, Sir.

Mr Jones. And he did not come to your Houſe again, before he went out of Town?

Walker. No, Sir.

Mr Jones. Do you know which Way he went out of Town?

Walker. No, Sir.

Mr Baron Hatſell. Did Mr Cowper uſe to lodge at your Houſe at the Aſſizes?

Walker. No, my Lord, not ſince I came there; the Seſſions before, he did.

Mr Cowper. Where did you come to invite me to Dinner?

Walker. At Mr Barefoot's.

Mr Cowper. Then you knew I was to lodge there?

Mr Baron Hatſell. Who wrote the Letter on Friday, that Mr Cowper would lodge there?

Walker. I know not who wrote it, his Wife ſent it.

Mr Jones. Did he tell you he would lodge there that Night before he went away?

Walker. When he went from Dinner he ſaid ſo.

Mr Jones. Call James Berry, (who was Sworn.) Now, my Lord, we will give Evidence of the Manner, how ſhe was found. Mr Berry, Do you remember when Mrs. Stout was found by your Mill?

Berry. No, indeed, I do not know juſt what Day it was.

Mr Jones. When you found her, do you remember how, in what Manner ſhe was found?

Berry. Yes; I went out in the Morning to ſhoot a Fluſh of Water by ſix a-Clock, and I ſaw ſomething a floating in the Water, ſo I went out to ſee what it was, and I ſaw part of her Cloaths.

Mr Jones. Did you ſee her Face?

Berry. No, not then.

Mr Jones. Was her Face under Water, or above?

Berry. No Part of her Body was above Water, only ſome Part of her Cloaths.

Mr Jones. How many Foot deep might the Water be?

Berry. Five Foot deep.

Mr Jones. And how much was ſhe under Water, do you conceive?

Berry. She might be under Water about five or ſix Inches.

Mr Jones. Then her whole Body was not under Water, was it?

Berry. Yes.

Mr Jones. Was her Face under Water?

Berry. Yes.

Mr Baron Hatſell. Did ſhe lie upon her Face, or her Back?

Berry. She lay upon her Side.

Mr Jones. When ſhe was taken out, Were her Eyes open or ſhut?

Berry. Her Eyes were open.

Mr Jones. Was ſhe ſwell'd with Water?

Berry. I did not perceive her ſwell'd: I was amaz'd at it, and did not ſo much mind it as I ſhould.

Mr Jones. But you remember her Eyes were ſtaring open?

Berry. Yes.

Mr Jones. Did you ſee any Marks or Bruiſes about her?

Berry. No.

Mr Cowper. Did you ſee her Legs?

Berry. No, I did not.

Mr Cowper. They were not above Water?

Berry. No.

Mr Cowper. Could you ſee them under Water?

Berry. I did not ſo much mind it.

Mr Cowper. Did ſhe lie ſtraight or double, driven together by the Stream?

Berry. I did not obſerve.

Mr Cowper. Did you not obſerve Weeds and Trumpery under her?

Berry. There was no Weeds at that Time thereabouts?

Mr Jones. Was the Water clear?

Berry. No, it was thick Water.

Mr Jones. Was there any Thing under her, in the Water, to prevent her ſinking?

Berry. No, I do not know there was; ſhe lay on her right Side, and her right Arm was driven between the Stakes, which are within a Foot of one another.

Mr Jones. Did any Thing hinder her from ſinking?

Berry. Not that I ſaw.

Mr Jones. Did you help to take her out from the Stakes?

Berry. No.

Mr Jones. Call John Venables.

Mr Cowper. Mr Berry, if I underſtand you right, you ſay her right Arm was driven between the Stakes, and her Head between the Stakes; could you perceive her right Arm, and where was her Left-arm?

Berry. Within a ſmall Matter upon the Water.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. Did you ſee her Head and Arm between the Stakes?

Berry. Yes; her Arm by one Stake, and her Head by another.

Mr Jones. Did the Arm hang down, or how?

Berry. I did not mind ſo much as I might have done.

Then John Venables was Sworn.

Mr Jones. Did you ſee Mrs. Stout, when ſhe was taken out of the Water, and as ſhe lay in it?

Venables. Yes.

Mr Jones. Give an Account how you found her.

Venables. She was floating upon the Water.

Mr Jones. How? Was all her Body, or what Part in the Water?

Venables. She lay upon her right Side, and this Arm upon the Water, rather above the Water, her Ruffles were above the Water.

Mr Jones. Did you help to take her out?

Venables. No, Sir.

Mr Jones. Were her Eyes open then?

Venables. Her Eyes were open when I ſaw her, but I did not ſee her when ſhe was taken out.

Mr Jones. Did any Thing hinder her from ſinking?

Venables. I ſaw nothing to hinder her if ſhe would have ſunk.

Mr Jones. Call Leonard Dell, (who was Sworn.) Did you ſee this Mrs Stout in the Water?

Dell. Yes.

Mr Jones. Pray tell us in what Poſture ſhe was found.

Dell. I ſaw her floating in the River; I ſaw her Face and her Cloaths.

Mr Jones. Were her Cloaths all above the Water?

Dell. Her Stays and her Coat that ſhe had next her.

Mr Jones. Were theſe plainly above the Water?

Dell. Some Part of them.

Mr Jones. Did you ſee her Face, was that above the Water?

Dell. No, Sir, it was between the Piles; ſhe lay on her right Side, and her Head was between the Stakes, and her right Arm.

Mr Jones. Did you help to take her out of the Water?

Dell. Yes.

Mr Jones. Did any Thing hinder her from ſinking?

Dell. Neither Stakes nor any Thing there.

Mr Jones. Did her Arms or Neck ſtick to the Stakes?

Dell. Not to my thinking.

Mr Jones. Was the Water clear, or weedy.

Dell. It was very clear.

Mr Jones. How many Foot deep was it?

Dell. I know not, but it might be five Foot deep.

Mr Jones. Did you help to take her out of the Water?

Dell. Yes, Sir, and we took her and carried her into the Meadow juſt by, and laid her on the Bank.

Mr Jones. Did you obſerve her Face, Neck, or Arms, to be bruis'd?

Dell. I ſaw no Bruiſe at all.

Mr Cowper. How did you know but her right Arm did reach to the Ground, ſince you did not ſee it?

Dell. We could ſee her Arm lie in this Manner between the Piles, the right Arm was downwards, for ſhe lay on one Side.

Jury-man. Did you ſee any Arm above in the Water?

Dell. No.

Mr Baron Hatſell. You ſhould propoſe your Queſtions to the Court.

Juryman. My Lord, I deſire to know where was her left Arm.

Mr Baron Hatſell. Where was her left Arm?

Dell. I can't tell how it did lie; I did not obſerve it.

Mr Baron Hatſell. When you took her out of the Water, did you obſerve her Body ſwell'd?

Dell. We carry'd her into the Meadow, and laid her on the Bank-ſide, and there ſhe lay about an Hour, and then was order'd to be carry'd into the Miller's.

Mr Baron Hatſell. Did you obſerve that any Water was in her Body?

Dell. None at all that I could ſee; but there was ſome ſmall Matter of Froth came from her Mouth and Noſtrils.

Jury-man. My Lord, I deſire to know whether her Stays were lac'd?

Dell. Yes, ſhe was laced.

Mr Cowper. If I take you right, you ſay ſhe was ſtrait-laced?

Dell. Her Stays were laced.

Mr Cowper. And you ſay there was Froth and Foam came out of her Mouth and Noſtrils?

Dell. Yes, Sir.

Mr Jones. Pray, What Quantity?

Dell. I could hold it all in the Palm of my Hand.

Mr Cowper. How was ſhe taken out of the Water?

Dell. My Lord, we ſtood upon the Bridge, I and another Man, where ſhe lay, and he laid hold of her, and took her out.

Mr Jones. And did you not perceive ſhe was hung?

Dell. No, my Lord.

Mr Cowper. Pray, Where was ſhe laid when ſhe was taken out?

Dell. In the Place call'd the Hoppers juſt by.

Mr Cowper. How long did ſhe lie there?

Dell. About an Hour.

Mr Cowper. Did you ſtay there all that Time?

Dell. Yes.

Mr Cowper. And did the Froth continue to iſſue from her Mouth and Noſtrils?

Mr Baron Hatſell. He told you, Mr Cowper, he could hold it all on the Palm of his Hand.

Mr Jones. Call John Ulſe, (who was Sworn.) John Ulſe, Did you ſee Mrs Stout when ſhe was taken out of the Water?

Ulſe. Yes.

Mr Jones. Give an Account of the Condition ſhe was in.

Ulſe. She lay on one Side; I help'd to take her out.

Mr Jones. Did ſhe hang or ſtick by any Thing?

Ulſe. There was nothing at all to hold her up; ſhe lay between a Couple of Stakes, but the Stakes could not hold her up.

Mr Jones. Did you ſee her after ſhe was taken out?

Ulſe. Yes.

Mr Jones. Did any Water come out of her?

Ulſe. Nothing at all, only a little Froth came out of her Noſtrils.

Mr Jones. Call Katharine Dew, (who was Sworn.) Did you ſee Mrs. Stout taken out of the River?

Dew. Yes.

Mr Jones. Did you ſee her in the River before?

Dew. Yes, Sir.

Mr Jones. How did ſhe lie in the River?

Dew. She lay Side-way with her Eyes open, and her Teeth clenched in her Head, with Water flowing a little from her Face, ſome Part of Her and her Petticoats were above Water.

Mr Jones. Did nothing hold her from ſinking?

Dew. Her right Arm lay againſt the Stake.

Mr Jones. Did you ſee her after ſhe was taken out of the River?

Dew. Yes, Sir.

Mr Jones. Was ſhe ſwell'd?

Dew. I did not perceive ſhe was ſwell'd at all.

Mr Jones. Did you handle her?

Dew. No, I touch'd nothing but her Petticoat.

Mr Jones. Did you obſerve her Legs were in the Water?

Dew. No, I did not.

Mr Cowper. Did you ſee where her right Arm was?

Dew. I could not ſee her right Arm, the Water flow'd over it.

Mr Cowper. Did you ſee her after this Time?

Dew. No Sir, I ſaw her taken out, but not afterward.

Mr Bar.

Mr Bar. Hatsel. Did you see her after she lay on the Ground?

Dew. Yes my Lord.

Mr Bar. Hatsell. How was she then?

Dew. She purged at the Nose and one of her Eyes, I did not take particular Notice after she was out, the Notice I took was when she was in the Water.

Mr Bar. Hatsell. What did you see at her Eye?

Dew. Froth, my Lord.

Mr Jones. Did you see her after she was stripp'd naked?

Dew. No my Lord.

Mr Jones. Was it a settled Frothing, or a Purging?

Dew. A purging Froth.

Mr Bar. Hatsell. Did any Body wipe it off?

Dew. No, my Lord, I did not see any Body do it.

Mr Bar. Hatsell. Then there was no new Froth came?

Dew. No, my Lord, I saw her froth at the Nose and one of the Eyes, as soon as she was taken out, but I did not stay long.

Mr Cowper. Was she in her Stayes?

Dew. Yes Sir.

Mr Cowper. Was she not laced?

Dew. Yes she was lac'd before and behind.

Mr Jones. Call Thomas Dew. (Who was Sworn.) Did you see this Mrs Stout in the Water; Pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account what Posture she was in.

Dew. I saw her lying in the Water floating, above the Water I will not say, but the Water ran some small Matter over her, her right Arm was within the Stake; and her left Arm without, she lay just upon her Side, and I saw her when she was first taken up, and her Shoes and Stockings were as clean as when they were put on, no Mud nor Dirt upon them, and I saw her Shoes and her Stockings, as high as her knee almost, but I saw no Dirt.

Mr Jones. Do you believe that she had been sunk to the Bottom?

Dew. She did not look as if she had, nor I see no Water come from her.

Mr Jones. Did you observe, that she was swelled at all?

Dew. No, nor swell'd that I perceive a bit, there was a little Froth that came out of her Nose, and about her (I can't say from her Eye) in that it was a small Quantity.

Mr Jones. Call Mr Edward Blackno. (Who was Sworn.) Did you see Mrs Stout, when she lay in the Water?

Blackno. Yes I did see her lye in the Water floating, I was so near, that I saw the Miller's Man lift her up by one of her Arms out of the Water.

Mr Jones. Was the Arm bent or straight?

Blackno. It hung in this Manner (showing the Court how with his own Arm.)

Mr Bar. Hatsell. The other Witnesses said, she lay on her right Side.

Blackno. Yes she lay on her right Side, and her Arm in this Manner.

Mr Bar. Hatsell. Did you observe her to be swelled?

Blackno. I did not see her taken out.

Mr Bar. Hatsell. Did you observe any Thing to hinder her from Sinking?

Blackno. No I did not, nothing but the Water.

Mr Cowper. I think Sir, if I heard you right, you say, that this taking by the Arm and stirring her, was before she was taken out of the Water, then I would know after she was stirred was she let go again, was you by at the taking of her up?

Blackno. No I was not.

Mr Bar. Hatsell. He told you she was floating when he saw her, and that nothing hindered her from sinking.

Then William Edmunds and William Page were Sworn.

Mr Jones. Edmunds did you see Mrs Stout when she was in the Water?

Edmunds. Yes Sir.

Mr Jones. Give an Account what posture she was in?

Edmunds. She lay against the Stake, her Head lay against the Stake in the River, we were coming up in a Barge, and called to a Miller to draw the Water, but he said he could not, for then she would swim through, and then we came on, and see her lye in the Water.

Mr Jones. Did any Thing hinder her from sinking?

Edmunds. Not that I see.

Mr Jones. Did no part of her Legs or Arms stick? Did you see her taken out?

Edmunds. No, I did not, I was gone, I did not know whether they would take her out or no.

Mr Jones. Page, did you see Mrs Stout upon the Water?

Mr Jones. Tell us how she lay.

Page. She lay floating in the Water on her right Side, with her Head between the Stakes.

Mr Jones. Did her Arms or Cloaths, or any Thing stick?

Page. Not that I saw.

Mr Jones. Did any Thing hinder her from sinking?

Page. I saw nothing.

Mr Cowper. Did you see her Legs or Knees?

Page. No I could not, they were not out of the Water.

Mr Jones. Swear Mrs Anne Ulse (Which was done) Did you see Mrs Stout in the Water?

Ulse. Yes I help'd to pull her out, she lay on one Side in the Water floating, and the Water came over her Face.

Mr Jones. Did she stick by any Thing?

Ulse. One of her Arms was about the Post.

Mr Jones. How?

Ulse. It got through the Grate.

Mr Jones. But it did not hang.

Ulse. No.

Mr Jones. Did you take her out?

Ulse. Yes Sir.

Mr Jones. Did you mind her Cloaths?

Ulse. Yes I turn'd up her Petticoat in the Water.

Mr Jones. Had she Gloves on?

Ulse. No Sir.

Mr Jones. How were her Shoes and Stockings?

Ulse. They were not muddy, her Stockings were rowl'd down, she had no Garters on.

Mr Cowper. You say, one Arm lay through the Stakes, where lay the other?

Ulse. The other was down in the Water.

William How was Sworn.

Mr Jones. Did you see Mrs Stout in the Water?

How,

How. Yes, Sir, I ſee her lye upon the Water, ſhe lay afloat, ſhe might lye three or four Inches deep in the Water.

Mr Jones. Did any of her Cloaths lye above the Water?

How. Some part of her Coats lay above the Water.

Mr Jones. Did any Thing hinder her from ſinking?

How. I ſaw nothing, I ſaw them take her out, and did not perceive ſhe hung any Way; ſhe lay with one Arm, and her Head in the Grate, but I did not perceive ſhe hung.

John Meager was Sworn.

Mr Jones. Well, do you give an Account of what you know of Mrs Stout being in the Water?

Meager. I ſee Mrs Sarah Stout floating in the Water, her right Arm in the Grate, and her left Arm with the Stream.

Mr Jones. Did ſhe hang or ſtick by any Thing?

Meager. No, neither hang nor ſtick, ſhe floated.

Mr Cowper. Did you ſee ſome Body go through the Blue-coat Building about eleven a Clock?

Meager. No Sir, I was a Bed before Nine.

Mr Jones. Now, my Lord, we will give an Account how ſhe was when ſhe was ſtript, and they came to view the Body. Call John Dimſdale, junior. (Who was Sworn.)

Dimſdale. My Lord, I was ſent for at Night on Tueſday the laſt Aſſizes——

Mr Cowper. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, I have ſome Phyſicians of Note and Eminency that are come down from London, I deſire they may be call'd into Court to hear what theſe Surgeons ſay.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. Ay, by all means.

Mr Cowper. My Lord, there is Dr Sloane, Dr Garth, Dr Morley, Dr Gilſtrop, Dr Harriot, Dr Wollaſton, Dr Crell. Mr William Cowper, Mr Bartlett, and Mr Camlin.

Who reſpectively appear'd in Court.

Mr Jones. Give an Account how you found Mrs Stout.

Mr Bar Hatſell. You are a Phyſician, I ſuppoſe, Sir?

Dimſdale. A Surgeon, my Lord. When I was ſent for to Mrs Stout's, I was ſent for two or three Times before I would go; for I was unwilling after I heard Mrs Stout was drown'd; for I thought with my ſelf, what need could there be of me when the Perſon was Dead; but ſhe ſtill ſent; and then I went with Mr Camlin, and found a little Swelling on the Side of her Neck, and ſhe was black on both Sides, and more particularly on the left Side, and between her Breaſts up towards the Collar-bone, that was all I ſaw at that Time, only a little Mark upon one of her Arms, and I think upon her left Arm.

Mr Jones. How were her Ears?

Dimſdale. There was a Settling of Blood on both Sides the Neck, that was all I ſaw at that Time.

Mr Jones. How do you think ſhe came by it?

Dimſdale. Truly I only gave an Account juſt as I ſay now to the Gentlemen at that Time, I ſaw no more of it at that Time, but about ſix Weeks after the Body was opened by Dr Phillips——

Mr Cowper. My Lord, he is going to another Piece of Evidence, and I would ask him——

Mr Jones. Let us have done firſt; how was her Ears?

Dimſdale. There was a blackneſs on both Ears, a Settling of Blood.

Mr Jones. Call Sarah Kimpſon.

Mr Bar Hatſell. Mr Cowper, now you may ask him any Thing, they have done with him.

Mr Cowper. I would ask him whether he was not employed to view theſe particular Spots he mentions at the Coroner's Inqueſt.

Dimſdale. I was deſired to look upon the Face and Arms, and Breaſt, becauſe they ſaid there was a Settling of Blood there.

Mr Cowper. When you return'd to the Coroner's Inqueſt, What did you certify as your Opinion?

Dimſdale. I did certify there was a Settling of Blood, but how it came I could not tell.

Mr Cowper. I ask you, Sir, Did not you ſay it was no more than a common Stagnation uſual in dead Bodies?

Dimſdale. I do not remember a Word of it.

Mr Cowper. Sir, I would ask you; You ſay the Spot was about the Collar-bone; Was it above or below?

Dimſdale. From the Collar-bone downwards.

Mr Cowper. Had ſhe any Circle about her Neck?

Dimſdale. No; not upon my Oath.

Mr Jones. Swear Sarah Kimpſon. Did you obſerve this Mrs Sarah Stout, when ſhe was ſtrip'd, how her Body was?

Kimpſon. Yes.

Mr Jones. Pray give an Account of it.

Kimpſon. She had a great Settlement of Blood behind her Ear, as much as my Hand will cover, and more; and ſhe had a Settlement of Blood under her Collar-bone.

Mr Jones. Did you ſee nothing about her Neck?

Kimpſon. Nothing round her Neck; on the Side of her Neck there was a Mark.

Mr Jones. Was there any other Part bruiſed?

Kimpſon. Only her left Wriſt, and her Body was very flat and lank.

Mr Cowper. Pray, What Day was it that you ſaw her?

Kimpſon. It was the Day ſhe was found.

Mr Cowper. Was ſhe not laced?

Kimpſon. She was laced.

Mr Cowper. Did you help to ſtrip her?

Kimpſon. Yes, Sir.

Mr Jones. Did her Body ſeem to be ſwell'd, or was there any Water come from her?

Kimpſon. I did not obſerve the leaſt Drop of Water that appeared any Way.

Mr Jones. Do you know what did Purge from her?

Kimpſon. Nothing that I ſaw.

Mr Jones. Had not you a Child drowned there lately?

Kimpſon. Yes, about ten Weeks ago.

Mr Jones. And you found her?

Kimpſon. She was drowned at Night, and we found her next Morning.

Mr Jones. Where did you find her, at the Top or at the Bottom of the Water?

Kimpſon. At the Bottom.

Mr Jones. How was ſhe?

Kimpſon. She was ſwell'd as much as ſhe could hold.

Mr Jones. Were her Eyes ſhut or open?

Kimpſon. Her Eyes were ſhut, and the Child was laced as tight as the Coat could be.

Mr Jones. Was the Child opened?

Kimpſon. Yes.

Mr Jones.

Mr Jones. And what was in the Body of the Child?

Kimpſon. Twas very full of Water.

Mr Jones. Call Sarah Peppercorn.

Mr Cowper. You ſay you view'd the Child; Had it any Settlement of Blood?

Kimpſon. I ſaw none.

Mr Cowper. And you view'd the Body?

Kimpſon. Yes.

Then Sarah Peppercorn was Sworn.

Mr Jones. Did you ſee the Body of Mrs. Sarah Stout, after it was ſtript and laid out?

Peppercorn. I did, Sir.

Mr Jones. In what Condition did you find her?

Peppercorn. I did not ſee her till ſhe was brought home to her Mother's, and there was a Rumour in the Town that ſhe was with Child, and I was ſent for to give an Account whether ſhe was or not, and I found ſhe was not; and I help'd to pull off her Cloaths, and ſhe was very clear as any I ever knew, only had a black Place on the Side of her Head, and in another Place about her Ear; but how it came I know not.

Mr Jones. Did you obſerve how her Body was?

Peppercorn. Her Body was very well as any Woman's could be.

Mr Jones. Did you obſerve any Water, or any ſuch Thing from her?

Peppercorn. No.

Mr Jones. Was there any purging at her Mouth or Noſtrils?

Peppercorn. A little Froth, as any Body might have.

Mr Cowper. At what Hour did you ſee her?

Peppercorn. I believe it might be Nine or Ten a Clock.

Mr Baron Hatſell. In the Morning?

Peppercorn. Yes, Sir; but I can't give a juſt Account of the Time.

Mr Baron Hatſell. What was you ſent for?

Peppercorn. To know if ſhe was with Child; for it was reported ſhe had drowned her ſelf becauſe ſhe was with Child, and ſo her Mother deſired me to come to give an Account that it was not ſo, and I found that it was not ſo.

Mr Baron Hatſell. You are a Midwife, are you not?

Peppercorn. Yes, my Lord.

Then Elizabeth Huſler was Sworn.

Mr Jones. Had you the View of the Body of Mrs. Sarah Stout, the Day you heard ſhe was drowned?

Huſler. She was not drowned, my Lord; I went thither and helped to pull off her Cloaths.

Mr Jones. In what Condition was her Body?

Huſler. Her Body was very lank and thin, and no Water appeared to be in it.

Mr Jones. Was there any Water about her Mouth and Noſe?

Huſler. Not when I ſaw her.

Mr Jones. Did you mind her about her Neck and Head?

Huſler. Yes, Yes, there was a Settling of Blood at the Top of the Collar-bone, juſt here, and there was a Settling of Blood upon both her Ears, moſt about her left Ear.

Mr Jones. Swear Ann Pilkington, (which was done) Did you ſee the Body of Mrs Stout, after ſhe was drowned?

Pilkington. Yes, Sir.

Mr Jones. Pray, In what Condition was ſhe when ſhe was ſtript?

Pilkington. I was in the Houſe when ſhe was brought in dead; and old Mrs Stout deſired me to help to lay her out, and taking a View of her, I did not at all perceive her Body to be ſwelled.

Mr Jones. Was there any Water came out upon the moving of it?

Pilkington. No, I did not perceive any; and by a further View, I ſaw a Redneſs on the left Side of her Head, and her Ear was black, and there was a little Mark upon her Breaſt on the left Side.

Mr Jones. What Colour was it of?

Pilkington. It ſeem'd reddiſh and blackiſh: As to Colour it was like a Settling of Blood: I can't tell how to make it out very well.

Mr Cowper. Had ſhe any Circle round about her Neck?

Pilkington. No, not that I ſee.

Mr Cowper. Pray, Did not you make ſome Depoſition to that Purpoſe, that you know of?

Pilkington. Sir, I never did, and dare not do it.

Mr Cowper. It was read againſt me in the King's Bench, and I will prove it; was not Mr Mead with you at the Time of your Examination?

Pilkington. Yes.

Mr Cowper. Did not he put in ſome Words, and what were they?

Pilkington. Not that I know of.

Mr Cowper. But you never ſwore ſo, upon your Oath?

Pilkington. No, I don't believe I did; if I did, it was ignorantly.

Mr Jones. Here is her Examination, it is croſs her Neck.

Mr Cowper. Was Mr Young of Hertford, the Conſtable, preſent, when you were examined?

Pilkington. Yes, he was ſo. The next Day Mrs Stout ſent for me again to put on her Daughter's Shrowd, and I was one that helped to draw the Sheet away, and there was not one Drop of Water come from her; and I laid a Cloth under her Chin, when I help'd her into the Coffin, but I did not ſee the leaſt Moiſture come from her.

Mr Cowper. What Day was it, that you put her into the Coffin?

Pilkington. The next Day after ſhe was dead.

Mr Cowper. Do you know nothing of her being convey'd into the Barn?

Pilkington. I hap'ned to be in the Barn, Mrs Stout deſired me to go with her, and ſhe was brought up in an indecent Manner, and I put a Sheet about her. I was in Mrs Stout's Houſe before her Daughter was brought thither.

Mr Jones. Call Doctor Coatſworth, Doctor Nailer, Doctor Woodhouſe, Doctor Bide.

Mr Coatſworth was Sworn.

Mr Jones. Pray, Doctor, had you a View of the Body of Mrs Stout?

Coatſworth. Yes, I had, Sir: I am a Surgeon.

Mr Jones. Pray give an Account of it, and what your Opinion was how ſhe came by her Death.

Coatſworth. My Lord, in April laſt I was ſent for by Dr Philips, to come to Hertford to ſee the Body of Mrs Stout opened, who had been ſix Weeks buried, and he told me, That there was a Suſpicion ſhe was murthered, and that her Relations were willing to have her taken up and opened. I came down, I think on the 27th of April, and lay at Mrs Stout's Houſe that Night, and by her Diſcourſe, I underſtood ſhe wanted to be ſatisfied, whether her Daughter was with Child. I told her it was my Opinion we ſhould find the Parts contained in the Abdomen ſo rotten, that it would be impoſſible to diſcover the Uterus from the other Parts; however, if ſhe would have her opened, I could not diſcover whether ſhe was with Child, unleſs the Infant was become Bony. Her Face and Neck, to her Shoulders, appeared black and ſo much corrupted, that we were unwilling to proceed any further: But, however, her Mother would have it done, and ſo we did open her; and as ſoon as ſhe was opened, we perceived the Stomach and Guts were as full of Wind, as if they had been blown with a Pair of Bellows; we put her Guts aſide, and came to the Uterus, and Doctor Philips ſhewed it us in his Hand, and afterwards cut it out and laid it on the Table, and opened it, and we ſaw into the Cavity of it, and if there had been any Thing there as minute as a Hair, we might have ſeen it, but it was perfectly free and empty; and after That, he put the Inteſtines into their Places; and we bid him open the Stomach, and it was opened with an Inciſion-Knife, and it ſunk flat, and let out Wind, but no Water; afterwards we opened the Breaſt and Lobes of the Lungs, and there was no Water: Then we look'd on each Side, and took up the Lobes of the Lungs too, to ſee if there was no Water in the Diaphragm, and there was none, but all dry. Then I remember, I ſaid, this Woman could not be drowned, for if ſhe had taken in Water, the Water muſt have rotted all the Guts: That was the Conſtruction I made of it then; but for any Marks about her Head and Neck, it was impoſſible for us to diſcover it, becauſe they were ſo rotten.

Mr Cowper. You ſay, this Inſpection was made about ſix Weeks after ſhe was dead.

Coatſworth. It was made on the 28th of April.

Mr Cowper. She was drowned on the 13th of March.

Mr Jones. Did you make an Inciſion into thoſe Parts of the Neck and Head.

Coatſworth. No: I told Mrs Stout and her Son, If you imagine the Skull to be injur'd, I will open the Head, for if the Scalp be never ſo rotten, yet if the Skull has ſuffered any Impreſſion I ſhall diſcover it; they ſaid, They did not ſuſpect a broken Skull in the Caſe, and ſo we did not examine it.

Mr Jones. But all the other Parts were ſound?

Coatſworth. Yes, ſound to a Miracle; for I did not imagine we could find them ſo.

Mr Jones. Call John Dimſdale.

Mr Cowper. My Lord, I would know, and I deſire to be heard to this Point: I think where the Coroner's Inqueſt have view'd the Body, and the Relations have been heard, and the Body buried, that it is not to be ſtir'd afterwards for any private Inſpection of Parties, that intend to make themſelves Proſecutors; but if it is to be taken up, it is to be done by ſome legal Authority; for if it ſhould be otherwiſe, any Gentleman may be eaſily trepan'd: For inſtance, If they ſhould have thought fit, after the Coroner's View, to have broken the Skull into a hundred Pieces. This was a private View altogether among themſelves. Certainly, if they intended to have proſecuted me, or any other Gentleman upon this Evidence, they ought to have given us notice, that we might have had ſome Surgeons among them, to ſuperintend their Proceedings. My Lord, with Submiſſion, this ought not to be given in Evidence.

Mr Baron Hatſell. Mr Cowper, I think you are not in earneſt; there is no Colour for this Objection: If they did take up the Body without notice, Why ſhould not that be Evidence; unleſs you think they had a deſign to forſwear themſelves.

Mr Cowper. Had you a Melius Inquirendum, or any lawful Warrant for making this Inſpection?

Coatſworth. No, there was not.

Mr Baron Hatſell. Suppoſe they did an ill Thing in taking up the Body without ſome Order, tho' I don't know any more Ill in taking up that Body than any other; but, however, Is that any Reaſon why we ſhould not hear this Evidence?

Coatſworth. Mr Camblin, Sir William Cowper's Surgeon, was there by.

Mr Jones. Call Mr Dimſdale Senior, (who was Sworn.) Had you a View of the Body after it was taken up?

Dimſdale. Yes.

Mr Jones. Pray give your Opinion of it.

Dimſdale. On the 28th of April, as I remember, I was ſent for down by Mrs Stout, to view the Body of her Daughter. Her Daughter was juſt taken out of the Ground but not opened; they had juſt touch'd the Body, but not opened the Skin when I came there ——

Mr Baron Hatſell. Are you a Surgeon?

Dimſdale. Yes, my Lord. Finding her Head ſo much mortified, down to her Neck, we thought all the Parts were ſeized, and had a Conſultation, Whether we ſhould open her or not; but Mrs Stout was very much enraged, becauſe a great Scandal had been raiſed, That her Daughter was with Child; and ſhe ſaid, She would have her opened to clear her Reputation: With that we opened her, and found her Body as ſound as any Fleſh could be; no Manner of Putrifaction in her Lungs or any other Part, but ſhe was very full of Wind. We ſearch'd the Stomach and the Thorax, and found not one Drop of Water about it; I was more curious than the reſt, and turn'd away her Legs, to ſee if the Coffin was ſoil'd, and the Coffin and Shrowd were not wet. Her Uterus was taken out, and I ſaw no Manner of Sign of Conception. After this we had a Conſultation to conſider, Whether ſhe was drowned or not drowned; and we were all of Opinion, That ſhe was not drowned; only Mr Camblin deſired he might be excuſed from giving his Opinion, Whether ſhe was drowned or not; but all the reſt of us did give our Opinions, That ſhe was not drowned.

Mr Jones. Give your Reaſons, why you believ'd ſhe was not drowned.

Dimſdale. My Reaſon was this: Becauſe we found no Water in her; her Inteſtines were not putrified; for if there had been Water in her, that would have cauſed a Fermentation, and that would have rotted the Lungs and Guts.

Mr Baron Hatſell. Could you tell, ſo many Weeks after, Whether ſhe was drowned or no?

Dimſdale. Yes, my Lord, for this Reaſon: For if ſhe had been drowned, there had been ſome Sign of Water; and if there had been a Pint of Water, it would have rotted her Lights and her Guts; and that is done in a Week's Time by Fermentation.

Mr Cow-

Mr Cowper. Sir, I desire to know, Whether, according to Reason and your Skill, after six Weeks Time, it's possible, there should be Water in the Thorax.

Dimsdale. I do believe there may be some; for it can't come out after the Body is dead, but by Putrifaction; and there was no Putrifaction, but it was firm and sound.

Mr Baron Hatsell. What Parts would have been putrified by the Water?

Dimsdale. The Lungs and Bowels.

Mr Baron Hatsell. And they were firm?

Dimsdale. They were: And if there had been Water, they would have been putrified.

Mr Jones. Call John Dimsdale, Junior.

Juryman. Was her Navel started?

Dimsdale, Sen. No: I never saw such a Body in my Life.

Mr Cowper. Did you ever see a Body that was drowned, opened six Weeks after?

Dimsdale, Sen. No, never. If a Body be drowned a Fortnight, the Bowels will be so rotten, there will be no coming near it; and I took particular Notice, and I did not see one Drop of Water.

Mr Baron Hatsell. Was the Coffin close?

Dimsdale, Sen. Yes; it was close and dry as any Board whatsoever; and all the Parts sound, but the Head and Neck, and left Arm.

Mr Jones. What do you think could be the Reason of that?

Dimsdale, Sen. The left Arm was rottener than the other; the Neck was rotten before.

Mr Jones. What did you take to be the Cause of it?

Dimsdale, Sen. I can't judge of that.

Call John Dimsdale, Junior, who was Sworn.

Dimsdale, Jun. My Lord, the Body was opened before I came to see it, and they were drawing up an Affidavit, that there was no Water in the Body, and they desired me to sign it; but I desired first to look into the Body, and I did look into it, and turn'd the Intestines aside, and there was no Water in it; but the Head from the Neck was very much putrified.

Mr Jones. Do you believe she was drowned?

Dimsdale, Jun. No, I believe not.

Mr Jones. Did you open the Child that was drowned? What Difference was there between the Body of that Child and this?

Dimsdale Jun. The Child was extreamly swell'd in the Belly and Stomach, and had abundance of Water in it.

Mr Jones. Was the Child lac'd that you opened?

Dimsdale Jun. It was laid upon the Table before I came.

Mr Cowper. How long was it before the Child was opened?

Dimsdale Jun. It was drowned in the Afternoon, and opened the next Morning.

Mr Cowper. You said, Sir, you was ask'd to sign the Affidavit before you saw the Body, and you were honest, and would see the Body first, pray who ask't you?

Dimsdale Jun. All of them did.

Mr Cowper. Who in particular, if you please name them?

Dimsdale Jun. Mr Coatsworth, Mr Phillips, Mr Camlin, &c. they asked me to set my Hand to it, because they thought I had seen it before.

Then Dr Dimsdale was Sworn.

Mr Jones. Mr Robert Dimsdale was you at the opening of this Body?

Dr Dimsdale. I came after it was opened, my Brother and I came together.

Mr Jones. What Profession are you of, a Physician?

Dr Dimsdale. Yes, when the Body was taken up, they desired us to be there, to inspect the Body, but before we came it happened they had opened the Body, and were setting their Hands to a Paper, a Sort of Affidavit, and when I came in, they would have had us set our Hands, but we would not, till we had look'd upon the Body, and went and laid it open again, and we did not find the least Drop of Water neither in the Thorax nor Abdomen.

Mr Cowper. Is it possible there should be Water in the Thorax, according to your Skill?

Dr Dimsdale. Yes, we did think there would have been, if she had been drown'd.

Mr Bar. Hatsell. Could you expect to find it, so long as six Weeks after?

Dr Dimsdale. We should have expected that or a Putrifaction, but we found no Putrifaction, neither in the Bowels nor Intestines, but only upon her Head and Shoulders, and one Arm.

Mr Cowper. Pray by what Passage does the Water go into the Thorax?

Dr Dimsdale. 'Twill be very difficult for me to describe the Manner here; but we should have found some in the Stomach and Intestines.

Mr Cowper. Pray, Sir, How should it go into the Thorax?

Dr Dimsdale. By the Lymphæduct, if carried by any Means.

Mr Cowper. When the Party is dead, Can any Water pass into any Part of the Body?

Dr Dimsdale. We opened the Abdomen of the Child that was drowned, and found in the several Cavities abundance of Water.

Mr Jones. When a Person is dead, Can they receive any Water after?

Dr Dimsdale. No: For all the Parts are clos'd and contracted.

Mr Cowper. Pray, If a dead Body be put into the Water, Will not the Water come into the Windpipe?

Dr Dimsdale. I question whether it will or no.

Mr Jones. Was her Mouth shut?

Dr Dimsdale. She was putrified about the Head and Shoulders and one Arm, that I saw was putrified; it was the left Arm, as I take it.

Mr Jones. What is your Opinion, as to her Death?

Dr Dimsdale. I believe, if she had been drowned, there would have been a Putrifaction of the Abdomen first; and it was her extream Parts, her Arm, her Head, and her Breast, that was putrified, but her Bowels seem'd firm and sound.

Mr Jones. Then you don't think her Death was by drowning?

Dr Dimsdale. No.

Mr Cowper. Pray, Did not you give some Certificate or Paper, declaring the Death of this Gentlewoman, before you saw the Body at all?

Dr Dimsdale. No, I did not.

Mr Cowper. Sir, I would ask you, Was not you angry that Mr Camlin would not join with you in Opinion?

Dr Dimsdale. No.

Mr Cowper. Did not you tell him, that you were a graduate Phyſician, and was angry he would not join with you?

Dr Dimſdale. Suppoſe I did.

Mr Baron Hatſell. But did you do ſo or no?

Dr Dimſdale. Yes, my Lord, we had ſome Words about it.

Mr Jones. Swear Dr Coatſworth, (which was done.) Now, my Lord, we call theſe Gentlemen that are Doctors of Skill, to know their Opinion of them that are found floating, without Water in them, how they come by their Death.

Dr Coatſworth. I have not ſeen many drowned Bodies to make Obſervation upon, but it is my Opinion, That every Body that is drowned, is ſuffocated by Water paſſing down the Wind-pipe into the Lungs upon Reſpiration; and at the ſame Time, the Water preſſing upon the Gullet, there will be a Neceſſity of ſwallowing a great Part of it into the Stomach: I have been in danger of being drowned my ſelf, and I was forced to ſwallow a great Quantity of Water. If a Perſon was drowned and taken out immediately, as ſoon as the Suffocation was effected, I ſhould not wonder, if there were but little Water in the Stomach and Guts; but if it lay in the Water ſeveral Hours, it muſt be very ſtrange if the Belly ſhould not be full of Water; but I will not ſay, it is impoſſible it ſhould be otherwiſe.

Mr Cowper. I deſire to know, Whether this Gentleman attempted to drown himſelf, or was in danger of being drowned by Accident.

Dr Coatſworth. It was by Accident: I was paſſing up the Ship Side, and took hold of a looſe Rope inſtead of the Entring-Rope, which failing me, I fell into the Water.

Mr Cowper. But you ſtruggled to ſave your ſelf from drowning?

Dr Coatſworth. I did ſo: I have ſeen ſeveral Perſons that have been drowned, and they have lain ſeveral Days, until by a Fermentation, they have been rais'd; but I never made my Obſervations of any Perſons that have been drowned above ſix Hours.

Mr Jones. Did you ever hear of any Perſons, that, as ſoon as they were drowned, had ſwam above Water.

Dr Coatſworth. I have not known ſuch a Caſe.

Mr Cowper. Did you ever know, Sir, a Body that was otherwiſe killed, to float upon the Water?

Dr Coatſworth. I never made any Obſervation of That.

Mr Baron Hatſell. Dr Browne has a learned Diſcourſe, in his Vulgar Errors, upon this Subject, concerning the Floating of dead Bodies; I don't underſtand it my ſelf, but he hath a whole Chapter about it.

Then Dr Nailor was Sworn.

Mr Jones. We ask you the ſame Queſtion that Doctor Coatſworth was aked, What is your Opinion of dead Bodies? If a Body be drowned, will it have Water in it or not?

Dr Nailor. My Lord, I am of Opinion, That it will have a Quantity if it be drowned; but if there be no Water in the Body, I believe that the Perſon was dead before it was put into the Water.

Mr Cowper. I would ask the Doctor one Queſtion, my Lord, Whether he was not a conſtant Voter againſt the Intereſt of our Family in this Corporation?

Dr Nailor. I never did come to give a Vote, but Sir William Cowper, or his Son, oppos'd me, and ſaid, I had no Right to Vote.

Mr Cowper. I would have ask'd the ſame Queſtion of the Dimſdales, if I had remembred it; they are of another Party, as this Gentleman is.

Mr Baron Hatſell. It is not at all material, as they are Witneſſes.

Then call Doctor Babington, (who was Sworn.)

Mr Jones. Pray, What is your Opinion of this Matter?

Mr Babington. I am of Opinion that all Bodies that go into the Water alive, and are drowned, have Water in them, and ſink as ſoon as they are drowned, and don't riſe ſo ſoon as this Gentlewoman did.

Mr Cowper. Pray what is your Profeſſion, Sir?

Mr Babington. I am a Chirurgeon.

Mr Cowper. Becauſe Mr Jones called you Doctor.

Mr Baron Hatſell. Did you ever ſee any drowned Bodies?

Mr Babington. Yes, my Lord, I once had a Gentlewoman a Patient that was half an Hour under Water, and ſhe lived ſeveral Hours after, and in all that time ſhe diſcharged a great Quantity of Water; I never heard of any that went alive into the Water, and were drowned, that floated ſo ſoon as this Gentlewoman did, I have heard ſo from Phyſicians.

Mr Baron Hatſell. I have heard ſo too, and that they are forced to tye a Bullet to dead Bodies thrown into the Sea that they might not riſe again.

Mr Cowper. The Reaſon of that is, that they ſhould not riſe again, not that they will not ſink without it; but I would ask Mr Babington whether the Gentlewoman he ſpeaks of went into the Water voluntarily, or fell in by Accident.

Mr Babington. By Accident, but I believe that don't alter the Caſe.

Mr Jones. Swear Dr Burnet, (which was done.)

Dr Burnet, You hear what is the Matter in Queſtion, what is your Opinion of it?

Dr Burnet. My Lord, I think that if any Perſon fall into the Water by Accident, or throws himſelf in, the Body will receive Water as long as it is alive, and there are Endeavours for Reſpiration, and after theſe Endeavours are over, there is no Water will come in, for all the Parts are clos'd; ſo conſequently there muſt be Water in all probability found in her.

Mr Jones. What, do they ſwim or ſink?

Dr Burnet. They ſink, I never ſaw a Perſon drowned taken up without Water in my Life, but I have ſeen ſeveral full of Water.

Mr Cowper. I think you ſay when the Faculty of Reſpiratiou ceaſes, no Water comes in.

Dr Burnet. Yes, that is my Opinion.

Mr Cowper. But the Water does paſs into them while there are Endeavours for Reſpiration.

Dr Burnet. Yes, that is my Opinion.

Then Dr Woodhouſe was Sworn.

Mr Jones. Doctor, What is your Opinion of this Matter?

Dr Woodhouſe. My Opinion is, that no Perſon is ſuffocated by Water, but he muſt have a great deal of Water within him, a great deal of Water in the Stomach, and ſome in the Lungs.

Mr

Mr Cowper. Pray, Sir, did you ever open any of these Bodies?

Dr Woodhouse. Yes, I have opened a Child my self that had a great Quantity of Water in it.

Mr Cowper. Did you find any Quantity of Water in the Throat?

Dr Woodhouse. There was some, but a little, but a great deal in the Stomach.

Mr Cowper. Pray which Way can it pass into the Thorax?

Dr Woodhouse. While the Person is struggling for Respiration, there may be a Relaxtion of, and the Person must suck in Water as well as Air, and some Water may get into the Windpipe, and so enter into the Lungs.

Mr Cowper. Is there a Passage from the Lungs to the Thorax?

Dr Woodhouse. The Thorax is the Vessel wherein the Lungs lie, the Lungs in the Thorax, the Breast is the Cavity where the Lungs lie, the Windpipe is the Conveyance to the Lungs, and a Person in Respiration takes down some Water there, but no doubt the greater Quantity will be in the Stomach.

Mr Bar. Hatsell. Pray let me ask you a Question, some of the Witnesses said, that if a Person be drowned and lies Dead a great while, the Inwards will be putrified, what is your Opinion of it?

Dr Woodhouse. No doubt, my Lord, where Water gets into the Stomach, or wherever it is, it will putrifie very soon.

Mr Jones. Call Edward Clement. (who was Sworn) Are not you a Seaman?

E. Clement. Yes, Sir.

Mr Jones. How long have you been so?

E. Clement. Man I have writ my self but six Years, but I have used the Sea nine or ten Years.

Mr Jones. Have you known of any Men that have been kill'd, and thrown into the Sea, or who have fallen in and been drowned; pray tell us the difference as to their swimming and sinking.

E. Clement. In the Year 89, or 90, in Beachy Fight, I saw several thrown over-board, during the Engagement, but one particularly I took notice of that was my Friend, and kill'd by my Side, I saw him swim for a considerable Distance from the Ship, and a Ship coming under our Stern caus'd me to loose sight of him, but I saw several dead Bodies floating at the same Time; likewise in another Engagement, where a Man had both his Leggs shot off, and died instantly, they threw over his Legs, though they sunk, I saw his Body float. Likewise I have seen several Men who have died natural Deaths at Sea, they have when they have been Dead had a considerable Weight of Ballast and Shot made fast to them, and so were thrown over-board; because we hold it for a general Rule that all Men Swim if they be Dead before they come into the Water, and on the contrary I have seen Men when they have been drowned, that they have sunk as soon as the Breath was out of their Bodies, and I could see no more of them. For Instance, a Man fell out of the Cornwal, and sunk down to rights, and seven Days afterwards we weighed Anchor, and he was brought up grasping his Arm about the Cable; and we have observed in several Cases, that where Men fall overboard, as soon as their Breath is out of their Bodies they sink downright, and on the contrary where a dead Body is thrown over-board without Weight it will Swim.

Mr Jones. You have been in a Fight, how do Bodies float after a Battle?

E. Clement. Men float with their Heads just down, and the Small of their Back and Buttocks upwards, I have seen a great Number of them, some hundreds in Beachey-head Fight, when we Engag'd the French, I was in the old Cambridge at that Time, I saw several (what Number I will not be positive, but they were a great Number, I can't guess to a Score) that did really Swim, and I could see them float for a considerable Distance.

Mr Jones. Have you seen a Shipwreck?

E. Clement. Yes; the Coronation in September 1691. I was then belonging to the Dutchess, under the Command of Captain Clement, we look'd out and see them taking down their Masts, we saw the Men walking up and down on the right Side, and the Ship sunk down, and they swam up and down like a shoal of Fish one after another, and I see them hover one upon another, and see them drop away by Scores at a Time, and there was an Account of about nineteen that sav'd themselves, some by Boats, and others by Swimming; but there were no more sav'd out of the Ship's Complement, which was between five and six Hundred, and the rest I saw sink downright, some twenty at a Time. There was a Fisherman brought our Captain Word, that in laying in of his Nets he drew up some Men close under the Rocks that were drowned belonging to the Coronation, we generally throw in Bags of Ballast with them.

Mr Jones. I suppose all Men that are drowned you sink them with Weights.

E. Clement. Formerly Shot was allowed for that purpose, there us'd to be threescore Weight of Iron, but now 'tis a Bag of Ballast that is made fast to them.

Mr Jones. Then you take it for a certain Rule that those that are drowned sink, but those that are thrown over-board do not?

E. Clement. Yes, otherwise why should the Government be at that vast Charge to allow threescore or fourscore Weight of Iron to sink every Man, but only that their Swimming about should not be a Discouragement to others.

Then Richard Gin was Sworn.

Mr Jones. You hear the Question, pray what do you say to it?

R. Gin. I was at Sea a great while, and all the Men that I see turn'd over-board had a great Weight at their Heels to sink them.

Mr Jones. Then will they Swim otherwise?

R Gin. So they say.

Mr Jones. Are you a Seaman?

R. Gin. I went against my will in two Fights.

Mr Jones. Then Gentlemen of the Jury, I hope we have given you Satisfaction that Mrs Stout did not drown her self, but was carried into the Water after she was killed. That was the first Question, for if it be true that all dead Bodies when they are put into the Water do Swim, and the Bodies that go alive into the Water and are drowned do sink: This is sufficient Evidence that she came by her Death not by Drowniug, but some other Way. Now, my Lord, as to the second Matter, and that is to give such Evidence as we have against these Gentlemen at the Bar, Mr Cowper, it appears, was the last Man that any one can give an Account of was in her Company. What became of her afterwards, or where they went no Body can tell; but the other Witnesses have given you Evidence that he was the last Man that was with her. I shall only give this further Evidence as to Mr Cowper, That not notwithſtanding all the Civility and Kindneſſes that paſs'd between him and this Family, when the Bruit and Noiſe of this Fact was ſpread abroad, Mr Cowper did not come no conſider and conſult with old Mrs Stout what was to be done; but he took no manner of Notice of it, and the next Day he rode out of Town, without further taking Notice of it.

Call George Aldridge, and John Archer.

John Archer was Sworn.

Mr Jones. Do you know any Thing of Mr Cowper's going out of Town after this Buſineſs of Mrs Stout's being drowned?

J. Archer. Yes, I did ſee him go out of Town afterwards.

Mr Jones. Which Way did he go?

J. Archer. He went the Back-way from the Glove, I ſuppoſe he came that Way.

Mr Cowper. What Day was it I went? Is it not the Way that I us'd to go when I go the Circuit into Eſſex.

J. Archer. Yes, I believe ſo.

Mr Cowper. I Lodg'd at Mr Bareſoot's, and he has a Back-door to the Glove, where my Horſe was, and I went the direct Way into Eſſex, and it was Wedneſdny Morning: What Day was it you ſee me go?

J. Archer. It was on the Wedneſday Morning.

Mr Cowper. That was the very Day I went into Eſſex.

Then George Aldridge was Sworn.

Mr Jones. When did Mr Cowper go out of Town the laſt Aſſizes?

G. Aldridg. On Wedneſday.

Mr Jones. Which Way did he go?

G. Aldridg. He went the Way to Chelmsford.

Mr Jones. Did you not fetch his Horſe from Stout's?

G. Aldridg. Yes, Sir.

Mr Jones. How often did you go for it?

G. Aldridg. Three Times.

Mr Jones. When?

G. Aldridg. On Tueſday Night I ſent once, and went twice my ſelf, the firſt Time there was no Body at home to deliver the Horſe, ſo I went to Mr Stout's, and ask'd him about the Horſe, and he ſaid he could not deliver him till the Maid went home, and then I went about eleven of the Clock and had the Horſe.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. Was it eleven at Night?

G. Aldridg. Yes, my Lord.

Mr Cowper. When I ſent you to fetch my Horſe; what Directions did I give you?

G. Aldridg. You gave me Directions to fetch your Horſe, becauſe you ſaid you ſhould have occaſion to go out next Morning betimes with the Judge.

Mr Cowper. The Reaſon I ſent for my Horſe, was this, when I heard ſhe had drowned her ſelf, I think it concern'd me in Prudence to ſend a common Hoſtler for him, for fear the Lord of the Mannor ſhonld ſeize all that was there as forfeited.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. There was no danger of that, for ſhe was found non compos mentis.

Mr Cowper. No, my Lord, I ſent before the Verdict.

Mr Jones. It ſeems you did not think fit to go and take Horſe there your ſelf, though you put your Horſe there.

Now, my Lord, we will go on and give the other Evidence that we opened concerning theſe three other Gentlemen that came to Town, two of them took Lodgings at Gurrey's at five in the Afternoon, but did not come in till between eleven and twelve, and then they brought another in with them, and though he had been in Town five or ſix Hours his Feet were wet and his Shoes, and his Head was of a reeky Sweat, he had been at ſome hard Labour I believe, and not drinking himſelf into ſuch a Sweat.

Call John Gurrey, Martha Gurrey, and Eliz. Gurrey.

John Gurrey was Sworn.

Mr Jones. Do you know any of the Gentlemen at the Bar?

J. Gurrey. Yes.

Mr Jones. Name who you know?

J. Gurrey. There is Mr Stevens, Mr Rogers, and Mr Marſon.

Mr Jones. Pray do you remember when they took Lodgings at your Houſe?

J. Gurrey. The laſt Aſſizes, when they firſt came there was only Mr Stevens and Mr Rogers.

Mr Jones. At what Time did they take it?

J. Gurrey. I was at Church and can't tell that, they hir'd the Lodging of my Wife.

Mr Jones. What can you ſay more?

J. Gurrey. I was in at Night when they came, there came three of them at eleven at Night, whereof Mr Marſon was the third Perſon, and he ſaid he was deſtitute of a Lodging, and he ask'd for a ſpare Bed, my Wife told them ſhe had one, but had let it, whereupon Mr Stevens and Mr Rogers ſaid he ſhould Lodge with them, ſo they went up all together, and they call'd for a Fire to be kindled, and ask'd for the Landlord, which was I, and they ask'd me to fetch a Bottle of Wine, and I told them I would fetch a Quart, which I did, aud then they ask'd me to ſit down and drink with them, which I did, and then they ask'd me if one Mrs Sarah Stout did not live in Town, and whether ſhe was a Fortune, I ſaid yes, then they ſaid they did not know how to come to the Sight of her, and I ſaid I would ſhow them her to morrow Morning, not queſtioning but I might ſee her ſome Time as ſhe was coming down the Street; ſo they ſaid they would go to ſee her. Mr Rogers and Mr Stevens charg'd Mr Marſon with being her old Sweat-heart, ſaith Mr Marſon, ſhe hath thrown me off, but a Friend of mine will be even with her by this Time.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. What a Clock was it then?

J. Gurrey. I reckon eleven of the Clock when they came in.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. Did you obſerve in what Condition Mr Marſon was in?

J. Gurrey. I did not obſerve, only that he was hot and put by his Wig, I ſee his Head was wet, and he ſaid he was juſt come from London, and that made him in ſuch a Heat.

Mr Jones. Had he Shooes or Boots on?

J. Gurrey. I did not obſerve that.

Mr Jones. What did they do the next Day?

J. Gurrey. The next Morning I heard this Party was in the Water, I ſat up all Night, and was fain to wait till my Daughter came down to look after the Shop, and then I went to ſee her, and ſhe was remov'd into the Barn, and they were wiping her Face, cloſing her Eyes, and putting up her Jaws; and and as I came back these Persons were walking, and I met Mr Marson and Mr Stevens, and told them the News; said I, This Person is come to a sad Accident: Say they, So we hear; but nevertheless we will be as good as our Word, and go and see her: I went with them and overtook Mr Rogers, and Marson said we are a going to see Mrs Stout: O, Landlord, said Rogers, you may take up that Rogue (pointing at Mr Marson) for what he said last Night; but I did not think, they speaking so jocularly, that there was any Suspicion of their being concerned in the Murder. A second Time I went, the Barn-door was lock'd; I knock'd, and they open'd it and let us in, and they uncover'd her Face to let me see her, and I touch'd her; and looking about for them they were gone, and I can't say they see her or touch'd her: Then Mr Marson and they were consulting how to send a great Coat to London, and I directed them to a Coachman at the Bell-Inn, but I did not hear he went to enquire after the Coachman: Then they went to your Lordship's Chamber, and I went home; and about Eleven of the Clock I saw Mr Marson and Mr Stevens coming down with Mr Spencer Cowper.

Mr Marson. I did not go out that Night after I came in.

Mr Jones. No: We agree That. Did you see Mr Cowper and these Gentlemen together?

J. Gurrey. Only at Eleven of the Clock on Tuesday Noon, Mr Cowper, Mr Marson, Mr Stevens, were coming down to the Market-place.

Mr Jones. Did not they take their Leave of you when they went away from you that Forenoon?

J. Gurrey. No: Only in the Morning they told me they would send me Word at Noon, if they intended to lodge there.

Mr Marson. I desire to know of Mr Gurrey, if his Sister was not in the Room, when we came in?

J. Gurrey. She was in our House that Day; but whether when They came, I can't tell.

Mr Cowper. Pray, Have not you had some Discourse with your Sister the Widow Davis, concerning some Suspicion that you had of Sarah Walker, that hath been produc'd as a Witness?

J. Gurrey. I don't remember any such.

Mr Cowper. Then did not you say these Words? We must not concern our selves with Sarah Walker, for she is the only Witness against the Cowpers.

J. Gurrey. I can't remember any such Thing.

Mr Baron Hatsell. You may answer according to the best of what you remember; if you say you have forgotten when you have not, you are forsworn.

Mr Cowper. If your Lordship pleases to give Leave to Mr Gurrey to recollect himself. I ask him, Whether he did not talk with his Sister Davis about some Suspicion, Wife and He had about Sarah Walker the Maid-Servant of the deceased?

J. Gurrey. I believe there might be some talk of a Person that was seen to go into the Church-yard at some Distance with Sarah Walker.

Mr Cowper. Did your Wife say that she did suspect that Person?

J. Gurrey. Yes.

Mr Cowper. Did your Wife say they behaved themselves strangely, and that she would have persuaded the Widow Blewit to have watched her?

J. Gurrey. There was something of that.

Mr Cowper. Was there not some such Words that they must not meddle with Sarah Walker? For she is the Witness against the Cowpers.

J. Gurrey. I said do not concern your self with Sarah Walker for fear of taking off her Evidence.

Mr Cowper. Pray did not the Widow Davis warm the Sheets for these Gentlemen?

J. Gurrey. She was with my Wife, but I can't say whether she warmed the Sheets.

Mr Cowper. When they came home had you any Lodgers that wanted to come home? Had not you one Gape?

J. Gurrey. I can't say whether he was in before or after them.

Mr Cowper. Did not you say to your Sister Davis? Now these Gentlemen are in Bed, if Mr Gape would come home our Family would be quiet.

J. Gurrey. I do not remember that.

Mr Cowper. Pray did not you go to look for Mr Gape?

J. Gurrey. Yes, I went to Hockleys.

Mr Cowper. Who did you employ to speak to Mr Gape to come home?

J. Gurrey. Mrs Hockley.

Mr Cowper. When you came home to your own House, and after you had been at Hockleys to speak with Mr Gape, what Account did you give of the Time of Night, and other Particulars?

J. Gurrey. I gave no Account of the Time.

Mr Cowper. Not to Mrs Davis?

J. Gurrey. I can't tell whether I did or no.

Mr Cowper. Did not you say Mr Gape ask'd Mrs Hockley what a Clock it was?

J. Gurrey. No, I don't remember that, but Mrs Hockley went in and told him what Time of Night it was, it was Eleven or Twelve of the Clock, whether I can't say.

Mr Jones. Call Martha Gurrey. (Who was Sworn) Which of these Gentlemen do you know?

Mrs Gurrey. Mr Marson, Mr Rogers, and Mr Stevens.

Mr Jones. What Time of the Night was it when they came to your House, give an Account of it, and of what you heard them say?

Mrs Gurrey. It was a little after Five or thereabouts, that they came———

Mr Jones. Who came?

Mrs Gurrey. Mr Stevens, and Mr Rogers, and there was one Mr Gilbert that married a first Cousin of mine, he came and ask'd me for my Husband, and I ask'd him his Business, and he said he wanted to speak with him.———

Mr Jones. Pray come to these Men, when did they come to your House?

Mrs Gurrey. They hired the Lodging at Five of the Clock; when they first came to see them, I was not at home, Mr Gilbert brought them, and as I was coming along the Street, I saw Mr Gilbert walking off, and would not look at me. ——

Mr Jones. When did they go out?

Mrs Gurrey. They never staid there.

Mr Jones. When did they come in again?

Mrs Gurrey. Between Eleven and Twelve.

Mr Bar Hatsell. What did they do when they came in again?

Mrs Gurrey. I was laying on some Sheets two Pair of Stairs when they came, and then there was three of them; so they saw me a little after and beg'd my excuse for bringing in another; for they said it was so late they could not get a Lodging any where else, and said if I thought fit the Gentleman should lie with them, and I told them I liked it very well.

Mr Jones. What Firing had they?

Mrs Gurrey. The Firing I laid on in the Morning, and they sent for my Husband to fetch them some Wine.

Mr Jones.

Mr Jones. What did you hear them talk on?

Mrs Gurrey. They diſcours'd with my Husband, and ask'd him if he knew Mrs Sarah Stout, and one of them ſaid to Mr Marſon, I think ſhe was an old Sweet-heart of yours, ay ſaith he, but ſhe turn'd me off, but a Friend of mine is even with her; and Mr Rogers ſaid he was in with her, and afterwards ſaid her Buſineſs was done; they had a Bundle that was wrapt in a pure white Cloth (like to an Apron) but I can't ſay it was an Apron, and there was a Parcell hanging looſe by it, and when he laid it down, he ſaid, he would paſs his Word Mrs Sarah Stout's courting Days were over, and I ſaid, I hop'd it was no hurt to the Gentlewoman, and then I looking upon Mr Marſon, I ſaw him put his Peruke aſide, and his Head reek'd, and he told them he was but juſt come from London that Night, which made him diſappointed of a Lodging.

Mr Jones. What did you hear them ſay about any Money.

Mrs Gurrey. I ask'd them how they would have their Bed warm'd, and Mr Marſon anſwer'd very hot, and with that I went down to ſend my Daughter up, and ſhe could not go preſently, I told her then ſhe muſt go as ſoon as ſhe could.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. Pray don't tell us what paſs'd between you and your Daughter, what do you know of theſe Gentlemen?

Mrs Gurrey. I went to the next Room, to ſee if every Thing was as it ſhould be I hearken'd, and they had ſome Diſcourſe about Money, and I heard ſome Body (I don't know who it ſhould be, except it were Mr Stevens) anſwer, and ſay, the uſe Money was paid to Night, but what Money they meant I can't tell.

Mr Jones. What did you find when they were gone?

Mrs Gurrey. Sir, I found a Cord at the End of the Trunk.

Mr Jones. Was it there in the Morning, or before they came?

Mrs Gurrey. No it could not, for I ſwept my Room and wip'd down the Duſt.

Mr Jones. Was the Cord White?

Mrs Gurrey. No, it was more Dirty than it is now, for my Husband and I have worn it in our Pockets.

Mr Cowper. Pray, who brought the Cord down from above Stairs?

Mrs Gurrey. My Daughter that liv'd with me, and ſhe laid it upon the Shelf.

Mr Cowper. Did not you hear there was a Coroner's Inqueſt ſitting?

Mrs Gurrey. The next Day at Night I did hear of it.

Mr Cowper. Why did not you go to the Coroner's Inqueſt, and give an Account of it there?

Mrs Gurrey. I told my Husband of it, and I ask'd my Husband if he did not hear what they ſaid concerning Mrs Sarah Stout, and he anſwer'd yes, they ought to be taken up for the Words they ſaid laſt Night; why, ſaith I, don't you take notice of it, I think you ought to take them up, but he went out of Doors, and I ſaw no more of him till the Afternoon; when I heard the Words I thought ſome Body had ſtole her away and got to Bed to her.

Mr Cowper. Pray if your Husband heard theſe Words, why did not he go to the Coroner's Inqueſt.

Mrs Gurrey. I did ſpeak to him to have them taken up.

Mr Cowper. Why did he not do it?

Mrs Gurrey. He ſaid he would not do it, he did not know but it might coſt him his Life.

Mr Jones. How came you after this to diſcover it?

Mrs Gurrey. Becauſe I was ſo troubled in Mind I could not reſt Night nor Day, and I told him if he would not tell of it, I would tell of it my ſelf, for I was not able to live.

Then Elizabeth Gurrey was Sworn.

Mr Jones. Pray do you know Mr Rogers, Mr Stevens, and Mr Marſon?

E. Gurrey. I know Mr Marſon, and theſe are the other Gentlemen I reckon.

Mr Jones. What Diſcourſe did you hear from them?

E. Gurrey. Mr Marſon ask'd the other Gentlemen how much Money they had ſpent, the other anſwer'd what was that to him, you have had forty or fifty Pounds to your Share; then the other ask'd him whether the Buſineſs was done, and he anſwer'd he believ'd it was, but if it was not done, it would be done to Night, then my Lord, he pull'd a handful of Money out of his Pocket, and ſwore he would ſpend it all for joy the Buſineſs was done.

Mr Jones. Was Mr Cowper's Name mentioned?

E. Gurrey. I heard them mention Mr Cowper's Name, but not Mrs Sarah Stout's.

Mr Jones. What Condition was the Gentleman's Shooes in?

E. Gurrey. I think it was Mr Marſon, his Shooes were very wet and dirty, one of them was very hot, and he wip'd his Head with his Handkerchief.

Mr Jones. Now my Lord we have done as to our Evidence, Mr Marſon pretended he was juſt then alighted and come from London, and was in a great Heat, and his Shooes were wet, I wonder what Mr Marſon had been doing, for when he was Examined, he ſaid he came to Town about Eight of the Clock, and went to the Glove and Dolphin Inn, and ſtay'd there while he came to his Lodging; now 'tis a wonderful Thing that he ſhould come wet-ſhod from a Tavern where he had been ſitting four or five Hours together.

[Then the Examination of Mr John Marſon was read.]

The Examination of John Marſon, taken before Me, this 27th Day of April, 1699.

WHO being examined where he was on Monday the 13*th of* March laſt, ſaith, That he was at the Borough of Southwark (he being an Attorney of the ſaid Court) till paſt Four of the Clock in the Afternoon; and ſaith, That he ſet out from Southwark for Hartford ſoon after, and came to Hartford about Eight of the Clock the ſame Afternoon, and put up his Horſe at the Sign of ——— an Inn there, and then went to the Hand and Glove, together with Godfrey Gimbart, Eſq; Ellis Stevens, William Rogers, and ſome others, where they ſtay'd till about Eleven of the Clock at Night, and then this Examinant went thence directly to the Houſe of John Gurrey, with the

the said Stevens and Rogers, who lay all together in the said Gurrey's House all that Night. And being asked what he said concerning the said Mrs. Sarah Stout, deceas'd, this Examinant saith, That on Sunday the 12*th of* March last, this Examinant being in Company with one Mr. Thomas Marshall, and telling him that this Examinant intended the next Day for Hartford with the Marshal of the King's Bench, the said Thomas Marshall desired this Examinant and the said Stevens, who was then also in Company, that they would go and see the said Sarah Stout (his Sweet-heart): He confesseth, That he did ask the said Gurrey if he would shew this Examinant where the said Stout lived, telling the said Gurrey that his Name was Marshall, and asked him if he never heard of him before, and jocularly said, That he would go to see her the next Morning; but doth not believe that he said any Thing that any Friend was even with the said Sarah Stout, or to such like Effect. And doth confess, That he did, the next Day, upon the said Gurrey's telling him that the said Stout was drowned, say, that he would keep his Word, and would see her. And saith, That meeting with Mr. Cowper (who is this Examinant's Acquaintance) he believes he did talk with him concerning the said Stout's being drowned, this Examinant having seen her Body that Morning.

Cogn. Die & Anno antedict. coram J. Holt. John Marson.

Mr Jones. All that I observe from it, is this; that he had been five Hours in Town, and when he came to his Lodging he came in wet and hot, and said he was just come from London.

Mr Marson. I had rid forty Miles that Day, and could not be soon cold,

Mr Bar. Hatsell. They have done now for the King, come Mr Cowper, what do you say to it?

Mr Jones. If your Lordship please we will call one Witness more, Mary Richardson. Mrs Richardson, Do you know Mr Marson, or any of these Gentlemen.

Mrs Richardson. They came on Tuesday Night to the Bell at Hodesdon and lay there, and one of the Gentlemen when I was warming of the Sheets, ask'd me if I knew Mrs Sarah Stout, and I said yes; he ask'd me if I knew which Way she came to her End, and I told him I could not tell.

Mr Jones. Is that all, what did they say more?

Mrs Richardson. They did desire and wish it might be found out how it came about, and one Gentleman took no notice of her at all; they had a little Bundle, but what was in it, I can't tell, but there I see it bound up in some colour'd Stuff or other, but what it was, I can't tell.

Mr Jones. Is that all that you can say?

Mrs Richardson. Yes, that's all.

Mr Jones. Then we have done.

Mr Bar. Hatsell. Come Mr Cowper, what do you say to it?

Mr Cowper. Now they have done on the Part of the King, my Lord, and you Gentlemen of my Jury, I must beg your Patience for my Defence: I confess it was an unfortunate Accident for me (as Mr Jones calls it) that I happened to be the last Person (for ought appears) in the Company of a melancholy Woman. The Discourse occasioned by this Accident had been a sufficient Misfortune to me without any Thing else to aggravate it; but I did not in the least imagine that so little, so trivial an Evidence as here is could possibly have affected me to so great a Degree, as to bring me to this Place to answer for the worst Fact that the worst of Men can be guilty of.

My Lord, your Lordship did just now observe, that I have appear'd at the Bar for my Clients, but I must say too, that I never appear'd for my self under this, or the like Circumstances, as a Criminal for any Offence whatsoever.

Mr Jones, very well said, when he spoke on the Part of the King, that if this Gentlewoman was Murther'd, the Crime was Villanous, Base, Barbarous, and Cruel; and for my Part I think so too, the Crime would be so great, that it could never be sufficiently Condemned: But at the same Time I may averre, that to suppose a Murther without good Grounds for it, and afterwards to charge Innocent Men with it Knowingly and Maliciously, is to a Trifle as Base and Barbarous as the Murther it self could be. My Lord, I speak for my own Part, I know not at what Price other Men may value their Lives, but I had much rather my self was Murther'd than my Reputation; which yet, I am sensible hath suffer'd greatly hitherto by the Malice and Artifice of some Men, who have gone pretty far in making this Fact, as Barbarous as it is, to be Credited of me. And therefore I must beg your Lordship's, and the Juries Patience, while I not only defend my Life, but justifie my self also from these Things that have unjustly aspers'd me, by the Conspiracy and Artifice of my Accusers.

My Lord, in all the Evidence that hath been given, I must observe there is no positive Evidence, with Submission, to induce the Jury, or any one to believe the General, that this Gentlewoman was Murthered; but they go upon Suppositions and Inferences, which are contradicted by other Circumstances, in the very Evidence of the Prosecutor, that make full as strong to prove she was not Murther'd, as that she was; so that as it stands, it can amount only to a bare Supposition that she was Murther'd by any Body.

Then as to the Evidence that particularly relates to my self, or the Gentlemen who stand with me at the Bar; that they, or I were concerned in it (if she was Murther'd) there is not one Syllable of Proof; at most, it amounts but to make us suspect of a Murther; not prov'd, but only suspected: This I observe upon the Evidence, as it now stands without Answer, as it has been given on the King's Part: And how far, in the Case of Life, Men shall be affected with Evidence of this Nature, which neither proves the Murther in General, nor that they did it in Particular, though no Defence was made, or any further Answer given, I must submit to your Lordship's and the Jury's Judgment.

But, my Lord, I do not doubt but I shall be able to wipe away, even that remote Suspicion by my Defence: They have been long in their Evidence for the King, and therefore I must beg your Patience while I give a particular Answer to every Part of it, in as good a Method as I am able; and I will waste as little Time as may consist with the justifying of my Reputation; for which I know your Lordship will have as tender a Regard, gard, to ſee it doth not ſuffer unjuſtly, as for my Life itſelf.

And, I promiſe your Lordſhip, I ſhall trouble you with no Evidence which is not Expreſs and Plain; no Inuendo's or Suſpicions; but I ſhall prove fully and clearly, in the firſt Place, That there was no Ground at all, in this Caſe, to ſuppoſe ſhe was murther'd by any one but herſelf.

The firſt Fact that they inſiſted upon to infer a Murther from it, was, that the Body was found floating; now, my Lord, that Fact I am able by the Evidence I have, as well as from that of the Proſecutor, to deny; for the Fact was directly otherwiſe, that is, ſhe was not found floating.

And whereas the Proſecutor's Witneſſes, who have been produced to this Point, are obſcure and poor Men, and your Lordſhip obſerves have been taught to ſay generally that ſhe floated, which, when they are required to explain, and deſcribe how ſhe lay, they contradict themſelves in, by ſhewing ſhe lay Sideways between the Stakes, and almoſt all under Water: Now I ſhall give your Lordſhip, and the Jury a full and particular Account and Deſcription from the Pariſh Officers, Men employed by the Coroner to take the Body out of the Water, of the very Manner and Poſture in which it was firſt found; which they are much better able to do, than the Proſecutor's Witneſſes, having ſeen her before all, or moſt of thoſe People, and theſe Officers clearly agree that her Body was under Water, when found, except ſome ſmall Appearance of her Petticoats, near, or on the Surface of the Water, which may be very eaſily accounted for; becauſe the Stakes the Witneſſes mention, and which are driven into the Ground croſs the River to prevent Weeds and Trumpery from running into the Mill-ſtand, as the Witneſſes have already ſaid, about a Foot diſtance from one another, and are ſet with their Feet from the Mill, and their Heads inclining towards the Mill with the Stream: Now, my Lord, every one knows, that though a drowned Body will at firſt ſink, yet it is buoyant, and does not go down-right, and reſt in one place like Lead; for a humane Body is ſeldom or never in a Stream found to lie where it was drowned; a Body drowned at Chelſea, has been often found by Fiſhermen at London, and that before it came to float above Water. Now if a Body is ſo buoyant, as that it is driven down by the impellant Force of the Current (though it do not float above Water) it ſeems a Conſequence that when it comes to be ſtopp'd and reſiſted by the Stakes, which lie with their Heads downwards, inclining with the Stream, the Stream bearing the Body againſt the Stakes, muſt needs raiſe it upwards to find another Paſſage, if poſſible, when the Ordinary and Natural is obſtructed. I have ſeen, I remember, that where Weeds have been driven down a River, and have been rolled along at the Bottom, when they have come down to a Board or Stakes of a Wyer, or Turnpike, they have been by the Force of the Water raiſed up againſt thoſe Boards, or Stakes, and forced over them, though without ſuch Obſtruction they had undoubtedly continued to rool under the Water. I don't know of any other Symptom they pretend to, of her not being drowned, from any thing obſerved of her in the Water. Then as to the flatneſs of her Belly, when ſhe was put into her Coffin, I ſhall ſhew it is a common and natural Accident, ſometimes drowned Bodies are ſwelled more, ſometimes leſs, ſometimes not at all; I think it hardly deſerves a Phyſician to prove that a Body may be drowned with very little Water, that a Man may be drowned by ſtrangling, or Suffocation cauſed by a little Water in the Lungs, without any great Quantity of Water received in the Body, is a certain and eſtabliſhed Truth; for I am told that when Reſpiration ceaſes, the Party dies, and can receive no more Water after that; ſo that nothing is to be inferred from a Body's having more or leſs Water found in it, eſpecially, if your Lordſhip will give me leave to obſerve this Diſtinction, where a Body is voluntarily drowned, and where it is drowned by Accident; for People that fall in by Accident do ſtruggle and ſtrive as long as they can, every time they riſe they drink ſome Water into the Stomach to prevent its paſſing into the Lungs, and are drowned no ſooner than needs muſt; but Perſons that voluntarily drown themſelves, to be ſure deſperately plunge into the Water to diſpatch a miſerable Life, as ſoon as they can; and ſo that little quantity in the Lungs, which cauſes Death, may be the ſooner taken in; after which no more is received: And I hope by Phyſicians it will appear there is good Ground for this difference.

The next is the Evidence that the Chirurgeons have given on the other Part, relating to the taking this Gentlewoman out of her Grave, after ſhe had been buried ſix Weeks, whether this ought to have been given in Evidence for the Reaſons I hinted at in a Criminal Caſe, I ſubmit to your Lordſhip. But as it is, I have no Reaſon to apprehend it, being able to make appear, that the Gentlemen who ſpoke to this Point have delivered themſelves in that manner, either out of extreme Malice, or a moſt profound Ignorance; this will be ſo very plain upon my Evidence, that I muſt take the Liberty to impute one, or both of thoſe Cauſes to the Gentlemen that have argued from their Obſervations upon that Matter.

And now, if your Lordſhip will but pleaſe to conſider the Circumſtances under which they would accuſe me of this horrid Action, I don't think they will pretend to ſay, that in the whole Courſe of my Life, I have been guilty of any mean or indirect Action; and I will put it upon the worſt Enemy I have in the World to ſay it. Now, for a Man in the Condition I was in, of ſome Fortune in Poſſeſſion, related to a better, in a good Employment, thriving in my Profeſſion, living within my Income, never in Debt, (I may truly ſay not five Pounds at any one time theſe eight Years paſt) having no poſſibility of making any Advantage by her Death, void of all Malice; and as appears by her own Evidence in perfect Amity and Friendſhip with this Gentlewoman, to be guilty of the murthering her, to begin at the Top of all Baſeneſs and Wickedneſs, certainly is incredible.

My Lord, in this Proſecution my Enemies ſeeing the Neceſſity of Aſſigning ſome Cauſe, have been ſo malicious to ſuggeſt before, (though not now, when I have this Opportunity of vindicating my ſelf publickly) that I have been concerned in the Receipt of Money for this Gentlewoman, had her Securities by me, and ſometimes that I had been her Guardian, or her Truſtee, and I know not what. I now ſee the Contrivers and Promoters of that Scandal, and they know it to be Baſe, Falſe, and Malicious; I never was concerned cerned in Intereſt with her, directly, or indirectly, and ſo I told them when I was before my Lord Chief Juſtice; 'tis true, it was then juſt ſuggeſted by the Proſecutors, I then denied it, and I deny it ſtill ——— I thank God I have not been uſed, nor have I needed to deny the Truth.

My Lord, you find the Proſecutors have nothing to ſay to me upon this Head, after all the Slanders and Stories they have publiſh'd againſt me, of my having Money in my Hands which belonged to the Deceaſed. But though they do not ſtir it, I will, and give your Lordſhip a full Account of all that ever was in that Matter. When I lodg'd at Hertford, ſome time ſince, ſhe deſired me to recommend to her a Security for 200 l. if it came in my Way; my Lord, when I came to Town, I underſtood that one Mrs Puller, a Client of mine, had a Mortgage formerly made to her by one Mr Loſtus of Lambeth in Surrey for the like Sum, and that ſhe was willing to have in her Money; I wrote to this Gentlewoman, the Deceaſed, to acquaint her of the Security, ſhe thereupon did ſend up 200 l. and ſome odd Pounds for Intereſt (the Account of which I produced to my Lord Chief Juſtice;) this Money was ſent to me by Mr Cramfield, as I have been informed, and by him given to Mr Toller's Clerk, and by him brought publickly to me; my Lord, this Mortgage I immediately transferr'd by Aſſignment, Indors'd on the Back of it, and Mrs. Habberfield, a Truſtee for Mrs Puller, Sign'd and Sealed it, and that very 200 l. and Intereſt due was at one and the ſame time paid to Mrs Puller, and by her the Principal was paid to her Daughter, in Part of her Portion. All this was tranſacted the beginning of December laſt, and ſhe was not drowned till the 13th of March following: And my Lord, theſe People that are now the Proſecutors, did own before my Lord Chief Juſtice, that they had found this Mortgage amongſt the Deceaſed's Writings in her Cabinet at the Time of her Death. Now, my Lord, I ſay, that ſaving this one Service I did her, as I ſaid in December laſt, I never was otherwiſe concerned with her in the receiving, or diſpoſing of any of her Money; nor had I ever any of her Securities for Money in my keeping; and I defie any Adverſary I have to ſhew the contrary.

My Lord, as there appears no Malice, no Intereſt, ſo they have proved for me that there was no Concealment of Shame, to induce me to commit ſo barbarous an Action; otherwiſe, perhaps now they find they can aſſign no other Cauſe, they would content themſelves to give that Reaſon, and fling that Scandal at me: And though I take it by the Experience I have had of them, they did not deſign to do me any Favour, yet I thank them, in endeavouring to vindicate her Honour, they have ſecured my Reputation againſt that Calumny; and though I am ſatisfied, as I ſaid, they did not intend me Kindneſs, yet I thank God they have given me a juſt Opportunity to take Advantage of their Cunning, for the clearing my Innocence in that Particular.

Then, my Lord, not to reſt it here, but to ſatisfie the Jury and the World how this Gentlewoman came to deſtroy her ſelf, I ſhall give the cleareſt Evidence that was ever given in any Court, that ſhe murthered her ſelf. When I enter upon this Proof, I muſt of neceſſity treſpaſs upon the Character of this Gentlewoman that is dead. I confeſs this is a tender Point, 'tis a Thing I would willingly be excuſed from, and 'tis not without a great deal of Reluctancy and Compulſion forced from me: That ſhe was melancholy the Proſecutors themſelves have proved; but I muſt of neceſſity ſhow you the Occaſion and Reaſons of it, and the Witneſſes will tell your Lordſhip what deſperate Reſolutions ſhe had been under formerly, and that will lead me to near the time of her Death; to ſhow why, and upon what Accidents ſhe made away her ſelf. I will not enumerate Particulars, by way of opening; only I muſt tell your Lordſhip, that ſome Letters of hers muſt of neceſſity be produced, which truly as I ſaid, I ſhould not meddle with, if I had not theſe innocent Gentlemen here to defend, as well as my ſelf; perhaps it may be ſaid, that in Honour I ought to conceal the Weakneſs of this Gentlewoman, but then in Honour and Juſtice to theſe Gentlemen that are falſely accuſed with me, I cannot do it; I hope this one Reaſon will excuſe me to the World, for I have no other that could have obliged me to bring theſe Letters upon the Stage; I ſolemnly proteſt, if I ſtood here ſingly in the Caſe of my own Life, upon the Evidence given againſt me, I take it to be ſo inconſiderable, I would not do it; but I muſt do it to ſhow that theſe Gentlemen alſo are innocent, and to preſerve them, becauſe I am ſatisfied in my own Mind they are ſo. My Lord, when I have done that, I ſhall ſhew your Lordſhip in the next Place, that it is utterly impoſſible I could be concerned in this Fact, if I had had all the Motives and Provocations in the World to have done it: I ſhall ſhow your Lordſhip in point of time it could not be.

The Maid Sarah Walker, who is the ſingle Witneſs, I take it, that ſays any Thing in the leaſt relating to me, ſaid but now, the Clock had ſtruck Eleven before ſhe carried up the Coals, and about a quarter of an Hour after, while ſhe was warming the Bed above Stairs, ſhe heard the Door clap, and ſometime after that ſhe came down and found that I and her Miſtreſs were gone. Now in point of time I ſhall prove it utterly impoſſible I could be guilty of the Fact I am accuſed of, being ſeen to come into the Glove Inn as the Town Clock ſtruck Eleven, and ſtaying there more than a quarter of an Hour, was, after ſeveral Things done at my Lodging, in Bed before twelve a Clock, and went no more out that Night as I ſhall prove. As for that little Circumſtance of ſending for my Horſe, which they have made uſe of all along to back this Proſecution; their very telling me of that matter, ſhews how they are put to their Shifts to juſtifie their accuſing me; I ſay in Prudence I ought to have done what I did: I ſent for him on the Tueſday, but as their Witneſs ſaith, I told him, at the Time I bid him fetch my Horſe, not to uſe then, nor till by the Courſe of the Circuit I was to go into Eſſex with the Judges the next Morning; and till then the Proſecutor's Witneſs, who is the Oſtler of the Glove-Inn, was ordered to ſet him up there, to litter him down, and to take care of him and feed him, and that he ſhould be ready for me to go to Chelmsford on the Morrow, whither I went with the other Council the next Morning being Wedneſday; and this my Lord is the Whole of that Matter.

My Lord, this Buſineſs ſlept near Two Months after the Coroner's Inqueſt before I heard of it, or imagined my ſelf to be concerned in it, and was never ſtirr'd till two Parties differing on all other Occaſions had laid their Heads together; I beg leave to let your Lordſhip a little into that Matter, to ſhew you how this Proſecution came to be managed, with ſo much Noiſe and Violence as it hath been. I can make it appear, that one of the greateſt of the Quakers, Mr Mead by Name, has very much, and indirectly too, concerned himſelf in this Matter; it ſeems they fancy the Reputation of their Sect is concerned in it, for they think it a wonderful Thing, nay abſolutely impoſſible (however other People may be liable to ſuch Reſolutions) that one who was by her Education intituled to the Light within her, ſhould run headlong into the Water, as if ſhe had been poſſeſs'd with the Devil; of this they think their Sect is to be clear'd, though by ſpilling the Blood of four innocent Men. The other ſort of People that concur with the Quakers in this Proſecution, I ſhall mention, now I come to obſerve what the Witneſſes are that have been produced againſt me; ſome of them I have nothing to object to, but that they are extreme indigent and poor, and have been helped by the Proſecutor, thoſe that are ſo ſay nothing as to me; others who live in this Town, and give their Opinions of the manner of her Death, are poſſeſt with much prejudice againſt me, upon Feuds that have riſen at the Elections of my Father and Brother in this Town, and theſe with the Quakers have wholly dreſt up this Matter for ſeveral Ends, the Quakers to maintain the Reputation of their Sect, and the others to deſtroy, or break at leaſt, the Intereſt of my Family in this Place: But however effectual theſe Deſigns may have been, to have made a great Noiſe in the World out of nothing; I am ſatisfied now, that I am in a Court of Juſtice, where no Perſon's Reputation, much leſs his Life, will be ſacrificed to the Policy or Malice of a Party without Proof; and therefore I have taken up ſo much of your Time, to ſet the true Riſe of this Proſecution before you in a clear Light.

My Lord, as to my coming to this Town on Monday, it was the firſt Day of the Aſſizes, and that was the Reaſon that brought me hither; before I came out of Town, I confeſs, I had a Deſign of taking a Lodging at this Gentlewoman's Houſe, having been invited by Letter ſo to do; and the Reaſon why I did not was this; my Brother when he went the Circuit always favoured me with the Offer of a Part of his Lodging, which out of good Husbandry I always accepted: The laſt Circuit was in Parliament Time, and my Brother being in the Money Chair could not attend the Circuit as he us'd to do; he had very good Lodgings, I think one of the beſt in this Town, where I us'd to be with him, theſe were always kept for him, unleſs notice was given to the contrary; the Friday before I came down to the Aſſizes, I happened to be in Company with my Brother and another Gentleman, and then I ſhow'd them the Letter, by which I was earneſtly invited down to lie at the Houſe of this Gentlewoman, during the Aſſizes, (it is dated the 9th of March laſt;) and deſigning to comply with the Invitation, I thereupon deſired my Brother to write to Mr Barefoot, our Landlord, and get him, if he could, to diſpoſe of the Lodgings, for ſaid I, if he keeps them they muſt be paid for, and then I cannot well avoid lying there; my Brother did ſay he would write, if he could think on't; and thus, if Mr Barefoot diſpoſed of the Lodgings, I own I intended to lie at the Deceas'd's Houſe, but if not, I look-ed on my ſelf as obliged to lie at Mr Barefoot's. Accordingly I ſhall prove, as ſoon as ever I came to this Town in the Morning of the firſt day of the Aſſizes, I went directly to Mr Barefoot's, (the Maid and all agree in this) and the Reaſon was, I had not ſeen my Brother after he ſaid he would write, before I went out of London; and therefore it was proper for me to go firſt to Mr Barefoot's, to know whether my Brother had wrote to him, and whether he had diſpoſed of the Lodgings or not; as ſoon as I came to Mr Barefoot's, there was one Mr Taylor of this Town came to me, and I in his hearing ask'd Mr Barefoot, his Wife, and Maid Servant, one after another, if they had received a Letter from my Brother to unbeſpeak the Lodgings; they told me no, that the Room was kept for us, and I think that they had made a Fire, and that the Sheets were airing; I was a little concerned he had not writ, but being ſatisfied that no Letter had been received, I ſaid immediately, as I ſhall prove by ſeveral Witneſſes, if it be ſo, I muſt ſtay with you, I will take up my Lodging here; thereupon I lighted, and ſent for my Bag from the Coffee-houſe, and lodg'd all my Things at Barefoot's, and thus I took up my Lodging there as uſual: I had no ſooner done this, but Sarah Walker came to me from her Miſtreſs to invite me to Dinner, and accordingly I went and dined there, and when I went away it may be true, that being asked, I ſaid I would come again at Night; but that I did ſay I would lie there, I do poſitively deny, and knowing I could not lie there, 'tis unlikely I ſhould ſay ſo: My Lord, at Night I did come again and paid her ſome Money, which I received from Mr Loftus, who is the Mortgager for Intereſt of the 200 l. I before mentioned (it was Six Pounds odd Money in Guineas and half Guineas) I writ a Receipt, but ſhe declined the Signing of it, preſſing me to ſtay there that Night, which I refuſed, as engaged to lie at Mr Barefoot's and took my leave of her; and that very Money which I paid her was found in her Pocket, as I have heard, after ſhe was drowned.

Now my Lord, the Reaſon that I went to her Houſe at Night was firſt, as I ſaid, to pay her the Intereſt Money; in the next Place it was but fitting, when I ound my ſelf under a Neceſſity of diſappointing her, and lying at Barefoot's to go to excuſe my not lying there; which I had not an Opportunity at Dinner Time to do. My Lord, I open my Defence ſhortly, referring the Particulars to the Witneſſes themſelves, in calling thoſe who will fully refute the Suppoſitions and Inferences made by the Proſecutors, whom firſt, my Lord, I ſhall begin with, to ſhew there is no Evidence of any Murder at all committed; and this I ſay again ought to be indiſputably made manifeſt and prov'd before any Man can be ſo much as ſuſpected for it.

Mr Baron Hatſell. Do not flouriſh too much, Mr Cowper, if you have opened all your Evidence, call your Witneſſes, and when they have ended, then make your Obſervations.

Mr Cowper. Then my Lord I will take up no more of your Time in opening this Matter.

Call Robert Dew (who appeared.)

When Mrs Sarah Stout drowned herſelf, was not you a Pariſh Officer?

R. Dew. I was I was next Houſe to the Coach and Horſes, and about ſix of the Clock came a little Boy, (Thom. s Parker's Boy) and ſaid there there was a Woman fallen into the River, I conſidered it was not my Buſineſs, but the Coroner's, and I ſent the Boy to the Coroner, to acquaint him with it, and the Coroner ſent Word by the Boy, and deſired ſhe might be taken out, ſo I went to the River and ſaw her taken out; ſhe lay in the River, (as near as I could gueſs) half a Foot in the Water, ſhe was covered with Water, ſhe had a ſtrip'd Petticoat on, but nothing could be ſeen of it above Water; I heaved her up, and ſeveral Sticks were underneath her, and Flags, and when they took her out, ſhe froth'd at the Noſe, and Mouth.

Mr Cowper. How was ſhe, was ſhe driven between the Stakes?

R. Dew. She lay on the right Side, her Head leaning rather downwards, and as they pull'd her up, I cry'd, hold, hold, hold, you hurt her Arm, and ſo they kneel'd down and took her Arm from the Stakes.

Mr Cowper. Did you ſee any Spots upon her Arm?

R. Dew. Yes, Sir.

Mr Cowper. What ſort of Spot was it?

R. Dew. It was reddiſh, I believe the Stakes did it; for her Arm hit upon the Stake where ſhe lay.

Mr Cowper. Pray how do theſe Stakes ſtand about the Bridge of the Mill?

R. Dew. I ſuppoſe they ſtand about a Foot aſunder, they ſtand ſlanting, leaning down the Stream a little.

Mr Cowper. Could you diſcern her Feet?

R. Dew. No, nothing like it, nor the ſtrip'd Petticoat ſhe had on.

Mr Cowper. Might not her Knees and Legs be upon the Ground, for what you could ſee?

R. Dew. Truly, if I was put upon my Oath, whether they were ſo, or not, I durſt not ſwear it; ſometimes the Water there is four Feet, ſometimes three and a half, I believe her Feet were very near the Bottom.

Mr Cowper. Are not the Stakes nail'd with their Head againſt the Bridge?

R. Dew. They are nail'd to the Side of the Bridge.

Mr Cowper. Pray deſcribe the Manner in which they took her up.

R. Dew. They ſtoop'd down and took her up.

Mr Cowper. Did they take her up at once?

R. Dew. They had two heavings, or more.

Mr Cowper. What was the Reaſon they did not take her up at once?

R. Dew. Becauſe I cry'd out, they hurt her Arm.

Mr Cowper. Was ſhe not within the Stakes?

R. Dew. No, this Shoulder kept her out.

Mr Cowper. When you complained they hurt her Arm, what Anſwer did they make you?

R. Dew. They ſtoop'd down and took her Arm out from between the Stakes, they could not have got her out elſe.

Mr Cowper. After ſhe was taken out, did you obſerve any Froth or Foam come from her Mouth, or Noſe?

R. Dew. There was a white Froth came from her, and as they wip'd it away, it was on again preſently.

Mr Cowper. What was the appearance of her Face and upper Parts at that time?

R. Dew. She was ſo much diſfigured, I believe, that ſcarce any of her Neighbours knew her, the Slime of the Water being upon her.

Mr Cowper. Did you ſee her Maid Sarah Walker at that Time?

R. Dew. No.

Mr Baron Hatſell. Mr Cowper, do you intend to ſpend ſo much Time with every Witneſs, I don't ſee to what Purpoſe many of theſe Queſtions are ask'd?

Mr Cowper. I have done with him, call Young.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. Mr Cowper, I would not have you ſtraiten your ſelf, but only ask thoſe Queſtions that are Pertinent.

Mr Cowper. Pray give an Account of what you know of this Matter.

Young. On Tueſday Morning between five and ſix a Clock laſt Aſſizes ——

Mr Cowper. What Officer was you?

Young. I was Conſtable.

Mr Cowper. Was you employed by the Coroner?

Young. Not by him in Perſon. Between five and ſix a Clock ſome of the Men that came into my Yard to work, told me a Woman was drowned at the Mill, I ſtaid a little, and went down to ſee, and when I came there, I ſaw a Woman, as they had told me, and I ſaw part of her Coat lie on the top of the Water to be ſeen, and I looked ſtrictly and nicely within the Bridge, and ſaw the Face of a Woman, and her left Arm was on the outſide the Stakes, which I believe kept her from going through; ſo I looked upon her very wiſhfully, and was going back again, and as I came back I met with R. Dew, and two of my Neighbours, and they ask'd me to go back with them, and ſaid they were going to take her up, and being Conſtable, I told them I thought it was not proper to do it, and they ſaid they had Orders for it; ſo I being Conſtable went back with them, and when I came there I found her in the ſame Poſture as before, we viewed her very wiſhfully; her Coat that was driven near the Stakes was ſeen, but none of her other Coats, or her Legs, and after we had looked a little while upon her, we ſpake to Dell, and Ulſe to take her up, and one of them took hold of her Coat till he brought her above Water; and as her Arm drew up, I ſaw a black Place, and ſhe laid ſideway, that he could not take her up till they had let her down again, and ſo they twiſted her out ſideway; for the Stakes were ſo near together, that ſhe could not lie upon her Belly, nor upon her Back, and when they had taken her up, they laid her down upon a green Place, and after ſhe was laid down, a great Quantity of Froth (like the Froth of New Beer) work'd out of her Noſtrils.

Mr Baron Hatſell. How much do you call a great Quantity?

Young. It roſe up in Bladders, and run down on the Sides of her Face, and ſo roſe again; and ſeeing her look like a Gentlewoman, we deſired one Ulſe to ſearch her Pockets to ſee if there were any Letters, that we might know who ſhe was, ſo the Woman did, and I believe there was twenty or more of us that knew her very well when ſhe was alive, and not one of us knew her then, and the Woman ſearched her Pockets, and took out ſix Guineas ten Shillings three pence half penny, and ſome other Things; and after that, I deſired ſome of my Neighbours to go with me and tell the Money; for when it came to be known who ſhe was, I knew we muſt give an Account on't, and I laid it upon a Block and told it, and they tied it up in an Handkerchief, and I ſaid I would keep the Money, and they ſhould ſeal it up, to prevent any Queſtion about it; and during all this while of Diſcourſe, and ſealing up the Money, the Froth ſtill work'd out of her Mouth.

Mr Cowper. Have you meaſured the Depth of the Water; what depth is it there?

Young. I meaſured the Water this Morning, and 'twas ſo high that it run over the Floodgate, and the Height of it was about 4 Foot 2 Inches, but ſometimes 'tis penn'd up to a greater Height than 'tis to Day.

Mr Cowper. Was it higher to Day than when the Body was found?

Young. To the beſt of my remembrance 'twas as high to Day as it was then.

Mr Cowper. Was any Part of the Body above Water?

Young. No, nor nothing like the Body could be ſeen.

Mr Cowper. Could you ſee where her Legs lay?

Young. No, nor nothing but her upper Coats which were driven againſt the Stakes.

Mr Cowper. Pray give an Account how long ſhe lay there, and when ſhe was conveyed away.

Young. I ſtaid a quarter of an Hour, and then I went and ſealed up the Money at my own Houſe, ſo that I did not ſee her removed.

Mr Jones. Was any Body there beſides your ſelf at this time?

Young. Yes, Twenty People at the leaſt.

Mr Jones. Now here is ten of them that have Sworn that the Body was above the Surface of the Water.

Mr Baron Hatſell. No, her Cloaths they ſay were, but the Body was ſomething under the Water.

Mr Cowper. Now I will trouble your Lordſhip no more with that Fact, but I will give you an Account of the Coroner's Inqueſt, how diligent they were in their Proceedings, and produce a Copy of the Inquiſition it ſelf, that ſhe was found to have drowned herſelf.

Mr Baron Hatſell. Mr Cowper that is no Evidence, if it be produced in order to contradict what theſe Witneſſes have ſaid, that have been examined for the King; but if you will prove, that they have ſworn otherwiſe before the Coroner, than they now do, then you ſay ſomething, otherwiſe the Coroner's Inqueſt ſignifies nothing as to the preſent Queſtion.

Mr Cowper. Call Thomas Wall. I am loth to be troubleſome, but if you pleaſe to favour me, I deſire to know of them, whether they do admit there was an Inquiſition, and that ſhe was found Non Compos Mentis, and did kill her ſelf.

Mr Jones. We do admit it.

Jury-man. We deſire it may be read.

Mr Baron Hatſell. Why won't you believe what they agree to on both Sides.

Juryman. If they do agree ſo I am ſatisfied.

Mr Cowper. Thomas Wall, pray do you give an Account of what you know of Mrs Stout's being taken up?

Wall. My Lord, I was one of the Jury, that viewed her at the Place where ſhe was laid, when ſhe was taken up, and there was no Marks upon her, only a little Mark about her Ear, and ſomething near her Collar-bone, that was all I ſee upon her.

Mr Cowper. Do you know any Thing of any Surgeons being imploy'd to view thoſe Marks?

Wall. My Lord, we had ſeveral Perſons that came before us that we examined, we had a diſpute concerning theſe Marks what might effect them, and we deſired Mr Dimſdale and Mr Camlin to ſee them, that we might be the better ſatisfied, and they both went down and viewed the Body after it was brought down to Mrs Stout's, and they came back both of them, and Mr John Dimſdale told us, that theſe Marks were no more than were uſual in ſuch Caſes, and it was only the Stagnation of Blood.

Mr Cowper. Was it the old Man or the young Man?

Wall. It was the young Man.

Mr Cowper. Uſual did he ſay?

Wall. I can tell the very Words, I have them writ down.

Mr Cowper. Pray do ſo, for he has denied it here.

Wall. (Looks on his Paper.) Here 'tis. Mr Dimſdale and Mr Camlin came to us, and Mr Dimſdale ſpake and ſaid theſe Marks are uſual, or might be uſual, or if they were Marks, it was no more than was uſual in ſuch Caſes; and that it was the Stagnation of Blood.

Mr Cowper. Now you have your Notes in your Hand, pray what did Sarah Walker ſay to you as to the time I went from Mrs Stout's?

Wall. Sarah Walker ſaid it was about 11 a Clock when ſhe took up Coals to warm the Bed, but ſhe ſaid ſhe could not, nor did not know when Mr Cowper went out, for ſhe warm'd the Bed, and Mr Cowper not coming up, ſhe took up ſome more Coals, and tarried a little longer, and no Body coming up, ſhe went down, and found Mr Cowper was gone, and ſhe look'd into the Parlour, and her Miſtreſs was gone.

Mr Baron Hatſell. The Woman ſaid the ſame Thing.

Mr Cowper. 'Tis neceſſary in this particular as to the Time.

Mr Baron Hatſell. She told you the Clocks did differ.

(Then Mr Bowden was called.)

Mr Cowper. Well, what do you know of the taking up of Mrs Stout?

Bowden. I went with the reſt of the Neighbours to view her, and I did perceive it was Mrs Sarah Stout's Body, though ſome queſtioned it; I do believe I was the ſecond Perſon that diſcovered it was ſhe; and, my Lord, I did ſee a great deal of Froth that came out of her Mouth and Noſtrils.

Mr Cowper. Did you go about to wipe it away?

Bowden. No, but ſome other Perſon did, it came out in a great Quantity.

Mr Jones. How much do you call a great Quantity?

Bowden. Her Mouth and Noſtrils were very full of it.

Mr Jones. Was not her Mouth ſhut?

Bowden. I did not obſerve that.

Mr Cowper. How long had ſhe lain there before you came?

Bowden. I believe I was there in half an Hour, as ſoon as I heard the Report of it I went down.

Mr Cowper. Call Mr Shute.

Mr Baron Hatſell. Well, what can you ſay to this Matter?

Shute. Sir, I was ſummoned upon the Jury upon the Coroner's Inqueſt, and I perceived when I was there, that the ſame Stuff worked out of Mrs Stout's Noſtrils as worked out of the Childs.

Mr

Mr Baron Hatsell. What Child is that you speak of, is it the Child that was drowned in the same Place as Mrs Stout was?

Shute. Yes.

Mr Cowper. My Lord, I am very tender how I take up your Lordship's Time, and therefore I will not trouble you with any more Witnesses upon this Head, but with your Lordship's Leave, I will proceed to call some Physicians of Note and Eminence, to confront the Learning of the Gentlemen on the other Side——Dr Sloane, you were in Court when these Gentlemen delivered their Opinion concerning Mrs Stout's having no Water in her, I desire you would give your Opinion in that Matter.

Dr Sloane. I have not heard them very particularly or distinctly, because of the great Croud, some of them I have; Cases of this kind are very uncommon, and none of them have fallen directly under my own Knowledge. As to my Opinion of drowning, it is plain, that if a great Quantity of Water be swallowed by the Gullet into the Stomach, it will not suffocate nor drown the Person: Drunkards, who swallow freely a great deal of Liquor, and those who are forced by the Civil Law to drink a great quantity of Water, which in giving the Question (as 'tis called) is poured into them by way of Torture to make them confess Crimes, have no suffocation or drowning happen to them: But on the other Hand, when any quantity comes into the Wind-pipe, so as it does hinder or intercept the Inspiration, or coming in of the Air, which is necessary for respiration or breathing, the Person is suffocated. Such a small quantity will do as sometimes in Prescriptions, when People have been very weak, or forced to take Medicines, I have observed some Spoonfuls in that Condition (if it went the wrong way) to have choaked or suffocated the Person. I take drowning in a great measure to be thus, and though it is very likely when one struggles he may (to save himself from being choacked) swallow some quantity of Water, yet that is not the Cause of his Death, but that which goes into the Wind-pipe and Lungs: Whether a Person comes dead or alive into the Water, I believe some quantity will go into the Wind-pipe, and I believe without Force after Death little will get into the Stomach, because that it should, swallowing is necessary, which after Death cannot be done.

Mr Baron Hatsell. Pray, Doctor, I understand you say this, that in Case a Person is drowned, that there may be but little Water in the Stomach?

Dr Sloane. That it is accidental, my Lord.

Mr Baron Hatsell. But what do you say to this, if there had been Water in the Body, would it not have putrified the Parts after it had lain six Weeks?

Dr Sloane. My Lord, I am apt to think it would have putrified the Stomach less than the Lungs, because the Stomach is a Part of the Body that is contrived by Nature, partly to receive Liquids, but the Contrivance of the Lungs is only for the receiving of Air, they being of a spongy Nature, the Water might sink more into them than the Stomach; but I believe it might putrify there too after some time. I am apt to think that when a Body is buried under Ground, according to the Depth of the Grave, and difference of the Weather and Soil, the Fermentation may be greater or lesser, and that according to the several Kinds of Meats or Liquids in the Stomach the Putrifaction will likewise vary, so that it seems to me to to be very uncertain.

Mr Baron Hatsell. But when they are in a Coffin, how is it then?

Dr Sloane. No doubt there will be a Fermentation more or less, according as the Air comes more or less to the Body. Indeed it may be otherwise, where the Air is wholly shut out, which is supposed to be the way of Embalming, or preserving dead Bodies of late, without the use of any Spices, which is thought in a great measure to be brought about by the closeness of the Coffin, and hindring of the Air from coming into the Body.

Mr Cowper. Is it possible in your Judgment for any Water to pass into the Thorax?

Dr Sloane. I believe 'tis hardly possible that any should go from the Wind-pipe into the Cavity of the Thorax, without great Violence and Force, for there is a Membrane that covers the outside of the Lungs, that will hinder the Water from passing through it into any Part without them.

Mr Cowper. Now, do you think it possible to find Water in a drowned Body after six Weeks time?

Dr Sloane. I am apt to think if there was any Quantity in the Lungs, the sponginess of the Part would suck up some Part of it. As to the Stomach I have not known it tried, but 'tis like if there was a great Fermentation, a great deal of it would rise up in Vapours or Steams, and go off that way.

Mr Cowper. Dr Garth, I can't tell whether you were in Court when the Surgeons who are Witnesses for the King gave their Evidence.

Dr Garth. Yes, I was.

Mr Cowper. Then I desire you, Sir, to give your Opinion as to those Particulars.

Dr Garth. I observed in this Tryal the first Gentleman call'd for the King that spoke to this Matter was Mr Coatsworth. He saith he was sent for to open her, upon an Asperson of her being said to be with Child. I agree with him in what he speaks to that Point, but must differ with him where he infers she was murthered because he found no great quantity of Water in her, as also her Head extreamly mortify'd, but not her Lungs (Lungs and Bowels I think were used promiscuously.) Now, my Lord, as to the Matter of putrifaction, I think 'tis not much material whether there be any Water or no in the Cavities of the Body; if Water would hasten putrifaction, it wou'd do it as well in the Lungs as otherwise; there is always some Water in the Lympheducts there, the breaking of which may be one Occasion of Catarrhs. As to what relates to the Putrifaction of the Head, it may happen from a stoppage of the refluent Blood, which is staid there in a great Quantity, through the suffocation in the Water, or from the nearness of the Brain, which is observed often to mortifie first.

The next was Mr Dimsdale (I would speak to them all in order if my memory would permit) I think he was of the same Opinion with Mr Coatsworth; he laid the Stress of his Suspicion upon the Mortification of the Head, which I think is not at all material, no more than what they infer from her floating: It being impossible the Body should have floated, unless it had rested, or had been entangled among the Stakes, because all dead Bodies (I believe) fall to the bottom, unless they be prevented by some extraordinary Tumour. My Lord, we have not only Philosophy, but Experiments for this. The Witnesses all agree she was found upon her Side, which to ſuppoſe her to float in this poſture, is as hard to be conceived, as to imagine a Shilling ſhould fall down and reſt upon its Edge rather than its broad Side; or that a Deal Board ſhou'd rather float Edgeways than otherwiſe: therefore 'tis plain ſhe was entangled, or elſe the Poſture had been otherwiſe.

As to the Quantity of Water, I do not think it neceſſary it ſhould be very great. I muſt own the Water will force it ſelf into all Cavities where there's no reſiſtance, I believe when ſhe threw her ſelf in, ſhe might not ſtruggle to ſave her ſelf, and by Conſequence not ſup up much Water. Now there's no direct Paſſage into the Stomach but by the Gullet, which is contracted or purs'd up by a Muſcle in Nature of a Sphincter: For if this Paſſage was always open, like that of the Wind-pipe, the Weight of the Air would force it ſelf into the Stomach, and we ſhould be ſenſible of the greateſt Inconveniencies. I doubt not, but that ſome Water fell into her Lungs, becauſe the Weight of it, wou'd force it ſelf down, but if we conſider the Wind-pipe with its Ramifications, as one Cylinder, the Calculation of its Contents will not amount to above twenty three or twenty four ſolid Inches of Water, which is not a Pint, and which might imperceptibly work and fall out. I remember I offered a Wager at Garaway's Coffee-Houſe to a Gentleman here in Court.

Mr Baron Hatſell. Pray Doctor tell us your Opinion as to what the Seaman ſaid, and alſo as to what Dr Sloan ſaid whether Water in the Body will putrifie it.

Dr Garth. I ſay not, for in ſome Places they keep Fleſh Meat from corrupting by preſerving it in Water, and 'tis well known 'twill putrify leſs ſo, than when expoſed to Air.

Mr Baron Hatſell. But what do you ſay as to the ſinking of dead Bodies in Water?

Dr Garth. If a ſtrangled Body be thrown into the Water, the Lungs being filled with Air, and a Cord left about the Neck, 'tis probable it may float, becauſe of the included Air, as a Bladder wou'd; but here is neither Cord, nor any Mark of it, nor nothing but a common Stagnation.

Mr Baron Hatſell. But you don't obſerve my Queſtion, the Seaman ſaid, that thoſe that die at Sea, and are thrown overboard, if you don't tye a Weight to them, they will not ſink, What ſay you to that?

Dr Garth. My Lord, no doubt in this they're miſtaken. The Seamen are a ſuperſtitious People, they fancy that whiſtling at Sea will occaſion a Tempeſt; I muſt confeſs I never ſaw any Body thrown overboard, but I have tried ſome Experiments on other dead Animals, and they will certainly ſink; we have tried this ſince we came hither. Now, my Lord, I think, we have reaſon to ſuſpect the Seaman's Evidence, for he ſaith, that threeſcore Pound of Iron is allowed to ſink the dead Bodies, whereas ſix or ſeven Pounds wou'd do as well. I cannot think the Commiſſioners of the Navy guilty of ſo ill Husbandry, but the Deſign of tying Weights to their dead Bodies, is to prevent their floating at all, which otherwiſe wou'd happen in ſome few Days, therefore what I ſay is this, that if theſe Gentlemen had found a Cord, or the Print of it, about the Neck of this unfortunate Gentlewoman, or any Wound that had occaſioned her Death, they might then have ſaid ſomething.

Mr Cowper. Do you apprehend that any quantity of Water, can enter into the Cavity of the Thorax.

Dr Garth. 'Tis impoſſible there ſhould till the Lungs be quite rotten, there is no way but by the Lungs, which are inveſted with ſo ſtrong a Membrane, that we cannot force Breath with our Blow-pipes through it, and there's a great Providence in ſuch a Texture, for if there were any large Pores in this Membrane, the Air would paſs thro' it into the Cavity of the Thorax, and prevent the Dilatation of the Lungs, and by conſequence there would be an end of breathing.

Mr Cowper. Dr Morley pray be pleaſed to give your Opinion of theſe Matters.

Dr Morley. Thoſe which ſeem to be Queſtions of greateſt Moment, are whether there was a Neceſſity for this Body (if drown'd) to have a great quantity of Water in it, and whether Bodies thrown dead into the Water float: To the firſt I anſwer poſitively, that there is no abſolute neceſſity, that ſhe ſhould have a great quantity of Water in her; and I think the Queſtion Mr Cowper ask'd Dr Coatſworth, whether he had like to have been drowned by Accident or Deſign, ſuits with my Aſſertion; for if this Gentlewoman did voluntarily drown her ſelf, ſhe then in all likelihood threw her ſelf into the Water, with a Reſolution of keeping her Breath for a ſpeedy Suffocation, and then if upon the firſt Endeavours for reſpiration (which naturally muſt be) ſhe drew into her Lungs two Ounces of Water, it was the ſame Thing to drowning of her, as if there had been two Tun. We ſee the ſame Thing done by Divers in order to ſave themſelves, as it happened to this unfortunate Gentlewoman, in her deſign of deſtroying her ſelf: If a Diver before he comes to the Surface of Water ſhould ſo far miſtake his Power of holding his Breath, that he ſhould be forced to endeavour Reſpiration, the little Water he drew into his Lungs by this Attempt to reſpire may drown him. We laſt Night drown'd a Dog, and aftewards diſſected him, and found not a Spoonful of Water in his Stomach, and I believe about two Ounces in his Lungs, while we were doing this, we drowned another, and he lay at the bottom and did not float; no more would he have done, if he had been hang'd before thrown into the Water: We took him up, and opening him we found much about the ſame Quantity of Wa in his Lungs, and little or none in his Stomach, they both froth'd at Noſe and Mouth, becauſe the Water coming into the little Bladders of the Lungs, and there meeting with Air, a Commotion aroſe between the Water and Air, which cauſed the Froth. To the ſecond Queſtion, I think if Bodies new killed ſwim, 'tis by Accident, for the Reaſon that Bodies ſwim, is becauſe by Putrifaction they rarifie, by rarifaction they grow lighter, which brings them to the Top of the Water.

Mr Cowper. I deſire to know if any Man of skil in Prudence would give his Opinion?——

Mr Baron Hatſell. That is not a proper Queſtion.

Mr Cowper. Then I will ask it thus, do you think, Doctor, it is to be known 6 Weeks after if a Perſon was drowned.

Dr Morley. I think it is morally impoſſible.

Mr Cowper. Can there be any Water in the Thorax?

Dr Morley. By an Impoſthume or ſome Violence to Nature poſſibly, but I think no otherwiſe.

Mr

Mr Cowper. Dr Woollaſton, what is your Opinion if a Perſon be drowned, whether it can be diſcovered ſix Weeks after?

Dr Woollaſton. My Lord, I think it is impoſſible to be known, for if there had been never ſo much Water in the Body at firſt, it could not lie there ſo long, but muſt of Neceſſity have forced its way out. We ſee in Perſons that die of Dropſies, that the Water will work it ſelf out (and ſometimes burſt the Body) before it is buried. And I am ſure, if it do ſo in Dropſies where there are no viſible Paſſages for it to get out at, it muſt do ſo much more in drowned Perſons, where the Water lies only in the Stomach and Guts; and has nothing to hinder its working out, when it ferments, as it always doth.

Mr Cowper. Have you ever made any Experiments in that Nature, Doctor?

Dr Woollaſton. I have made no Experiments, but I have ſeen a very particular Inſtance.

Mr Baron Hatſell. That is very well, pray let us hear it, Doctor.

Dr Woollaſton. My Lord, about three Years ſince, I ſaw two Men that were drowned out of the ſame Boat. They were taken up the next Day after they were drowned. One of 'em was indeed prodigiouſly ſwell'd, ſo much that his Cloaths were burſt in ſeveral Places of his Sides and Arms, and his Stockings in the Seams; his Hands and Fingers were ſtrangely extended, his Face was almoſt all over Black; but the other was not in the leaſt ſwelled in any Part nor diſcolour'd. He was as lank, I believe, as ever he was in his Life time, and there was not the leaſt Sign of any Water in him, except the watry Froth at his Mouth and Noſtrils. My Lord, this I ſaw my ſelf, and took very particular notice of it.

Mr Jones. Did you ſee theſe Bodies taken out of the Water your ſelf, Doctor?

Dr Woollaſton. No, Sir.

Mr Jones. How long had they been taken out when you ſaw them?

Dr Woollaſton. I enquired, and to the beſt of my Memory, it was that ſame Day.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. But what do you think Doctor, of a Perſon's being drowned, without taking in any Water.

Dr Woollaſton. My Lord, what is taken in, is I believe chiefly at the Surface of the Water, when they open their Mouths for Breath, and the Water that ruſhes in, they are forced to drink down, to keep it from the Lungs. But when the Head is quite under Water, I don't think it is poſſible for any quantity to get down into the Stomach: Becauſe it being Breath they open for, the very firſt Water they take in, would of Neceſſity fill the Lungs, and when the Breath is ſtop'd, I dont ſee how they can ſwallow.

Mr Cowper. Dr Gelſtrop, what is your Opinion of this Matter?

Dr Gelſtrop. I don't think they can make any Judgment of Perſons being drowned after ſix Weeks time.

Mr Cowper. Can any Water get into the Thorax?

Dr Gelſtrop. No, not unleſs the Lungs be putrified.

Mr Cowper. Is a great quantity of Water neceſſary to Perſons dying by drowning.

Dr Gelſtrop. No, only ſo much as may hinder Reſpiration.

Mr Cowper. Now, my Lord, I would call Mr William Cowper, and becauſe of his Name, I muſt acquaint your Lordſhip, that he is not at all related to me, though I ſhould be proud to own him if he were ſo, he is a Man of great Learning, and I believe moſt People admit him the beſt Anatomiſt in Europe. Mr Cowper. Pray will you give your Opinion of his Matter?

Mr W. Cowper. My Lord, I hope what I ſhall ſay, will not be ſuſpected becauſe I am of the ſame Name, for this Gentleman is an utter Stranger to me.

Mr Baron Hatſell. Pray, Mr Cowper, without any Apology, give your Opinion concerning Perſons drowned, and how 'tis with them in their inward Parts.

Mr W. Cowper. I will give you a ſhort Account, I hope to your Satisfaction too, my Lord. I will not only ſpeak from Reaſon, but give you the Teſtimony of the Experiments I have made upon this Occaſion. My Lord, I heard it made a mighty Argument, that this Perſon had no Water that ſeemed to flow out, but the Witneſſes agree there was a Froth. Now, my Lord, it was not reaſonable to expect any Thing but Froth. My Lord, had ſhe been thrown into the Water, and made her utmoſt Efforts, which ſhe would then have done to have ſaved herſelf, and been often buoyed up to the top of the Water, no doubt but ſhe would have ſwallowed a conſiderable quantity of Water before ſhe had been drowned; and it may be expected to flow from her, if her Head had been inclined downwards.

This is a Truth that no Man can deny, who is acquainted with any thing of this Nature, that when the Head of an Animal is under Water, the firſt Time it is obliged to inſpire (or draw in Air) the Water will neceſſarily flow into its Lungs, as the Air would do if it were out of the Water: which quantity of Water (if the Dimenſions of the Windpipe and its Branches in the Lungs be conſidered) will not amount to three Inches ſquare, which is about three Ounces of Water. Nor is a greater quantity of Water in the Windpipe neceſſary to choak any Perſon, if we do but reflect what an Ebullition is cauſed by its meeting with the Air, which remained in the Lungs, whereby a ſmall quantity of Water is converted into Froth, and the Channel of the Windpipe, and thoſe of the Bronchia are filled with it; inſomuch that no Air can enter the Lungs, for the Office of Reſpiration. After a Suffocation is thus commenced (I am apt to think) all regular Animal Actions are perverted, and particularly that of ſwallowing (or deglutition) and what Water flows into the Lungs at the inſtant or after this Suffocation, is from its own Weight; which is more or leſs as the Body is farther under, or nearer the Surface of the Water. My Lord, I don't ſpeak this by way of Conjecture or Hypotheſis, but I have made Experiments, which have ſuggeſted what I here offer. I ſhall by the by tell you how fallacious the firſt Experiment was, when I propoſed to ſatisfy my ſelf, whether a dead Body would float in Water; it happened, that a Spaniel, that had a great deal of long Hair was hanged for this Purpoſe, which I found ſwim on the Surface of the Water; but when I conſidered that his Hair might buoy him up, I cauſed another Dog, which had ſhorter and leſs Hair to be hanged ed, and put into the Water, which (agreeable to what I had always conceived of a Human Body) ſunk directly to the bottom. In order to ſatisfie my ſelf what quantity of Water was neceſſary to enter the Body of an Animal, and cauſe a Suffocation in Water, I cauſed three Dogs when alive to be ſuddenly plunged under Water, till they were ſtifled, one was before I left London, the other two I made the Experiment on laſt Night, in the preſence of Dr Sloane and Dr Morley, and we could not compute there was more than three Ounces of Water in their Lungs, and none that we could perceive in their Stomachs.

Dead Bodies neceſſarily ſink in Water, if no Diſtention of their Parts buoy them up; this Diſtention ſometimes happens before Death, at other Times ſoon after, and in Bodies that are drowned after they lie under Water: This enlargement of them is cauſed by a Rarefaction of the Humours within the Cavities, and the Body neceſſarily riſes to the Surface of the Water. Your Lordſhip may infer this from what the Seaman told you, and the great Weight they uſe to faſten to their Bodies that die of Diſeaſes, was not of ſuch uſe to ſink them, as it was to prevent their floating afterwards; ſo that the Weight was neceſſary for thoſe that were killed as well as thoſe that died of Diſeaſes.

It is ſo commonly known that the Contents in the Stomach of a dead Body are diſcharged by the Mouth and Noſtrils ſo ſoon as it begins to ferment, and the Belly becomes diſtended, that 'tis no wonder that Water, if the greateſt quantity of that had been in the Stomach, or any Thing elſe that was fluid, muſt be forced from thence ſix Weeks after Death.

My Lord, I can't but think it ridiculous to expect Water in the Cavity of the Thorax; it is ſuch a Conceit as nothing in Nature can account for: Unleſs the Lungs had ſuffered ſome Apoſthumation, or the like, whereby the Water may paſs their outward Membranes into that Cavity.

Mr Cowper. With your Lordſhip's Favour, I now think it a proper time to make this Obſervation. The Witneſſes that have given Evidence for the King, do ſay, they believe ſhe was not drowned; but they have not pretended to ſay how ſhe died otherwiſe.

Mr Baron Hatſell. That is very true.

Mr Cowper. Dr Crell, I deſire you will be pleaſed to give an Account of this Matter.

Dr Crell. My Lord, I have little to ſay in this Affair, the Phyſicians that have been examined already, having made it out, that Perſons who are drowned may have but little Water in their Bodies; but I have taken what Pains I could, upon ſo ſhort Warning, and I will tell you the Opinion of ſeverale minent Anthors. My own Opinion is, That a very ſmall quantity of Water, not exceeding three Ounces, is ſufficient to drown any Body; and I believe that the Reaſon of the Suffocation, or of any Perſons being ſtifled under Water, is from the intercepting of the Air, that the Perſon can't breathe, without which he cannot live. Now my Lord I will give you the Opinion of ſeveral ancient Authors.

Mr Baron Hatſell. Pray Doctor tell us your own Obſervations.

Dr Crell. My Lord, it muſt be reading as well as a Man's own Experience, that will make any one a Phyſician; for without the reading of Books of that Art, the Art it ſelf cannot be attained to; beſides, my Lord, I humbly conceive, that in ſuch a difficult Caſe as this, we ought to have a great Deference for the Reports and Opinions of Learned Men: Neither do I ſee any Reaſon why I ſhould not quote the Fathers of my Profeſſion in this Caſe, as well as you Gentlemen of the Long-Robe quote Cook upon Littleton in others; but I ſhall not trouble the Court long, I ſhall only inſiſt upon what Ambroſe Parey relates in his Chapter of Renunciations. He was chief Surgeon to Francis the Firſt, employed by him in moſt of his Sieges and Battles againſt the Emperor Charles the Fifth, and conſequently muſt obſerve, and could not be ignorant of ſuch like Caſualties in ſuch great Bodies of Men. He tells us, that the certain ſign of a Man's being drowned, is an Appearance of Froth about his Noſtrils and Mouth. Now, my Lord, I think, that every one of the King's Evidences obſerved it in the preſent Caſe, and a Woman ſwore, that ſhe ſaw her purge at the Noſe; which could not be, as he declares, if the Perſon had been ſtrangled, or otherwiſe killed before.

As to the quantity of Water requiſite to drown a Perſon, I believe that three Ounces, or leſs, is enough, to wit, as much as will fill the Windpipe, and ſo ſtop the breathing of the Perſon drowning. I am not now to deſcant upon Matter of Fact, whether ſhe drowned her ſelf; but my firm Opinion is, that ſhe was drown'd; for though ſometimes, not always, there is Water found in the Bodies of ſuch Perſons, yet where-ever it be, beſides the Lungs, it is ſuperfluous as to this End, and accidental upon violent ſtrugglings.

Mr Cowper. I deſire Mr Harriot may be asked what Obſervations he hath made concerning this Matter.

Mr Harriot. My Lord, when I was a Surgeon in the Fleet, I made it always my Obſervation when we threw Men over-board that were killed, ſome of them ſwam, and ſome ſunk; and I remember particularly, when the Sandwich was burnt, we ſaw abundance leap off from on Board and they ſunk directly, but in a little time I obſerved ſome ſwim again.

Mr Baron Hatſell. When a dead Body is thrown over-board, does it ſink or ſwim?

Mr Harriot. I always obſerved that it did ſink; when we were in the Channel, and in time of Peace, we never threw any over-board but we put ſome Weight to them, but it was not to make them ſink, but for decency ſake, that they might not be driven to Shore when they began to float.

Mr Cowper. I deſire that Mr Bartlet may be ask'd to the ſame Purpoſe.

Mr Bartlet. I have been in ſeveral of the King's Ships of War that have been diſabled and forced to lye by, in ſeveral Ingagements between the French and Engliſh, and I never ſaw any Bodies float either of the Men that were killed in our Ship, or in the Ships that have been near us, I have not ſeen a Body upon the Surface of the Water.

Mr Baron Hatſell. Another Witneſs ſaid, that after an Engagement he ſaw them ſwiming.

Mr Bartlet. I can't tell what he ſaw, my Lord, but what I ſay I am ready to make Oath of.

Mr Cowper. Dr Camlin, will you pleaſe to give my Lord and the Jury an Account whether you were employed by the Coroner's Inqueſt to view the Body of Mrs Stout, after ſhe was drowned, and the Marks upon it, and tell my Lord your Opinion of it.

Mr

Mr Camlin. I was sent for by the Coroner and the Jury that sat upon the Body of Mrs Sarah Stout, the Coroner being then at her Mother's House, and the Coroner desired Mr Dimsdale and me to go and take notice of the Marks upon her Neck, and upon her Breast; we viewed all about, and perceived a Mark under her left Ear, we looked to see if there was any Contusion, and we perceived a settlement of Blood upon her Breast, and another upon her Arm; and when we came back, Mr Dimsdale made the Report, I stood by him at that time, That it was only a common Settlement.

Mr Cowper. Pray, Mr Camlin, was the Spot above or below the Collar-bone.

Mr Camlin. Below the Collar-bone.

Mr Cowper. What did Mr John Dimsdale say then, concerning this Matter?

Mr Camlin. I understood that he was of Opinion that it was only a common Stagnation of Blood, that happens in the Case of drowned People.

Mr Baron Hatsell. Did he say so to the Jury?

Mr Camlin. Mr Dimsdale spake for us both, and I understood him that it was a Stagnation that did commonly happen to drowned People, and that was my Opinion of it too.

Mr Cowper. And that you agreed to be your Report.

Mr Camlin. Yes.

Mr Cowper. Pray, Mr Camlin, was you present when the Child which was drowned in the same Place was taken up?

Mr Camlin. Yes, it was taken up some time after, near the same Place as I was told, and there was more and greater Signs of the Stagnation of Blood, on the Body of this Child, than on the Body of Mrs Stout, the Child's Face was black and discolour'd.

Mr Baron Hatsell. How old was the Child?

Mr Camlin. Between 10 and 11, as near as I could guess.

Mr Baron Hatsell. Had Mrs Stout any Signs of being strangled when you saw her first.

Mr Camlin. Nothing at all that I could discern.

Mr Cowper. My Lord, I will give you no more trouble upon this Head; I shall go now to the next Thing I opened, and shall prove substantially, that this Gentlewoman is not only more to be suspected to have murder'd her self, than to be murdered by any Body, but 'tis almost a Certainty, that she was the Cause of her own Death. Mr Firmin I would begin withal, if he be here.

(But he not presently appearing.)

Mr Cowper. Then my Lord if you please, I will desire Mr Bowd in the mean time to give your Lordship an Account of what he knows of the Melancholy of this Gentlewoman.

Mr Bowd. 'Twas much about this time twelve Month, I had some Business in London, and she sent to me, to know when I should go to London, and I waited upon her before I went, and she desired me to do some Business for her, and when I returned I acquainted her with what I had done, and sitting together in the Hall, I asked her what's the Matter with you? Said I, there's something more than ordinary, you seem to be melancholy. Saith she, you are come from London, and you have heard something or other: Said I, I believe you are in Love. In Love! said she, Yes, said I, Cupid that little Boy hath struck you home; She took me by the Hand, truly, said she, I must confess it, but I did think I should never be guilty of such a Folly; and I answered again, I admire that should make you uneasie; if the Person be not of that Fortune as you are, you may, if you love him, make him happy, and your self easy. That can't be, saith she, the World shall not say I change my Religion for a Husband, and some time after I had been in London, having bought som India Goods she came to my Shop and bought some of me for a Gown, and afterwards she came to pay me for it, and I asked her, how do you like it, have you made it up? No, said she, and I believe I shall never live to wear it.

Mr Cowper. Pray how long is it since?

Mr Bowd. It was about February or January before her Death. I asked her why she did not come to my House oftener, she said she had left off all Company, and applyed her self to reading, and Company was indifferent to her.

Mr Cowper. Mr Firmin will you please to inform my Lord, and the Jury, what you know of Mrs Sarah Stout's being melancholy?

Mr Firmin. I did observe about three quarters of a Year ago that she was melancholy; I can't say that she acknowledged her self to be so, but I have charged her with it.

Mr Cowper. Did you believe she was melancholy when you charged her with it?

Mr Firmin. Yes, I did.

Mr Cowper. Mrs Bendy, if you please to inform the Court what you know of this Gentlewoman's being melancholy.

Mrs Bendy. Sir, I can say she always acknowledged her self extreamly melancholy, and when I have asked her how she did, she has said pretty well in Health, but so much troubled with melancholy she could not tell what to do with her self.

Mr Cowper. Did she tell you any Thing particularly.

Mrs Bendy. It disordered her so, she said, that she had rather have chosen Sickness than so much disorder in her Mind.

Mr Cowper. Have you any Thing more to recollect?

Mrs Bendy. Nothing but what I heard from Mrs Cowper.

Mr Baron Hatsell. How old was this Gentlewoman?

Mrs Bendy. About Six and Twenty.

Mr Cowper. Call Mrs Jane Low, Martha Grub, and Mrs Cowper. Mrs Low, pray do you inform my Lord and the Jury, what you know concerning the Melancholy of Mrs Sarah Stout, and when you first observed it.

Mrs Low. It was a Week before Whitsontide was Twelve-month.

Mr Cowper. What did she say then?

Mrs Low. She often complained to me that she was very melancholy and uneasy, one time particularly, as we were walking together in the Fields, I asked her the Occasion of it, and she told me that was a secret; but she said, she led a very melancholy Life; said I, I am apt to believe you are in Love, she did not disown it, and with a little more speaking, she own'd she was; I asked her who the Person was, she said, that should be a Secret, but it would end her Days; said I, a Woman of your Fortune may command any Body, she shook her Head, and said no; perhaps, said I, he may not be a Quaker, and you may be afraid of disobliging your Mother; but if you tell your Mother that your Life depends upon it, your Mother (rather than lose her only Child) will consent to it; she said no, it was a Person she could not marry, and shook her Head and looked very melancholy.

Mr Cowper. When was this?

Mrs Low. This was the Week before Whitsontide, and in Whitson-week she saw me often, and said she would take her full swing of Melancholy when her Mother was away, and she used to lie a Bed that Week.

Mr Cowper. Have you observed any Melancholy in her since?

Mrs Low. Yes, at several times.

Mr Cowper. Do you remember any Thing of an intermitting Feaver?

Mrs Low. Yes, she told me her Melancholy had occasioned an intermitting Fever; and I mentioned Dr Eales to her, and she said her Distemper lay in her Mind, and not in her Body, and she would take nothing, and the sooner it did kill her the better.

Mr Cowper. Did she say any Thing of her Disposition to Reading?

Mrs Low. She said nothing delighted her now, neither reading nor any thing else.

Mr Cowper. My Lord, Sarah Walker when I asked her if she did not observe the Melancholy of her Mistress, and whether she had not said that her Mistress had been melancholy, denyed that she had said so, pray have you heard her say any thing to that Purpose.

Mrs Low. I have often ask'd her how her Mistress did, and she would answer, very much indisposed, but not otherwise.

Mr Cowper. Mrs Cowper, what do you know of Mrs Stout's Melancholy.

Mr Cowper. My Lord, this is my Brother's Wife.

Mrs Cowper. About Spring was twelve-month, she came up to London; and I believe it was not less than once or twice a Week, I saw her; and I never had an opportunity to be an Hour alone with her at any time, but I perceived something of her Melancholy. I have asked her the Reason of it several times, and sometimes she seemed to dislike her Profession, being a Quaker, and sometimes she would say that she was uneasy at something that lay upon her Spirits, which she should never out-live, and that she should never be well while she was in this World; sometimes I have endeavoured to perswade her out of it seriously, and sometimes by raillery, and have said are you sure you shall be better in another World, and particularly I remember I have said to her, I believe you have Mr Marshall in your Head, either have him or do not trouble your self about him, make your self either easy one way or another, and she hath said no, in an indifferent way, I cannot make my self easy; then I have said marry him, no faith she, I can't. Sometimes with Company she would be diverted, and had frequently a way of throwing her Hands, and shewed great Disturbance and Uneasiness. This Time twelve-month, at the Summer Assizes, I was here six Days, and I saw her every Day, and one time among other Discourse, she told me she had received great Disturbance from one Theophilus, a Waterman and a Quaker, who coming down to old Mrs Stout, that was then lame, she had gathered about 20 or 30 People together to hear him preach, and she said he directed his Discourse to her, and exasperated her at that rate, that she had thoughts of seeing no Body again, and said, she took it heinously ill to be so us'd, and particularly that he told her that her Mother's falling outwardly in the Flesh, should be a warning that she did not fall inwardly, and such canting Stuff as she called it; and she said, that Theophilus had so used her, that she was ashamed to shew her Head. Another time the same Week, she had a Fever, and she said she was in great Hopes it would end her Days, and that she neglected her self, in doing those Things that were necessary for her Health, in hopes it would carry her off, and often wish'd her self dead; another time, which I think was the last time I saw her, was at my Sister's Lodgings, and I sent for her to drink a Dish of Tea with us, and she came in a great toss and melancholy; said I, What is the Matter you are always in this Humour, saith she, I can't help it, I shall never be otherwise; saith my Sister, for God's sake keep such Thoughts out of your Head as you have had, don't talk any more of throwing your self out of Window; saith she, I may thank God that ever I saw your Face, otherwise I had done it; but I can't promise I shall not do it.

Mr Bar. Hatsell. What is your Name, Madam?

Mr Cowper. 'Tis my Brother's Wife, my Lord. I desire Mrs Toler may give an account what she knows as to her being Melancholy.

Mrs Toler. My Lord, she was once to see me, and she look'd very melancholy, and I asked her what was the matter, and she said something had vex'd her that Day, and I asked her the cause of it, and she stop'd a little while, and then said, she would drown her self out of the way.

Mr Bar. Hatsell. How long ago was this?

Mrs Toler. About three quarters of a Year ago.

John Stout. I desire to know whether she has always said so, or not told another Story.

Mrs Toler. I told you no Story; it may be I did not say so much to you, but I said she talk'd something of drowning. I have been with her when Mr Cowper's Conversation and Name has been mention'd, and she said she kept but little Company, that sometimes she went to Mrs Lowe's, and that she kept none but civil modest Company, and that Mr Cowper was a civil modest Gentleman, and that she had nothing to say against him.

Mr Cowper. This is Mrs. Eliz. Toler my Lord.

Mrs Eliz. Toler. My Lord, she came to see me sometime after Christmas, and seem'd not so chearful as she us'd to be; said I, What is the matter? Why are you not so merry as you us'd to be? Why do you not come often to see me? Saith she, I don't think to go abroad so much as I us'd to do, and said, it would be as much a rarity to see her go abroad as to see the Sun shine by Night.

Mr Cowper. Mrs. Grub what do you know concerning Mrs. Stout's pulling out a Letter at her Brother Mr John Stout's? give an account of it, and what she said upon that occasion.

Mrs Grub. I have a Daughter that lives at Guernsey, and she sent me a Letter, and I pray'd Mrs Sarah Stout to read the Letter, and while she was reading it, I cry'd; saith she, why do you cry? said I, because my Child is so far off; said she, if I live till Winter is over, I will go over Sea as far as I can for the Land.

Mr Bar. Hatsell. What was the occasion of her saying so.

Mrs

Mrs Grub. I was waſhing my Maſter's Study, Mrs Sarah Stout came in, and I had a Letter from my Daughter at Guernſey, and I pray'd Mrs Sarah Stout to read it, and ſhe read my Letter, and I cry'd, and ſhe ask'd me why I cry'd; ſaid I, becauſe my Child is ſo far off; ſaith ſhe, if I live to Winter, or till Winter is over, I will go over Sea as far as I can for the Land.

Mr Cowper. Now my Lord, to bring this matter of Melancholy to the point of time, I will call one Witneſs more, who will ſpeak of a remarkable Inſtance that happen'd on Saturday before the Monday when ſhe did deſtroy her ſelf.

Call Mr Joſeph Taylor. Pray will you inform the Court and Jury of what you obſerv'd on Saturday before the Monday on which Mrs Stout deſtroy'd her ſelf.

J. Taylor. I happen'd to go in at Mr Firmin's Shop, and there ſhe ſat the Saturday before this Accident happen'd the former Aſſizes, and I was ſaying to her, Madam, I think you look ſtrangely diſcontented, I never ſaw you dreſs'd ſo in my Life; ſaith ſhe, the dreſs will ſerve me as long as I ſhall have occaſion for a Dreſs.

Mr Cowper. In what poſture did ſhe appear in the Shop?

J. Taylor. She appear'd to be very Melancholy.

Mr Cowper. What part of her dreſs did you find fault with?

J. Taylor. It was her Head-cloaths.

Mr. Cowper. What was the matter with them?

J. Taylor. I thought her Head was dawb'd with ſome kind of Greaſe or Charcoal.

Mr Cowper. What Anſwer did ſhe make?

J. Taylor. She ſaid they would ſerve her time.

Mr Cowper. As to this piece of Evidence, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, I deſire it may be particularly taken notice of, it was her Head-dreſs that ſhe ſaid would ſerve her time.

Pray Mr Taylor was you at Mr Bareſoot's when I came in there on Monday Morning.

J. Taylor. Yes, I went up Stairs with you into your Chamber.

Mr. Cowper. Pray what did I ſay to Mr Bareſoot?

J. Taylor. You ask'd him if they had receiv'd a Letter from your Brother, and he ſaid, no, not that he knew of, but he would call his Wife, and he did call his Wife, and ask'd her if ſhe had receiv'd a Letter, and ſhe ſaid no; then ſaid you, I will take up this Lodging for mine, and accordingly you went up Stairs, and I went with you, and ſtaid there about four times as long as I have been here.

Mr Cowper. Are you very ſure that I ſaid I would take up my Lodging there?

J. Taylor. Yes, I am very ſure of it.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. What time of the Day was it?

J. Taylor. 'Twas the fore part of the Day; while I was there, my Lord, Mrs Sarah Stout's Maid came to invite Mr Cowper to her Houſe to Dinner.

Mr Cowper. Did you know any thing of my ſending to the Coffee-houſe.

J. Toylor. You ſent to the Coffee-houſe for your things.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. Did Mr Cowper uſe to lie at Mr Bareſoot's?

J. Taylor. His Brother did, but I do not know whether this Gentleman did; but at that time he took up that place for his Lodging, and ſaid it was all one, my Brother muſt pay for't, and therefore I will take it up for my ſelf.

Mr Cowper. Call Mrs Bareſoot and her Maid.

(But they not preſently appearing)

Mr Cowper. My Lord, in the mean time I will go on to the other part of my Evidence, in opening of which I ſhall be very ſhort.

My Lord, my Wife Lodging at Hertford, occaſion'd me frequently to come down. Mrs Stout became well acquainted with her; when Buſineſs was over in the long Vacation, I reſided pretty much at Hertford, and Mr Marſhall came down to pay me a viſit, and this introduc'd his Knowledge of Mrs Stout; when ſhe was firſt acquainted with him ſhe receiv'd him with a great deal of Civility and Kindneſs, which induc'd him to make his Addreſſes to her, as he did, by way of Courtſhip. It happen'd one Evening, that ſhe and one Mrs Crook, Mr Marſhall, and my ſelf, were walking together, and Mr Marſhall and Mrs Crook, going ſome little way before us, ſhe took this Opportunity to ſpeak to me, in ſuch Terms I muſt confeſs ſurpriz'd me: Says ſhe, Mr Cowper, I did not think you had been ſo dull; I was inquiſitive to know in what my dullneſs did conſiſt: Why, ſays ſhe, do you imagine I intend to Marry Mr Marſhall. I ſaid I thought ſhe did, and that if ſhe did not, ſhe was much to blame in what ſhe had done; no, ſays ſhe, I thought it might ſerve to divert the Cenſure of the World, and favour our Acquaintance. My Lord, I have ſome original Letters, under her own Hand which will make this fully manifeſt, I will produce the Letters, after I have call'd Mr Marſhall. Mr Marſhall.

Mr. Marſhall. If your Lordſhip pleaſes, it was in the long Vacation, I came down to ſpend a little of my leaſure time at Hertford, the reaſon of my going thither, was becauſe Mr Cowper was there at that time. The firſt Night when I came down, I found Mrs Sarah Stout Viſiting at Mr Cowper's Lodgings, and there I firſt came acquainted with her; and ſhe afterwards gave me frequent Opportunities of improving that Acquaintance; and by the manner of my Reception by her, I had not reaſon to ſuſpect the uſe it ſeems I was deſigned for; when I came to Town, my Lord, I was generally told of my Courting Mrs Stout, which I confeſs was not then in my Head, but it being repreſented to me as a thing eaſily to be got over, and believing the Report of the World as to her Fortune, I did afterwards make my Application to her, but upon very little Tryal of that ſort, I receiv'd a very fair Denial, and there ended my Suit: Mr Cowper having been ſo friendly to me as to give me notice of ſome things, that convinc'd me I ought to be thankful I had no more to do with her.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. When did ſhe caſt you off?

Mr Marſhall. I can't be poſitive as to the time my Lord, but it was in anſwer to the only ſerious Letter I ever writ to her; as I remember, I was not over importunate in this Affair, for I never was a very violent Lover.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. Well, but tell the time as near as you can.

Mr Marſhall. I believe it was the ſecond or third Time I came down to Hertford, which is about a Year and half ſince; and during the whole of my Acquaintance with her, I never till then found her averſe to any Propoſal of mine; but ſhe then telling me her Reſolution was not to comply with what I deſired, I took her at her Word, having partly by my own Obſervation, but more by Mr Cowper's Friendſhip, been pretty well able to gueſs at her meaning.

Mr Comper. Becauſe what you ſay may ſtand confirmed beyond contradiction, I deſire you to ſay whether you have any Letters from her to your ſelf.

Mr Marſhall. Yes, I have a Letter in my Hand, which ſhe ſent me upon occaſion of ſome Songs I ſent her when I came to Town, which ſhe had before deſired of me, and this is a Letter in Anſwer to mine, 'tis her Hand-writing, and directed to me.

Mr Baron Hatſell. How do you know 'tis her Hand writing?

Mr Marſhall. I have ſeen her write, and ſeen and received ſeveral Letters from her.

Mr Comper. Pray ſhew it Mr Beale.

Mr Beale. I believe it to be her Hand I have ſeen her write, and have a Receipt of hers.

Clerk of Arr. 'Tis directed to Mr Thomas Marſhall, at Lyons-Inn, and dated Sept. 26, 1697.

Sept. 26, 1697.

SIR,

YOurs came very ſafe, but I wiſh you had explained your Meaning a little more about the Accident you ſpeak of, for I have been puzzling my Brains ever ſince, and without I ſhall ſet my ſelf to conjuring, I cannot imagine what it ſhould be, for I know of nothing that happened after you went away, nor no Diſcourſe about you, only when we were together, the Company would ſometimes drink your Health, or wiſh you had been there, or the like. So that I fancy it muſt be ſomething Mr ——. has invented for diverſion; tho' I muſt confeſs we have a ſort of People here, that are inſpired with the gift of foreknowledge, who will tell one as much for nothing as any Aſtrologer will have a good Piece of Money for, but to leave jeſting, I cannot tell when I ſhall come to London, unleſs it be for a Night and away, about ſome Buſineſs with my Brother, that I muſt be obliged to attend his Motions; but when I do, I ſhall remember my Promiſe, although I do not ſuppoſe you are any more in earneſt than my ſelf in this Matter. I give you thanks for your Songs, and your good Wiſhes, and reſt your loving Duck.

Mr Comper. Have you any more Letters?

Mr Marſhall. Yes, I have another Letter here, but before 'tis read I think 'twill be proper to give the Court an Account of the Occaſion of its being writ. I waited on Mrs Stout one Evening at her Lodgings in Hounſditch, and at our parting ſhe appointed to meet me the next Day, and to excuſe her not coming according to that Appointment, ſhe ſent me this Letter.

Cl. of Arr. 'Tis directed to Mr Thomas Marſhall, tis without date.

Mr Marſhall,

I Met unexpected, with one that came from H——d laſt Night, who detained me ſo long with relating the moſt notorious Inventions, and Lies that are now extant amongſt that People, that I could not poſſible come till it was late, and this Day was appointed for Buſineſs, that I am uncertain when it will be finiſhed; ſo that I believe I cannot ſee you whilſt I am in Town. I have no more at preſent, but that I am your obliged Friend.

Mr Comper. Now, my Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, I proceed to ſhew you, that I went not ſo much voluntarily, as preſt by her to come to this Houſe, and for that I will produce one Letter from her to my ſelf; and, my Lord, I muſt a little inform you of the Nature of this Letter. It is on the outſide directed to Mrs Jane Ellen, to be left for her at Mr Hargrave's Coffee-Houſe. For her to direct for me at a Coffee-houſe might make the Servants wonder, and the Poſt-man might ſuſpect, and for that reaſon ſhe directed it in that Manner. There was Mr Marſhall by when I received it, and I can prove the Hand by Mr Beale.

Mr Marſhall. My Lord, I verily believe I was by, and that Mr Comper ſhewed me this Letter immediately on Receipt of it, as he had done ſeveral others from the ſame Hand.

Cl. of Arr. This is directed for Mrs Jane Ellen: 'tis dated March the 5th, without any Year.

SIR, March the 5th.

I Am glad you have not quite forgot that there is ſuch a Perſon as I in being, but I am willing to ſhut my Eyes, and not ſee any Thing that looks like Unkindneſs in you, and rather content my ſelf with what Excuſes you are pleaſed to make, than be inquiſitive into what I muſt not know; I ſhould very readily comply with your Propoſition of changing the Seaſon, if it were in my Power to do it, but you know that lies altogether in your own Breaſt: I am ſure the Winter has been too unpleaſant for me to deſire the continuance of it. And I wiſh you were to endure the ſharpneſs of it, but for one Hour, as I have done for many long Nights and Days, and then I believe it would move that rocky Heart of yours, that can be ſo thoughtleſs of me as you are, but if it were deſigned for that End, to make the Summer the more delightful, I wiſh it may have the Effect ſo far as to continue it to be ſo too, that the Weather may never over caſt again; the which if I could be aſſured of, it would recompence me for all that I have ever ſuffered, and make me as eaſie a Creature as I was the firſt Moment I received Breath; when you come to Ti——pray let your Steed guide you, and don't do as you did the laſt Time; and be ſure order your Affairs to be here as ſoon as you can, which cannot be ſooner, than you will be heartily welcome to your very ſincere Friend.

For Mrs Jane Ellen at Mr Hargrave's near Temple-Bar, London.

Mr Comper. Though 'tis directed to Mrs Jane Ellen, it begins in the Inſide, Sir; and 'tis dated the 5th of March next before the 13th.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. What March was it?

Mr Marſhal. I kept no Account of the Time, but I am very poſitive by the Contents, that Mr Comper ſhew'd me this Letter, and I read it, but by my now Remembrance, it ſhould be longer ſince than March laſt.

Mr Comper. It was March laſt. That which will ſet Mr Marſhal's Memory to rights is this other Letter which I received at the Rainbow, when he was by, and he read it, and it importuning me to a Matter of this Kind, I did produce it to my Brother and him, they both knew of it, and both read it, and that will refreſh his Memory concerning the Date of the other.

Mr Marſhal. My Lord, I was in the Coffee houſe with Mr Comper when he received this Letter, and he afterwards ſhew'd it to Mr William Comper at the Covent-Garden Tavern, when I was by.

Cl. of the Arr. This is dated the 9th of March, and directed to Mrs Jane Ellen, at Mr Hargrave's.

March 9.

SIR,

I Writ to you by Sunday's Poſt, which I hope you have received; however as a Conſideration, I will aſſure you I know of no Inconvenency that can attend your cohabiting habiting with me, unleſs the Grand Jury ſhould thereupon find a Bill againſt us, but I won't fly for't, for come Life, come Death, I am reſolved never to deſert you, therefore according to your Appointment, I will expect you, and till then I ſhall only tell you, that I am,

Yours &c.

For Mrs Jane Ellen at
Mr Hargrave's near Temple-Bar, London.

Mr Cowper. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, I will further prove this Letter by my Brother.

Mr W. Cowper. I can bear my Brother Witneſs, that when he has been adviſed to make theſe Letters Part of his Defence, he has expreſſed great unwillingneſs, and has ſaid, nothing but the Life of theſe Gentlemen could incline him to it.

My Lord, all I can ſay to this Matter is this, I do remember, that when ſhe was one Time in London, I think it was about a Year and an half ſince, I am not poſitive as to the Time, but when ſhe was in London, my Brother came in the Morning to my Chamber in the Temple, and after ſome Diſcourſe, he told me he had received a Letter from Mrs Stout that Day, wherein ſhe ſaid, ſhe intended him a Viſit at his Chamber that Afternoon; he told me at the ſame Time, that his Friend Mr Marſhal had ſome Thoughts of her, and therefore for that, as well as other Reaſons, he would decline receiving the Viſit intended him; and upon conſideration, this was the Method agreed upon: At that Time I lived with my Father in Hatton Garden, and this Gentlewoman having writ in the ſame Letter I now ſpeak of, that ſhe deſigned to dine there, and to come from thence in the Afternoon; ſays my Brother, you may caſually, as it were, take occaſion to ſay at Dinner, that my Buſineſs obliges me to go to Deptford in the Afternoon, as in good earneſt it did, as he then told me, and from that ſhe may take a hint of my not being at home, and ſo ſave her ſelf the Diſappointment of coming to my Chamber; I told him, I would find an opportunity of doing it if I could. At Dinner my Father hapened to ask me, as he often did, when I ſaw my Brother; I took this hint, and ſaid, I had ſeen him at my Chamber in the Morning, and that he was gone to Deptford that Afternoon about ſome Law Buſineſs. My Lord, Mrs Stout was then at the Table. I no ſooner ſaid it, but I obſerv'd ſhe chang'd colour preſently, and roſe with her Napkin, and went into the Back yard, and we ſaw her through a Saſh-window fall into a Woman's Fit of Sowning, and they gave her the Aſſiſtance that is uſual in ſuch Caſes.

My Lord, the next Thing I can ſpeak to is this, the Parliament ſitting late the Friday before the Monday of the laſt Aſſizes at Hertford, I came late from Dinner, I had din'd about ſeven a Clock, as I remember, and having occaſion to ſpeak with my Brother, I found him out by enquiry at the Covent-Garden Tavern and there was Mr Marſhal of Lions-Inn with him. I had not drunk above a Glaſs or two of Wine, but my Brother began with me, and ſaid, I ſeldom trouble you with Affairs of mine, but now I do not know well how to avoid it. I have received an importunate Letter, which I will ſhew you, it came from a Lady whoſe Name I believe you will gueſs; ſo he pull'd it out of his Pocket, and I read it ſo often, becauſe of the oddneſs of the Expreſſion, that I can ſay, I am ſure this is the very Letter he ſhew'd me at the Covent-Garden Tavern, the Friday before the laſt Aſſizes; ſaith he, the Occaſion of my ſhewing it, is not to expoſe a Woman's Weakneſs, but I would not willingly lie under too many Obligations, nor engage too far; nor on the other Hand, would I be at an unneceſſary Expence for a Lodging. Upon this Subject there was ſome Diſcourſe I think Foreign to this purpoſe, and therefore I would not trouble your Lordſhip with the Repetition of it, that which is Material is this, I did undertake to write to Mr Bareſoot to diſpoſe of his Lodgings, where I us'd to be at the Time of the Aſſizes, and my Brother with me. I ſaid I would write the next Day, being Saturday, but when I ſhould have writ, it was very late, and I was weary, being then tied down to the Buſineſs of Parliament and partly for that Reaſon, and partly in Point of Diſcretion, which I had upon my ſecond Thoughts, that 'twould be better for my Brother's Buſineſs to be at Mr Bareſoot's, which is near the Court, and in the Market place. I did neglect writing; and though I thought of it about eleven a Clock, yet as I ſaid, partly for one Reaſon and partly for the other, I did not write that Time. My Lord, my Brother could know nothing of this Matter, for I did not ſee him from the Friday he ſhew'd me the Letter, till he went to the Aſſizes, ſo that he could not know before he was at Hertford, that I had not writ. My Lord, I ſay as to this Letter I am ſure he ſhew'd me the Friday next before the laſt Aſſizes.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. Let me ſee that Letter, (which was ſhewn his Lordſhip.)

Mr Cowper. My Lord, one or two of the Jury ſeem to queſtion whether the Letters are ſufficiently prov'd; for their Satisfaction, I will further prove them. Call Mr John Beale, William Oker, and Mrs Low. My Lord, Mr Beale is one of their own Sect.

(The Witneſſes prov'd her Hand.)

Jury. My Lord, we are ſatisfied.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. I believe you may ask her Mother, ſhe will tell you whether it be her Daughter's Hand.

Mrs Stout. How ſhould I know! I know ſhe was no ſuch Perſon, her Hand may be counterfeited.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. But if they were written in a more ſober Stile, what would you ſay then?

Mrs Stout. I ſhan't ſay it to be her Hand, unleſs I ſaw her write it.

Then the Letter was ſhew'd to Mr Stout.

Mr Stout. 'Tis like my Siſter's Hand.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. Do you believe it to be her Hand?

Mr Stout. No, I don't believe it, becauſe it don't ſuit her Character.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. But do you think ſhe might not conceal from you what were her inward Thoughts.

Mr Stout. Not in ſuch a Degree as this.

Mr Cowper. Call Mrs Bareſoot and her Maid. I deſire they may be ask'd what they know about my taking of Lodgings at their Houſe.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. That is taken for granted.

Mrs Bareſoot. When you came to my Houſe, you ask'd me, if I had receiv'd a Letter from your Brother, and I told you no.

Mr Cowper. What did I ſay to that?

Mrs Bareſoot Then you ask'd me if I expected you, and I told you yes, by reaſon I had heard nothing from you.

Mr Cowper. Where did I lodge that Night?

Mrs.

Mrs Barefoot. I had prepar'd the Lodging before you came, expecting you or Mr Cowper your Brother.

Mr Cowper. And did I come?

Mrs Barefoot. Yes, as you us'd to do.

Mr Cowper. Did I ſend for my Things from the Coffee-houſe?

Mrs Barefoot. Yes, you did, and I carried them up into your Chamber as I us'd to do.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. Where did Mr Cowper dine that Day?

Mrs Barefoot. Mrs Stout ſent her Maid to deſire him to come to Dinner at their Houſe, whether he went thither or no I can't ſay, but he went out.

Mr Cowper. What Time did I come into my Lodging at Night?

Mrs Barefoot. It was a little after Eleven.

Mr Cowper. You are ſure I came in a little after Eleven.

Mrs Barefoot. Yes.

Mr Jones. By what Clock? By the Town Clock?

Mrs Barefoot. Yes.

Mr Cowper. Did I go out any more that Night?

Mrs Barefoot. No.

Mr Cowper. Is your Maid there?

Mrs Barefoot. Yes.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. What is your Name?

Mrs Hanwell. Mary Hanwell.

Mr Cowper. Pray what Time was it I came to my Lodging?

Mrs Hanwell. You came in a little after eleven a Clock.

Mr Cowper. Are you very poſitive in that?

Mrs Hanwell. Yes, I am very poſitive.

Mr Cowper. What was done before I went to Bed?

Mrs Hanwell. My Lord, I went up and made a Fire, and then I came down again, and then I went up and warm'd Mr Cowper's Bed, and then he deſir'd another Blanket, and I came down for it; and all this took up a conſiderable Time; and Mr Cowper was in Bed before twelve a Clock.

Mr Cowper. Did I go out again that Night?

Mrs Hanwell. No, you went out no more.

Mr Cowper. Now, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, I would explain that Part of Sarah Walker the Maid's Evidence; where ſhe ſays, her Miſtreſs ordered her to warm the Bed, and I never contradicted it: Your Lordſhip obſerves the Words in the laſt of the two Letters, No Inconvenience can attend your cohabiting with me; and afterwards, I won't Fly for it: For come Life come Death I am reſolv'd, and ſo on, —— I had rather leave it to be obſerved than make the Obſervation my ſelf, wh. might be the Diſpute between us at the Time the Maid ſpeaks of. I think it was not neceſſary ſhe ſhould be preſent at the Debate; and therefore I might not interrupt her Miſtreſs in the Orders ſhe gave; but as ſoon as the Maid was gone, I made uſe of theſe Objections; I told Mrs Stout, by what Accident I was obliged to take up my Lodging at Mr Barefoot's, and that the Family was ſitting up for me: That my ſtaying at her Houſe under theſe Circumſtances, would in probability provoke the Cenſure of the Town and Country; and that therefore I could not ſtay, whatever my Inclination otherwiſe might be; but, my Lord, my Reaſons not prevailing, I was forc'd to decide the Controverſie by going to my Lodging, ſo that the Maid may ſwear true, when ſhe ſays I did not contradict her Orders.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. I believe you have done now Mr Cowper?

Mr Cowper. No my Lord, I have more Evidence to give. Call Elizabeth Spurr.

If your Lordſhip pleaſes to obſerve, I have already proved by two Witneſſes that I was actually at Mr Barefoot's a little after Eleven; ſo that if I was to reſt upon this Proof, here is not the leaſt Article of Time, in which it can be ſuppoſed I was employ'd in this Matter: But, ſays Sarah Walker, the Maid, to obviate (I preſume) this Evidence of mine, our Houſe-Clock went faſter than the Town-Clock: Now to anſwer this too, I ſhall further prove to your Lordſhip, that before I came to my Lodging, I was at the Glove and Dolphin Inn, where I had a little Account of about ſix or ſeven Shillings, as I remember, for Horſe-keeping, and which I then paid.

Mr Cowper. Do you remember my coming to your Houſe, and at what Time?

E. Spurr The Clock ſtruck Eleven, juſt as you came into the Door.

Mr Cowper. How long did I ſtay at the Glove?

E. Spurr. About a quarter of an Hour.

Mr Cowper. How far is it from the Glove and Dolphin to Mrs Stout's Houſe?

E. Spurr. About a quarter of a Mile, or not quite ſo far.

Mr Cowper. Call Mary Kingitt, and George Man, (who not then appearing) in the mean Time, I would obſerve to your Lordſhip, That to go from Mrs Stout's Houſe to the Place where ſhe was drown'd, and to return from thence to the Glove and Dolphin, will take up at leaſt half an Hour, as I ſhall prove; and then the Matter will ſtand thus: Says Sarah Walker, you went about a quarter after Eleven; but our Clock went half an Hour too faſt: Then according to her Account, I went three quarters after Ten by the Town-Clock; and if it requires, (as I ſay, I ſhall prove it does) half an Hour to go to the Place where ſhe was drown'd, and to return from thence to the Glove Inn, that would make it a quarter paſt Eleven when I came to that Inn, by the Town-Clock, which it was not; and if I ſtaid there a quarter of an Hour (which is proved I did) it muſt be half an Hour after Eleven when I came to my Lodging by the ſame Clock, which it was not; ſo that I think this Matter as to the Time is very clear: My Lord, to prove the Time it requires to go from Mrs Stout's to the Place where ſhe drown'd her ſelf, and to return to the Glove, I deſire Sir William Aſhurſt may be called.

Sir William Aſhurſt. My Lord, I can't ſay I walk'd as faſt as I could, but I went with a Gentleman I ſee here to ſatisfie my ſelf about the Probability of this Matter; I walk'd as People uſually do, and I found it took up half an Hour and a Minute, when I walk'd with that Gentleman.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. Who was with you Sir?

Sir William Aſhurſt. Mr Thompſon was with me, the Time I mention, I walk'd it before with Sir Thomas Lane.

Mr Thompſon. My Lord, indeed it will take a compleat half Hour.

Mr Cowper. I deſire Sir Thomas Lane may give you an Account of the Diſtance between one Place and the other.

Sir Thomas Lane. Sir William Aſhurſt and I did walk to the Place mentioned, and we were careful to take notice of the Time, and it took up about three quarters of an Hour, according to my Obſervation; and we did not ſtay at all by the Way, except juſt to look upon the Hoſpital.

Mr Cowper. Now my Lord, Mary Kingitt and George Man, the Servants at the Glove are come: Pray

Pray Mrs Kingitt do you remember my coming into the Glove and Dolphin ?

Mary Kingitt. Yes.

Mr Cowper. How long did I ſtay there ?

Mary Kingitt. About a quarter of an Hour.

Mr Cowper. What was my Buſineſs there ?

Mary Kingitt. You came and enquir'd what you ow'd.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. What a Clock was it then ?

Mary Kingitt. I thought it was about Eleven, our t'other Maid told it Eleven.

Mr Jones. How came you to take notice of the Time ?

Mary Kingitt. She heard the Clock go Eleven, but I did not.

Mr Cowper. Was there any Diſpute about the Account ?

Mary Kingitt. You ask'd the Hoſtler how that came to ſtand in the Book, concerning the Horſe ; for you told him, you thought you had paid ſome Part of it, and he told you, you had not.

Mr Cowper. My Lord, with your Lordſhip's favour I would ask George Man a Queſtion to the ſame Point. Do you remember my coming into the Glove and Dolphin ?

G. Man. Yes.

Mr Cowper. How long did I ſtay there ?

G. Man. You ſtaid about a quarter of an Hour, as near as I can gueſs.

Mr Cowper. I will now call a Witneſs to prove that this Maid Sarah Walker is not ſo cautious and careful how ſhe Swears, as I think ſhe ought to be.

Call Mrs Mince.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. Pray wherein has Sarah Walker ſaid any Thing that is falſe ?

Mr Cowper. In this ; I ask'd her when ſhe gave Evidence, Whether ſhe went out to ſee for her Miſtreſs all that Night, and whether her Miſtreſs did not uſe to ſtay out a Nights ; and whether ſhe her ſelf had not uſed to ſay ſo ? If your Lordſhip pleaſes to remember ſhe ſaid no. Pray Mrs Mince what have you heard Mrs Stout's Maid ſay concerning her Miſtreſs, particularly as to her ſtaying out all Night.

Mrs Mince. She hath ſaid, That her Miſtreſs did not love to keep Company with Quakers ; and that ſhe paid for her own Board and her Maid's ; and that when ſhe entertain'd any Body, it was at her own Charge. And ſhe hath ſaid that Mrs Stout us'd to ask who is with you Child ? And ſhe would not tell her ; aud that ſhe did entertain her Friends in the Summer-houſe, now and then with a Bottle of Wine. And when her Mother ask'd who was there, her Miſtreſs would ſay bring it in here, I ſuppoſe there is none but Friends ; and after the Company was gone, ſhe us'd to make her Mother believe that ſhe went to Bed ; but ſhe us'd to go out and take the Key with her, and ſometimes ſhe would go out at the Window, and ſhe ſaid particularly one Time ſhe went out at the Garden Window, when the Garden Door was lock't, and that ſhe bid her not ſit up for her, for ſhe would come in at any Time.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. Did ever Sarah Walker tell yon that Mrs Stout had ſtaid out all Night ?

Mrs Mince. She hath ſaid ſhe could not tell what Time ſhe came in, for ſhe went to Bed.

Mr Cowper. Now if your Lordſhip pleaſe, I will prove to you, if it may be thought material, that Gurrey, at whoſe Houſe theſe Gentlemen lodged, ſhould ſay, That if I had viſited Mrs Stout none of all this had been (upon ſo little an Omiſſion it ſeems did this Proſecution depend.) To which I give this Anſwer, my Lord, I never did once go to viſit her in my Life ; ſhe knows it. Now for a Man officiouſly to make a new Viſit in the Time of the Aſſizes, one engaged in Buſineſs as I was, and eſpecially upon ſo melancholy an Occaſion, I ſay for me to go officiouſly to ſee a Woman I never had the leaſt Knowledge of, would have been thought more ſtrange (and juſtly might have been ſo) than the Omiſſion of that Ceremony. For my Part I cannot conceive what Mr Gurrey could mean, this being the Caſe, by ſaying, that if I had viſited Mrs Stout, nothing of this had happened.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. Mr Cowper, he is not the Proſecutor, I think it is no Matter what he ſaid.

Mr Cowper. I take it my Lord, with humble ſubmiſſion, it is material as he is a principal Witneſs againſt theſe Gentlemen, and the rather for that he now pretends, that what he did was out of Conſcience. My Lord, I have only one Thing more to ſay, I know not whether it will be requiſite for me or no to give ſome Account of my ſelf. Sir William Aſhurſt, if you pleaſe.

Sir William Aſhurſt. My Lord, if I had not had a good Opinion of this Gentleman I had not come on purpoſe to hear this Cauſe, which has made ſo great a Noiſe all England over.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. But what do you ſay as to Mr Cowper's Reputation, for which you are called ?

Sir William Aſhurſt. I always thought Mr Cowper to be a Gentleman of ſingular Humanity and Integrity ; he is an Officer in London, and as to his Management of his Office, I think no Man ever performed it better, or has a better Reputation in the Place where he lives.

Sir Thomas Lane. My Lord, I came hither on purpoſe to own this Gentleman, and indeed he deſerves to be owned by his Friends, and thoſe that know him ; his Character is altogether untainted with us, he has gained a good Reputation in the Buſineſs wherein he is concerned ; he has behaved himſelf in his Office which he holds of the City of London, very honeſtly and well ; I never knew him diſcover any ill Nature in his Temper, I think he cannot be ſuſpected of this or any other Act of Barbarity.

Mr Cowper. My Lord, in the next Place, I would call Mr Cox, who has the Honour to ſerve in Parliament, for the Burrough of Southwark ; and has been my near Neighbour theſe eight or nine Years. If you pleaſe Mr Cox, give an Account what Reputation and Character I have in that Place.

Mr Cox. My Lord, I live in Southwark, where Mr Cowper lives ; I have lived by him eight or nine Years, I know him to be a Perſon of Integrity and Worth ; all the Neighbours court his Company. I take him to have as much Honour and Honeſty as any Gentleman whatſoever ; and of all Men that I know, he would be the laſt Man, that I ſhould ſuſpect of ſuch a Fact as this is : I believe nothing in the World could move him to entertain the leaſt Thought of ſo foul a Fact.

Mr Cowper. Mr Thompſon, I deſire you would be pleas'd to give an Account of what you know of me.

Mr Thompſon. If you pleaſe, my Lord, the firſt Acquaintance I had with Mr Cowper, was in our Childhood, I had the Honour to go to Weſtminſter School with him ; I did not renew my Acquaintance with him till about five Years ago ; ſince that Time I have been often with him, and have ſeveral

Times

Times had occaſion to ask his Advice, in Matters relating to his Profeſſion; and I think no Man more faithful in the Service of his Client than he is, and I am ſure he is very deſerving of the Eſteem of any Man, and I believe he never entertain'd a Thought of ſo foul and barbarous a Fact as this, of which he is accuſed.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. Mr Marſon, you have heard the Evidence, what do you ſay to it?

Mr Marſon. My Lord, our Buſineſs at Hertford was this; Mr Ellis Stephens and I went down, he is Clerk of the Papers of the King's Bench, and Mr Rogers is Steward of the King's Bench, and it was their Duty to wait upon my Lord Chief Juſtice with the Marſhal of the King's Bench out of Town; and on Monday Morning we went to my Lord Chief Juſtice's Houſe in Lincolns-Inn Fields as we uſed to do, and there ſet out; but I being an Attorney of the Borough Court could not with any Convenience go farther with them than to a Place which I think is called Kingſland, and therefore I returned to my Buſineſs in Southwark, where I attended the Court as was cuſtomary and neceſſary for me to do, and ſet forth from thence at paſt Four in the Afternoon; by the Way as I remember about Waltham-Croſs I met one Mr Hanks a Clergyman of my Acquaintance, who had been likewiſe to attend my Lord Chief Juſtice to Hertford, and was returning from thence; with ſome perſuaſion I prevailed with him to go back again with me to Hertford, telling him, I did not know the Way, and we gallop'd every ſtep of it becauſe Night was coming on, it was about eight a Clock when we came in. Mr Hanks and I found the Marſhal, Mr Stevens, Mr Rogers, Mr Rutkin, and others of the Marſhal's Acquaintance at the Coffee-houſe; and truly when I came in I might for ought I know be in a Sweat with riding ſo hard as we did, but even then I was not in ſuch a Sweat as the Witneſs would have it. My Lord, we went from thence to the Glove and Dolphin and ſtayed there till about eleven a Clock, Mr Rogers and I had a Diſpute who ſhould lie with Mr Stevens at the now Witneſs Mr Gurrey's, at laſt it was agreed between us to go to Gurrey's to ſee what Convenience he could make for us, and Mr Rutkin and Mr Hanks went with us with deſign to drink a Glaſs of Wine at our Lodging; but afterwards it came in Mr Rutkin's Head, that he was to lie with the Marſhal, and for that Reaſon he ſaid he would go back again, and accordingly he went, and Mr Hanks with him after they had ſeen us into our Lodgings, and Mr Stevens and Mr Rogers and I drank three Bottles of Wine together, Mr Gurrey our Landlord was ſent to fetch it; and afterwards in jocular Converſation I believe Mr Stevens might ask Mr Gurrey if he knew one Mrs Sarah Stout, and the Reaſon why he ask'd that Queſtion our Witneſſes will explain; I believe he might likewiſe ask, what ſort of Woman ſhe was; and poſſibly I might ſay the Words, My Friend may be in with her, tho' I remember not I did ſay any Thing like it, but I ſay there is a Poſſibility I might; becauſe I had heard ſhe had deny'd Mr Marſhal's Suit, and that might induce me to ſay, My Friend may be in with her, for all that I remember; I confeſs Mr Rogers ask'd me what Money I had got that Day, meaning at the Borough Court, I anſwer'd, fifty Shillings; ſaith he, we have been here a ſpending our Money, I think you ought to treat us, or to that purpoſe; as for the Bundle mention'd, I had no ſuch, except a Pair of Sleeves and a Neckcloth: As to the Evidence which goes to Words ſpoken, the Witneſſes have fruitful Inventions, and as they have wreſted and improved the Inſtances I have been particular in, ſo have they the reſt, or otherwiſe forged them out of their own Heads.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. Mr Rogers, What do you ſay to it?

Mr Rogers. We came down with the Marſhal of the King's Bench, it rained every Step of the Way, ſo that my Spitter-daſhers and Shoes were fain to be dried; and it raining ſo hard, we did not think Mr Marſon would have come that Day, and therefore we provided but one Bed, tho' otherwiſe we ſhould have provided two, and were to give a Crown for our Night's Lodging: We went from the Coffee-houſe to the Tavern, as Mr Marſon has ſaid, and from the Tavern the next Way to our Lodging, where there was ſome merry and open Diſcourſe of this Gentlewoman, but I never ſaw her in my Life, nor heard of her Name before ſhe was mention'd there.

Mr Stevens. We never ſtir'd from one another, but went along with the Marſhal of the King's Bench to accompany my Lord Chief Juſtice out of Town, as is uſual.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. I thought it had been uſual for him to go but half the Way with my Lord Chief Juſtice.

Mr Rogers. They generally return back after they have gone half the Way, but ſome of the head Officers go throughout.

Mr Stevens. It was the firſt Circuit after the Marſhal came into his Office, and that's the Reaſon the Marſhal went the whole Way.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. Did not you talk of her Courting days being over?

Priſoners. Not one Word of it: We abſolutely deny it.

Mr Stevens. I never ſaw her.

Mr Jones. Mr Marſon, Did you ride in Boots?

Mr Marſon. Yes.

Mr Jones. How came your Shoes to be wet?

Mr Marſon. I had none.

Call Mr Heath, Mr Hunt, and Mr Foſter.

Mr Marſon. Mr Hunt, Will you pleaſe to acquaint my Lord and the Jury with what Diſcourſe we had on Sunday Night, before the Aſſizes, at the Old Devil Tavern at Temple-bar.

Mr Hunt. On Sunday Night I happened to be in Company with Mr Marſon and three or four more of Clifford's Inn, and there was a Diſcourſe of the Marſhal's attending my Lord Chief Juſtice out of Town, to Hertford, and Mr Marſon ſaid, It may be the Marſhal may require my waiting upon him too; and the whole Company being known to Mr Marſhall, and there being a Diſcourſe of Mr Marſhall's courting of Mrs Stout, ſaith one of the Company, If you do go to Hertford, pray enquire after Mr Marſhall's Miſtreſs, and bring us an Account of her.

Mr Jones. Who was in Company?

Mr Hunt. There was Mr Heath, Mr Foſter, Mr Marſon, Mr Stevens, Mr Bevor, and Mr Marſhall.

Mr Marſon. Now it was this Diſcourſe that gave us Occaſion to talk of this Woman at Gurrey's Houſe, which we did openly and harmleſly. Mr Foſter, Do you remember any Thing of our talking of this Gentlewoman on Sunday Night?

Mr Foſter. Yes: I and they were talking that they ſhould go to Hertford the next Day, to wait on the Marſhal, in compliment to my Lord Chief Juſtice, and go as far as Hertford; and there being a Report, that Mr Marſhall courted this Woman, man, we put it in a jesting Way, Pray enquire after Mr Marshall's Mistress, how the Match goes on; for there was some Wagers between him and the Company, who should be marry'd first: And so, in a jocular Way, it went about, and Mr Marson or Mr Stevens said, They would do their Endeavour, and they would enquire after the Lady, and give as good an Account of her as they could.

Mr Stevens. If you please, my Lord, we will call another to this Purpose.

Mr Bar. Hatsell. No: I think you need not, for it seems not material.

Then Mr Hanks was call'd.

Mr Hanks. I came as far as Waltham's Cross to wait upon my Lord Chief Justice, I stay'd there till about four or five a Clock, and then set out for London, and I met with Mr Marson, who importun'd me to go back with him to Hertford, and accordingly I did so, and we came in about Seven or Eight at Night, and we enquired after the Marshal of the King's Bench, and where he had set up his Horses, and we found him in the Coffee-House just by the Court, and we went and set up our Horses, and came again to him; from thence we went to the Glove and Dolphin Tavern, these three Gentlemen and the Marshal, and one Mr Rutkin came afterwards to us, and we stay'd till about Eleven at the Glove and Dolphin.

Mr Marson. Do you remember how we rid?

Mr Hanks. Yes: Very hard.

Mr Bar. Hatsell. What Time did you come in to the Tavern?

Mr Hanks. Between Seven and Eight, as I remember.

Mr Bar. Hatsell. And did you stay there till past Eleven?

Mr Hanks. Till about Eleven, little more or less, we went away together in order to drink a Glass of Wine with them at their Lodging, but Mr Rudkin considering that he was to drink a Glass of Wine, and lie with the Marshal, thought it would disturb the Marshal; so, saith he, I will not go in; but we saw them go into their Lodgings and returned to the Bull, where we eat Part of a Fowl, and I was never out of Mr Marson's Company all that Time.

Mr Marson. When you took your Leave of me, Don't you remember that the Door was clap'd too?

Mr Hanks. I can't remember that.

Mr Marson. Mr Gurrey saith, I never went out after I came home. Mr Rutkin, Pray give an Account to my Lord, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, of what you know of my coming to Hertford.

Mr Rutkin. My Lord, I came to wait on the Marshal of the King's Bench to Hertford, and when we were come to Hertford we put up our Horses at the Bull, and made our selves a little clean, we went to Church, and din'd at the Bull, and then we walk'd in and about the Court, and diverted our selves till about Seven a-Clock; and between Seven and Eight a-Clock came Mr Marson and Doctor Hanks to Town, and then we agreed to go to the Dolphin and Glove to drink a Glass of Wine, the Marshal went to see an ancient Gentleman, and we went to the Dolphin and Glove and stay'd there till past Ten a-Clock; and after the Reckoning was paid, we went with them to their Lodging with a Design to take a Glass of Wine; but then I consider'd I was to lie with the Marshal, and for that Reason I resolv'd not to go in, but came away, and went to the Bull-Inn, and after I drank Part of a Pint of Wine, and afterwards I went to the next Door to the Bull-Inn, where I lay with the Marshal.

Mr Jones. What Time did the Gentlemen go to their Lodging?

Mr Rutkin. I am not positive as to That; but I believe it was about Eleven a-Clock.

Mr Marson. If your Lordship pleases, now I'll call some Persons to give an Account of me. Mr Cox.

Mr Cox. I have known Mr Marson a long Time, and had always a good Opinion of him; I don't believe 5000 l. would tempt him to do such a Fact.

Mr Marson. Capt. Wise, I desire you would please to speak what you know of me.

Mr Cowper. My Lord, because these Gentlemen are Strangers in the Country, I think, if in taking an Account of any Evidence for my self, there is any Thing occurs to me, that they may have a just Advantage of, I think I ought not to conceal it; for I am as much concern'd to justify their Innocence as my own. The principal Witness against them is one Gurrey, and I will prove to you, That since he appear'd in this Court and gave his Evidence, he went out in a triumphant Manner, and boasted, That he, by his Management, had done more against these Gentlemen, than all the Prosecutor's Witnesses could do besides: To add to That, I have another Piece of Evidence that I have been just acquainted with. My Lord, it is the Widow Davis, Gurrey's Wife's Sister that I would call.

Major Lane. My Lord, I have known Mr Marson ever since he was two Years old, and never saw him but a civiliz'd Man in my Life; he was well bred up among us, and I never saw him given to Debauchery in all my Life.

Mr Bar. Hatsell. Where do you live?

Major Lane. In Southwark, my Lord.

Mr Bar. Hatsell. Well; What do you say, Mrs Davis?

Mrs Davis. I came to the House where these Gentlemen lodg'd; I was in about half an Hour, and my Sister ask'd me to air two or three Pair of Sheets: When I had air'd the Sheets, she ask'd me to go up and help to lay them on; and before I had laid them on, these Gentlemen came into the Room.

Mr Bar. Hatsell. What Hour?

Mrs Davis. By the Time of my going out again, I believe it might be about Ten, or something better, and they drank three Quarts of Wine, and they had some Bread and Butter and Cheese carry'd up, and so they went to Bed; and after my Brother went to fetch Mr Gape, that lay at his House, from Hockley's.

Mr Cowper. I only beg leave to observe, that Gurrey deny'd that he went for him.

Mr Bar. Hatsell. Ay; but this signifies very little whether it be true or false.

Mrs Davis. The next Day after, these Gentlemen were about the Town, and she said, she did believe they were come to clear a young Man (a Minister's Son) that was tried at the Bar for robbing the Mail: I ask'd, Why she thought so; she said, She was sure of it: And I ask'd her, How she could be sure of it, when she was never told so? Why, said I, do they accuse these Gentlemen? they ought rather to take up the Gentleman that was with Mrs Stout's Maid; and she said, If they took up Mrs Stout's Maid they ſhould have never a Witneſs.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. Who was That that was talking with Mrs Stout's Maid?

Mrs Davis. I don't know, but ſhe ſaid ſhe did not like their Actions; and therefore ſhe ought to have been examined who ſhe was with.

Capt. Wiſe. I have known Mr Marſon ſeveral Years, and he is a Perſon of as fair Reputation as any in the Borough.

Mr Reading. I have been acquainted with Mr Marſon Twenty Years, he lives near the Houſe where I now do: He has a general good Character among his Neighbours, for a fair Man in his Practice, an honeſt Man, and a Man of good Converſation.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. Well, Mr Stevens, What do you ſay?

Mr Stevens. I deſire Sir Robert Auſtin to give an Account of me.

Sir Robert Auſtin. I have known Mr Stevens many Years; his Brother is Captain in a neighbouring County, he is reckon'd not only an honeſt Man in his Practice, but has the general Character of a good-natur'd Man, and he is ſo far from being a Perſon likely to do ſuch an Action, that, for a younger Brother, he was very well provided for; his Father left him a Thouſand Pounds, and he is Clerk of the Papers, which is reputed worth a Hundred Pounds a Year, and is in good Practice beſides.

Juryman. I have known him ſeveral Years, and he hath the ſame Reputation Sir Robert hath given him.

Sir John Shaw. I know Mr Stevens, and his Brother Captain Stevens: As to this Gentleman, he hath always behav'd himſelf well in our Country, and hath the Character of an honeſt Gentleman.

Mr Evans. I have known him for theſe eight Years, and to be a very civil Perſon, and well educated, and never heard but a good Character of him: I have alſo known Mr Marſon theſe Ten Years, and never ſaw any Ill by him, and do believe, that he or the other would not have done ſuch an ill Thing to have gain'd this County.

Mr Menlove. My Lord, Mr Stevens was my Clerk, and he behav'd himſelf very honeſtly with me. And ſince That, I have kept a Correſpondence with him, and I believe he would not do ſuch a Thing for all the World.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. Call ſome Body to ſpeak for Mr Rogers, if there be any.

Mr Evans. My Lord, Mr Rogers hath a general Character in Southwark, for a very honeſt Man.

Mr Rogers. Pray call Mr Lygoe. Sir, pleaſe to give my Lord and the Court an Account what you know of me.

Mr Lygoe. My Lord, I have known all the three Gentlemen at the Bar, but particularly Mr Rogers and Mr Stevens, from their Infancy. I have employ'd them both in Buſineſs ſeveral Times, and always found them fair Practicers; and believe neither of them would be guilty of doing an ill Act.

Mr Rogers. Call Mr Thurlby. Sir, Pray give the Court an Account how I behaved my ſelf in your Service.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. Come Mr Thurlby, What do you ſay of Mr Rogers?

Mr Thurlby. My Lord, Mr Rogers lived with me about eight Years, in which Time I frequently truſted him with very great Sums of Money, I ever found him juſt and faithful, and can't believe, that any Money could tempt him to do an Act of this Kind.

Mr Jones. My Lord, we inſiſt upon it, That Mr Cowper hath given a different Evidence now from what he did before the Coroner; for there he ſaid he never knew any Diſtraction or Love-fit, or other Occaſion ſhe had to put her upon this extravagant Action. Now, here he comes, and would have the whole Scheme turn'd upon a Love-fit. Call John Maſon (who was Sworn.)

Mr Bar. Hatſell. What do you ſay, Sir, to this Matter?

Mr Stout. When Mr Cowper was examined before the Coroner, he was ask'd, If he knew any Reaſon why ſhe ſhould do ſuch a Thing? and he ſaid, She was a very modeſt Woman, and he knew no Cauſe why ſhe ſhould do ſuch a Thing as this. John Maſon, Was you by when Mr Cowper gave Evidence before the Coroner.

Maſon. Yes.

Mr Jones. What did he ſay?

Maſon. He ſaid he did not know any Thing was the Cauſe of it, but ſhe was a very modeſt Perſon.

Mr Jones. Was he upon his Oath?

Maſon. Yes, he was.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. When did he ſay this?

Maſon. It was the ſame Day ſhe was found.

Mr Jones. Did they ask him any Queſtion, If he knew any Perſon that ſhe was in Love with?

Maſon. He ſaid he knew but of one, and his Name was Marſhall, and Mr Marſhall told him, That he was always repulſed by her.

Mr Stout. I deſire John Archer may be asked the ſame Queſtion, (who was Sworn.)

Mr Jones. Was you preſent with the Coroner's Inqueſt?

J. Archer. Yes.

Mr Jones. Was Mr Cowper examined by them?

J. Archer. Yes, he was.

Mr Jones. What did he ſay concerning Mrs Stout then?

J. Archer. They ask'd him, If he knew any Occaſion for Mrs Stout's Death? and he ſaid, He knew nothing of it, or of any Letters.

Mr Cowper. Then I muſt call over the whole Coroner's Inqueſt to prove the contrary.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. Did they ask him concerning any Letters?

J. Archer. They ask'd him, If he knew of any Thing that might be the Occaſion of her Death.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. I ask you again, If they ask'd him if he knew of any Letters?

J. Archer. My Lord, I don't remember That.

Mr Stout. I would have called ſome of the Coroner's Inqueſt, but I was ſtop'd in it.

Juryman. We have taken Minutes of what has paſs'd: If your Lordſhip pleaſe, we will withdraw.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. They muſt make an End firſt.

Mr Jones. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, we will call one Witneſs to falſify one Piece of their Evidence, and that is one Widow Larkin, (who was Sworn.)

Mr Jones. Do you remember one Mr Rutkin's being at your Houſe?

Larkin. Yes.

Mr Jones. At what Time did he come in?

Larkin. Between Nine and Ten of the Clock.

Mr Jones. Was the Marſhal then in the Houſe?

Lar-

Larkin. No: The Marſhal did not come till near an Hour after.

Mr Jones. Did not he go out afterwards?

Larkin. Not that I know of.

Mr Rutkins. I am ſatisfied it was paſt Eleven when I came in.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. It is likely it may be true; for, I believe, they did not keep very good Hours at that Time.

Mr Stout. I deſire to call ſome Witneſſes to my Siſter's Reputation.

Mr Jones. My Lord, they would call Witneſſes to this Gentlewoman's Reputation; I believe the whole Town would atteſt for That, that ſhe was a Woman of a good Reputation: Indeed they have produced ſome Letters without a Name, but if they inſiſt upon any Thing againſt her Reputation, we muſt call our Witneſſes.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. I believe no Body diſputes That; ſhe might be a vertuous Woman, and her Brains might be turned by her Paſſion, or ſome Diſtemper.

Gentlemen of the Jury, You have heard a very long Evidence; I am ſure that you can't expect that I ſhould ſum it up fully; but I will take Notice of ſome Things to you, that I think are moſt material, and if I omit any Thing that is material, I would deſire Mr Jones (that is Council for the King) and Mr Cowper, to put me in Mind of it.

The Indictment againſt the Priſoners at the Bar, is for a very great Crime, it is for Murther, which is one of the moſt horrid of all Crimes: You are to conſider firſt, what Evidence you have heard to prove it; and though there be no direct Proof, you are to conſider what is Circumſtantial.

They do begin with Sarah Walker, who was Mrs Sarah Stout's Maid, and ſhe tells you, That Mr Cowper, when he came to this Town upon Monday the 13th of March laſt, came to Mrs Stout's Houſe and dined there, and went away about Four of the Clock in the Afternoon; but ſhe tells you, That the Friday before, there came a Letter from Mr Cowper's Wife to Mrs Stout, to let her know that Mr Cowper would come and lodge at their Houſe at Hertford, at the Aſſizes; ſo that when he came, ſhe thought that he had intended to have done according to that Letter. She ſaith, That after Dinner Mr Cowper went away, and came again at Nine at Night, and there he ſupped, he was deſired ſo to do, (and indeed had been invited to Dinner alſo that Day) and ſhe doth ſay, that after Supper there was a Fire made in his Chamber (for this young Gentlewoman, Mrs Stout, preſs'd him to lie at their Houſe) and ſhe ordered the Maid to warm his Bed, and I believe, ſays ſhe, Mr Cowper heard her ſay ſo, for he was nearer to her than I, at that Time; and he doth not deny but that he heard it: She ſays, that accordingly ſhe went up to warm the Bed, and having ſtay'd there a While, ſhe heard the Door clap; and when ſhe came down into the Parlour, where ſhe had left them, they were both gone, and that ſhe could not tell what the Meaning of it was, and they waited for her all Night, old Mrs Stout and this Maid, and ſhe did not come in all Night, nor was afterwards ſeen alive. But Mr Cowper was the laſt Perſon ſeen in her Company.

The other Witneſſes that came afterwards ſpeak concerning the finding of the Body in the River, and tell you in what Poſture it was: I ſhall not undertake to give you the Particulars of their Evidence, but they tell you, She lay on her right Side, the one Arm up even with the Surface of the Water, and her Body under the Water, but ſome of her Cloaths were above the Water; particularly, one ſays, the Ruffles of her left Arm were above the Water; you have heard alſo what the Doctors and Surgeons ſaid on the one Side and the Other, concerning the Swimming and Sinking of dead Bodies in the Water, but I can find no Certainty in it, and I leave it to your Conſideration.

Another Circumſtance they build on, and which ſeems to be material, is, of her Belly being lank, and that there was no Swelling; whereas, ſay they, when a Perſon is drowned, there is a great deal of Water goes in, and makes the Belly to ſwell, but here was no Swelling that Morning ſhe was taken out, and no Water come out of her Mouth and Noſtrils, only a little Froth there was, and her Belly was lank. But, ſay they, on the other Side, that may very well be; for, perhaps, ſhe might be choaked immediately, as ſoon as ſhe was in the Water, and, ſay they, you may not wonder at That, for if ſhe went to drown her ſelf, ſhe would endeavour to be choaked as ſoon as ſhe could, for thoſe Perſons that are drowned againſt their own Conſent, do ſwallow a great deal of Water; but thoſe that drown themſelves, don't ſwallow much Water, for they are choaked immediately by the Water going into the Windpipe, that we commonly call going the wrong Way. The Doctors and Surgeons have talk'd a great deal to this Purpoſe, and of the Water's going into the Lungs or the Thorax; but unleſs you have more Skill in Anatomy than I, you won't be much edified by it: I acknowledge I never ſtudied Anatomy, but I perceive that the Doctors do differ in their Notions about theſe Things; but as to Matter of Fact, it is agreed to by all the Witneſſes for the King, that her Body was lank, her Belly was thin, and there was no Sign of any Water to be in it. They on the other Side tell you, That her Stays was on, and ſhe was ſtrait-laced, and that might occaſion her Belly's being ſo ſmall, and hinder the Water from going in.

Gentlemen, I was very much puzzled in my Thoughts, and was at a Loſs to find out what Inducement there could be to draw in Mr Cowper, or theſe three other Gentlemen, to commit ſuch a horrid, barbarous Murder. And, on the other Hand, I could not imagine what there ſhould be, to induce this Gentlewoman, a Perſon of a plentiful Fortune, and a very ſober good Reputation, to deſtroy her ſelf.

Now, Gentlemen, I muſt confeſs, the Evidence that the Defendants have given by theſe Letters, if you believe them to be this Gentlewoman's Hand-writing, do ſeem to fortify all that Mr Cowper's Witneſſes have ſaid, concerning her being melancholy; it might be a Love-diſtraction, and ſhe might have been a vertuous Woman for all that, for it might be a Diſtemper which came upon her, and turned her Brains, and diſcompos'd her Mind, and then no Wonder at her Writing thus, in a Manner different from the Reſt of the Actions of her Life. Gentlemen, You are to conſider and weigh the Evidence, and I will not trouble you any more about that Matter.

As to theſe three other Gentlemen that came here to this Town, at the Time of the laſt Aſſizes, what there is againſt them you have heard: They talk'd at their Lodging at a ſtrange Rate, concerning this Mrs Sarah Stout, ſaying, Her Buſineſs is done, and that there was an End of her Courting-days, and that a Friend of theirs was even with her by this Time. What you can make of it, That I muſt leave to you, but they were very ſtrange Expreſſions; and you are to judge, Whether they were ſpoken in Jeſt, as they pretend, or in Earneſt. There was a Cord found in the Room, and a Bundle ſeen there, but I know not what to make of it. As to Mrs Stout, there was no Sign of any Circle about her Neck, which, as they ſay, muſt have been if ſhe had been ſtrangled. Some Spots there were, but it is ſaid, poſſibly thoſe might be occaſioned by rubbing againſt ſome Piles or Stakes in the River. Truly, Gentlemen, theſe three Men, by their talking, have given great Cauſe of Suſpicion; but whether They, or Mr Cowper, are guilty or no, That you are to determine. I am ſenſible I have omitted many Things, but I am a little faint, and cannot repeat any more of the Evidence.

Jury. We have taken Minutes, my Lord.

Mr Bar. Hatſell. Well then, Gentlemen, go together, and conſider your Evidence, and I pray God direct you in giving your Verdict.

[Then One was Sworn to keep the Jury, and, in about half an Hour, the Jury returned.]

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, are you all agreed in your Verdict?

Omnes. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Omnes. Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. Spencer Cowper, hold up thy Hand, (which he did) Look upon the Priſoner; How ſay you? Is he guilty of the Felony and Murther whereof he ſtands Indicted, or not guilty?

Foreman. Not guilty.

[In like Manner the Jury did give their Verdict, that John Marſon, Ellis Stevens, and William Rogers, were not guilty.]

The TRYAL of Mary Butler alias Strickland,

At Juſtice-Hall in the Old-Baily, in London, on the 12th Day of October, 1699.

Cl. of Arr. CRYER Mary Butler to the Bar.

Accordingly ſhe was brought.

Mary Butler alias Strickland, you ſtand Indicted by the Name of Mary Butler alias Strickland, late of London, Widow, for that you endeavouring, and maliciouſly intending, to deceive and oppreſs Sir Robert Clayton, Knight and Alderman of London, the firſt Day of December, in the Seventh Year of his now Majeſty's Reign, at London aforeſaid, in the Pariſh of St. Mary Woolnoth, in the Ward of Langborne, a certain falſe Writing, ſealed in Form of a Bond, bearing Date the fourteenth Day of April, 1687, in the Name of the ſaid Sir Robert Clayton, for the Payment of the penal Sum of Forty Thouſand Pounds, to be made by the ſaid Sir Robert Clayton to you Mary Butler alias Strickland, with Condition there underwritten; concerning, among other Things, the Payment of Twenty Thouſand Pounds, to be made to you Mary Butler alias Strickland, after the Death of the ſaid Sir Robert Clayton, by his Heirs, Executors and Adminiſtrators; falſely, knowingly, unlawfully, and ſubtilly did make, counterfeit and write, and cauſe to be made, counterfeited and written: And further, That you Mary Butler alias Strickland, afterwards, viz. the firſt Day of December, in the ſeventh Year aforeſaid, at London aforeſaid, in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, a certain falſe and forged Writing, ſealed in Form of a Bond, in the Name of the ſaid Sir Robert Clayton, for the Payment of the penal Sum of Forty Thouſand Pounds by the ſaid Sir Robert Clayton, to you Mary Butler alias Strickland, with Condition under-written, concerning, among other Things, the Payment of Twenty Thouſand Pounds, to be made to you Mary Butler alias Strickland, after the Death of the ſaid Sir Robert Clayton, by his Heirs, Executors, or Adminiſtrators, as a true Bond of the ſaid Sir Robert Clayton, as if really made by him; falſely, ſubtilly, and deceitfully, did publiſh, you Mary Butler alias Strickland, well knowing the ſaid Writing to be falſe, forged, and counterfeited, and not the Deed of the ſaid Sir Robert Clayton, to the great Damage of the ſaid Sir Robert Clayton, to the evil Example of all others in the like Caſe, offending againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

Cl. of Arr. How ſay'ſt thou, Mary Butler alias Strickland, art thou guilty of this Forgery whereof thou ſtands Indicted, or not guilty?

Priſoner. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Priſoner, look to your Challenges. Cryer, ſwear the Jury, which follow.

JURY Sworn.

William Clark,	George Ludlam,

Cl. of

Cl. of Arr. You of the Jury that are ſworn, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to her Cauſe. She ſtands indicted, &c.

Mr Mountague. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, this Indictment does charge the Priſoner at the Bar, Mary Butler, alias Strickland, with a Fraud and intended Cheat. It ſets forth, That the Priſoner at the Bar, intending to cheat Sir Robert Clayton, did counterfeit a certain Writing, purporting to be the Bond of Sir Robert Clayton for Payment of Twenty Thouſand Pounds, and that it was to be paid to the ſaid Mary Butler, alias Strickland, after the Death of the ſaid Sir Robert Clayton. Likewiſe, that ſhe did publiſh this Writing as Sir Robert Clayton's Deed. To this Indictment ſhe has pleaded not guilty. If we prove the Fact, I do not queſtion but you will find her guilty, that ſhe may have her due Puniſhment.

Mr Serj. Wright. My Lord, I am of Council for the King in this Cauſe. You hear what ſort of Crime it is that is charged on the Priſoner. It is for Forging a Bond of no leſs Penalty than Forty Thouſand Pounds, for the Payment of Twenty Thouſand Pounds. This is made in the Name of Sir Robert Clayton, and the twenty Thouſand Pounds were to be paid a little after his own Death, by his Executors or Adminiſtrators: And that in the mean time twelve Hundred Pounds a Year were to be paid for the Intereſt of this Sum. But my Lord, the Priſoner did not reſt here; (a Second Contrivance will be opened to you.) That which ſhe is now charged with, is the forging of a Bond of the Penalty of Forty Thouſand Pound.

My Lord, the Priſoner for ſome Years had a great Intimacy with a great Peer, the late Duke of Buckingham. And ſhe either had, or pretended to have, a Bond from him for Five Thouſand Pounds, payable to her ſelf after his Death, and an Annual Intereſt in the mean time, till the Principal was paid. Sir Robert Clayton being a Truſtee of the Duke's Eſtate for the Payment of his Debts, the Priſoner came frequently to Sir Robert Clayton, to ſollicite his Favour and Intereſt for the Payment of this Debt. On this Account ſhe inſinuated her ſelf into his Company and into his Family. Sometimes ſhe pretended to be a great Penitent, and that ſhe was ſorry for the Converſation ſhe had with the Duke, that her own Relations were Papiſts, and if ſhe ſhould go to them, they would ſend her into a Nunnery. All which was but Counterfeit; and in order to win upon Sir Robert Clayton, and he finding ſhe was an ill Woman, notwithſtanding all her Pretences, he at laſt, about twelve Years ago, forbid her his Houſe, and ſince that ſhe never was there.

About the Year 1695. Sir Robert Clayton had ſome private Intimation given him, that the Priſoner had a great Demand on him, no leſs than Twenty Thouſand Pounds. Upon this Sir Robert Clayton took the beſt Courſe he could to find it out, and exhibited a Bill in Chancery againſt her, and ſome of her Accomplices, to diſcover whether they had any Pretences upon him or his Eſtate. To this Bill the Priſoner put in an Anſwer, that ſhe had no Claim or Demand againſt him upon any Account whatſoever. While this was in agitation, the Priſoner came to Mr Woodward, an Attorney of this City, and brought him a Writing, purporting a Bond, with the Name Robert Clayton ſubſcribed to it, ſealed and atteſted by four Witneſſes, as the Bond of Sir Robert Clayton; and told Mr Woodward, "That Bond was "given to her by Sir Robert Clayton, upon ſome "good Conſiderations; but it having taken Air, "ſome Uneaſineſs had ariſen about it in Sir Robert "Clayton's Family; and (as ſhe pretended) upon "this Account he had exhibited a Bill in Equi- "ty againſt her, therefore this Bond muſt be de- "livered up; and Sir Robert had promiſed to "give her a new Bond for Twenty Thouſand "Pounds, and that all the Money in Arrears for "Intereſt, was to be turned to Principal, and "put into the new Bond. But this was to be done "very privately, ſo as not to be known by any "of Sir Robert Clayton's Family, and therefore "none of his Servants were to be privy to it." Thereupon ſhe gives to Mr Woodward the Bond, deſiring him to make a new Bond by it, and to turn all the Intereſt that was due into Principal. Upon this Mr Woodward made her a Bond of the Penalty of Fifty Four Thouſand Pounds Conditioned, for Payment of Twenty Seven Thouſand Pounds after Sir Robert Clayton's Death, and Intereſt in the mean time. This Bond ſhe took away with her, and likewiſe the firſt Bond; but what ſhe did with them ſince we are not privy to. And a great Charge ſhe laid upon Mr Woodward, to carry it with all poſſible Privacy, that no notice might be taken in Sir Robert's Family.

Some few Months ago there was another Intimation ſent to Sir Robert Clayton, that this Gentlewoman pretended to have a great Claim upon him of a great Sum of Money that was to be paid her, either at preſent, or after his Death; and that Mr Woodward made the Bond, and he could give an Account of it. Upon this Sir Robert Clayton ſent to Mr Woodward, who like a very honeſt Man, told the whole Buſineſs, in what manner it was the Priſoner came to him, and how he came to make the Bond; and that he was deſired to be ſilent in it, Sir Robert Clayton having deſired this Bond ſhould be made out of his own Houſe, that none of his Family might take notice of it.

Sir Robert Clayton having this notice, and finding from Mr Woodward, the Priſoner had taken this Courſe to carry on this Deſign to charge his Eſtate, he got a Warrant from the Lord Chief Juſtice to have her before him, to be examined before his Lordſhip. Where being brought, ſhe upon her Examination, has confeſs'd the whole Matter, her having the firſt Bond, and where it was made. What is become of the latter Bond, we cannot get out of her, nor whether ſhe ever affixed the Name of Sir Robert Clayton to that. But we will produce credible Witneſſes to prove her guilty of Forging the firſt Bond for the Payment of Twenty Thouſand Pounds; and that it had the Name and Seal of Sir Robert Clayton affix'd to it, and that ſhe affirmed it to be a good Bond, well executed by Sir Robert Clayton, and that there was Intereſt due upon it from Sir Robert Clayton, and that the Intereſt was in the Second Bond to be turned into Principal. We will call Witneſſes to prove this, and then I hope ſhe ſhall have ſuch Puniſhment as ſhe deſerves.

Mr Northey. My Lord, What the Nature of our Evidence will be, I ſhall inform you. It cannot be expected from us to produce the Bond, for that ſhe carried away from Mr Woodward, ſo that we cannot give the Writing it ſelf in Evidence; but if ſhe inſiſt on it, we hope ſhe will produce the Bond. We have the Copy (taken by Mr Woodward) of the firſt Bond, which he had from her, that he might draw the Second Bond by it. But we can prove

prove from that which agrees with our Record, that ſhe affirmed, that the firſt Bond that ſhe produced was Sir Robert Clayton's; That that Bond which ſhe produced, of which this is the Copy, ſhe affirmed to be Sir Robert Clayton's Deed. We ſhall do that, and afterwards prove her publiſhing it: For our Indictment is againſt her for Forging a Bond, and publiſhing that forged Bond, knowing it to be ſuch; and cloſe all with her own Confeſſion. And, my Lord, there is this to ſhow there could be nothing in the Bond, that from the Time ſhe pretended to have this Bond, when ſhe was to have Twelve Hundred Pounds a Year, ſhe remained a Priſoner all that time, and got her ſelf out by ſwearing ſhe was not worth Five Pounds in all the World. Call Mr Woodward, (who appeared and was ſworn.)

Mr Serj. Wright. Mr Woodward, you hear what the Charge is, pray give an Account of what you know in reference to it.

Mr Woodward. My Lord, Mrs Butler has been my Client many Years. About two or three Years ago, more or leſs, Mrs Butler came to me, and brought me a Bond; ſhe gave it me to peruſe, and told me another muſt be drawn by it. When I had peruſed the Bond, I found it was ſigned Robert Clayton, and four Witneſſes Names ſet to the Bond. It was a Bond of the Penalty, as I remember, of Forty Thouſand Pounds, and I think it was in the Year 1687, for to pay, I think, Twelve Hundred Pounds a Year, by four quarterly Payments Yearly, during Sir Robert Clayton's Life. And twenty Thouſand Pounds within ſix Months after his Death. There were ſome other Things in that Bond, which will appear by the Copy, which indeed I did take: For Mrs Butler deſired it might be a Secret, being of a very great Concern. And I asked her why ſuch a Bond ſhould be given, I thought it muſt be great Generoſity, and not for Money lent. But ſhe told me the Forty Thouſand Pound Bond was to be delivered up to Sir Robert. I asked her why, ſince ſhe had it, ſhe did not keep it; ſhe ſaid, that he would give her another Bond. She told me it had taken Air, and my Lady Clayton had ſome Diſquiet about it; and for my Lady's Satisfaction, a Bill in Chancery was exhibited againſt her, to which ſhe was to put in her Anſwer, and thereby diſclaim any ſort of Bond, or Intereſt, or any Pretence that ſhe had upon Sir Robert Clayton.

Mr Serj. Wright. She told you this her ſelf?

Mr Woodward. Yes, and when ſhe gave me the Bond, ſhe told me it was Sir Robert Clayton's Bond, or to that Purpoſe. But there being about nine or ten Years Arrears of Intereſt, ſhe deſired me to caſt up the Intereſt that was in Arrear, and that it might be put to the Principal in the new Bond; ſaying, That Sir Robert would give her a Bond for the whole together.

Serj. Wright. Was the whole Intereſt pretended to be in Arrear?

Mr Woodward. I cannot ſay all the Intereſt.

Mr Serjeant Wright. How did you compute it, from the Date of the Bond, or from what ſhe told you?

Mr Woodward. She ſaid ſhe had received ſome Money, and I computed the reſt, rather under than over, and ſo made the Intereſt to come to Seven Thouſand Pounds, (the Intereſt payable by the Bond, being twelve Hundred Pounds a Year.) Whereupon ſhe deſired I would draw a Bond for it my ſelf; and accordingly ſhe left the firſt Bond with me. I took ſome time, and drew it; and made the Penalty thereof Fifty Four Thouſand Pounds, conditioned for the Payment of Twenty Seven Thouſand Pounds. And it was to be made in the ſame Nature as the former was, in reſpect of the Principal, and in the mean time to continue the Payment of the Intereſt Yearly, by proportionable Quarterly Payments.

Mr Mountague. What Diſcourſe had you with her about it?

Mr Woodward. I did draw a Bond, and did take notice, That whereas Sir Robert Clayton had given her this Bond of Forty Thouſand Pounds, and at his Requeſt, ſhe had delivered it up to him; and upon an Account ſtated, there did remain Seven Thouſand Pounds in Arrears for Intereſt, which in all, amounted to Seven and Twenty Thouſand Pounds, or thereabouts; when I gave it her, I ſaid, It is a very great Sum, it concerns you to have Witneſſes of Credit, for no Body will believe Sir Robert Clayton did give you this Bond, eſpecially after his Death, unleſs it be very well atteſted. I told her, if ſhe pleaſed, I would go and be a Witneſs for her to ſee it executed. So ſhe went away. And when ſhe came to me again, ſhe told me, that Sir Robert knew me very well, but did not think fit to have me for a Witneſs. I anſwered, I do not care; but it being a very great Sum, take care it be well executed. I gave her both the Bonds, and from that time heard no more of it till about two Months ſince.

Mr Northey. Was there any Body came to diſcourſe with you of making a new Bond, beſides her ſelf?

Mr Woodward. Not that I know of, I do not remember any. It was an extraordinary Sum, I did take a Copy of the Bond.

Mr Northey. Have you it here?

Mr Woodward. Yes, I have it here.

Mr Northey. He ſwears he took a Copy of it, and delivered it to the Priſoner again. We deſire it may be read.

Mr Mallet. Is it a true Copy?

Mr Woodward. I cannot ſay I examined it.

Mr Northey. Did you write it from the Bond?

Mr Woodward. I did.

Mr Northey. Do you believe it is a true Copy?

Mr Woodward. I believe it is. The Reaſon why I did not examine it, was becauſe it was to be a Secret.

Mr Mallet. Do you look upon your ſelf to be infallible?

Mr Serj. Wright. Had you any Direction from the Priſoner to take a Copy?

Mr Woodward. I cannot ſay that.

L. C. J. Holt. Why did you write it out, for your Direction to draw the new Bond?

Mr Woodward. I did write it out, becauſe it is a ſpecial Condition, more than is uſual in Bonds: For it is expreſſed, that there ſhould be no Proſecution againſt her by Sir Robert Clayton, or his Executors, either at Law, or in Equity, for the 20000 l. or the Intereſt, or to do any Act to obſtruct her in receiving the ſame.

L. C. J. Holt. When did you take a Copy of it?

Mr Woodward. At the ſame time, and before I returned it.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you make the New Bond by this Copy, or by the former Bond?

Mr Woodward. Very likely I might uſe both.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you keep them both?

Mr Woodward. I did keep them both by me till I delivered the new Bond.

Mr

Mr Serj. Wright. Is the Copy your own Hand writing?

Mr Woodward. Yes.

Mr Mountague. What did you take it from?

Mr Woodward. From the Original.

Mr Wright. And do you take that to be a true Copy?

Mr Woodward. I believe it is a true Copy.

Mr Hall. Did you read it over at that time?

Mr Woodward. I did read it over.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you write it?

Mr Woodward. I did write it.

Mr Mallet. And did you examine it afterward?

Mr Woodward. No, I did not examine it, it was not to be taken notice of.

Mr Hall. Can you say you read it carefully over at that time?

Mr Cutts. It may not be the very same Bond, if he did not examine it by the Original, signed by Sir Robert Clayton.

Mr Northey. They may show that Bond.

Mr Mallet. Did the Prisoner bring the Bond to you, of which this is the Copy, and tell you this was her Bond?

Mr Northey. We will prove it by her own Confession.

Mr Mallet. If it be not the same Bond, she cannot be convicted.

Mr Northey. No doubt of it.

Mr Serj. Wright. Produce the Copy; and if your Lordship please, it may be read.

L. C. J. Holt. Let it be read.

Robt. Clayton.

Sealed and delivered in the Presence of us,

J. Pennington,
Edw. Spencer,
John Hebden,
Eliz. Rivers.

Mr Serj. Wright. Did the Prisoner bring you the Bond, of which this is a Copy, as a true Bond?

Mr Woodward, Yes, my Lord.

Mr Serj. Wright. I ask you this, had you a Charge from her to keep this Matter secret?

Mr Woodward. Yes; and that I would write the Bond with my own Hand.

Mr Serj. Wright. She giving you this Charge, how came this Matter to be known then?

Mr Woodward. Mr Nicholas Baker came to me from Sir Robert Clayton, and asked me if I did not know the Prisoner, and particularly about a Bond, and whether I did not make one for her. It was not in my Memory at first, till further Discourse occasioned me to remember it, and I told him that I did do some Business for her. He told me Sir Robert Clayton had some Information given him, that there was such a Bond drawn by me. Then I told him, I did remember there was such a Bond brought to me, and that I had made a Bond for Mrs Butler, and had taken a Copy of the first Bond, which I had by me; and also of the second Bond, in which I had left out a material Word in the Obligation, and was fain to write it over again, and had the first Draught by me till about a Month before that time, when meeting with it among my Papers, I threw it into the Fire in my Closet, but this Copy did remain by me.

Mr Hall. You say this Copy is all your own Hand-writing?

Mr Woodward. Yes it is.

Mr Hall. Was it Sealed, or Cancell'd?

Mr Woodward. No, it was sealed, I am very positive.

Mr

Mr Hall. Are you positive the Seal was on it at that Time?

Mr Woodward. Yes, Sir.

Mr Mallet. Did she tell you that Bond was to be Cancell'd?

Mr Woodward. She told me she was to deliver up that Bond to Sir Robert Clayton, and that he would give her another instead of it.

Mr Mallet. Was the Bond then delivered up, or no?

Mr Woodward. I cannot say she did.

Mr Cutts. Did you never hear of any Bill in Chancery? To what end was this Bond delivered to you, for what Reason?

Mr Woodward. I asked her why the Bond was to be delivered up, and she told me there was some Uneasiness, in the Family, and my Lady Clayton had got the Air of it; and therefore to satisfie her, there was a Bill preferr'd against her in Chancery, and she was to put in her Answer; and that he would give her another Bond, and that was to be delivered up.

Mr Northey. We have other Witnesses to prove the Forging of it. Call Mr Baker, (who appeared and was Sworn.)

Mr Serj. Wright. Mr Baker, were you present when the Prisoner Mrs Butler was before my Lord Chief Justice concerning this Bond? Look on that Copy.

Mr Baker. I was present at my Lord Chief Justice's Chamber, when the Prisoner was brought before his Lordship; and she did there acknowledge that the Bond of which she was accused she had ordered to be made.

Mr Serj. Wright. Was that the Bond in Question?

Mr Baker. Yes, she did confess she caused Sir Robert Clayton's Name to be set to it, and the Witnesses Names, and that it was done by one Mr Lewkar, a Scrivener, in Bishopsgate-street.

Mr Serj. Wright. She said so.

Mr Baker. Yes, Sir.

Mr Hall. Did she confess it? Where was it?

Mr Baker. At my Lord Chief Justice's Chamber, she confest it was her own Act, she caused it to be made, and directed the Scrivener to set Sir Robert Clayton's Name, and the Witnesses Names to it.

Mr Mallet. Was there not at that Time a Discourse of a Bond that she had on the late Duke of Buckingham?

Mr Baker. I cannot be positive in that; but this was the Fact she was charged with, and she did confess that she caused it to be done, and that the Persons as Witnesses were innocent of it, and that she did direct Mr Lewkar to set Sir Robert Clayton's Name to it.

Mr Hall. How do you know this is the very same Bond?

Mr Baker. Mr Woodward showed me this very Bond, when I went to him from Sir Robert Clayton, to know whether he was acquainted with the Prisoner; who after some Discourse with him relating to this Bond, he very frankly and ingenuously told me the whole Matter of Fact, as he has done here.

Mr Mallet. But we ask you about her Confession, did you shew her that Copy? Did she confess that?

L. C. J. Holt. What was the Discourse of, at that Time?

Mr Baker. It was about the Bond of forty thousand Pounds, with which she was charged before your Lordship, to have counterfeited.

Mr Northey. Did he give an Account then of this Bond?

Mr Baker. Yes, Mr Woodward produced this Copy before my Lord Chief Justice, and she owned she had ordered Mr Lewkar to make it, and to put Sir Robert Clayton's Name to it.

Mr Serj. Wright. Now, my Lord, we will show you that she is going on still, and that very lately she has owned it, and that she is going about to make the Bond of fifty thousand Pounds a very good Bond.

Mr Mallet. When it is in Question, you may then invalidate it.

Mr Serj. Wright. Mr Woodward has told you he did make the Bond of fifty four thousand Pounds. But I think we have no need of it.

Mr Hall. They have failed in the Indictment, so that it cannot be supported by this Bond; it should be laid specially, according to the Condition of the Bond to be paid: For it is a Bond of forty thousand Pounds, to be paid by his Heirs after his Death twenty thousand Pounds. Now the Bond, whereof they produce a Copy, is of other Things.

Mr Northey. It is for the same.

Mr Hall. It is a different Thing.

L. C. J. Holt. Not at all.

Mr Mallet. It is laid in the Indictment to be paid by Sir Robert Clayton. In the Bond it is said it is not to be paid till after his Death.

Mr Serj. Wright. It is laid in the Indictment, that the Bond was of the Penalty of forty thousand Pounds to be paid by Sir Robert Clayton, with Condition thereto underwritten concerning, among other Things, the Payment of twenty thousand Pounds to the Prisoner, after the Death of Sir Robert Clayton, by his Executors.

L. C. J. Holt. Let your Exceptions proceed from the Indictment, it is to be paid after the Death of Sir Robert, by his Executors.

Mr Serj. Wright. Have you any more to say for your selves?

Mr Hall. We have a great many Witnesses here to prove her Reputation. It is a strange Thing any one should go to forge a Bond on such an eminent Person.

L. C. J. Holt. It is strange indeed, but the Question is, whether it be not true.

Mr Hall. Her Confession is proved by Mr Baker. But we have many Witnesses as to her Reputation.

Mr Mallet. This Bond is not in the Indictment. The Bond of forty thousand Pounds is several Years since. Now there are two Bonds. Now that of fifty four thousand Pounds is not in this Indictment, and this of forty thousand Pounds is several Years since that it was shown to him. It is strange he should be so very exact, and yet did not examine it. And probably he might mistake in the Copy, and it may not be the very Bond in the Indictment. Now as to Mr Baker, it is true, we have a Bond of five thousand Pounds from the Duke of Buckingham, and we are sueing Sir Robert Clayton for this Money, and hope to have it, now after so many Years. And Sir Robert Clayton did prefer a Bill in Chancery against us, and we in Answer did disclaim having any such Bond. And now when we are like to have a Decree for this Sum against this Trustee of the Duke of Buckingham's Estate, he comes and would take off our Credit in this Matter. We did in the Year 1695. disclaim any such Bond.

Mr Northey. Then you do admit that she owned the Bond.

Then her Witnesses were called.

Mr

Mr Mallet. Mr Glover, do you know Mrs Butler?

Mr Glover. Yes.

Mr Mallet. Give an Account of what you know, as to her Reputation.

Glover. I have known her fifteen or ſixteen Years. All that I know of her is fair and clear.

L. C. J. Holt. Where do you live?

Glover. In Red-Lyon-ſtreet.

L. C. J. Holt. What Profeſſion are you of?

Glover. I belonged to Lincolns-Inn.

L. C. J. Holt. A Gentleman of Lincolns-Inn.

Glover. I was brought up at the Univerſity, but have not reſided there lately.

L. C. J. Holt. How do you live? Are you a Houſe-keeper?

Glover. I live privately at preſent.

L. C. J. Holt. Who knows you?

Glover. I cannot tell who knows me here. I believe Mr Northey does.

Mr Northey. I do not intend to give any Character of you, I do not uſe to give Characters of my Clients.

L. C. J. Holt. How long have you lived in Red-Lyon-ſtreet?

Glover. Ten or Eleven Years.

Mr Mallet. How did ſhe live?

Glover. I knew her live in Devonſhire-Square very reputably, I always thought ſo.

Mr Serj. Wright. Had ſhe any Eſtate of her own?

Glover. I cannot ſay ſo certainly, it was thought ſo. She paid every Body very punctually.

Mr Hall. Acquaint my Lord how long you have known her, and whether you think ſhe would be guilty of ſuch a Forgery.

Glover. I have known her fourteen or fifteen Years, I cannot believe ſhe would.

Mr Mountague. Have you heard the Evidence?

Glover. Yes.

Mr Mountague. What do you think of it then?

Glover. I know not what to think.

Mr Mountague. Do you think ſhe would confeſs her ſelf guilty of a Forgery, if ſhe were not?

Glover. I cannot tell what to ſay to that. I ſuppoſe no Body would confeſs, if they were not guilty.

Mr Serj. Wright. Do you know one Hebdon?

Glover. I know Hebdon.

Mr Serj. Wright. He is a Witneſs to the Bond. Was he Sir John Hebdon's Son?

Glover. I can give no Account of that, but he has had a very honourable Character.

Mrs Rodum called, and appeared.

Mr Hall. Mrs Rodum, do you know Mrs Butler?

Rodum. Yes.

Mr Hall. How long have you known her?

Rodum. Five or Six Years.

Mr Hall. What do you know of her Character?

Rodum. I am the Widow of one of them that kill'd one another by the Temple. I never knew of any Bond, nor ever heard her lay claim to any ſuch Bond. She lived in good Reputation. She was in my Houſe when my Husband was killed. She lived in my Houſe about a Year, I never heard ſhe made any ſuch Pretenſion. She lived honeſtly and decently. She owes me upwards of three hundred Pounds.

L. C. J. Holt. For what? How came ſhe to owe you three hundred Pounds?

Rodum. I kept a Shop in the Exchange, and my Husband was a Broker. She owed it me partly for Goods out of my Shop, and partly for Goods out of Scotland. He was killed about half a Year agoe, and I have kept the Shop ſtill. About three or four Months agoe ſhe left me, and I never heard of any Bond.

Mr Serj. Wright. Did you never hear of a Bill in Chancery againſt her?

Rodum. No Sir.

Mr Mallet. Did you hear of any Money that was due to her from the Duke of Buckingham?

Rodum. I was told ſhe was ſueing Sir Robert Clayton for Money that was to be paid her on the Duke of Buckingham's Account, and upon the Credit of that I truſted her.

Shaw called.

Mr Hall. How long have you known Mrs Butler?

Shaw. About ſixteen Years.

Mr Hall. Do you think ſhe would Forge a Bond?

Shaw. Indeed I cannot give any Account of that.

Mr Hall. How has ſhe behaved her ſelf?

Shaw. I never knew her guilty of any Rudeneſs.

Mr Serj. Wright. Put up more Witneſſes, if you have any.

Mr Hall. We have done.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs Butler, will you ſay any Thing for your ſelf?

Mrs Butler. I am altogether Innocent in the Matter, I never wrong'd Sir Robert Clayton, nor any Body elſe, in my Life.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen of the Jury, This Mrs Butler, alias Strickland, ſtands indicted for forging a Bond in the Name of Sir Robert Clayton, in the Penalty of forty thouſand Pounds, the Condition for the Payment of twenty thouſand Pounds, among other Things, within ſix Months after the Death of Sir Robert Clayton. And alſo, That ſhe did publiſh this Bond as the true Bond of Sir Robert Clayton. You have heard what Evidence has been given, to prove her guilty of this Forgery, and the Publication of it.

It ſeems, ſome Time ſince, as is proved to you by Mr Woodward, this Gentlewoman came to him with this Bond of forty thouſand Pounds. And it was upon this Account, as ſhe ſaid: To wit, Sir Robert Clayton having given her this Bond, it had taken Air, and was come to the Lady Clayton's Ear; which occaſioned ſome Difference between Sir Robert Clayton and his Lady. She ſaid, That this Bond, by Direction from Sir Robert, was to be delivered up to him to be Cancell'd; and that Sir Robert Clayton had engaged to enter into a new Bond in the Penalty of fifty four thouſand Pounds, for the Payment of twenty ſix thouſand Pounds (there being at that Time ſuppoſed an Arrear of Intereſt for twenty thouſand Pounds.) payable after Sir Robert's Death, and Intereſt in the mean Time. She delivered this Bond to Mr Woodward. He takes a Copy of it, which is produced and read. And ſo, according to her Direction, Mr Woodward does draw another Bond, with the Penalty of fifty four thouſand Pounds. And ſhe then told Mr Woodward Sir Robert would ſeal this Bond upon the Delivery up of the Bond of forty thouſand Pounds. Mr Woodward having conſidered, that it was an extraordinary Sum for Sir Robert to engage himſelf in, and he being a very conſiderable Man, he adviſed her to have this new Bond well atteſted; and to be ſure to get Witneſſes of unqueſtionable Credit to ſee it executed. And thereupon he offered himſelf to go with her to Sir Robert, to be a Witneſs to this new Bond. No, ſays ſhe, Sir Robert is not willing that this ſhould be known, you are not a proper Perſon to be a Witneſs to it; therefore, ſays ſhe, I will get ſome other Witneſſes to atteſt it. Whereupon he gives her this firſt Bond for forty thouſand Pounds, which ſhe brought to him, for the Payment of twenty thouſand Pounds, and gave her alſo the Draught of the new Bond. He ſays, this Bond that ſhe brought to him, was atteſted by four Witneſſes. Sir Robert, it ſeems, upon her Anſwer in Chancery, not imagining any Thing of this, ſhe having diſclaimed in Chancery the having of any; ſome Time after he had heard a Report as if ſhe was ſetting up of a new Bond, and that Mr Woodward could give an Account of it. Wherefore he ſends Mr Baker to Mr Woodward, who gave him the ſame Account that he has done here. Then Sir Robert makes a Complaint, and has her brought before me; and there was Mr Woodward with this Copy. And this was objected to her, as if ſhe had forged this Bond. And it ſeems, when ſhe was there under Examination, as is proved to you by Mr Baker, ſhe did plainly confeſs, that ſhe had forged this Bond of forty thouſand Pounds, and that ſhe had procured one Lewkar to do it for her, who ſet Sir Robert's Name to it: and ſaid, that the Witneſſes, whoſe Names were ſet to it, were innocent, and knew nothing of the Matter.

Now what is ſaid for her on the other Side? They bring ſome Perſons for her, that ſay they have known her. One, that ſays he belonged to Lincolns-Inn, and had been acquainted with her fourteen or fifteen Years, and did look upon her as a civil Woman; and for his Part, he does not believe ſhe would be guilty of ſuch a Forgery. Another, who is a Woman, ſays ſhe has known her ſome Time, and ſhe ſays, ſhe has truſted her much, and did never hear her ſay any Thing of this Bond, but ſhe behaved her ſelf civilly, and ſhe took her to be a very ſober Perſon. Another Witneſs ſays, ſhe look'd on her to be a very honeſt Perſon. This is the Sum of the Evidence.

There is a very ſtrong Evidence to induce you to believe that ſhe did forge the Bond. Such a Bond ſhe had, that is plain. She does give no Account what is become of it; and ſhe does not ſhow any manner of Pretence of having ſo much Money from Sir Robert Clayton due to her, ſhe does not make it appear why Sir Robert ſhould give her a Bond upon any Account. Now for any to ſay that they knew her, and they do not believe ſhe would forge a Bond, that is no Evidence; no Body ought to believe Ill of Mrs Butler, or any one elſe, unleſs it be made to appear. But the Queſtion is not, what they do believe; but whether the Matter be not proved to you to your Satisfaction, that ſhe has forged this Bond. And if you are ſatisfied that ſhe did forge it, you ought to find her guilty; and if you do not believe the Evidence to be ſatisfactory, you ought to acquit her.

Then the Jury withdrew, and being returned, gave their Verdict as follows.

Cl. of Arr. Are you agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. Bring Mary Butler to the Bar. How ſay ye? Is the Priſoner at the Bar guilty of the Forgery whereof ſhe ſtands Indicted, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

The Judgment which the Court pronounced againſt her was, That ſhe ſhould pay a Fine of five hundred Pounds to the King, and continue in Priſon till ſhe paid it.

The King's Majeſty commands all Juſtices of the High Court of Admiralty, that have any Authority to take any Inquiſitions, Recognizances, Examinations, or Informations of Offences committed within the Juriſdiction of the Admiralty of England, to deliver the Records of the ſame into this Court, &c. And all others are commanded to keep Silence upon Pain of Impriſonment.

Then Dr Oxenden gave the Charge to the Grand Jury, explaining the Nature of the Commiſſion, and the Crimes inquirable by vertue of it by the Grand Jury.

Then the Grand Jury withdrew, and after ſome time returned into Court, and found the Bill of Indictment againſt Captain Kidd for Murther, and another againſt him and Nicholas Churchhill, James Howe, Robert Lamley, William Jenkins, Gabriel Loff, Hugh Parrot, Richard Barlicorn, Abel Owens, and Darby Mullins, for Piracy. Then Proclamation (as uſual) being made, the foreſaid Priſoners were brought to the Bar, and Arraigned.

Cl. of Arr. William Kidd, hold up thy Hand.

Kidd. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, I deſire you to permit me to have Council.

Mr Recorder. What would you have Council for?

Kidd. My Lord, I have ſome Matter of Law relating to the Indictment, and I deſire I may have Council to ſpeak to it.

Dr Oxenden. What Matter of Law can you have?

Cl. of Arr. How does he know what it is he is charged with? I have not told him.

Mr Recorder. You muſt let the Court know what thoſe Matters of Law are, before you can have Council aſſigned you.

Kidd. They be Matters of Law, my Lord.

Mr Recorder. Mr Kidd, do you know what you mean by Matters of Law?

Kidd. I know what I mean, I deſire to put off my Tryal as long as I can, till I can get my Evidence ready.

Mr Recorder. Mr Kidd, You had beſt mention the Matter of Law you would inſiſt on.

Dr Oxenden. It cannot be Matter of Law to put off your Tryal, but Matter of Fact.

Kidd. I deſire your Lordſhip's Favour, I deſire Dr Oldiſh and Mr Lemmon may be heard as to my Caſe.

Cl. of Arr. What can he have Council for before he has pleaded?

Mr Recorder. Mr Kidd, The Court tells you, you ſhall be heard what you have to ſay when you have pleaded to your Indictment. If you plead to it, if you will, you may aſſign Matter of Law, if you have any; but then you muſt let the Court know what you would inſiſt on.

Kidd. I beg your Lordſhip's Patience till I can procure my Papers, I had a Couple of French Paſſes, which I muſt make uſe of in order to my Juſtification.

Mr Recorder. That is not Matter of Law. You have had long Notice of your Tryal, and might have prepared for it. How long have you had Notice of your Tryal?

Kidd. A matter of a Fortnight.

Dr Oxenden. Can you tell the Names of any Perſons that you would make uſe of in your Defence?

Kidd. I ſent for them, but I could not have them.

Dr Oxenden. Where were they then?

Kidd. I brought them to my Lord Bellamont in New-England.

Mr Recorder. What were their Names? You cannot tell without Book. Mr Kidd, the Court ſees no Reaſon to put off your Tryal, therefore you muſt plead.

Cl. of Arr. W. Kidd, hold up thy Hand.

Kidd. I beg your Lordſhips I may have Council admitted, and that my Tryal may be put off, I am not really prepared for it.

Mr Recorder. Nor never will if you could help it.

Dr Oxenden. Mr Kidd, You have had reaſonable Notice, and you knew you muſt be tried, and therefore you cannot plead you are not ready.

Kidd. If your Lordſhip permit thoſe Papers to be read, they will juſtifie me. I deſire my Council may be heard.

Mr Coniers. We admit of no Council for him.

Mr Recorder. There is no Iſſue joined, and therefore there can be no Council aſſigned. Mr Kidd, you muſt plead.

Kidd. I cannot plead till I have thoſe Papers that I inſiſted upon.

Mr Lemmon. He ought to have his Papers delivered to him, becauſe they are very material for his Defence. He has endeavoured to have them, but could not get them.

Mr Coniers. You are not to appear for any one till he pleads, and that the Court aſſigns you for his Council.

Mr Recorder. They would only put off the Tryal.

Mr Coniers. He muſt plead to the Indictment.

Cl. of Arr. Make Silence.

Kidd. My Papers were all ſeized, and I cannot make my Defence without them. I deſire my Tryal may be put off till I can have them.

Mr Recorder. The Court is of Opinion, they ought not to ſtay for all your Evidence, it may be they may never come. You muſt plead, and then if you can ſatisfie the Court, that there is Reaſon to put off your Tryal, you may.

Kidd. My Lord, I have Buſineſs in Law, and I deſire Council.

Mr Recorder. Mr Kidd, The Courſe of Courts is, when you have pleaded, the Matter of Tryal is next; if you can then ſhow there is Cauſe to put off the Tryal, you may; but now the Matter is to plead.

Kidd. It is a hard Caſe, when all theſe Things ſhall be kept from me, and I be forced to plead.

Mr Recorder. If he will not plead there muſt be Judgment.

Kidd. My Lord, would you have me plead, and not have my Vindication by me?

Cl. of Arr. Will you plead to the Indictment?

Kidd. I would beg that I may have my Papers for my Vindication.

Cl. of Arr. Nicholas Churchill, hold up thy Hand.

Churchill. My Lord, I deſire I may have the Benefit of the Proclamation, I came in upon the King's Proclamation.

Mr Recorder. If you do not plead, the Court muſt paſs Judgment upon you. You can have no Benefit in what you ſay, till you have pleaded. If you were Indicted for Felony, and you will not plead, the Law takes it in Nature of a Confeſſion, and Judgment muſt paſs, as if you were proved guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Nich. Churchill, hold up thy Hand. James How, hold up thy Hand. Robert Lamley, hold up thy Hand. (which they did.)

Mr Recorder. W. Kidd has not held up his Hand.

Cl. of Arr. He does hold up his Hand. William Jenkins, hold up thy Hand. Gabriel Loff, hold up thy Hand. Hugh Parrot, hold up thy Hand. Richard Barlicorn, hold up thy Hand. Abel Owens, hold up thy Hand.

Owens. I came in upon the King's Proclamation, and entered my ſelf into the King's Service.

Mr Recorder. You muſt plead firſt, and then, if there be Occaſion, you will have the Benefit of it. (Then he held up his Hand.)

Cl. of Arr. Darby Mullins, hold up thy Hand.

Mullins. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, I came in voluntarily on the King's Proclamation.

Mr Recorder. This is the ſame Caſe with Owens, you muſt ſpeak to that afterwards.

Cl. of Arr. W. Kidd, You ſtand Indicted by the Name of William Kidd, &c. Art thou guilty, or not guilty.

Kidd. I cannot plead to this Indictment, till my French Paſſes are delivered to me.

Cl. of Arr. Are you guilty, or not guilty?

Kidd. My Lord, I inſiſt upon my French Papers, pray let me have them.

Mr Recorder. That muſt not be now, till you have put your ſelf on your Trial.

Kidd. That muſt juſtifie me.

Mr Recorder. You may plead it then, if the Court ſee Cauſe.

Kidd. My Juſtification depends on them.

Mr Recorder. Mr Kidd, I muſt tell you, if you will not plead, you muſt have Judgment againſt you, as ſtanding mute.

Kidd. I cannot plead till I have theſe Papers, and I have not my Witneſſes here.

Mr Recorder. You do not know your own Intereſt; if you will not plead, you muſt have Judgment againſt you.

Kidd. If I plead, I ſhall be acceſſary to my own Death, till I have Perſons to plead for me.

Mr Recorder. You are acceſſary to your own Death, if you do not plead. We cannot enter into the Evidence, unleſs you plead.

Cl. of Arr. Are you guilty, or not guilty?

Mr Recorder. He does not underſtand the Law, you muſt read the Statute to him.

Cl. of Arr. Mr Kidd, are you guilty of this Piracy, or not guilty?

Kidd. If you will give me a little Time to find my Papers, I will plead.

Cl. of Arr. There is no Reaſon to give you Time; will you plead or not?

Mr Coniers. Be pleaſed to acquaint him with the Danger he ſtands in by not pleading. What ever he ſays, nothing can avail him till he pleads.

Mr Recorder. He has been told ſo, but he does not believe us.

Mr Coniers. If there be any Reaſon to put off his Tryal, it muſt be made appear after Iſſue is joined.

Mr Recorder. If you ſay guilty, there is an End of it; but if you ſay, not guilty, the Court can examine into the Fact.

Officer. He ſays he will plead.

Cl. of Arr. W. Kidd, art thou guilty, or not guilty?

Kidd. Not guilty.

Cl.

Cl. of Arr. How wilt thou be tried?

Kidd. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

(And ſo of all the reſt.)

Kidd. My Lord, I beg I may have my Tryal put off for Three or Four Days, till I have got my Papers.

Mr Recorder. The Judges will be here by and by, and you may move the Court then; we are only to prepare for your Tryal. We do not deny your Motion; but when the Court is full, they will conſider of the Reaſons you have to offer.

Then William Kidd was tried upon the Indictment for Murther.

Cl. of Arr. W. Kidd, Hold up thy Hand, Thou ſtandeſt Indicted by the Name of William Kidd, late of London, Mariner, &c.

The First Indictment for MURTHER.

THE Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King, do, upon their Oath, preſent, That William Kidd, late of London, Mariner, not having the Fear of God before his Eyes, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, the 30*th Day of* October, in the Ninth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord, William the Third, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. by Force and Arms, &c. upon the High-Sea, near the Coaſt of Malabar, in the Eaſt-Indies, and within the Juriſdiction of the Admiralty of England, in a certain Ship called the Adventure-Galley, (whereof he the ſaid William Kidd, then was Commander;) then and there being, feloniouſly, voluntarily, and of his Malice afore-thought, then and there did make an Aſſault, in and upon one William Moore, in the Peace of God, and of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, to wit, then and there being, and to the Ship aforeſaid, call'd the Adventure-Galley, then and there belonging; and that the aforeſaid William Kidd, with a certain Wooden Bucket, bound with Iron Hoops, of the Value of Eight Pence, which he the ſaid William Kidd, then and there had and held in his right Hand, did violently, feloniouſly, voluntarily, and of his Malice afore-thought, beat and ſtrike the aforeſaid William Moore, in and upon the right Part of the Head of him the ſaid William Moore, a little above the right Ear of the ſaid William Moore, then and there upon the High-Sea, in the Ship aforeſaid, and within the Juriſdiction of the Admiralty of England aforeſaid, giving to the ſaid William Moore, then and there with the Bucket aforeſaid, in and upon the aforeſaid right Part of the Head of him the ſaid William Moore, a little above the right Ear of the ſaid William Moore, one mortal Bruiſe, of which mortal Bruiſe the aforeſaid William Moore, from the ſaid 30*th Day of* October, in the Ninth Year aforeſaid, untill the One and Thirtieth Day of the ſaid Month of October, in the Year aforeſaid, upon the High-Sea aforeſaid, in the Ship aforeſaid, and within the Juriſdiction of the Admiralty of England aforeſaid, did languiſh, and languiſhing did live; upon which One and Thirtieth Day of October, in the Ninth Year aforeſaid, the aforeſaid William Moore upon the High Sea aforeſaid, near the aforeſaid Coaſt of Malabar, in the Eaſt-Indies aforeſaid, in the Ship aforeſaid, called the Adventure-Galley, and within the Juriſdiction of the Admiralty of England aforeſaid, did die; and ſo the Jurors aforeſaid, upon their Oath aforeſaid, do ſay, That the aforeſaid William Kidd, feloniouſly, voluntarily, and of his Malice afore-thought, did kill and murther the aforeſaid William Moore, upon the High Sea aforeſaid, and within the Juriſdiction of the Admiralty of England aforeſaid, in manner and form aforeſaid, againſt the Peace of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, &c.

How ſay'ſt thou, William Kid, art thou guilty of this Murther, whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, or not guilty?

Kidd. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. How wilt thou be tried?

Kidd. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr. God ſend thee a good Deliverance. Nicholas Churchill, James Howe, Robert Lamley, William Jenkins, Gabriel Loff, Hugh Parrot, Richard Barlicorn, Abel Owens, Darby Mullins, hold up your Hands. You the Priſoners at the Bar, thoſe Men that you ſhall hear called, and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King, and you, upon Tryal of your ſeveral Lives and Deaths: If therefore you, or any of you, will challenge them, or any of them; your time is to ſpeak to them as they come to the Book to be ſworn, and before they be ſworn.

Kidd. My Lord, I deſire Council may be aſſigned me.

Mr Recorder. Capt. Kidd, I told you it would be your time, when the Jury was called, to offer what you had to offer; therefore if you have any Thing now to ſay to the Court, you had beſt ſay it.

Kidd. I beg I may have Council, Dr Oldiſh, and Mr Lemmon, that they may be heard on my behalf.

Mr J. Powel. If he deſires it, you may be Council for him, provided there may be any Matter of Law that he has to plead; otherwiſe he muſt be tried.

Dr Oldiſh. My Lord, he moves that his Tryal for Piracy may be put off for ſeveral Reaſons; one is, there is one Davis, that is a neceſſary Witneſs for him; he was taken a Paſſenger into the Ship, and therefore could not be concerned in any Piracy: Now this Davis ſtands Indicted, ſo that he is deprived of this Perſon, who is a neceſſary Witneſs for him in this Caſe.

Mr Coniers. He is not Indicted yet, he may call him if he thinks fit.

Mr J. Powel. If he be Indicted, yet he may be a Witneſs.

Dr Oldiſh. My Lord, we deſire he may be here.

Mr J. Powel. Where is he?

Cl. of Arr. He is in Newgate.

Mr J. Powel. Let him be ſent for.

Dr Oldiſh. My Lord, it is very fit his Tryal ſhould be delayed for ſome time, becauſe he wants ſome Papers very neceſſary for his Defence. It's very true, he is charged with Piracies in ſeveral Ships; but they had French Paſſes when the ſeizure was made. Now if there were French Paſſes, it was a lawful Seizure.

Mr J. Powel. Have you thoſe Paſſes?

Kidd. They were taken from me by my Lord Bellamont, and theſe Paſſes would be my Defence.

Dr Oxenden. Had you any other Paſſes when you took the Armenian Ship?

Dr Oldiſh. If thoſe Ships that he took had French Paſſes, there was juſt Cauſe of Seizure, and it will excuſe him from Piracy.

Kidd.

Kidd. The Paſſes were ſeized by my Lord Bellamont, that we will prove as clear as the Day.

Mr Lemmon. My Lord, I deſire one Word as to this Circumſtance; he was doing his King and Country Service, inſtead of being a Pirate: For in this very Ship there was a French Paſs, and it was ſhown to Mr Davis, and carried to my Lord Bellamont, and he made a Seizure of it. And there was a Letter writ to teſtifie it, which was produced before the Parliament; and that Letter has been tranſmitted from Hand to Hand, ſo that we cannot at preſent come by it. There are ſeveral other Papers and Letters that we cannot get; and therefore we deſire the Tryal may be put off till we can procure them.

L. C. B. Ward. Where are they?

Mr Lemmon. We cannot yet tell whether they are in the Admiralty Office, or whether Mr Jodrell hath them.

Mr J. Powell. Let us ſee on what you go. You talk of French Paſſes, you ſhould have been prepared to make Affidavit of it. What Ship was that which had the French Paſſes?

Mr Lemmon. The ſame we were in, the ſame he is Indicted for.

Mr J. Powell. Make out this, Mr Lemmon.

Mr Lemmon. My Lord, we deſire Mr Davis may be ſent for, he will prove it.

L. C. B. Ward. Send for Edward Davis.

Mr Fell. My Lord, will you have him brought into Court?

L. C. B. Ward. Yes.

Mr Soll. Gen. They have had a Fortnight's Notice to prepare for the Tryal.

Dr Oldiſh. We petitioned for Money, and the Court ordered fifty Pounds; But the Perſon that received it went away, and we had none till laſt Night.

Dr Oxenden. I ordered that the Money might be paid into his own Hands, that he might be ſure to have it.

Mr Crawley. Regiſter, declar'd, That he paid the fifty Pound into his own Hands on Tueſday Morning.

L. C. B. Ward. You ought to make it out, that there is a reaſonable Cauſe to put off the Tryal, or elſe it cannot be allowed.

Mr Lemmon. My Lord, we will be ready to morrow Morning.

L. C. B. Ward. They ought to have had due Notice, What Notice have they had?

Mr Soll. Gen. A Fortnight's Notice, this Day Fortnight.

Dr Oldiſh. My Lord, he ſhould have had his Money delivered to him.

Kidd. I had no Money nor Friends to prepare for my Tryal till laſt Night.

L. C. B. Ward. Why did you not ſignifie ſo much to the King's Officers?

Mr Soll. Gen. My Lord, this we will do, let Davis be brought into Court; and if that be a juſt Excuſe, we are contented. In the mean Time, let him be tryed for the Murther, wherein there is no pretence of want of Witneſſes or Papers.

Officer. Davis is here, my Lord

Cl. of Arr. Set all aſide but Captain Kidd. William Kidd, You are now to be tried on the Bill of Murther, the Jury is going to be ſworn; if you have any Cauſe of Exception, you may ſpeak to them as they come to the Book.

Will. Kidd. I ſhall challenge none, I know nothing to the contrary but they are honeſt Men.

The JURY Sworn, were.

Nathaniel Long,	Henry Sherbrook,
Jo. Ewers,	Henry Dry,
Jo. Child,	Richard Greenaway,
Ed. Reeves,	Jo. Sherbrook,
Tho. Clark,	Tho. Emms,
Nath. Green.	Rog. Mott.

After Proclamation made, (as uſual) the Court proceeded to the Tryal, as follows:

Cl. of Arr. W. Kidd, hold up thy Hand. (which he did) You Gentlemen of the Jury, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Cauſe. He ſtands Indicted by the Name of William Kidd, &c. as before in the Indictment. Upon this Indictment he has been arraigned, and thereunto has pleaded, Not Guilty, and for his Tryal has put himſelf on God and his Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is to enquire, Whether he be guilty of the Murther whereof he ſtands Indicted, in Manner and Form as he ſtands Indicted, or Not Guilty, &c.

Mr Knap. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury,

This is an Indictment of Murther. The Indictment ſets forth, That William Kidd, on the 30*th of* October, on the high Sea, on the Coaſt of Malabar, did aſſault one William Moore, on Board a Ship called the Adventure, whereof William Kidd was Captain, ſtruck him with a wooden Bucket, hooped with Iron, on the Side of the Head, near the right Ear, and that of this Bruiſe he died the next Day, and ſo that he has murdered the ſaid Perſon. To this Indictment he has pleaded not Guilty; if we prove him Guilty, you muſt find him ſo.

Mr Soll. Gen. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, We will prove this as particularly as can be, that William Kidd was Captain of the Ship, and that William Moore was under him in the Ship, and that without any Provocation he gave him this Blow, whereof he died.

Mr Coniers. My Lord, It will appear to be a moſt barbarous Fact, to murther a Man in this Manner; for the Man gave him no Manner of Provocation. This William Moore was a Gunner in the Ship, and this William Kidd abuſes him, and calls him Louſie Dog; and upon a civil Anſwer he takes this Bucket, and knocks him on the Head, whereof he died the next Day. Call Joſeph Palmer, and Robert Bradinham, (who appeared and were Sworn.) Joſeph Palmer, give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what you ſaw done by William Kidd, on the Coaſt of Malabar, as to William Moore his Gunner.

Joſeph Palmer. About a Fortnight before this Accident fell out, Captain Kidd met with a Ship on that Coaſt, that was called the Loyal Captain. And about a Fortnight after this, the Gunner was grinding a Chiſſel aboard the Adventure, on the high Sea, near the Coaſt of Malabar, in the Eaſt-Indies.

Mr Coniers. What was the Gunner's Name?

Joſeph Palmer. William Moore: And Captain Kidd came and walked on the Deck, and walks by this Moore; and when he came to him, ſays, Which way could you have put me in a way to take this Ship, and been clear; Sir, ſays William Moore, I never ſpoke ſuch a Word, nor ever thought ſuch a Thing. Upon which Captain Kidd called him a Louſie Dog. And ſays William Moore, If I am a Louſie Dog, you have made me ſo; you have brought me to Ruin, and many more. Upon his ſaying this, ſays Captain Kidd, Have I ruin'd you, you Dog? and took a Bucket bound with with iron Hoops, and ſtruck him on the right Side of the Head, of which he died the next Day.

Mr Cowper. What was the Gunner doing at that Time, when he gave him that Blow?

Joſeph Palmer. He was grinding a Chiſſel at the Time that he ſtruck him.

Mr Cowper. Did he give him the Blow immediately after he gave him that Anſwer?

Joſeph Palmer. He walked two or three Times backward and forward upon the Deck, before he ſtruck the Blow.

Mr J. Turton. What did Captain Kidd ſay firſt?

Joſeph Palmer. Which way could you have put me in a way of taking this Ship, and been clear; Says the Gunner, I never ſaid ſo, nor thought any ſuch Thing.

Mr Cowper. Hark you, Friend, explain that Matter.

Mr Baron Hatſell. What was the Occaſion of thoſe Words?

Palmer. It was concerning this Ship.

L. C. B. Ward. What Ship was it? Name the Ship.

Palmer. It was the Loyal Captain. Captain Kidd ſaid to William Moore, Which way could you have put me in the way to have taken this Ship, and been clear? Says William Moore, I never ſaid ſuch a Thing, nor thought it. And upon that he called him Louſie Dog.

L. C. B. Ward. Was that Ship taken?

Palmer. No, ſhe was gone.

Mr Coniers. You ſay he call'd him Louſie Dog.

Palmer. Yes.

Mr Coniers. What did William Moore ſay to him then?

Palmer. He ſaid, If I am a Louſie Dog, you have brought me to it; you have ruined me and many more. Upon this, ſays Captain Kidd, Have I brought you to ruin, you Dog? Repeating it two or three times over, and took a turn or two upon the Deck, and then takes up the Bucket, and ſtrikes him on the Head.

Mr Cowper. You ſay he made a turn or two on the Deck, and then ſtruck him.

Palmer. Yes.

Mr Coniers. Tell my Lord what paſs'd next after the Blow.

Palmer. He was let down the Gun-Room, and the Gunner ſaid, Farewel, farewel, Captain Kidd has given me my laſt. And Captain Kidd ſtood on the Deck, and ſaid, You are a Villain.

Mr Cowper. How near was Captain Kidd to him when he ſaid he had given him his laſt?

Palmer. He was near him.

Mr Cowper. Was he within hearing of what Moore ſaid?

Palmer. Yes, he was within Seven or Eight Foot.

Mr Soll. Gen. Did you apprehend that he died of that Blow?

Palmer. He was in perfect Health before that.

Mr Soll. Gen. What did the Surgeon think of it?

Palmer. The Surgeon is here.

Mr Soll. Gen. Did you ſee him afterwards?

Palmer. No, I did not ſee him after till he was dead.

Mr Cowper. How did the Wound appear when you ſaw him?

Palmer. After he was dead, the Surgeon was called to open his Head, and Captain Kidd ſaid, You are damn'd buſie without Orders.

Mr Cowper. Though we ask you Queſtions, you muſt turn your Face there towards the Jury. Give the Jury an Account of what you ſaw.

Palmer. I felt on his Head, and I felt ſomething give way, and about the Wound, there was a Bruiſe.

Mr Cowper. You ſay you ſaw him when he was carried off after the Blow, how did his Head appear then? Was he bloody.

Palmer. There was not much Blood came from him.

L. C. B. Ward. Was you by when theſe Words were ſpoken?

Palmer. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. B. Ward. Did you ſee the Priſoner give the Blow with the Bucket upon thoſe Words?

Palmer. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. B. Ward. How long was it before he went down the Deck?

Palmer. Preſently.

L. C. B. Ward. Did he complain of the Wound?

Palmer. He ſaid, Farewel, farewel, Captain Kidd has given me my laſt.

L. C. B. Ward. Was this Moore in a good Condition of Health before this Blow was given him?

Palmer. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. B. Ward. And afterwards he complained.

Palmer. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. B. Ward. When he was dead, what Marks were on his Head?

Palmer. On the right ſide of his Head, on this Place (pointing to his own Head) it was bruiſed a conſiderable Breadth; and in one Place I could feel the Skull give way.

Mr Cowper. How long after the Blow did he die?

Palmer. The next Day following.

Mr Cowper. And you ſay you ſaw him dead then.

Palmer. Yes, Sir.

L. C. B. Ward. Captain Kidd, if you will ask him any Queſtions, you may.

Kidd. My Lord, I would ask this Man what this Moore was doing when this Thing happened.

L. C. B. Ward. Mr Palmer, you hear what he ſays; what was Moore doing?

Palmer. He was grinding a Chiſſel.

Kidd. What was the Occaſion that I ſtruck him?

Palmer. The Words that I told you before.

Kidd. Was there no other Ship?

Palmer. Yes.

Kidd. What was that Ship?

Palmer. A Dutch Ship.

Kidd. What were you doing with the Ship?

Palmer. She was becalmed.

Kidd. This Ship was a League from us, and ſome of the Men would have taken her, and I would not conſent to it, and this Moore ſaid I always hindred them making their Fortunes; was not that the Reaſon I ſtruck him? Was there not a Mutiny on Board?

Palmer. No, you chaced this Dutchman, and in the way took a Malabar Boat, and chaced this Ship all the whole Night; and they ſhowed their Colours, and you put up your Colours.

Kidd. This is nothing to the Point, was there no Mutiny aboard?

Palmer. There was no Mutiny, all was quiet.

Kidd. Was there not a Mutiny, becauſe they would go and take that Dutchman?

Palmer. No, none at all.

Mr Coniers. Call Robert Bradinham.

Jury. What was the Cauſe that he ſtruck him?

Palmer.

Palmer. A Fortnight before this was done, we met with this Loyal Captain, of which Captain Hoar was Commander, and he came on Board Captain Kidd's Ship, and Captain Kidd went on Board his, and then Captain Kidd let this Ship go. About a Fortnight after this, the Gunner was grinding his Chiſſel on the Deck; and Captain Kidd ſaid to him, Which way could you have put me in a way to take this Ship, and been clear? To which he reply'd, I never ſaid ſuch a Thing, nor thought of ſuch a Thing. Whereupon Captain Kidd called the Gunner Louſie Dog. And ſays Moore, if I am a Louſie Dog, you have made me ſo; you have brought me to Ruin, and a great many more. And ſays Captain Kidd, Have I brought you to Ruin, you Dog? and after ſtruck him with the Bucket. Theſe were all the Words that paſt.

Mr J. Powell. Was Captain Kidd aboard that Ship;

Palmer. Yes, and Captain Hoar was aboard him.

Mr J. Powell. Was there any Body nigh at that Time?

Palmer. Yes, there were eight or nine Men, that had Muskets and other Arms, and they were for taking the Ship, and Captain Kidd was againſt it, ſo it was not done.

Kidd. My Lord, I was in the Cabin, and heard a Noiſe, and came out; and William Moore ſaid, You Ruin us becauſe you will not conſent to take Captain Hoar's Ship. Says a Dutchman, I will put Captain Kidd in a way to take this Ship, and come off fairly.

L. C. B. Ward. You may ask him any Queſtions you have a Mind to, but you muſt reſerve what you have to ſay for your ſelf till you come to make your Defence.

Mr Soll. Gen. Mr Palmer, Do you know of any other Provocation to ſtrike him, beſides thoſe Words?

Palmer. I know of no other Provocation.

Mr Coniers. Set up Robert Bradinham. (who appeared.) Mr Bradinham, In what Office was you in the Ship?

Bradinham. I was Surgeon of the Ship.

Mr Coniers. Of what Ship?

Bradinham. The Adventure Galley; whereof Captain Kidd was Maſter.

Mr Coniers. Was you there when the Blow was given?

Bradinham. No.

Mr Coniers. Was you ſent for when Captain Kidd had given the Gunner the Wound upon the Head?

Bradinham. I was ſent for to his Aſſiſtance after he was wounded, and I came to him, and asked him how he did; he ſaid, He was a dead Man, Captain Kidd had given him his laſt Blow. And I was by the Gun-Room, and Captain Kidd was walking there, and I heard Moore ſay, Farewel, Farewel, Captain Kidd has given me my laſt Blow; and Captain Kidd, when he heard it, ſaid, Damn him, he is a Villain.

Mr Coniers. Did you hear him ſay ſo?

Bradinham. I did hear it.

Mr Cowper. Was it in a Way of Anſwer to what he ſaid?

Bradinham. Yes.

Mr Cowper. How long did he live after the Blow?

Bradinham. He died the next Day. The Wound was but ſmall, the Scull was fractured.

Mr Cowper. Do you believe he died of that Wound?

Bradinham. Yes.

Mr Cowper. Had you any Diſcourſe with Captain Kidd after this, about this Man's Death?

Bradinham. Some Time after this, about two Months, by the Coaſt of Malabar, Captain Kidd ſaid, I do not care ſo much for the Death of my Gunner, as for other Paſſages of my Voyage; for I have good Friends in England, that will bring me off for that.

L. C. B. Ward. Mr Kidd, Will you ask him any Queſtions?

Kidd. I ask him whether he knew of any Difference between this Gunner and me before this happened.

Bradinham. I knew of no Difference between them before at all.

Mr Soll. Gen. Mr Kidd, Have you any Thing more to ask him?

Kidd. No.

Mr Coniers. Then we have done for the King.

L. C. B. Ward. Then you may make your Defence, you are charged with Murther, and you have heard the Evidence that has been given, What have you to ſay for your ſelf?

Kidd. I have Evidence to prove it is no ſuch Thing, if they may be admitted to come hither. My Lord, I will tell you what the Caſe was, I was coming up within a League of the Dutch-man, and ſome of my Men were making a Mutiny about taking her; and my Gunner told the People he could put the Captain in a Way to take the Ship, and be ſafe. Says I, How will you do that? The Gunner anſwered, We will get the Captain and Men aboard. And what then? We will go aboard the Ship, and plunder her, and we will have it under their Hands that we did not take her. Says I, This is Judas like, I dare not do ſuch a Thing. Says he, We may do it, we are Beggars already. Why ſays I, May we take this Ship becauſe we are Poor? Upon that a Mutiny aroſe, ſo I took up a Bucket, and juſt throwed it at him, and ſaid, You are a Rogue to make ſuch a Motion. This I can prove, my Lord.

L. C. B. Ward. Call your Evidence.

Mr Cowper. Mr Palmer, Was there any Mutiny in the Ship, when this Man was killed?

Palmer. There was none.

L. C. B. Ward. Captain Kidd, Call what Evidence you will.

Kidd. They are Priſoners I deſire they may be called up.

L. C. B. Ward. Whatever other Crimes they may be guilty of, they may be Witneſſes for him in this Caſe.

Mr Baron Hatſell. Mr Palmer, Did he throw the Bucket at him, or ſtrike him with it?

Palmer. He held it by the Strap in his Hand.

Kidd. Call Abel Owens. (who appeared) Can you tell which Way this Bucket was thrown?

Mr J. Powell. What was the Provocation for throwing this Bucket?

Owens. I was in the Cook-room, and hearing ſome Difference on the Deck, I came out; and the Gunner was grinding a Chiſſel on the Grindſtone, and the Captain and he had ſome Words; and the Gunner ſaid to the Captain, You have brought us to Ruin, and we are Deſolate. And ſays he, Have I brought you to Ruin? I have not brought you to Ruin, I have not done an ill Thing to Ruin you, you are a ſawcy Fellow to give me theſe Words; and then he took up the Bucket, and did give him a Blow.

Kidd. Was there not a Mutiny among the Men?

Owen. Yes, and the bigger Part was for taking the Ship; and the Captain ſaid, You that will take the Dutch-man, you are the ſtrongeſt, you may do what you pleaſe; if you will take her, you may take her; but if you go from aboard, you ſhall never come aboard again.

L. C. B.

L. C. B. Ward. When was this Mutiny you ſpeak of?

Abel Owens. When we were at Sea.

L. C. B. Ward. How long was it before this Man's Death?

Owens. About a Month.

Mr J. Powel. At this time when the Blow was given, did Moore the Gunner endeavour to make any Mutiny?

Owens. No.

Mr J. Powel. Was there any Mutiny then?

Owens. None at all.

Kidd. Did not he ſay, he could put me in a way to take the Dutchman, and be clear?

Owens. I know there were ſeveral of them would have done it, but you would not give Conſent to it.

Kidd. No, but this was the Reaſon I threw the Bucket at him.

L. C. B. Ward. Captain Kidd, he tells you this was a Month before you ſtruck him.

Jury. My Lord, we deſire he may be asked, whether he did throw the Bucket, or ſtrike him with it.

L. C. B. Ward. Anſwer the Jury to that Queſtion.

Owens. He took it with the Strap, and ſtruck him with it.

Kidd. Did not I throw it at him?

Owens. No, I was near you when you did it.

Mr Coniers. Did you ſee the Stroke given?

Owens. I did ſee the Stroke given.

L. C. B. Ward. Captain Kidd, Will you call any more?

Kidd. Yes, my Lord. Call Richard Barlicorn.

Mr J. Powel. What Queſtions would you have him ask'd?

Kidd. R. Barlicorn, what was the Reaſon that Blow was given to the Gunner?

Barlicorn. At firſt when you met with the Ship there was a Mutiny, and Two or Three of the Dutchmen came aboard; and ſome ſaid ſhe was a rich Veſſel, and they would take her: And the Captain ſaid, No, I will not take her. And there was a Mutiny in the Ship, and the Men ſaid, If you will not, we will. And he ſaid, If you have a Mind, you may; but they that will not, come along with me.

Kidd. Do you think William Moore was one of thoſe that was for taking her?

Barlicorn. Yes.

L. C. B. Ward. How long was that before Moore died, do you know?

Barlicorn. No, I did not keep a Journal.

L. C. B. Ward. Was it after Moore died?

Barlicorn. No Sir, it was before Moore died.

Mr Coniers. How long before?

Barlicorn. I believe it was about a Month or Three Weeks, I cannot tell which.

L. C. B. Ward. You ſay there was a Mutiny in the Ship, what was the Mutiny about?

Barlicorn. About taking the Ship.

L. C. B. Ward. What was the Ship's Name?

Barlicorn. The Loyal Captain. And the Captain ſaid, If they take the Ship, they ſhall never come aboard again.

L. C. B. Ward. Was you by when Moore received this Blow?

Barlicorn. No, I was not by then.

Kidd. Do you know of any Quarrel between this Moore and I before that Accident?

Barlicorn. No, I did not.

Mr J. Powel. Was there any Mutiny in the Ship when this Moore died?

Barilcorn. They were talking of it.

Kidd. Was there not a Dutchman cloſe by us, when this Blow was given?

Barlicorn. Yes, Sir.

Kidd. He was going to make another Mutiny, and I prevented him.

Mr J. Powel. Did Moore endeavour to make any Mutiny at that time?

Barlicorn. The Ship was gone at that time.

Mr J. Powel. How long had ſhe been gone?

Barlicorn. About a Week.

Mr B. Hatſell. Was there any Mutiny about the Dutch Ship you ſaw?

Barlicorn. The Dutch Ship? Not that I know of; but there was a Mutiny about the Loyal Captain.

Kidd. Do you not know of another Mutiny?

Mr B. Hatſell. Do you know of any other Mutiny?

Barlicorn. No.

Kidd. At that very time they were going to make a Mutiny.

L. C. B. Ward. Will you ask him any more Queſtions?

Kidd. What Diſcourſe had I with Moore at that time?

Barlicorn. I was aboard our Ship, but did not ſee the Blow given.

Kidd. They were ſaying they would take her, and He ſaid, he could put me in a way to take her, without coming to any harm.

L. C. B. Ward. What occaſion could thoſe Words be of a Mutiny?

Barlicorn. There were many of the Men would have gone with Arms, and taken that Ship without the Captain's Conſent.

L. C. B. Ward. At that Time when this Moore was killed, was there any Mutiny?

Barlicorn. No.

L. C. B. Ward. When was it that Moore ſaid, they might have taken this Ship?

Barlicorn. At the ſame time when the Ship was in Company with us.

L. C. B. Ward. That was a Week or Fortnight before?

Barlicorn. No, Sir, the Loyal Captain was within ſight of us.

Mr B. Hatſell. What, when Moore was killed?

Barlicorn. No, not then. William Moore lay ſick a great while before this Blow was given; and the Doctor ſaid, when he viſited him, This Blow was not the Cauſe of his Death.

L. C. B. Ward. Then they muſt be confronted. Do you hear, Bradinham, what he ſays? He ſays you ſaid, That Blow was not the Cauſe of his Death. Did you ever ſay ſo?

Bradinham. My Lord, I never ſaid ſo.

L. C. B. Ward. Did you ſee that young Man there?

Bradinham. Yes, he was aboard the Ship.

L. C. B. Ward. Was Moore ſick before that Blow?

Bradinham. He was not ſick at all before.

Barlicorn. He was ſick ſome time before, and this Blow did but juſt touch him; and the Doctor ſaid, he did not die on the Occaſion of this Blow.

Mr J. Gold. Did you ever ſay ſo, Mr Bradinham?

Bradinham. No, my Lord.

Mr Soll. Gen. You ſay he did but juſt touch him, were you preſent when the Blow was given.

Barlicorn. No, but I ſaw him after he was dead, and I was by when the Doctor ſaid, he did not die of that Blow.

Mr Cowper. What did he die of?

Barlicorn. I cannot tell, he had been ſick before, we had many ſick Men aboard.

Mr Soll. Gen. How long did he lie after this Blow, before he died?

Barlicorn. I cannot tell juſtly how long it was.

L. C. B. Ward. How long do you think? You took notice of the Blow, how long did he live after that?

Barlicorn. I believe about a Week.

L. C. B. Ward. And the two Witneſſes ſwore he died the next Day.

Barlicorn. I cannot tell juſtly how long he lived afterwards.

Jury. We deſire to know whether he knew what was the Occaſion of this Blow.

Barlicorn. All the Reaſon I can give is, becauſe it was thought he was going to breed a Mutiny in the Veſſel.

L. C. B. Ward. Did you hear of that by any Body?

Kidd. Was Bradinham in the Mutiny? declare that.

L. C. B. Ward. Mr Kidd, why do you ask that Queſtion?

Kidd. I ask him whether Bradinham was not in any Mutiny in the Ship.

L. C. B. Ward. Why do you ask that?

Barlicorn. If any Thing was to be, he was as forward as any one.

L. C. B. Ward. You ſay he was as forward as any, but it does not appear any one made a Mutiny at this time.

Barlicorn. I do not know, Sir.

L. C. B. Ward. Have you any more to call?

Kidd. My Lord, here is another Witneſs.

L. C. B. Ward. What is your Name?

Hugh Parrot. Hugh Parrot.

L. C. B. Ward. Mr Kidd, what do you ask him?

Kidd. I ask you whether Bradinham was in a Mutiny in my Ship.

Hugh Parrot. I cannot ſay whether he was or no.

L. C. B. Ward. Captain Kidd, you are tried for the Death of this Moore, now why do you ask this Queſtion? what do you infer from hence? You will not infer, that if he was a Mutineer, it was lawful for you to kill Moore.

Kidd. Do you know the Reaſon why I ſtruck Moore?

Hugh Parrot. Yes, becauſe you did not take the Loyal Captain, whereof Captain Hoar was Commander.

L. C. B. Ward. Was that the Reaſon he ſtruck Moore, becauſe the Ship was not taken?

Hugh Parrot. I ſhall tell you how it happened, according to the beſt of my Knowledge. My Commander fortuned to come up with this Captain Hoar's Ship, and ſome were for taking her, and ſome not; and afterwards there was a little ſort of Mutiny, and ſome roſe in Arms, the greateſt Part, and they ſaid they would take this Ship, and the Commander was not for it; and ſo they reſolved to go away in the Boat, and take her. Captain Kidd ſaid, If you deſert my Ship, you ſhall never come aboard again, and I will force you into Bombay, and I will carry you before ſome of the Council there: Inſomuch as my Commander ſtilled them again, and they remained on Board. And about a Fortnight afterwards there paſſed ſome Words between this William Moore, and my Commander; and then ſays he, Captain, I could have put you in a way to have taken this Ship, and been never the worſe for it. He ſays, Would you have me take this Ship? I cannot anſwer it, they are our Friends, and my Commander was in a Paſſion; and with that I went off the Deck, and I underſtood afterwards the Blow was given, but how I cannot tell.

Mr J. Powel. Captain Kidd, have you any more to ask him, or have you any more Witneſſes to call?

Kidd. I could call all of them to teſtifie the ſame thing, but I will not trouble you to call any more.

L. C. B. Ward. Have you any more to ſay for your ſelf?

Kidd. I have no more to ſay, but I had all the Provocation in the World given me; I had no deſign to kill him, I had no Malice or Spleen againſt him.

L. C. B. Ward. That muſt be left to the Jury to conſider the Evidence that has been given; you make out no ſuch Matter.

Jury-man. My Lord, I deſire the Priſoner may give an Account whether he did do any Thing in order to his Cure.

L. C. B. Ward. He is to be tried according to Law; the King's Evidence hath been heard, and he has the Liberty to produce what Evidence he can for himſelf; will you put him to produce more Evidence than he can? If he has any more to ſay, it will be his Intereſt to ſay what he can, the Court is willing to hear him as long as he hath any thing to offer for himſelf, either upon that Account or any Thing elſe.

Kidd. It was not deſignedly done, but in my Paſſion, for which I am heartily ſorry.

L. C. B. Ward. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoner at the Bar, William Kidd, is Indicted for the Murther of William Moore; and whether he be guilty of this Murther, or not guilty, it is your part to determine on the Evidence that has been given. The Fact charged againſt him is this, That the Priſoner at the Bar, William Kidd, being the Commander of the Ship, called the Adventure-Galley, and the deceaſed William Moore, the Gunner in that Ship; That upon the High Sea, near the Coaſt of Malabar, in the Eaſt-Indies, and within the Juriſdiction of the Admiralty of England, in October, in the Ninth Year of his Majeſty's Reign, 1697, the Priſoner, William Kidd, out of his Malice fore-thought, did ſtrike the Deceaſed, William Moore, with a Bucket hoop'd with Iron, on the right Side of his Head, and that that Blow was the Occaſion of the Death of the ſaid William Moore; that this was done on the 30th of October, and that his Death enſued on the 31ſt of October, being the next Day. This is the Fact charged upon him.

Now you have heard the Evidence that has been given on the King's Part, and you will weigh it well. You hear the firſt Witneſs that has been produced on behalf of the King, is Joſeph Palmer. He tells you he was preſent on board this Ship, at the time when this Blow was given. And he ſays there had been ſome Diſcourſe between the Priſoner William Kidd, and the Deceaſed Moore, concerning taking a Ship that was called the Loyal Captain, and that Captain Kidd ſaid to him, How could you have put me in a way to take that Ship, and be clear? No, ſays Moore, I ſaid no ſuch Thing. The Reply Captain Kidd made to him him was, He was a Louſie Dog. The Anſwer of the Deceaſed was this, If I am ſo, you have made me ſo, you have ruined me and a great many others. With that ſays Captain Kidd, Have I ruined you, you Dog? And up he took a Bucket, hoop'd with Iron, and gave him a Blow on the right ſide of his Head. And thereupon he complained and ſaid, You have given me my laſt Blow. And then Moore went down below Deck, and he ſaw him no more till the next Day, and then he was dead; and he felt upon his Head, and perceived a Bruiſe in one part of it, as broad as a Shilling, and he felt the Skull was broke; and he does take on him to ſay, that he believes that Blow was the Occaſion of his Death. Being asked whether he knew in what State of Health he was before, he ſays, he was in a healthy Condition; he was grinding a Chiſſel at that time when the Blow was given; and that Blow he believes was the Occaſion of his Death. And being asked whether he heard any other Words, or ſaw or knew any Thing that could be any Cauſe of Provocation, he ſays, he knew no more than the Reply of the Party deceaſed, If I am a Louſie Dog, you have made me ſo, and have been my Ruin: And then having taken two or three Turns upon the Deck, he gave him the Blow; and then Moore went down the Deck, and uſed theſe Words, You have given me my laſt Blow, or to that Effect.

Gentlemen, You have heard the Surgeon alſo, Robert Bradinham, and he tells you he did not ſee the Blow given, but he was ſent for after, and the Deceaſed ſaid, Captain Kidd had given him his laſt Blow: And thereupon he did examine him, as a Surgeon, and does believe that Blow on the Head was the Occaſion of his Death, and he did obſerve it as well as he could.

Jury-man: My Lord, I think Bradinham, ſaid he was not then by, when the Priſoner gave the Blow.

L. C. B. Ward. I did not ſay he was: He ſays he was ſent for after the Blow; and when he came, the Deceaſed ſaid he gave it him, and what would be the Conſequence.

Now theſe two being croſs-examined by the Priſoner William Kidd, whether they did not know of ſome Mutiny in the Ship, that might be the Occaſion of his giving this Blow; they have told both their Stories, of what Diſcourſe there was of taking this Ship the Loyal Captain, and of what Deſign there was upon the Dutch Ship after. Now the firſt of theſe was a Fortnight before this happen'd, and the other a Week; ſo that there was then no Occaſion of Mutiny, nor do they know of any Mutiny at that time.

Now, Gentlemen, he has produced for himſelf Three Witneſſes. The firſt that he calls is Abel Owens; and this Witneſs has not in his Teſtimony made for the Priſoner, but in effect confirmed what the other Witneſſes for the King ſaid: For he tells you he was by when the Blow was given, and gives you an Account how this Thing was, That there was ſome Diſcourſe between them, much what to the Effect aforeſaid, both as to what Capt. Kidd ſaid to Moore, and what Moore replyed; and that Capt. Kidd ſhould ſay to Moore, You are a ſawcy Fellow, or to that purpoſe; and Moore ſaid, You have ruined me, and a great many others; and with that the Priſoner took up the Bucket, and ſtruck him with it. And he being asked if there was any Provocation or Occaſion why this Blow was given, and whether there was any Mutiny at that time, as pretended, he ſays he knew of none, only he ſpeaks of one about a Month before.

They have call'd two other Witneſſes, one is Richard Barlicorn: He is the Priſoner's Servant; and though he be his Servant, yet the Law allows him to be a Witneſs for him, and the Credit of his Teſtimony is left to you. Now what has he ſaid? He has told you ſomething different Stories. He thinks there was a Mutiny in the Ship. And being ask'd about what time; he thinks it was about a Month or three Weeks before; and, upon further Examination ſaith, there was no Mutiny when Moore was killed. He is willing to ſay what he can for his Maſter, and believes Mr Kidd did not deſign to do any harm to that Man; for he heard the Surgeon ſay, that Blow was not the Occaſion of his Death. Now, in Contradiction to that, Bradinham the Surgeon ſays he never did ſay ſo, but believes that this Blow was the Occaſion of his Death. You have heard what Objections the young Man's Teſtimony is liable to, and you will conſider his whole Evidence.

The laſt Witneſs the Priſoner has called is Hugh Parrot. He ſays there was ſomething of theſe Words, and that the Deceaſed did ſay, he could have put the Captain in a way to have taken the Ship, and hereupon Words aroſe, and the Captain was in a Paſſion; and that then he went away, and underſtood afterwards the Blow was given, but how he could not tell.

Now, Gentlemen, this being the Matter of Fact, the Priſoner is indicted upon it for Murther. Now to make the killing of a Man to be Murther, there muſt be Malice prepenſe, either expreſs or implied: The Law implies Malice, when one Man, without any reaſonable Cauſe or Provocation, kills another. You have had this Fact opened to you. What Mutiny or Diſcourſe might be a Fortnight or Month before, will not be any Reaſon or Cauſe for ſo long continuance of a Paſſion. But what did ariſe at that time, the Witneſſes tell you. The firſt Witneſs tells you, the firſt Words that were ſpoken, were by Mr Kidd; and upon his Anſwer, Mr Kidd calls him louſie Dog. The Reply was, If I am ſo, you have made me ſo; You have ruined me, and a great many more. Now, Gentlemen, I leave it to you to conſider whether that could be a reaſonable Occaſion or Provocation for him to take a Bucket and knock him on the Head, and kill him. You have heard the Witneſſes have made it out that he was a healthy Man, and they are of Opinion that that Blow was the Occaſion of his Death. Now for the Priſoner, on ſuch a Saying, and without any other Provocation, to take a Bucket and knock the Deceaſed on the Head, and kill him, muſt be eſteemed an unjuſtifiable Act. For, as I ſaid, if one Man kill another without Provocation, or reaſonable Cauſe, the Law preſumes and implies Malice; and then ſuch Killing will be Murther, in the Senſe of the Law, as being done out of Malice prepenſe. If there be a ſudden falling out, and fighting, and one is killed in heat of Blood, then our Law calls it Manſlaughter: But in ſuch a Caſe as this, that happens on ſlight Words, the Priſoner called the Deceaſed a Louſie Dog; and the Deceaſed ſaid, If I be ſo, you made me ſo; Can this be a reaſonable Cauſe to kill him? And if you believe them to be no reaſonable Cauſe of Provocation, and that this Blow was given by the Priſoner, and was the Occaſion of Moore's Death, as the Witneſſes alledge, I cannot ſee what diſtinction can be made, but that the Priſoner is guilty of Murther. Indeed, if there had been a Mutiny at that time, and he had ſtruck him at the time of the Mutiny, there might have been a reaſonable Cauſe for him to plead in his Defence, and it ought to have been taken into Conſideration; but it appears, that what Mutiny there was, was a Fortnight at leaſt before. Therefore, Gentlemen, I muſt leave it to you; if you believe the King's Witneſſes, and one of the Priſoner's own, that this Blow was given by the Priſoner, in manner aforeſaid, and are ſatisfied that it was done without reaſonable Cauſe or Provocation, then he will be guilty of Murther; and if you do believe him guilty of Murther, upon this Evidence, you muſt find him ſo: If not, you muſt acquit him.

Kidd. My Lord, I have Witneſſes to produce for my Reputation.

L. C. B. Ward. Mr Kidd, we gave you Time to make your Defence; why did not you produce them? You were asked more than once, if you had any more to ſay; and you ſaid you would call no more Witneſſes.

Kidd. I can prove what Service I have done for the King.

L. C. B. Ward. You ſhould have ſpoken ſooner; but what would that help in this Caſe of Murther? You ſaid you had no more to ſay, before I began.

Then an Officer was ſworn to keep the Jury; and about an Hour after, the Jury returned, and gave in their Verdict.

Upon this Indictment they have been Arraigned, and thereunto have ſeverally pleaded, not guilty; and for their Trial, put themſelves on God and their Country, which Country you are. Mr J. Powell. How can you make it appear you ſurrendred?

Priſoners. Here is an Affidavit made of it by the Governor's Secretary; and there's the Gentleman himſelf, Col. Baſs.

Mr J. Powell. You muſt make it out that you have come in within the Conditions of that Proclamation, if you have any Benefit by it.

L. C. B. Ward, Let the Proclamation be read, (which was done accordingly, and it here follows:)

By the KING, A Proclamation.

William R.

Whereas We being informed, by the frequent Complaints of our good Subjects Trading to the Eaſt-Indies, of ſeveral wicked Piracies committed on thoſe Seas, as well upon our own Subjects, as thoſe of our Allies, have therefore thought fit (for the Security of the Trade of thoſe Countries, by an utter Extirpation of the Pirates in all Parts Eaſtward of the Cape of Good Hope, as well beyond Cape Comorin, as on this ſide of it, unleſs they ſhall forthwith ſurrender themſelves as is herein after directed) to ſend out a Squadron of Men of War, under the Command of Captain Thomas Warren. Now We, to the Intent that ſuch who have been guilty of any Acts of Piracy in thoſe Seas, may have Notice of our moſt gracious Intention, of extending our Royal Mercy to ſuch of them as ſhall ſurrender themſelves, and to cauſe the ſevereſt Puniſhment according to Law to be inflicted upon thoſe who ſhall continue obſtinate, have thought fit, by the Advice of our Privy Council, to Iſſue this Proclamation; hereby Requiring and Commanding all perſons who have been guilty of any Act of Piracy, or any ways Aiding or Aſſiſting therein, in any place Eaſtward of the Cape of Good Hope, to ſurrender themſelves within the ſeveral reſpective Times herein after limited, unto the ſaid Captain Thomas Warren, and the Commander in chief of the ſaid Squadron for the time being, and to Iſrael Hayes, Peter Dellanoye, and Chriſtopher Pollard, Eſquires, Commiſſioners appointed by us for the ſaid Expedition, or to any Three of them, or, in caſe of Death, to the major part of the Survivors of them. And We do hereby declare, That We have been Graciouſly pleaſed to Impower the ſaid Captain Thomas Warren, and the Commander in chief of the ſaid Squadron for the time being, Iſrael Hayes, Peter Dellanoye, and Chriſtopher Pollard, Eſquires, Commiſſioners aforeſaid, or any Three of them, or, in caſe of Death, to the major part of the Survivors of them, to give Aſſurance of our moſt gracious Pardon unto all ſuch Pirates in the Eaſt-Indies, (viz.) all Eaſtward of the Cape of Good Hope, who ſhall ſo ſurrender themſelves for Piracies or Robberies committed by them upon the Sea or Land; except nevertheleſs ſuch as they ſhall commit in any Place whatſoever after Notice of our Grace and Favour hereby declared; And alſo Excepting all ſuch Piracies and Robberies as ſhall be committed from the Cape of Good Hope Eaſtward, to the Longitude or Meridian of Socatora, after the laſt Day of April 1699. and in any Place from the Longitude or Meridian of Socatora Eaſtward, to the Longitude or Meridian of Cape Comorin, after the laſt Day of June, 1699. and in any Place whatſoever Eaſtward of Cape Co-morin after the laſt Day of July, 1699. And alſo excepting Henry Every alias Bridgman, and William Kidd.

Given at our Court at Kenſington, the Eighth Day of December, 1698. In the Tenth Year of our Reign.

God ſave the King.

Clerk. There is no Day mentioned in this Paper when they ſurrendred themſelves.

Mr Moxon. My Lord, about the Year 1697, there was a ſpecial Commiſſion given to Four Perſons, and they were to proceed in their Voyage to the Indies, and they carried a great Number of Proclamations, that all the Pirates in ſuch and ſuch Places ſhould ſurrender themſelves. Now they came to St. Helena with them, and Captain Warren was ſent to St Mary's, and he was to deliver ſome of theſe Proclamations there, and the Commiſſioner had then the Embaſſador to the Great Mogul on Board, and this Captain Warren theſe Proclamations. Warren comes and delivers the Proclamations out, and among the reſt the Priſoner at the Bar having notice of this, he goes to the Governor, and confeſſes he had been a Pirate, and deſired them to take notice that he ſurrendred himſelf; and we have the Governor here, to give an Account of this Matter.

L. C. B. Ward. The Proclamation ſays they muſt ſurrender themſelves to ſuch and ſuch Perſons by Name. See if it be not ſo. (Then the Proclamation was read again.) Here are ſeveral Qualifications mentioned; you muſt bring your ſelves under them, if you would have the Benefit of it.

Dr Newton. Let them ſhow that they ſurrendred themſelves to the Perſons they were to ſurrender to.

Mr Moxon. My Lord, we will prove we gave Notice within the Time, by this Paper.

Mr Soll. Gen. There is no Time mentioned in it. (The Affidavit was read.) Charles Hally, Gent. Maketh Oath, That in the Year 98, there being Notice of his Majeſty's gracious Pardon to ſuch Pirates as ſhould ſurrender themſelves, James Howe, Nicholas Churchill, and Darby Mullins, in May 1699, did ſurrender themſelves to Jeremiah Baſs, and he did admit them to Bail.

L. C. B. Ward. There are Four Commiſſioners named in the Proclamation: There is no Governor mentioned that is to receive them, only thoſe Four Commiſſioners.

Mr Moxon. But, my Lord, conſider the Nature of this Proclamation, and what was the Deſign of it, which was to invite Pirates to come in.

Mr Comers. We muſt keep you to the Proclamation. Here is not enough to put off the Tryal.

L. C. B. Ward. If you had brought your ſelves within the Caſe of the Proclamation, we ſhould be very glad. You that offer it, muſt conſider it is a Special Proclamation, with divers Limitations; and if you would have the Benefit of it, you muſt bring your ſelves under the Conditions of it. Now there are Four Commiſſioners named, that you ought to ſurrender to; but you have not ſurrendered to any one of theſe, but to Colonel Baſs, and there is no ſuch Man mentioned in this Proclamation.

Mr Knapp. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, The Indictment ſets forth, That the Priſoners at the Bar, on the 30th of January, in the Ninth Year of his Majeſty's Reign, ten Leagues diſtant from Cutſheen, did Piratically ſeize and rob a certain Ship called the Quedagh Merchant, and put the Men in fear of their Lives; and the ſaid Ship, with her Apparel, Tackle, and Goods, did then and there, upon the High Sea, take and carry away, againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. To this Indictment they have Pleaded, Not guilty. If we prove it upon them, you muſt find them guilty.

Dr Newton, Advocate of the Admiralty. My Lord, and Gentlemen, The Priſoners at the Bar, Captain Will. Kidd, late Commander of the Adventure Galley, and nine other Mariners in the ſame Veſſel, ſtand Indicted for Feloniouſly and Piratically Aſſaulting and taking a Ship called the Quedagh Merchant, on the High Sea near Cutſheen, in the Eaſt-Indies, about the 30th of January, in the Ninth Year of his Majeſty's Reign: The Ship was conſiderable for its Force and Bulk, being about 400 Tun; and more conſiderable for its Lading, having on Board to the Value of many Thouſand Pounds.

This Cap. Kidd, who thus acted the Pirate himſelf, went from England in April 1696, with a Commiſſion dated the 26th of January preceeding, to take and ſeize Pirates in the Indian Seas, which were then very much and very dangerouſly infeſted by them, to the great Hazard, and Loſs, and Ruine of the Merchant.

The Ship carried 30 Guns, and there were on Board about 80 Men; but the Captain being come to New-York in July 96, pretending, as indeed it was deſigned he ſhould, and he had undertaken to make that Deſign good, that he was going to Madagaſcar, (which was the known and common Receptacle of the Pirates in thoſe Seas) to take Pirates, and free the Seas from thoſe Diſturbers of the Commerce of Mankind; ſo many came in to him, being invited by Articles publickly ſet up by him in that Place, that his Number quickly encreaſed to 155 Men; a Force ſufficient, if he had meant well, to have made him uſeful to the Publick; and to prove as miſchievous, if his Deſigns were otherwiſe: And what thoſe were will quickly appear.

After calling in at ſeveral Places for Proviſions, and among others at Madagaſcar, in July 97, he ſailed to Babs-key, a ſmall Iſland at the Entrance of the Red-Sea, and a convenient Station for the obſerving what Veſſels went from thence to the Indies; and now inſtead of taking Pirates, he becomes one himſelf, and the greateſt and the worſt of all. Here he ſtaid three Weeks, in expectation of the Mocca Fleet, to make his Benefit and his Fortune out of it: For whatever he had before pretended, this was his real Deſign, and now ſo poſſeſſed his Mind, that he could not refrain from declaring, and that often, to his Men, That now he ſhould make his Voyage and ballaſt his Ship with Gold and Silver. After long Expectation, the Fleet, on the 14th of Auguſt, to the Number of 14, came by: He fell in with the middle of them, fired ſeveral Guns at them; but finding they had an Engliſh and Dutch Convoy, that Deſign happily fail'd of the wiſh'd for Succeſs.

This Diſappointment however did not diſcourage him, but that he proceeded on for the Coaſt of Malabar, where he knew the Trade was conſiderable, ſiderable, and hoped his Advantage would be proportionable in the diſturbing it; and there accordingly, for ſeveral Months, he committed many great Piracies and Robberies, taking the Ships and Goods of the Indians and others at Sea, Moors and Chriſtians, and torturing cruelly their Perſons, to diſcover if any thing had eſcaped his Hands; burning their Houſes, and killing after a barbarous manner the Natives on the Shore; equally cruel, dreaded and hated both on the Land and at Sea.

Theſe Criminal Attempts and Actions had rendered his Name (to the Diſgrace and the Prejudice of the Engliſh Nation) too well known, and deſervedly deteſted, in thoſe remote Parts of the World; and he was now looked upon as an Arch-Pirate, and the Common Enemy of Mankind; and accordingly two Portugueſe Men of War went out in purſuit of him, and one met with him and fought him for ſeveral Hours; but Kidd's Fortune then reſerved him for another Place, and another manner of Tryal.

Amongſt the great number of Veſſels he took on that Coaſt, was the Ship he now ſtands Indicted for, the Quedagh Merchant, being then on a Trading Voyage from Bengal to Suratt, the Commander Engliſh, Captain Wright, the Owners Armenian Merchants, and others; he had taken Moors before, but Moors and Chriſtians are all alike to Pirates, they diſtinguiſh not Nations and Religions.

Thoſe on Board the Veſſel offered 30000 Rupees for her Ranſom; but the Ship was too conſiderable to be parted with, even for ſo great a Sum: So Kidd ſold Goods out of her, on the Neighbouring Coaſt, to the Value of Ten or Twelve Thouſand Pounds, out of which he took whatever he could pretend to for Ammunition and Proviſions, with Forty Shares for himſelf; and the Remainder was diſpoſed of amongſt the Crew, and particularly thoſe who are here Indicted with him, who accompanied him, who aſſiſted him throughout in all his Piracies, and who now too ſhare the Spoils and the Guilt with him.

With this Ship and another, and the Remainder of the Goods not ſold on the Coaſt, he ſailed once more for Madagaſcar, where he arrived in the beginning of May 98, and there again, what was left on Board, was divided according to the ſame Proportions, and amongſt the ſame Perſons as before, each Mariner having about three Bales to his Share.

Then the Jury brought in their Verdict againſt William Kidd for Murther: And Dr Newton proceeded;

It is not to be omitted, That at his Return to Madagaſcar, there came on board him ſome Perſons from the Ship The Reſolution, formerly the Mocca Frigat, (for the Piratical ſeizing of which Veſſel there have been formerly Tryals and Convictions in this Place) of which Captain Culliford, a notorious Pirate, now in Cuſtody, and againſt whom two Bills have been found for Piracy, by the Grand Jury, was the Commander: They at firſt ſeemed to be afraid of Kidd, but without any Ground, as his former Actions had demonſtrated, and the Sequel ſhewed. They who were hardened Pirates, and long inured to Villanies, could ſcarce think that any Man could ſo betray the Truſt and Confidence the Publick had placed in him, and ſaid, They heard he was come to take and hang them. But Captain Kidd aſſured them, That he had no ſuch Deſign, and that he had rather his Soul ſhould broil in Hell, than do them any Harm; bid them not be afraid, and ſwore he would be true to them. And here indeed he did not break his Word: This was his way of being True to his Truſt, and making good the Ends of his Commiſſion, in acting with the greateſt Treachery and the greateſt Falſeneſs that ever Man did. And to make all that has been repreſented of him true, Captain Kidd and Captain Culliford went on Board, Treated, and preſented each other; and inſtead of taking Culliford, as it was his Duty to have done, and his Force was ſufficient to have performed it, he gave him Money and Ammunition, two great Guns and Shot, and other Neceſſaries to fit him out to Sea, that he might be in a Condition the better to take and ſeize other Innocent Perſons.

His own Ship he now left, and went on Board the Quedagh Merchant; ſeveral of his Men then went from him, but not the Priſoners, they were all along Well-wiſhers and Aſſiſtants to him, fought for him, divided the Plunder with him, and are now come to be tryed with him.

This, Gentlemen, is the Crime he is Indicted for, Piracy; the growing Trouble, Diſturbance and Miſchief of the Trading World, and the peaceable part of Mankind, the Scandal and Reproach of the European Nations, and the Chriſtian Name, (I wiſh I could not ſay, that the Kidd's and the Avery's had not made it more particularly ſo of the Engliſh) amongſt Mahometans and Pagans, in the extreameſt Parts of the Earth; which turns not only to the Diſadvantage of the immediate Sufferers, but of all ſuch as traffick in thoſe Countries, whether Companies or ſingle Merchants, who are to ſuffer for the Misfortunes of others, with whom, it may be, they have no Dealings; and for the Villanies of ſuch, whom they and all Mankind equally and juſtly deteſt and abhor.

This is the Perſon that ſtands Indicted at that Bar, than whom no one in this Age has done more Miſchief, in this worſt kind of Miſchief; or has occaſioned greater Confuſion and Diſorder, attended with all the Circumſtances of Cruelty and Falſehood, and a Complication of all manner of Ill.

If therefore theſe Facts ſhall be proved upon him, you will then, Gentlemen, in finding him Guilty, do Juſtice to the injured World, the Engliſh Nation, (our Common Country) whoſe Intereſt and Welfare ſo much depend on the Encreaſe and Security of Trade; and, laſtly, to your ſelves, whom the Law has made Judges of the Fact.

Mr Soll. Gen. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Council for the King, againſt the Priſoners at the Bar, in this Caſe, with the Doctor that has opened the Matter from the begining. Theſe Priſoners at the Bar went out with Commiſſions for good Purpoſes, though they made uſe of them to very bad ones. Gentlemen of the Jury, I muſt tell you, The Charge upon which you are to enquire, is only upon a certain Ship called the Quedagh Merchant, and to that we ſhall apply our Evidence. What was taken in her, has been opened already: All we will do now, is to call our Witneſſes, and make out to your Satisfaction the Things charged upon them.

Mr Coniers. My Lord, we ſhall prove this Charge by the Perſons that were Evidence before, Rober Bradinham

Bradinham, and Joſeph Palmer. They went out with Captain Kidd in his Voyage, and he began it in April 1696. I believe it will be neceſſary that they give ſome Account before this Piracy was committed, which was not in Time till February 1697. They will give you an Account of ſome Plunders that happened before this, and then of the taking of this Ship, and the dividing it amongſt them.

Mr Juſtice Powell. When went they out?

Mr Coniers. They began their Voyage in April 1696, and took this Ship in February 1697. They did all along that Voyage commit ſeveral Plunders on ſeveral Ships they thought a Prey. Their Deſign was, not to take Pirates, but to take what they could get out of any Ships, Friends or Enemies: For in this Ship, the Quedagh Merchant, which was a Mooriſh Ship, there were ſeveral Armenians; and they offered them a great Sum of Money to redeem the Ship, but they refuſed it; and they diſpoſed of the Goods, and divided the Money: And for the Proof of that, we will call Mr Bradinham.

Mr J. Powell. I underſtand that he had a Commiſſion; therefore if any one has a Commiſſion, and he acts according to it, he is not a Pirate; but if he take a Commiſſion for a Colour, that he may be a Pirate, it will be bad indeed: And therefore if you can prove that he was a Pirate all along, this will be a great Evidence againſt him.

Mr Coniers. My Lord, We will prove that; ſo that the Commiſſion was but a Colour. Mr Bradinham, Pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account when you began your Voyage, and your Proceedings afterwards.

Bradinham. Sometime in the Year 1696; about the beginning of May, I and others, were with Capt. Kidd: And we ſailed from Plymouth, deſigning for New-York; and in the Way to New-York we met with a French Banker, and took her.

Mr Coniers. Tell the Court what Ship it was you went in, and with whom.

Bradinham. We went with Captain Kidd, in the Adventure-Galley.

Mr Coniers. What Number of Men had you when you went firſt out?

Bradinham. About Seventy or Eighty Men.

Mr Coniers. What Force of Guns had you?

Bradinham. We had thirty Guns.

Mr Coniers. In what Office was Captain Kidd in the Ship?

Bradinham. He was the Commander of her.

Mr Coniers. Now tell my Lord, and the Jury, what time you left England, and how you proceeded.

Bradinham. In May 1696, we left Plymouth, and went to New-York, and in the way met with a French Ship, and took her: And when we came to New-York, Captain Kidd put up Articles, That if any Men would enter themſelves on Board his Ship, they ſhould have their Shares of what ſhould be taken, and he himſelf was to have Forty Shares.

Mr Coniers. What Number of Men did he get after theſe Articles were publiſhed?

Bradinham. He carried from New-York an Hundred and fifty five Men.

Mr Coniers. Whither did he ſail then?

Bradinham. To the Madera's, from thence to Bonavis, from thence to St Jago, from thence to Madagaſcar, from thence to Joanna, from thence to Mahala, from Mahala to Joanna again, and from thence to the Red-Sea; and there we waited for the Mocca Fleet. They paſſed us one Night, and he purſued them, and went among them, and was deſigned to take what he could of them; but he found they were too ſtrong for him, and was fain to leave them.

Mr Cowper. How long did you lie in wait for that Fleet?

Bradinham. A Fortnight or Three Weeks.

Mr Cowper. Did he expreſs himſelf ſo, that he did lie in wait for that Fleet?

Bradinham. Yes; he ſaid that he did deſign to make a Voyage out of them.

Mr Cowper. Did he not lie in wait for any French Effects in that Fleet?

Bradinham. No, only for the Mooriſh Fleet.

Mr Cowper. What do you mean by the Mooriſh Fleet?

Bradinham. The Natives of India, the Mahometans.

Mr Cowper. Where did you lie in wait for that Fleet?

Bradinham. In the Red-Sea.

Mr Cowper. In the Mouth of it?

Bradinham. Yes.

Mr Cowper. Is it a fit Place for that Purpoſe?

Bradinham. Several Sail of Ships may lie there.

Mr Cowper. Did you expect them?

Bradinham. Yes; Capt. Kidd waited for them.

Mr Coniers. How long did you ſtay there?

Bradinham. About a Fortnight.

Mr Coniers. Did you do any thing in that time to get Intelligence?

Bradinham. Captain Kidd ſent his Boat three times to Mocca, to ſee if they could make any Diſcovery; and the two firſt times they could make none; but the third time they brought word the Ships were ready to ſail: And accordingly they came, and we ſailed after them, and fell in with them, and Captain Kidd fired at them.

Mr Cowper. You ſay, he ſent his Boat three times for Intelligence; Can you remember what Anſwer they brought?

Bradinham. The two firſt times they brought no Intelligence, but the third time they brought Word that fourteen or fifteen Ships were ready to ſail.

Mr Cowper. What Colours did they ſay they had?

Bradinham. I cannot tell that. When Captain Kidd had fetched them up, he found they were under Convoy, and ſo he left them: And then he was going to the Coaſt of Malabar, and by the Way met with Captain Parker.

Mr Juſtice Powel. Did they fire any Guns at the Mocca Fleet?

Bradinham. Yes; Captain Kidd fired divers Guns at them.

Mr Coniers. After ſuch time as you left the Mocca Fleet, What happened after that? Recollect your ſelf.

Bradinham. We took a Ship that Capt. Parker was Commander of, between Carawar and the Red-Sea.

Mr Coniers. What Ship was this that Captain Parker was Commander of?

Bradinham. A Mooriſh Ship, ſhe came from Bombay, and Captain Parker was the Maſter.

Mr Coniers. What did you take from this Ship?

Bradinham. Captain Kidd took out Parker, and a Portugueſe for a Linguiſter.

Mr Coniers. A Linguiſter; What do you mean by that?

Bradinham. An Interpreter. He took out of her a Bail of Coffee, a Bail of Pepper, about twenty ty Pieces of Arabian Gold, and ordered ſome Men to be taken and hoiſted up by the Arms, and drub'd with a naked Cutlace.

Mr Coniers. Why did he do that?

Bradinham. That they might confeſs what Money they had.

Mr Coniers. Were thoſe Men Frenchmen that were thus uſed?

Bradinham. No; they were Moors.

Mr Coniers. Was there any Demand made of thoſe Men, Captain Parker, and the Portugueſe?

Bradinham. Yes; The Engliſh Factory ſent for this Parker and the Portugueſe, and he deny'd that he had any ſuch Perſons on Board, for he kept them in a Hole.

Mr Coniers. Do you know any thing more?

Bradinham. Then he went to Sea, and that Night he met with a Portugueſe Man of War; the next Morning he came up with her, and the Portugueſe firſt fired at Captain Kidd, and he at him again; they fought four or five Hours; Captain Kidd had ten Men wounded.

Mr Coniers. So that there was nothing more than Fighting.

Bradinham. No.

Mr Coniers. Go on; What did you do next?

Bradinham. We went to the Coaſt of Malabar.

Mr Coniers. What did you go thither for?

Bradinham. We went to one of the Malabar Iſlands for Wood and Water, and Captain Kidd went a-ſhore, and ſeveral of his Men, and plundered ſeveral Boats, and burnt ſeveral Houſes, and ordered one of the Natives to be ty'd to a Tree, and one of his Men to ſhoot him.

Mr Coniers. Pray go on: What was the Reaſon of his ſhooting this Indian?

Bradinham. One of his Men, that was his Cooper, had been a-ſhore, and ſome of the Natives had cut this Man's Throat, and that was the Reaſon he ordered his Men to ſerve this Man ſo.

Mr Coniers. Pray go on, and give an Account what happened afterwards.

Bradinham. Then we came back again to the Malabar Coaſt, and cruiſed; and in October he killed his Gunner, William Moore.

Mr Coniers. Tell what happened next after that.

Mr Cowper. Was this the October next after he left England, or the Year following.

Bradinham. It was in October 1697.

Mr Coniers. Well, Go on.

Bradinham. Some time in November he took a Mooriſh Ship belonging to Suratt, there were two Dutchmen belonging to her, the reſt were Moors. Captain Kidd chaſed this Ship under French Colours; and when the Dutchman ſaw that, he put out French Colours too. And Captain Kidd came up with them, and commanded them on Board; and he ordered a Frenchman to come upon Deck, and to pretend himſelf Captain. And ſo this Commander comes aboard, and comes to this Monſieur Le Roy that was to paſs for the Captain; and he ſhows him a Paper, and ſaid it was a French Paſs. And Captain Kidd ſaid, By God, Have I catch'd you? You are free Prize to England. We took two Horſes, ſome Quilts, &c. and the Ship he carried to Madagaſcar. In December he took a Mooriſh Ketch, ſhe was taken by the Boat, we had one Man wounded in taking of her.

Mr Coniers. When was this done?

Bradinham. In December 1697.

Mr Coniers. What did you plunder then?

Bradinham. Our People took the Veſſel a-ſhore, and Captain Kidd took out of her thirty Tubs of Sugar, a Bail of Coffee, &c. and then he ordered the Veſſel to be turned a-drift.

Mr Coniers. What followed in January?

Bradinham. January the 20th, Captain Kidd took a Portugueſe that came from Bengal: He took out of her two Cheſts of Opium, ſome Eaſt-India Goods, and Bags of Rice, &c.

Mr Coniers. How long did you keep this Ship?

Bradinham. He kept this Portugueſe Ship about ſeven Days: He took out of her ſome Butter, Wax, and Eaſt-India Goods: He kept her till he was chaſed by ſeven or eight Sail of Dutch, and then he left her.

Mr Coniers. My Lord, Now we are come to that on which the Indictment is founded. Mr Bradinham, give a particular Account of that.

Bradinham. Some time in January, Captain Kidd took the Quedagh-Merchant: He gave her chaſe under French Colours: He came up with her, and commanded the Maſter aboard: And there came an old Frenchman in the Boat; and after he had been aboard a while, he told Captain Kidd he was not the Captain, but the Gunner. And Captain Kidd ſent for the Captain on board his Ship.

Mr Coniers. Who was that?

Bradinham. Mr Wright.

Mr Coniers. What Countryman was he?

Bradinham. An Engliſhman. He was ſent for aboard, and he came; and Captain Kidd told him, he was his Priſoner. And he ordered his Men to go a-board, and take Poſſeſſion of the Ship, and diſpoſed of the Goods on that Coaſt to the Value of Seven or Eight Thouſand Pounds.

Mr Coniers. What Perſons were a-board her?

Bradinham. There was Captain Wright, and two Dutchmen, and a Frenchman, and ſome Armenians, and the reſt Moors.

Mr Coniers. Did theſe Armenians make any Offer of any Money for their Ranſom?

Bradinham. Captain Kidd told them, They ſhould be ranſomed, if they made an Offer that he liked of. So they offered him twenty thouſand Rupees. He told them, That was but a ſmall parcel of Money, and the Cargo was worth a great deal more.

Mr Coniers. Who did the Cargo belong to?

Bradinham. To thoſe Armenians, as I was informed by Captain Wright.

Mr Coniers. What did he do with them?

Bradinham. He diſpoſed of ſome of them on the Coaſt of India.

Mr Coniers. What did he do with the Proceed of the Goods he ſold?

Bradinham. He ſhared the Money.

Mr Coniers. Had theſe Men (the other Priſoners) any of the Shares?

Bradinham. Yes, all of them. You were a Half-ſhare Man, and you a Half-ſhare Man, (pointing to two of them.)

Mr Coniers. Mr Bradinham, You ſay Capt. Wright came a-board Kidd's Ship.

Bradinham. Yes.

Mr Coniers. Did he diſcourſe with him?

Bradinham. I was not with him, for he kept his Cabin to himſelf.

Mr Coniers. But you are ſure he came a-board?

Bradinham. Yes.

Mr Coniers. And that he was an Engliſhman?

Bradinham. Yes.

Mr Coniers. How did Captain Kidd behave himſelf to the Ships or Boats there?

Bradinham. He boarded ſeveral Ships, and took out of them what was for his turn.

Mr Coniers. How did he uſe thoſe that he traded with?

Bradinham. Some of them came a-board ſeveral times, and he traded with them: But ſome of them came a-board when he was going away, and he plundered them, and ſent them a-ſhore without any Goods.

Mr Coniers. What Country Men were thoſe he ſerved thus?

Bradinham. Mahometans: They had dealt with him before conſiderably.

Mr Coniers. How much did he take from them.

Bradinham. About Five Hundred Pieces of Eight.

Mr Coniers. How do you know that?

Bradinham. I ſaw it told afterwards. We went to Madagaſcar afterwards, and by the Way met with a Mooriſh Ship, and took out of her ſeveral Casks of Butter, and other Things.

Mr Cowper. What were the Crew of this Ship?

Mr J. Powell. They are Indicted for the Quedagh-Merchant; Were all the Priſoners in that Action? You have given an Hiſtorical Account from the Beginning, that he was a meer Plunderer: But now you are come to the Quedagh, for which they are Indicted; Go not beyond it.

Mr Coniers. Look on the ſeveral Priſoners at the Bar, and tell whether any of the Priſoners were at the taking of the Quedagh-Merchant.

Cl. of Arr. Was William Kidd there, at the Time the Ship was taken?

Bradinham. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Was Nicholas Churchill there?

Abel Owens. Had I any of it?

Bradinham. You had it: You took it.

Cl. of Arr. What had Darby Mullins?

Bradinham. He had half a Share of the Money, and a whole Share of the Goods.

Mr Coniers. Now we have fully proved this as to the Quedagh-Merchant.

Dr Newton. When you came to Madagaſcar, what was done there?

Bradinham. There came a Canooe to us with ſome Engliſh Men in her, they were formerly acquainted with Captain Kidd, and they told him, They had heard, that he was come to take them, and hang them.

Dr Newton. Who were they?

Bradinham. They belonged to the Moco Frigate.

Mr Coniers. Give a particular Account of that Matter.

Bradinham. When we came to Madagaſcar, there came a Canooe off to us.

Mr Coniers. From whom?

Bradinham. From the Moco Frigate, Captain Culliford was the Commander. And there were ſome white Men in her, that had formerly been acquainted with Captain Kidd; they heard that he was come to take them, and hang them. He told them, it was no ſuch thing for he was as bad as they.

Mr Coniers. Were they thought to be Pirates?

Bradinham. They were ſo.

Mr Coniers. What was it that Captain Kidd ſaid?

Bradinham. He aſſured them it was no ſuch thing. And afterwards went aboard with them, and ſwore to be true to them; and he took a Cup of Bomboe, and ſwore to be true to them, and aſſiſt them; and he aſſiſted this Captain Culliford with Guns, and an Anchor, to fit him to Sea again.

L. C. B. Ward. How came you to know all this? Was you aboard then?

Bradinham. I was aboard then, and I heard the Words.

Dr Newton. Were any of the Goods divided at Madagaſcar?

Bradinham. Yes.

Mr Coniers. Now look on the Priſoners again, you ſay after he met with this Captain Culliford, you went and had a Diviſion made; pray give an Account of it.

Bradinham. When we came to Madagaſcar, Captain Kidd ordered the Goods to be carried a-ſhore, and ſhared. And he had forty Shares himſelf.

Cl. of Arr. Had Nicholas Churchill a Share?

Bradinham. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had James Howe a Share?

Bradinham. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Robert Lamley a Share?

Bradinham. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had William Jenkins a Share?

Cl. of Arr. Had Gabriel Loffe a Share?

Cl. of Arr. Had Richard Barlicorn a Share?

Bradinham. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Abel Owens a Share?

Bradinham. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Darby Mullins a Share?

Bradinham. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. So that you ſay, every one of the Priſoners at the Bar had a Share.

Bradinham. Yes.

Mr Coniers. What became afterwards of the Adventure-Galley?

Bradinham. She was ſo leaky, that ſhe had two Pumps going; and when they came to ſhore, they left her, becauſe ſhe was not fit to go to Sea again. And ſo Captain Kidd went aboard the Scuddee Merchant, and deſigned to make a Man of War of her.

Mr Coniers. What is that Scuddee-Merchant? Do you mean the Quedagh-Merchant?

Bradinham. Yes.

L. C. B. Ward. What became of that Ship afterwards?

Bradinham. I left him at Madagaſcar, after the Money and Goods were divided; and can give no Account afterwards.

Dr Newton. But you ſay, Captain Kidd went aboard the Quedagh.

Bradinham. Yes.

Mr Coniers. My Lord, we have done as to this Witneſs; if they will ask him any Thing they may.

Cl. of Arr. Will any of you ask him any Queſtions?

Kidd. He ſays, when we went out firſt from England, we went out of Plymouth in May, which we did not; for we went in April, therefore this is a Contradiction.

L. C. B. Ward. Mr Kidd, if you will ask him any Queſtions, you may. Do you deſire he ſhould be poſitive when you went from Plymouth?

Bradinham. It was about the firſt of May, my Lord.

L. C. B. Ward. What Year?

Bradinham. In the Year, 1696.

Cl. of Arr. Nicholas Churchill, will you ask him any Queſtions?

Churchill. I would have went a-ſhore at Carawar, but the Captain would not let me.

L. C. B. Ward. It is proved, that you was at the taking of the Quedagh-Merchant, and dividing the Goods.

Churchill. Yes, my Lord, but I could not help it, I was forced to do what the Captain ordered me.

Cl. of Arr. James Howe, will you ask him any Queſtions?

James Howe. Have not I obeyed my Captain in all his Commands?

L. C. B. Ward. There is no doubt made of that. If any of you will ask him any Queſtions, you may.

Kidd. Did you not ſee any French Paſſes aboard the Queda Merchant?

Bradinham, You told me you had French Paſſes, I never did ſee them.

Kidd. Did you never declare this to any body, that you ſaw theſe French Paſſes?

Brandinham. No, I did never ſee any; but I only ſaid, I heard you ſay you had them.

Churchill. Had I any ſhare?

Brandinham. Yes.

Churchill. How will you prove that?

Jenkins. My Lord, I ask him, Whether I was not a Servant?

L. C. B. Ward. Ask the Witneſs what Queſtions you will.

Bradinham. My Lord he was a Servant.

L. C. B. Ward. Who was he a Servant to?

Bradinham. To George Bullen.

Jenkins. My Lord, I beg you will examine my Indenture; for I have it in my Pocket, I had nothing aboard that Ship, but what my Maſter had.

Bradinham. But you had a ſhare of the Goods, I cannot tell whether your Maſter had it afterwards.

Cl. of Arr. Gabriel Loff. Have you any Queſtion to ask him?

Gab. Loff. I have nothing to ſay to him, but to ask him, Whether I did ever diſobey my Captain's Commands, or was any ways mutinous on board the Ship?

Bradinham. No, I cannot ſay you did.

Cl. of Arr. Hugh Parrot, do you ask him any Queſtions?

Parrot. No.

Cl. of Arr. Richard Barlicorn, do you ask him any Queſtions?

Barlicorn. I ask him, Whether I was not the Captain's Servant?

L. C. B. Ward. Yes, he ſays he was.

Cl. of Arr. Abel Owens, will you ask him any Queſtions?

Owens. I have nothing to ſay; but depend upon the King's Proclamation.

Cl. of Arr. Darby Molins, have you any Queſtions to ask him?

Molins. My Lord, he knows I had nothing but what Capt. Kidd was pleas'd to give me.

L. C. B. Ward. Was he a Servant to Capt. Kidd or no?

Bradinham. He had a half ſhare of Money, and a whole ſhare of Goods.

Mr. J. Powel. What was the reaſon ſome had whole ſhares, and ſome half ſhares?

Bradinham. Some were able Seamen, and ſome Landmen, or Servants. There were in all 160 ſhares, whereof Capt. Kidd had 40; and ſome of the Men had whole ſhares, and ſome only half ſhares.

Mr Cowper. You told us at firſt, That in your paſſage to New-York, you took a French Banker, and that he condemned her at New-York.

Bradinham. Yes.

Mr Cowper. Did he offer to carry any other Ships he took, to be condemned?

Bradinham. No Sir, never.

Mr Coniers. Call Joſeph Palmer. [who appeared.] Mr Palmer, Give my Lord, and the Jury an account, whether you were one of the Men that went with Capt. Kidd in the Adventure Gally.

Palmer. Yes, I was.

Mr Coniers. Then give an account when you left England; and of your proceedings in your Voyage.

Palmer. About the laſt of April, or the beginning of May, 1696, we went out of Plymouth to New-York; and by the Way took a French Banker. And in July we came to New-York. About the 6th of February we went to Maderas.

Mr Coniers. When you were at New-York, was there any publication of any Thing to invite Men to come in to Captain Kidd?

Palmer. Yes, there were Articles ſet up for Men to come aboard Captain Kidd's Ship. He was to have Forty Shares for his Ship, and every Man was to have a Share. And they were to give him Six Pounds a Man for their Arms.

Mr Coniers. How many Men was his Complement?

Palmer. When he came from New-York, he had between 150 and 160 Men.

Mr Coniers. Give an Account what you did after this. Whither did you go then?

Palmer. We went from New-York to Maderas, and from thence to Bonaviſt, and there we took in Salt; and from thence we went to St. Jago, and there we bought Proviſions; and from thence we went to Madagaſcar. When we were not far from the Cape of good hope, he met with Capt. Warren, with three Sail of Men of War beſides himſelf; there was the Tyger, and the King-fiſher, and another Ship. And Capt. Kidd kept them company about three or four Days, and after that went to Madagaſcar, and ſometime in February arriv'd there; and there we watered and victualled. We came to Malabar about the firſt of June. Then we went to Joanna, and from thence to Mahala; and from thence to Joanna again. And then we met with ſome Indian Merchants, ſo we watered the Ship there, and did them no harm. And from thence we went to Mahala, where Captain Kidd graved his Ship: We had a great ſickneſs in the Ship, and ſometimes we loſt four or five Men in a Day. And afterwards we went to Joanna again, and there came aboard ſeveral French Men, and ſeveral Engliſh Men that had loſt their Ship. Thoſe French Men lent Captain Kidd ſome Money to mend his Ship. And after this, we went to a Place called Mabbee in the Red-Sea, and took in Water, and Guiny Corn that he took from the Natives. And from thence we went to Babs Key.

Mr Coniers. What Time was it that you came to that Babs Key?

Palmer. In July 1697.

Mr Coniers. Now pray tell us what paſſed there.

Palmer. When Captain Kidd came to Babs Key, he ſtayed there about three Weeks.

Mr Coniers. Why did you ſtay there? Tell us the Reaſon of it.

Palmer. I heard him ſay, Come Boys, I will make Money enough out of that Fleet.

Mr Coniers. Out of what Fleet?

Palmer. The Mocco Fleet. When he came to the Key, he ordered ſome of his Men to look out as Spies. He ſent his Boat three Times to make Diſcovery, and he gave them Orders either to take a Priſoner, or to get an Account what Ships lay there. And the Boat went twice, and brought no News; but the third Time they brought Word, that there were Fourteen or Fifteen Ships lying there ready to Sail; ſome of them had Engliſh Colours, ſome Dutch Colours, and ſome Mooriſh Colours; and that there was a great Ship with Red Colours, with her Fore-top-ſail looſe, ready to Sail. And Captain Kidd ordered his Men to take care theſe Ships did not paſs by in the Night.

Mr Coniers. You ſay, he ordered his Men to watch this Fleet, How did he order them?

Palmer. He ordered them by a Liſt in their Turns, to look out for the coming of this Fleet. And ſo after four or five Days the Fleet came down in an Evening, about the 14th or 15th of Auguſt; the next Morning Captain Kidd went after them, and he fell into the Midſt of the Fleet, and there was a Dutch Convoy, and an Engliſh one among them. He went into the midſt of the Fleet, and fired a Gun after a Mooriſh Ship. And the two Men of War fired at us, but did no harm, for they did not reach us. So he left the Fleet, and from thence went to Carawar.

Mr Coniers. Tell what paſſed there.

Palmer. Then we met with a ſmall Veſſel belonging to Aden.

Mr Coniers. What Country did it belong to?

Palmer. Black People, only there was one Thomas Parker, and a Portugueſe Don Antonio on board.

Mr Coniers. Was he the Commander of the Ship?

Palmer. I cannot tell.

Mr Coniers. What did Captain Kidd do with this Ship?

Palmer. He took this Parker for a Pilot, and the Portugueſe for a Linguiſter.

Mr Coniers. What do you mean by that Word Linguiſter?

Palmer. An Interpreter to ſpeak Spaniſh and Portugueſe.

Mr Coniers. Did he take any Thing out of the Ship beſides the Men?

Palmer. He took a Bail of Pepper, and a Bail of Coffee, and let the Ship go. But after this we came to Carawar.

Mr Coniers. Before you let the Ship go, how were the Men uſed by him?

Palmer. He ordered ſome of the Men to be hoiſted up by their Arms, and drubb'd with a naked Cutlaſs. They were laid with their Hands backward.

Mr Coniers. When they were hoiſted up, give an Account how they were uſed, and for what Reaſon.

Palmer. They were beat with a naked Cutlaſs to make them diſcover what Money was aboard.

Mr Coniers. What was the next Thing?

Palmer. He took out this Parker for a Pilot, and Antonio the Portugueſe for a Linguiſter. I heard there was Money taken, but I did not ſee it.

Mr Coniers. What did he do with thoſe Men?

Palmer. He kept them as the other Men were kept.

Mr Coniers. Was there any Demand made of theſe Men?

Palmer. When we came to Carawar, the Factory demanded them, and he denied them.

Mr Coniers. What Factory is this?

Palmer. An Engliſh Factory. There was one Harvey and Maſon came to demand theſe Men.

Mr Coniers. And what ſaid Capt. Kidd to them?

Palmer. He deny'd that he had any ſuch Men, and he kept them in the Hold, I believe a Week. Several of his Men would have left him if they could.

Mr Coniers. What did he do after this?

Palmer. He put to Sea, and met with a Portugueſe Man of War, and fought her; he engaged her five or ſix Hours, and afterwards left her, and then he bought ſome Hogs of the Natives. After he went from this Carawar, he went to Porco, and took in ſome Hogs there. And then went to the Iſland of Malabar, and watered his Ship. And his Cooper went aſhore, and the Natives cut his Throat. And after this, Capt. Kidd ſent ſome Men aſhore, and ordered them, That if they ſhould meet any of the Natives, they ſhould kill 'em, and plunder 'em.

Mr Coniers. Go on, Sir.

Palmer. After That, they went to the Coaſt of Malabar again, and in November met with a Ship, and took her. One Schipper Mitchel was the Commander: She was a Mooriſh Ship.

Mr Coniers. What became of her?

Palmer. Capt. Kidd carried her to Madagaſcar.

Mr Coniers. What Goods were in her?

Palmer. There were two Horſes, and ten Bails of Cotton, that he ſold to the Natives.

Mr Coniers. Did he ſend for any aboard at this Time?

Palmer. There was a Frenchman that was to pretend himſelf the Captain. He took her under French Colours, and haled the Ship in French. And this Monſieur le Roy was to paſs for Captain, and he ſhewed his French Paſs, and ——

Mr Coniers. Give an Account of his perſonating the Captain. Who order'd him to do ſo?

Palmer. Capt. Kidd ordered him to do ſo; and they haled him in French, and he came aboard, and he had a French Paſs. And then Capt. Kidd told him, he was Captain.

Mr Coniers. And he took the Ship?

Palmer. Yes the Cotton, and Horſes, and ſold them afterwards.

Mr. Co[illegible]

Coniers. Whither went you next?

Palmer. We coaſted about the Coaſt of Malabar.

Mr Coniers. Did you meet with any Boats there?

Palmer. Yes, ſeveral.

Mr Coniers. What did you do with them?

Palmer. Capt. Kidd robb'd and plunder'd them, and turn'd them adrift again.

Mr Coniers. What was the next Thing you did?

Palmer. About the Firſt of January we met with a Portugueſe Ship.

Mr Coniers. Where?

Palmer. On the ſame Coaſt. We took her.

Mr Coniers. What did you do with that Ship?

Palmer. He kept her a Week, and took out two Cheſts of Indian Goods, and thirty Jars of Butter, and a Tun of Wax, and half a Tun of Iron, and an hundred Bags of Rice.

Mr Coniers. Did you take thoſe Goods you mention?

Palmer. Yes, and carried them aboard the Adventure Gally.

Mr Coniers. What was the next Ship you met with?

Palmer. The Queda Merchant.

L. C. B. Ward. Be very plain and particular in this, and how She was taken; for this is the Ship in the Indictment, and for taking of which the Priſoners are tryed.

Palmer. About the laſt of January ſhe was taken; I was not then aboard the Gally, for then I was aboard the November, and was ordered to get Water. After three or four Days I went aboard; but I was not aboard at the Time ſhe was taken. About three or four Days after, I ſaw her, and Capt. Kidd was aboard; and I believe there were taken out of her, Goods, to the Value of Ten or Twelve Thouſand Pounds; which were ſold, ſome before they were put aſhore, and ſome after.

Mr Coniers. To whom were they ſold?

Palmer. To the Banians. Capt. Kidd kept the Seamen to help to ſail the Ships.

L. C. B. Ward. What became of the Money the Goods were ſold for?

Palmer. It was ſhared.

L. C. B. Ward. What Share had the Captain?

Palmer. He had forty Shares.

Cl. of Arr. What Share had William Kidd?

Palmer. He had forty Shares.

Cl. of Arr. In Goods, or Money?

Palmer. In both Goods and Money.

Cl. of Arr. Look upon Nich. Churchill, What had he?

Cl. of Arr. Had Darby Mullins any Share?

Palmer. He had a whole Share.

Mr Coniers. What became of the reſt of the Goods?

Palmer. They were carried to Madagaſcar.

Mr Coniers. Who ordered the Goods to be hoiſted out, and ſhared? Who ordered that?

Palmer. At the Beginning I was not there.

Mr Coniers. Who ordered it?

Palmer. Captain Kidd. And moſt of the Goods were a-ſhore before I came back, and before I came back he had his Share, and moſt of the reſt.

Mr Coniers. How many of the Priſoners at the Bar, had their Shares of the Goods?

Palmer. All theſe Men.

Cl. of Arr. Whoſe Shares were divided to them before you went away?

Palmer. None; but only they were prepared in order to be divided.

L. C. B. Ward. Did you hear any of them ſay, They had any Shares?

Palmer. Yes, Hugh Parrot, and Gabriel Loffe.

Cl. of Arr. What ſay you to Will. Kidd? Did he own he had any Share?

Palmer. No.

Cl. of Arr. Did you hear Nich. Churchill ſay he had any?

Cl. of Arr. Did you hear Gabriel Loffe and Hugh Parrot ſay, they had any Shares?

Palmer. Yes, I heard them ſay ſo.

Mr Coniers. Whither did you proceed next?

Palmer. We left Captain Kidd there, I went no further with him.

Mr Coniers. I ask you, whether you met with any Ships, beſides what you mentioned?

Palmer. When we came to Madagaſcar, in the latter end of April, or beginning of May 1696, there was a Ship called the Reſolution, which was formerly called the Moco Frigate; ſeveral of the Men came off to Captain Kidd, and told him, they heard he came to take, and hang them. He ſaid that it was no ſuch thing, and that he would do them all the Good he could. And Captain Culliford came aboard of Captain Kidd, and Captain Kidd went aboard of Culliford.

Mr Coniers. Who was that Culliford?

Palmer. The Captain of the Ship. And on the Quarter-deck they made ſome Bomboo, and drank together, and Captain Kidd ſaid, before I would do you any harm, I would have my Soul fry in Hell-fire; and wiſhed Damnation to himſelf ſeveral times, if he did. And he took the Cup, and wiſhed that might be his laſt, if he did not do them all the Good he could.

Mr Powell. Did you take theſe Men to be Pirates?

Palmer. They were reckoned ſo.

Dr Newton. Did Captain Kidd make Culliford any Preſents?

Palmer. Yes, he had four Guns of him.

Dr Newton. Of whom?

Palmer. Of Captain Kidd, he preſented him with them.

Mr Powell. Was there not a Preſent on the other Side?

Palmer. I believe there was, I have heard ſo; I heard Culliford ſay, I have preſented Captain Kidd to the Value of four or five Hundred Pounds.

Mr Cowper.

Mr Cowper. Were theſe Kindneſſes done to Culliford after Culliford's Men ſaid, they heard that Captain Kidd was come to hang them?

Palmer. Yes.

Mr Cowper. What did Captain Kidd do after that?

Palmer. He went aboard the Quedagh Merchant.

Mr Cowper. What did he do with his own Ship?

Palmer. She was leaky, and he left her.

Mr Cowper. Did he carry, or attempt to carry, any of the Ships he took, in order to condemn them, beſides that French Banker?

Palmer. He never did, nor talked of any ſuch thing.

L. C. B. Ward. Mr Kidd, Will you ask this Witneſs any Queſtions?

Kidd. I ask him, Whether I had no French Paſſes?

Palmer. Indeed Captain Kidd, I cannot tell. I did hear him ſay, that he had French Paſſes, but I never ſaw them.

L. C. B. Ward. Thoſe Goods that were taken out of the Quedagh Merchant, whoſe Goods were they ſuppoſed to be?

Palmer. The Armenian Merchants. I have heard Captain Kidd ſay ſeveral times, he had French Paſſes.

Kidd. And did you hear no Body elſe ſay ſo?

Palmer. No.

Cl. of Arr. Churchill, Will you ask him any Queſtions?

Churchill. My Lord, I have no Queſtions to ask him.

Cl. of Arr. James Howe, Will you ask him any Queſtions?

J. Howe. No.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Lamley, Will you ask him any Queſtions?

Robert Lamley. No.

Cl. of Arr. Will. Jenkins, Will you ask him any Queſtions?

William Jenkins. Had I half a Share?

Palmer. You received half a Share of Money, and a whole Share of Goods.

Will. Jenkins. You know that I was a Servant, and had nothing in this Voyage but what my Maſter had.

Cl. of Arr. Gabriel Loffe, Will you ask him any Queſtions?

Richard Barlicorn. No.

Cl. of Arr. Abel Owens, Will you ask him any Thing?

Abel Owens. No.

Cl. of Arr. Darby Mullins, Will you ask him any Thing?

Darby Mullins. No.

Kidd. It is in vain to ask any Queſtions.

L. C. B. Ward. Then you may make your own Defence. Come Mr Kidd, what have you to ſay in your own Defence?

Kidd. I had a Commiſſion to take the French, and Pirates, and in order to that, I came up with two Ships, that had French Paſſes both of them. I called you all a Deck to conſult; and did not a great many of the Men go aboard? Did not you go? You know, Mr Palmer, I would have given theſe Ships to them again, but you would not; you all voted againſt it.

Palmer. This Man (pointing to the Armenian, that was in Court) offered you twenty thouſand Rupees for the Ship, and you refuſed it.

Kidd. Did not I ask, Where will you carry this Ship? And you ſaid, we will make a Prize of her, we will carry her to Madagaſcar.

Palmer. Says Captain Kidd to his Men, Theſe Armenians make ſuch a Noiſe for the Ship, that I muſt ſay, my Men will not part with her; but there was not a quarter part of the Men concerned in it. The Armenians came crying and wringing their Hands: Upon which, ſays Captain Kidd, I muſt ſay, my Men will not give them the Ship. And ſo ſome of the Men went on the Fore-caſtle, and pretended, they would not give them the Ship; but there was not a quarter part of the Men concerned in it.

L. C. B. Ward. Did thoſe Goods belong to Frenchmen, or Armenians?

Palmer. To Armenians.

L. C. B. Ward. What was that Pretence of a French Paſs that was on Board the Quedagh Merchant?

Palmer. I ſaw none.

Kidd. But you have heard of it.

Palmer. I have heard of it, but never ſaw it.

L. C. B. Ward. Mr Kidd, have you any more to ſay? You ſpeak of a Commiſſion that you had, you may have it read if you pleaſe.

Kidd. I deſire to have them both read.

L. C. B. Ward. Yes, they ſhall.

Then his Commiſſion for Repriſals upon the French, was Read.

Orlando Gee, Reg.

Mr. Just. Powel. Capt. Kid, Can you make it appear there was a French Pass aboard the Queda Merchant?

Will. Kid. My Lord, these Men say, They heard several say so.

Mr. Coniers. But all came from you.

L. C. B. Ward, If there was a French Pass in the Ship, you ought to have condemned her as Prize.

Then his other Commission was Read for cruising against the Pirates.

WILLIAM Rex,

WILLIAM III. By the Grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. To our trusty and well-beloved Capt. William Kid, Commander of the Ship Adventure Gally, or to any other, the Commander of the same for the time being, Greeting, Whereas, We are inform'd, that Capt. Thomas Too, John Ireland, Capt. Thomas Wake, and Capt. William Maze, or Mace, and other Our Subjects, Natives, or Inhabitants of New England, New York, and elsewhere, in Our Plantations in America, have associated themselves with divers other wicked and ill-disposed Persons, and do against the Law of Nations, daily commit many and great Piracies, Robberies, and Depredations upon the Seas in the parts of America, and in other parts, to the great hindrance and discouragement of Trade and Navigation, and to the danger and hurt of Our loving Subjects, Our Allies, and all others Navigating the Seas upon their lawful Occasions: Now Know Ye, That We being desirous to prevent the aforesaid Mischiefs; and as far as in Us lyes, to bring the said Pirates, Freebooters, and Sea-Rovers to Justice, have thought fit, and do hereby Give, and Grant unto you the said Capt. William Kid (to whom Our Commissioners for Exercising the Office of Our Lord high Admiral of England, have Granted a Commission as a private Man of War bearing date the Eleventh day of December, 1695.) and unto the Commander of the said Ship for the time being, and unto the Officers, Mariners and others which shall be under your Command, full Power and Authority, to Apprehend, Seize, and take into your Custody, as well the said Capt. Thomas Too, John Ireland, Capt. Thomas Wake, and Capt. William Maze, or Mace, as all such Pirates, Freebooters, and Sea-Rovers, being either Our own Subjects, or of other Nations associated with them, which you shall meet with upon the Coasts or Seas of America, *or in any other Seas, or Ports, with their Ships and Vessels, and also such Merchandizes, Money, Goods and Wares, as shall be found on board, or with them, in case they shall willingly yield themselves. L. C. B. Ward. Now you have had the Commiſſions Read, What do you excuſe your ſelf by? What uſe do you make of them to juſtifie or defend your ſelf?

Will. Kidd. About this Queda Merchant.

L. C. B. Ward. What would you have her a French Ship?

Will. Kidd. Under a French Commiſſion. The Maſter was a Tavern-keeper at Suratt: Do not you know that, Mr. Palmer?

Joſ. Palmer. I was not on board when this Paſs came, I never ſaw it.

L. C. B. Ward. But then you ſhould have Condemned this Ship, if ſhe had been a French Ship, or had a French Paſs.

Will. Kidd. The Evidence ſays, it was by my order that the Goods were taken out; I was not at the ſharing of the Goods, I knew nothing of it.

L. C. B. Ward. Out of the Goods that were taken, ſome were ſold in the Country there, and the produce of them was ſo much money; it is proved, that that money was divided; and purſuant to the Articles ſet up, you were to have forty Shares, and the reſt of the Men whole, or half Shares as they deſerved. Now this money both theſe Men Swear, it was taken by you. And the firſt Swears, That the Goods not ſold then, that remained in the Ship were alſo divided, and that you had forty ſhares of them. And the other ſays, he did not ſee the Goods divided, but two of the Men acknowledged it.

Will. Kidd. My Lord, this Frenchman was aboard five or ſix Days before I underſtood there was any Engliſhman aboard. Well, ſaid I, What are you? An Engliſhman, I am Maſter. What have you to ſhew for it? Nothing (ſays he.) When they ſee a French Paſs, they will not let the Ship go.

Mr. J. Powel. You have produced Letters Patents that impowered you to take Pirates, why did you not take Culliford?

Will. Kidd. A great many of the Men were gone a-ſhore.

Mr. J. Powel. But you preſented him with great Guns, and ſwore you would not meddle with them.

L. C. B. Ward. When the Queſtion was put, Are you come to take us, and hang us? You anſwered, I will fry in Hell before I will do you any harm.

Will. Kidd. That is only what theſe Witneſſes ſay.

L. C. B. Ward. Did you not go aboard Culliford?

Will. Kidd. I was not aboard Culliford.

L. C. B. Ward. Theſe things preſs very hard upon you. We ought to let you know what is obſerved, that you may make your Defence as well as you can.

Will. Kidd. I deſire Mr. Davis may be called (he was called accordingly, and appeared) Mr. Davis, pray give an account whether you did not ſee a French Paſs?

L. C. B. Ward. You are his Witneſs, you muſt anſwer what he asks you.

Mr. Davis. I came a Paſſenger from Madagaſcar, and from thence to Amboyna, and there he ſent his Boat a-ſhore, and this Man was a-ſhore; and there was one ſaid, Capt. Kidd, was publiſhed a Pirate in England; and he gave thoſe Paſſes to him to Read. The Captain ſaid, they were French.

L. C. B. Ward. Who gave them?

Mr. Davis. Captain Kidd gave them.

L. C. B. Ward. Did you know any thing of taking the Queda Merchant?

Mr. Davis. No, no.

L. C. B. Ward. Then you cannot ſay, they have any relation to the Queda Merchant.

Mr. Davis. No, not I.

Will. Kidd. You heard Capt. Elms ſay, They were French Paſſes.

Mr. Davis. Yes, I heard Capt. Elms ſay, They were French Paſſes. Says he, if you will, I can turn them into Latin.

Mr. B. Hatſel. Have you any more to ſay, Capt. Kidd?

Will. Kidd. I have ſome Papers, but my Lord Bellamont keeps them from me, that I cannot bring them before the Court.

Cl. of Arr. Have you any more to ſay?

Will. Kidd. I have ſome to call, that will bear teſtimony to my Reputation.

L. C. B. Ward. Call whom you pleaſe, we will not abridge you.

Kidd. Call Mr. Bradinham. I deſire this of him, whether he never ſaw the French Paſſes, and whether he did not tell Coll. Baſs ſo.

R. Bradinham. I never ſaw a French Paſs, I only heard ſo.

Coll. Baſs. I have heard Mr. Bradinham ſay, he heard Capt. Kidd ſay he had French Paſſes on Board, but I never heard him ſay he ſaw them Paſſes.

Kidd. He juſt now denied that he ever ſaw the French Paſſes, or heard of them.

L. C. B. Ward. He ſays ſo now, that he never ſaw them, only he heard you ſay ſo. Coll. Baſs, have you heard him ſay the Paſſes related to the Quedah Merchant?

Coll. Baſs. He has often ſaid he heard Kidd ſay the French Paſſes were aboard.

Cl. of Arr. Have you any more Witneſſes to call?

Kidd. I deſire Mr. Say may be called, he is in the Priſon, I deſire he may be ſent for.

L. C. B. Ward. We will give you all the liberty you can expect, if you have any more, you were beſt call them all together. In the mean time what ſay you, Churchill?

N. Churchill. I deſire Coll. Baſs may be called, and that this Affidavit may be read.

L. C. B. Ward. Colonel Baſs, what have you to ſay for N. Churchill?

Coll. Baſs. My Lord, I only wait for his queſtion.

L. C. B. Ward. Churchill, what will you ask Coll. Baſs?

N. Churchill. Whether I did not Surrender my ſelf to him.

L. C. B. Ward. If you can make your Caſe come within the Proclamation, you muſt make it appear that you Surrendred according to the Directions of it.

N. Churchill. My Lord, we came in, in the Year 1699, and Surrendred our ſelves to Coll. Baſs.

L. C. B. Ward. If you can make it appear that you Surrendred your ſelves in purſuance of that, to the Perſons appointed to receive your Surrender, that that will be ſomewhat to the Point; but Colonel Baſs had not Power by that Proclamation to receive your Surrender, and therefore you cannot have any Benefit by it, unleſs you can bring your Caſe within it. But you may call Col. Baſs, if you will.

Churchill. My Lord, we came in upon that Proclamation, and might have gone away any Day if we would; but we ſtay'd in the Country, and we never offered to go away till it was my Lord Bellamont's Pleaſure to ſend for us.

L. C. B. Ward. You may call Col. Baſs, and hear what he ſays.

Churchill. Col. Baſs, will you be pleaſed to tell my Lord whether we did not ſurrender our ſelves to you in purſuance of the King's Proclamation.

Col. Baſs. My Lord, about the 29th of May, 1699, I had an Account of ſome Perſons, that were ſuppoſed Pirates, that were come to ſurrender themſelves; and on my Landing, theſe two Perſons came to me, and ſurrendered to me the 4th of June, 1699. And I told them I muſt refer their Caſe to his Majeſty at home.

L. C. B. Ward. Who were they that ſurrendred to you?

Coll. Baſs. Nicholas Churchill, and James Howe.

L. C. B. Ward. Where were you Governour?

Coll. Baſs. At the Province of Weſt-Jerſey.

Dr Oxenden. How came they here?

Coll. Baſs. I left them under Bail.

L. C. B. Ward. Did you ſend them over?

Col. Baſs. No, my Lord, I came to England before: I left them in Cuſtody. They were ſent over Priſoners by my Succeſſor.

L. C. B. Ward. What did they ſay to you when they ſurrendred themſelves to you?

Col. Baſs. They ſaid they had been in the Indies, and that they had committed ſeveral Piracies, and deſired they might have the Benefit of his Majeſty's Proclamation.

L. C. B. Ward. What Pirates did they mention to you?

Col. Baſs. They mentioned the Moco Frigate, and Capt. Kidd.

Dr Oxenden. Had you the Proclamation?

Col. Baſs. No, but I had ſeen one of them.

L. C. B. Ward. Did you take your ſelf allowed to receive their Surrender?

Col. Baſs. No, my Lord, I did not.

Cl. of Arr. Nicholas Churchill, have you quite done?

N. Churchill and James Howe. Yes, Sir, we came in upon his Majeſty's Proclamation.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Lamley, what have you to ſay?

Robert Lamley. My Lord, I was but a Servant.

L. C. B. Ward. Who was you a Servant to?

Robert Lamley. To Mr Owens.

L. C. B. Ward. How does that appear?

Robert Lamley. The Surgeon knows it.

Bradinham. My Lord, he was concerned with the Cook.

Robert Lamley. My Lord, here is my Indenture (which was read.)

Cl. of Arr. William Jenkins, what have you to ſay?

William Jenkins. I have nothing to ſay, but I was a Servant to Mr Bullen

L. C. B. Ward. Where is your Witneſs to prove it?

Jenkins. Both the King's Witneſſes know it.

Bradinham and Palmer. My Lord, he was his Servant.

Cl. of Arr. Gabriel Loff, what ſay you for your ſelf?

Loff. My Lord, about the Year 1696, I entered my ſelf on Board Captain Kidd, and went out with him, and I never diſobeyed his Command in any Thing.

L. C. B. Ward. Did he go out under the firſt Commiſſion?

Palmer. He came aboard at New-York.

L. C. B. Ward. Did you take him in before, or after the Articles were ſet up.

Palmer. After the Articles were ſet up.

L. C. B. Ward. Did Captain Kidd take any Notice of his Commiſſions in the Articles?

Palmer. Yes, my Lord, he did mention them. I have a Copy of the Articles.

Mr Crawley. Mr Palmer, are theſe Articles the Copy of the Articles ſet up by Captain Kidd, at New-York?

Palmer. Yes.

Mr J. Gould. Did you examine them?

Palmer. To the beſt of my Knowledge they were a true Copy.

Mr J. Turton. Did you compare them with the Original?

Palmer. No, my Lord.

Cl. of Arr. Gabriel Loff, Have you any more to ſay?

Loff. Yes, a great deal more to ask the Evidence.

Cl. of Arr. What will you ask them?

Loff. Whether I did not obey the Captain.

Mr J. Tourton. There is no ſcruple to be made of that.

Loff. I went out to ſerve his Majeſty under his Commiſſion.

L. C. B. Ward. But how came you to take part of the Money?

Loff. I had what they pleaſed to give me.

L. C. B. Ward. You muſt needs imagine, that when Captain Kidd did theſe extravagant Things, and divided the Money and Goods, that he did not act according to his Commiſſion. What could you think of it?

Cl. of Arr. Hugh Parrot, what have you to ſay for your ſelf?

Parrot. My Lord, in the Year 1695, in the Month of October, I ſailed out of Plymouth in a Merchant-man, bound for Cork in Ireland, there to take in Proviſions; thence to the Iſland of Barbadoes; and in ſight of the Iſland of Barbadoes, I was taken by a French Privateer, and carried to Martinico; and thence coming in a Tranſport-Ship, I was brought to Barbadoes, there I Ship'd my ſelf in a Veſſel bound to Newfoundland, and thence to Maderas. And then I went to Madagaſcar; and there I ſtay'd ſome ſhort time after, and came in Company with Captain Kidd; and then the Commander and I had a falling out, and ſo I went aſhore at that Iſland. And underſtanding that Captain Kidd had a Commiſſion from the King, I came aboard Captain Kidd's Ship, and ever ſince have been with him.

L. C. B. Ward. Did you come to him after he had been at New-York?

Parrot. This was in the Year 1697.

L. C. B. Ward. You have acted with him, and ſhared with him. Could you imagine he was acting according to his Commiſſion, when he was doing theſe Things?

Parrot. I thought I was ſafe where the King's Commiſſion was.

L. C. B. Ward. The Commiſſion was to take Pirates, and not to turn Pirates.

Parrot. Mr Palmer, did you ever ſee me guilty of an ill Thing? Did I ever diſobey my Captain?

Palmer. You were always obedient to your Commander.

Farrot. Then I came to Madagaſcar with Captain Kidd, where I might have gone aboard a known Pirate, but I refuſed it, and kept cloſe to my Captain: And when I came to New-England, I might have gone away as others did; but I had my Liberty at Boſton for above a Week, and went up and down, and I ſurrendered my ſelf.

L. C. B. Ward. You did not ſurrender your ſelf, but only you had a liberty to go away, and did not.

Parrot. I thought there was no need of it. My Lord, I deſire you will ask the Witneſs whether I ever diſobeyed the Captain's Commands.

L. C. B. Ward. They ſay no otherwiſe, but that you went willingly.

Cl. of Arr. Richard Barlicorn, what have you to ſay?

Barlicorn. My Lord, I beg leave that I may produce ſome Evidence for my Reputation. Here is a Certificate from the Pariſh where I was born.

L. C. B. Ward. That will ſignify nothing, we cannot read Certificates, they muſt ſpeak Viva Voce.

Barlicorn. Call Benjamin Bond, Daniel Phillips, and James Newton.

L. C. B. Ward. What do you call theſe Witneſſes for?

Barlicorn. To give an Account of my Reputation, what they know of me.

Benj. Bond. I knew him when he was a Child, and he was very civil and honeſt; I lived near him till he was 13 or 14 Years old. And he came of honeſt Parents, and behaved himſelf very civily all that time.

L. C. B. Ward. Have you known any Thing of him ſince?

Bond. No, my Lord.

L. C. B. Ward. What have you to ſay further?

Barlicorn. My Lord, I was a Servant to Captain Kidd, and I have been with him ſix Years; and I have a Certificate from ſeveral of my Relations that will teſtify it.

Cl. of Arr. R. Barlicorn, have you any Thing more to ſay?

Barlicorn. I am a Servant to Captain Kidd.

L. C. B. Ward. How long have you been ſo? Where was it that you came firſt to be his Servant?

Barlicorn. At Carolina.

Cl. of Arr. Abel Owens, what ſay you for your ſelf?

Owens. My Lord, I deſire the Privilege of the Proclamation. I entred my ſelf into the King's Service. I have been in the King's Service, according to his Majeſty's Proclamation. I deſire it may be read. (which was done.)

L. C. B. Ward. You deſire the Benefit of this Proclamation, but you muſt bring your ſelf under the Qualifications it requires, if you would have any Benefit by it.

Mr Crawley. He has a Certificate of it.

L. C. B. Ward. Is it within the Proclamation?

Mr Crawley. The Certificate is dated the 15th of March, 1700, from Mr Riches, a Juſtice of the Peace in Southwark.

L. C. B. Ward. Mr Riches, I ſuppoſe, did believe he was within this Proclamation.

Mr J. Gould. The Pardon extends to all Perſons for Piracies committed before that Time, if they ſurrender themſelves to ſuch and ſuch, and enter themſelves on Board one of his Majeſty's Ships.

Mr Coniers. A Juſtice of the Peace is not within the Proclamation.

Cl. of Arr. Have you any more to ſay?

Owens. Only to deſire the Benefit of that Proclamation.

L. C. B. Ward. He ſurrendered himſelf to Juſtice Riches, and then entred himſelf aboard one of his Majeſty's Ships; and then there was Evidence againſt him, when on board, and he was ſeized. This may be fit to recommend him to the King's Mercy, but it is not a Defence againſt the Accuſation.

Cl. of Arr. Darby Mullins, what do you ſay for your ſelf?

Mullins. I came in upon the King's Act of Grace, I came aſhore with the reſt of the People.

L. C. B. Ward. What have you to ſhew, to intitle you to the Benefit of this Proclamation?

Mullins. I was ready to die of the Bloody Flux, and not able to go my ſelf, but I ſent my Name in to the Governour.

L. C. B. Ward. Where was you when you was ſo ſick?

Mullins. In Weſt-Jerſey. I came aſhore in Cape May. I was ſick like to die all the Way from Madagaſcar, expecting every Minute to die with the Bloody Flux.

Dr Oxenden. How came you to leave Captain Kidd?

Mullins. He uſed me very hardly, and therefore I left him.

L. C. B. Ward. You had a Dividend of the Money and Goods.

Mullins. He gave it me, and afterwards took it from me.

L. C. B. Ward. Was he your Maſter?

Mullins. I had no Maſter.

Dr Oxenden. How did you come to Jerſey?

Mullins. I came there with Captain Shelly, he is in Court.

Dr Oxenden. You were aboard Captain Culliford.

Mullins. I came home in hopes to get the King's Pardon.

L. C. B. Ward. That which you ſay is very odd, though you quitted Captain Kidd's Ship, you went into Culliford's.

L. C. B. Ward. Captain Kidd, you ſaid you had more to ſay juſt now; if you have, let us hear it.

Kidd. I deſire this Man may be heard two or three Words.

L. C. B. Ward. What is his Name?

Kidd. Mr Say.

Mr Say. I happened to be at the Treaſury-Office in Broad-ſtreet to receive ſome Money, and Mr White was there; and he asked me, will you go along with me, and ſee one Elbury that is in the Marſhalſea for Debt? ſays I, I am a Stranger to him, I do not care to go. Says he, bear me Company. So I went with him, and when I came there, I ſaw Captain Kidd's Men. And this Mr Elbury was in n Company with Captain Kidd's Surgeon. Says I, I am a Brother of the Quill, I ſhould be glad to drink a Glaſs with you. We ſtayed there but a little while, and asked what that Man was; ſays he, he is Captain Kidd's Surgeon. Upon this I ſaid, here is a mighty Noiſe about Capt. Kidd; ſays he, I believe he has done nothing but what he can anſwer, or that can do him any hurt. Says I, where have you been with him? He ſaid, at Madagaſcar.

L. C. B. Ward. Mr Bradinham was with them, there is no doubt of that. It is not to be queſtioned that he would not ſay any Thing Ill of them then. Captain Kidd, have you any Thing more to ſay?

Kidd. Call Captain Humphrys, (who appeared.)

L. C. B. Ward. What Queſtions would you ask him?

Kidd. What do you know of me?

Capt. Humphrys. I knew you, Sir, in the Weſt-Indies in the beginning of the late War, and I know you had the Applauſe of the General, as I can ſhew by the General's Letter. I know nothing further of you.

Kidd. Did you know any Thing that I was Guilty of any Piracies?

Humphrys. No, but you had a general Applauſe for what you had done from time to time.

L. C. B. Ward. How long was this ago?

Humphrys. Twelve Years ago.

L. C. B. Ward. That was before he was turned Pirate.

Kidd. Call Captain Bond, (who appeared.)

L. C. B. Ward. What do you call him for?

Kidd. Capt. Bond, pray will you give an Account what you know of me.

Capt. Bond. I know you was very uſeful at the beginning of the War in the Weſt-Indies.

Mr B. Hatſell. To be ſure they had a good Opinion of him in 1695, when they granted him the Commiſſion.

Kidd. There is nothing in the World can make it appear I was guilty of Piracy, I kept Company with Captain Warren for ſix Days.

Mr Coniers. I believe you kept Company more with Captain Culliford, than with Captain Warren.

Kidd. I never deſigned to do any ſuch Thing.

Mr Coniers. My Lord, we will ſay nothing at all, but leave it to your Lordſhip to direct the Jury.

Kidd. I have many Papers for my Defence, if I could have had them.

L. C. B. What Papers were they?

Kidd. My French Paſſes.

L. C. B. Ward. Where are they?

Kidd. My Lord Bellamont had them.

L. C. B. Ward. If you had had the French Paſſes, you ſhould have condemned Ships.

Kidd. I could not becauſe of the Mutiny in my Ship.

L. C. B. Ward. If you had any Thing of Diſability upon you, to make your Defence, you ſhould have objected it at the beginning of your Trial; what you mean by it now, I cannot tell. If you have any Thing more to ſay, you may ſay it, the Court is ready to hear you.

L. C. B. Ward. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoners at the Bar, W. Kidd, N. Churchill, J. Howe, R. Lamley, Will. Jenkins, Gabriel Loff, Hugh Parrot, Rich. Barlicorn, Abel Owens, and Darby Mullins, in Number Ten; ſtand all here Indicted for the Crime of Piracy, charged to be committed by them. And the Inſtance of the Crime, is for Feloniouſly and Piratically Seizing and Taking the Ship called the Quedagh Merchant, with the Apparel and Tackling thereof, to the value of 400 l. and divers Goods mentioned in the Indictment, to the value of 4500 l. the Goods of ſeveral Perſons unknown, from the Mariners of the ſaid Ship, and this at High Sea, within the Juriſdiction of the Court of Admiralty, about ten Leagues from Cutſheen in the Eaſt-Indies the 30th of January, 1697, and in the 9th Year of his Majeſty's Reign. Now whether all, or any, and which of theſe Priſoners are guilty of this Crime of Piracy laid in this Indictment; or not guilty, it is your Part to determine according to the Evidence that has been given on both Sides. The Crime charged on them is Piracy, that is, Seizing and Taking this Ship and Goods in it Piratically and Feloniouſly; the Time and Place is laid alſo in the Indictment. To make good this Accuſation, the King's Council have produced their Evidence; and two Witneſſes have been examined in this Caſe, each of them were in the Ship which took the Quedagh Merchant, and very well acquainted with all the Proceedings, that is, Robert Bradinham, and Joſeph Palmer. The firſt has given you an Hiſtorical Account of the whole Proceedings of Captain Kidd, from his firſt going out of England in the Adventure Galley, to the Time of this Fact charged on them. They tell you, that about May 1696, the King intruſted this Captain Kidd with two Commiſſions, and they were both read to you. By one of them, under the Admiralty Seal, he was Authorized to ſet out as a Privateer the Adventure Galley, and therewith to Take and Seize the Ships and Goods belonging to the French King, or his Subjects, and ſuch other as were liable to Confiſcation. And by the other Commiſſion under the Broad Seal of England, Authority was given for the taking of ſome Pirates by Name, and all other Pirates in the ſeveral Places therein mentioned. But in no ſort to offend or moleſt any of the King's Friends or Allies, their Ships or Subjects by Colour thereof. And by both Commiſſions command was given to bring all ſuch Ships and Goods, as ſhould be taken to legal Trials and Condemnations. They tell us, that this Ship ſet out from Plymouth about May, 1696, and that in their Paſſage, they did take a French Ship, and they did condemn that Ship. Now Gentlemen, you muſt bear this in your Minds, that to make it Piracy, it muſt be the taking Piratically and Feloniouſly upon the High Sea, within the Juriſdiction of the Admiralty of England, the Goods of a Friend, that is ſuch as are in Amity with the King. Now you ſee what Way they went to work, and what Meaſures they took. Captain Kidd goes out, and goes to New-York; and when he was there, he has a Project in his Head of ſetting up Articles between himſelf and the People that were willing to be concerned with him: For now whether it ſeems more probable from what followed that Captain Kidd deſigned to manage himſelf according to the Meaſures given him, and the Powers of his Commiſſions, or another Way, you muſt conſider; for it is told you that between 150, and 160 Men came in under thoſe Articles, whereof the other Priſoners were part and concerned in them. And as to thoſe Articles, the Import of them was, that whatever ſhould be taken by theſe People in their Expeditions, ſhould be divided into 160 Parts, whereof Captain Kidd was to have 40 Shares for his Part, and the reſt were to have according to the Merit of each Party, ſome whole Shares, and ſome half Shares.

Now after theſe Articles, you perceive what Progreſs they made, and what Courſe they took. They went from one place to another, and uſed a pretty deal of Severity where-ever they came. A deſign they had to go into the Red-Sea, and they had expectations of the Moco Fleet that lay at Moco, and they ſent their Spies three times to get Intelligence. The two firſt times they could make no Diſcovery; but the third time they made an effectual Diſcovery that the Fleet was ready to Sail; and in the mean time Capt. Kidd lay there in expectation of this Fleet; and as the firſt Witneſs tells you, Capt. Kidd ſaid he intended to make a Voyage out of this Fleet. Well, he had a Diſcovery of this Fleet, and they came accordingly, and they tell you, that he and his Men in the Ship did attack one of the Ships: But theſe Ships being guarded by two Men of War, he could make nothing of them, however he ſhewed what his intention and deſign was. Could he have proved that what he did was in purſuance of his Commiſſions, it had been ſomething: But what had he to do to make any attack on theſe Ships, the Owners and Freighters whereof, were in Amity with the King; this does not appear to be an action ſuitable to his Commiſſion. After he had done this, he came to Land, and there, and afterwards at Sea, purſued ſtrange Methods, as you have heard. The ſeeming juſtification he depends on, is his Commiſſions; now it muſt be obſerved how he acted with relation to them, and what irregularities he went by. He came to a place in the Indies, and ſent his Cooper aſhore, and that Cooper was killed by the Natives; and he uſes Barbarity, and ties an Indian to a Tree, and ſhoots him to Death. Now he went from place to place, and committed Hoſtilities upon ſeveral Ships, dealing very ſeverely with the People.

But this being ſomething foreign to the Indictment, and not the Facts for which the Priſoners at Bar are Indicted, we are confined to the Quedagh Merchant; but what he did before ſhews his Mind and Intentions not to act by his Commiſſions, which warrant no ſuch things. Gentlemen, you have an account that he met with this Ship the Quedagh Merchant at Sea, and took her; that this Ship belonged to People in Amity with the King of England; that he ſeized this Ship, and divers Goods were taken out of her, and ſold, and the Money divided purſuant to the heads contained in thoſe Articles ſet up at New-York. The Witneſſes that ſpeak to that, come home to every one of the Priſoners: They tell you that this Dividend was made, that Capt. Kidd had 40 Shares of the Money, and the reſt of the Priſoners had their proportions according to the Articles, ſome whole Shares, and ſome a half Share of that Money. After they had ſeized on the Ship, you hear of a certain ſort of project, that a French Man ſhould come and pretend himſelf the Maſter, and produce, or pretend to produce a French Paſs, under a colour that theſe Peoples Ship and Goods, who were Moors, ſhould be French Men's Ship and Goods, or Sailed under a French Paſs, and ſo juſtify what they did under the colour of his Commiſſion from the King. Now no Man knows the Mind and Intention of another, but as it may be diſcovered by his Actions. If he would have this to be underſtood to be his Intention, or that it was a reality, that he took this as a French Ship, or under a French Paſs, then he ought to have had the Ship and Goods inventoried, and Condemned, according to Law, that he might have had what proportion belonged to him, and that the King might have had what belonged to him, as his Commiſſions directed. But here was nothing of that done, but the Money and Goods that were taken were ſhared; and you have an account likewiſe how ſome of the Goods were ſold, and the Money diſpoſed of, and how the remaining Goods were diſpoſed of; and one Witneſs ſpeaks poſitively of the diſtribution of the Goods that remain'd unſold, that they were divided according to the ſame proportions as the Articles mentioned, and every one of the Priſoners had his Share. There belonged 40 Shares to Capt. Kidd, and Shares and half Shares to the reſt.

Now this is the great Caſe that is before you, on which the Indictment turns. The Ship and Goods, as you have heard, are ſaid by the Witneſſes, to be the Goods of the Armenians, and other People that were in Amity with the King; and Capt. Kidd would have them to be the Goods of French Men, or at leaſt that the Ship was Sailed under French Paſſes. Now if it were ſo, as Capt. Kidd ſays, it was a lawful Prize, and liable to Confiſcation, but if they were the Goods of Perſons in Amity with the King, and the Ship was not Navigated under French Paſſes, it is very plain it was a Piratical taking of them. Gentlemen, it is to be conſidered what Evidence Capt. Kidd hath given to prove that Ship and Goods to belong to the French King, or his Subjects, or that the Ship was Sailed under a French Paſs, or indeed that ever there was a French Paſs ſhewn or ſeen. He appeals indeed to the Witneſſes over and over again, Did you never ſee it? No, ſay they: Nor did not you, ſaith he, ſay you ſaw it? No, ſaith the Witneſs, I ſaid that Capt. Kidd ſaid he had a French Paſs, but I never ſaw it. Now after all, the taking of the Quedagh Merchant is brought down to Mr. Kidd, and the Priſoners with others, and the diſtribution of the Money produced by the Sale of the Goods among Mr. Kidd, and his Crew, whereof every one of theſe Priſoners were preſent at the ſame time, and had Proportions.

Now Gentlemen, this muſt be obſerved, if this was a Capture on the High Sea, and theſe were the Goods of Perſons in Amity with the King, and had no French Paſs, then it is a plain Piracy. And if you believe the Witneſſes, here is a taking of the Goods and Ship of Perſons in Amity, and converting them to their own Uſe. Such a taking at Land as this would be Felony, and being at Sea it will be Piracy: For this is a taking the Ship from the right Owners, and turning it to their own uſe. So that you have Evidence as to the Seizing of the Ship, and dividing the Money riſing from the Goods ſold, and ſharing the remainder according to the Articles.

Now, what does Capt. Kidd ſay to all this? He has told you he acted purſuant to his Commiſſion; but that cannot be, unleſs he gives you ſatisfaction that the Ship and Goods belonged to the French King, or his Subjects, or that the Ship had a French Paſs, otherwiſe neither of them will excuſe him from being a Pirate; for if he takes the Goods of Friends he is a Pirate, he had no Authority for that: There is no colour from either of his Commiſſions for him to take them. And as to the French Paſſes, there is nothing of that appears by any Proof, and for ought I can ſee, none

ſaw them but himſelf, if there were ever any. It is proved that the People that were Owners of the Goods, made him very large Offers to redeem the Ship (Twenty Thouſand Rupees, as I remember) but he would not accept their Propoſal; but ſaid, That is a ſmall Summ, the Cargo is worth a great deal more, or to that effect: And further ſaid, he muſt anſwer theſe People, that his Men will not part with it. And a French Man was to be ſet up for a Mock buſineſs, as you have heard; and if the Witneſſes ſay true, they were ſaid by the Captain of the Ship to be, and were reputed to be, the Ship and Goods of Friends, and not of Enemies; and if they were ſo, and had no French Paſs, then is he, and thoſe that were concerned with him, guilty of Piratically taking this Ship, and of Piratically ſeizing the Goods in the Ship; and neither of his Commiſſions will juſtify ſuch an Action as this. If he had acted purſuant to his Commiſſion, he ought to have condemned the Ship and Goods, if they were a French Intereſt, or Sailed under a French Paſs; but by his not condemning them, he ſeems to ſhew his Aim, Mind and Intention, that he did not act in that Caſe by virtue of his Commiſſion, but quite contrary to it; for he takes the Ship, and ſhares the Money and Goods, and is taken in that very Ship by my Lord Bellamont, and he had continued in that Ship till that time, ſo that there is no colour or pretence appears, that he intended to bring this Ship to England, to be condemned, or to have condemned it in any of the Engliſh Plantations, having diſpoſed of the whole Cargo as aforeſaid. Here I muſt leave it to you, to conſider whether, according to the Evidence that appears, there is any Ground for him to ſay, he has acted by his Commiſſion in taking the Quedagh Merchant and Goods in her, or whether he has not acted contrary thereunto.

Now for himſelf he has called ſome Perſons here, to give an account of his Reputation, and of his Services done in the Weſt Indies; and one of them ſays, about 10 or 12 Years, he did good Service there. Why ſo he might, and might have, and 'tis very like he had ſuch Reputation, when the King truſted him with theſe Commiſſions, elſe I believe he had never had them; ſo that whatever he might be ſo many Years ago, that is not a matter to be inſiſted on now, but what he hath been ſince, and how he hath acted in this matter charged againſt him. So that, Gentlemen, as to Mr. Kidd, I muſt leave it to you, whether he is Guilty of Piracy or no, and if you believe him Guilty upon the Evidence, you will find him ſo, if not you will acquit him.

Now for the other Priſoners, it is proved they were all concerned in taking and ſharing the Ship and Goods in the Indictment; yet their Circumſtances differ pretty much among themſelves. There are three of them, that it has been made out to you, and owned by the King's Witneſſes that they were Servants. Robert Lamley, William Jenkins, Richard Barlicorn. All theſe are made out to be Servants, and you have had the Indentures of two of them produced, and the King's Witneſſes prove them ſo, and they were admitted to be Servants. Now, Gentlemen, there muſt go an Intention of the Mind, and a Freedom of the Will, to the committing a Felony or Piracy. A Pirate is not to be underſtood to be under conſtraint, but a free Agent; for in this Caſe, the bare Act will not make him Guilty, unleſs the Will make it ſo. Now a Servant, it is true, if he go voluntarily, and have his Proportion, he muſt be accounted a Pirate, for then he acts upon his own account, and not by Compulſion. And theſe perſons, according to the Evidence, received their Part, but whether they accounted to their Maſters for their ſhares afterwards, yea or no, as they pretend, but make no proof of it, I muſt leave that to you; and therefore there is a conſideration to be had of them. For if theſe Men did go under the Compulſion of their Maſters, to whom they were Servants, and not voluntarily, and upon their own Accounts, it may difference their Caſe from others, who went and acted willingly in this matter, and upon their own Accounts. So that as to thoſe that were Servants under the command of their Maſters that were preſent with them, I muſt leave it to you, whether you will diſtinguiſh between them and the others that were not Servants, but free Agents. It is true, a Servant is not bound to obey his Maſter, but in lawful things, which they ſay they thought this was, and that they knew not to the contrary, but that their Maſters acted according to the King's Commiſſion; and therefore their Caſe muſt be left to your conſideration, whether you think them upon the whole matter Guilty or no. If you believe them Guilty, you will find them ſo, otherwiſe you will Acquit them.

For the other Perſons, ſome of them pretend they came in on his Majeſty's Proclamation, and for that you muſt conſider the Evidence, and take it all together, and conſider whether you are ſatisfied by what they have ſaid or proved, that they have brought themſelves within the benefit of the King's Favour by that Proclamation. You have heard it read, and obſerved the Qualifications and Directions by it, and the Terms upon which the Pardon was promiſed, which are not made out to you, to be complied with by them; they may apply another way, for the King's Mercy; this Court muſt proceed according to the Rules of Law and Juſtice. But then all of them hold on this: We were, ſay they, under the Captain, and acted under him as their Commander; and, Gentlemen, ſo far as they acted under his lawful Commands, and by Virtue, and in Purſuance of his Commiſſions, it muſt be admitted they were Juſtifyable, and ought to be Juſtify'd. But how far forth that hath been, the Actions of the Captain and their own, will beſt make it appear. It is not conteſted, but that theſe Men knew, and were ſenſible of what was done and acted, and did take part in it, and had the benefit of what was taken, ſhared amongſt them: And if the taking of this Ship and Goods was Unlawful, then theſe Men can claim no Advantage by theſe Commiſſions, becauſe they had no Authority by them to do what they did, but acted quite contrary to them. What had they to do to enter into ſuch Articles, and to act as they did? You muſt conſider the Evidence given here, according to the Rules of the Law, and if you are ſatisfy'd that they have Knowingly and Wilfully been concerned or partaken with Capt. Kidd, in taking this Ship, and dividing the Goods, and that Piratically and Felonioufly, then they will be Guilty within this Indictment. It is worthy of conſideration what appears upon the Evidence, that they met with one reputed to be a Notorious Pirate, call'd Culliford; he was eſteemed an Arch-Pirate, and known to be ſo, yet this Capt. Kidd, that was Commiſſion'd to take Pirates, inſtead of taking him, grows to ſuch an Intimacy with him, that he ſaid he would have his Soul fry in Hell, before he would hurt him, or to that effect, and ſo they made Preſents one to another; and Capt. Kidd left three of his Men with him. Whilſt Men purſue their Commiſſions, they muſt be Juſtify'd, but when they do things not Authorized, or never acted by them, it is as if there had been no Commiſſion at all. I have diſtinguiſhed the Evidence as well as my memory ſerves me, and muſt leave it to you to determine upon the whole matter, who are Guilty, and who not; and ſuch as you are ſatisfied to be Guilty, you will find ſo, and ſuch as you are not ſatisfy'd to be Guilty, you will acquit.

Then the Jury withdrew, and after half an hour's ſtay, brought in their Verdict.

How say'st thou, William Kidd, art thou guilty of the Piracy and Robbery whereof thou standest Indicted, or not guilty?

William Kidd. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. How wilt thou be try'd?

William Kidd. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr. God send thee a good Deliverance.

(And so of the other Nine.)

[Then the Court adjourned till to Morrow Morning eight a Clock.]

The further Proceedings against William Kidd, and the other nine Prisoners, on the four Indictments, May the 9th, 1701.

Cl. of Arr. CALL William Kidd, Nicholas Churchill, James How, Robert Lamley, William Jenkins, Gabriel Loff, Hugh Parrot, R. Barlicorn, Abel Owens, and Darby Mullins to the Bar. You the Prisoners at the Bar, William Kidd, &c. those Men that you shall hear called, and personally appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon Tryal of your several Lives and Deaths; if therefore you, or any of you, will challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to speak unto them as they come to the Book to be Sworn, and before they be Sworn. Call William Smith, who appeared, and there being no Challenges, the Twelve that were Sworn, are as follows.

The JURY.

Will. Smith,	Peter Gray,
Benj. Hooper,	Rob. Comfort,
Jo. Hibbert,	Tho. Hollis,
Jo. Pettit,	Will. Ford,
Will. Hatch,	Tho. Stephens,
Jos. Chaplain,	Jo. Dodson.

Cl of Arr. Cryer, count these, Will. Smith.

Cryer. One, &c.

Cl. of Arr. Benj. Hooper.

Cryer. Two, &c. Twelve good Men and true, stand together, and hear your Evidence.

[Then the usual Proclamation for Information was made, and the Prisoners being bid to hold up their Hands, the Clerk of Arraignments charged the Jury with them thus:]

Cl. of Arr. " You of the Jury, look upon the " Prisoners, and hearken to their Cause. They " stand indicted by the Names of William Kidd, " &c. (as before in the Indictment) upon this Indict- " ment they have been arraigned, and thereunto " have severally pleaded, not guilty, and for their " Tryal put themselves on God and their Coun- " try, which Country you are. Your Charge is to " enquire, Whether they be guilty of the Piracy " and Robbery whereof they stand Indicted, or " not guilty, &c.

Nich. Churchill. May it please you, my Lord, I came in upon his Majesty's Proclamation, and if that do not do, I throw my self upon the Mercy of the Honourable Bench.

Mr Bar. Hatsell. If they will withdraw their Plea, and confess the Indictment, they may.

Nich. Churchill and James How. We refer our selves to the King's Proclamation.

Dr Oxenden. But do you confess the Matter of the Indictment? You may do that if you will, and then you need not be tryed.

Abel Owens. My Lord, I came in upon the King's Proclamation, and enter'd my self aboard one of the King's Ships.

Dr Oxenden. You must answer first, and come to your Defence afterward.

Abel Owens. I hope your Honours will grant it me as well as the rest, I entred my self into the King's Service.

Cl. of Arr.

Cl. of Arr. You of the Jury, look on the Priſoners, and hearken to their Cauſe. They ſtand Indicted by the Name of William Kidd, &c.

Mr J. Turton. You may try all the Indictments together, if they are the ſame Perſons concerned.

Cl. of Arr. They are the ſame that are concerned in the two firſt Indictments.

Mr J. Turton. Then proceed upon theſe two together.

Cl. of Arr. They ſtand a ſecond Time indicted by the Name of William Kidd, late of London, Mariner, (and ſo of the reſt.) Upon theſe two Indictments they have been Arraigned, and thereto have ſeverally pleaded, not guilty; and for their Tryals have put themſelves on God and their Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is to enquire, Whether they are guilty of the ſaid Piracies and Robberies whereof they ſtand Indicted, or not guilty, &c.

Mr Knapp. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and Gentlemen of the Jury, theſe are two ſeveral Indictments againſt William Kidd, &c. and they are both for Piracy. One ſets forth, That the Priſoners at the Bar, on the Twentieth of September, in the ninth Year of his Majeſty's Reign, fifteen Leagues from Carawar, did Piratically invade and take a Ship called the Mooriſh Ketch, and put the Mariners in Fear of their Lives. The other Indictment ſets forth, That on the 27th of November, in the ninth Year of his Majeſty's Reign, four Leagues from Callicut, the Priſoners at the Bar did ſeize and take another Mooriſh Ship, to both which Indictments they have pleaded, not guilty. If we prove the Fact, you muſt find them guilty. We will call our Witneſſes. The Witneſſes are the ſame. The whole Story you have heard before, and we will apply our ſelves now to theſe Facts mentioned in theſe two Indictments.

Mr J. Turton. You muſt open your Matter firſt, becauſe there is a new Jury.

Mr Knapp. Then, my Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, this Capt. Kidd went out of England in a Ship called the Adventure-Galley. He firſt went to New York, and there he ſet out Articles to procure Men, and promiſed them that would come in to him a Share in the Adventures they ſhould get. From thence he goes to Babs-Key and lies about three Weeks there, watching for the Moco Fleet: He ſent his Boat out three Times to ſee in what Condition the Ships were. He could get no Intelligence the two firſt Times, but the third Time he did; they brought him Word, there were fourteen or fifteen Ships ready to ſail, and that their Colours were Engliſh and Dutch, and Mooriſh. He lay in wait for theſe Ships, and watched them; and when they came down, he fell in with them, and fired at them; but he found they were under an Engliſh and Dutch Convoy, and ſo away he went and left them. And then he came to cruiſe on the Coaſt of Malabar, and there he met with his firſt Prize, and that is the Mooriſh Ship mentioned in the firſt Indictment: They ſeized and took this Mooriſh Ship, and entred her, and took ſeveral Goods out of her, and then let the Ship go away. We will call our Witneſſes as to this Ship firſt. Call Robert Bradinham and Joſeph Palmer, (who appeared and were ſworn.) Mr Bradinham, What have you to ſay as to this Matter?

Mr Bar. Hatſell. Tell it from the Beginning; from the Time that you went out of England, to the Time of taking this Ship, becauſe there is a new Jury.

Bradinham. About the Beginning of May, 1696, we went out of England, and went to New-York, in the Adventure-Galley, whereof Capt. Kidd was Commander.

Mr Knapp. Whither did you go?

Bradinham. To New-York: We took a Ship by the Way, and carried her to New-York, where we condemn'd her.

Mr Knapp. What Ship was that?

Bradinham. A French Banker. At New-York Capt. Kidd put up his Articles, that if any would come aboard his Ship they ſhould be welcome, no Purchaſe no Pay, mentioning that he had the King's Commiſſion. From thence we went to St. Jauger, then to Maderas, then to Madagaſcar, then to Bonavis, then to Joanna, and then to the Red-Sea, and then to Babs-Key: There he lay three Weeks looking for the Moco Fleet.

Mr Knapp. Where?

Bradinham. In Babs-Key.

Mr Knapp. You ſay he lay there about a Fortnight or three Weeks, how did he behave himſelf there?

Bradinham. He ſent out his Boat three Times; and the two firſt Times they could get no Intelligence.

Mr J. Turton. Tell whoſe that Moco Fleet was.

Bradinham. They belong'd to the Moors; they were Merchant-men belonging to the Moors.

Mr Knapp. What News did they bring the third Time?

Bradinham. The third Time they brought Word that there were fourteen or fifteen Ships in the Harbour ready to ſail.

Dr Newton. What did he ſay then?

Bradinham. That he would take as many of them as he could, and did not doubt but to make a Voyage out of them.

Mr J. Turton. What Account did the two firſt Boats bring?

Bradinham. No Account at all, my Lord.

Mr J. Turton. What Notice did they bring the third Time?

Bradinham. They brought Word, that there were about fourteen or fifteen Ships in the Harbour ready to ſail.

Mr J. Turton. Which Time was it that they brought that Word?

Bradinham. The third Time. Then the Fleet came down and Capt. Kidd followed them.

Mr Knapp. Were there any on Shoar to watch this Fleet?

Bradinham. There were ſome ſent to the high Land of the Iſland to ſee if the Fleet came; and when they ſaw it, they were to give a Sign with a Half-Pike and Flag, and then the Boat was to fetch them off. At laſt the Fleet came down, and Capt. Kidd went among them, and fired at them; but finding they were under a Convoy, and too ſtrong for him, he was forced to leave them.

Mr Knapp. Whither did you go then?

Bradinham. From thence we went to Carawar, and by the Way we met with a Mooriſh Ship, of which Capt. Parker was Commander.

Mr Knapp. My Lord, that is the Ship that they are Indicted for. Where was it that you met with that Ship?

Bradinham. About fifty Leagues from Carawar.

Mr Knapp. Pray, what did they do with that Ship?

Bradinham. We took Capt. Parker's Ship, and took him aboard, and the Portugueze for a Linguiſter; ſter: And he took out ſome of the Men, and bound their Hands behind them, and order'd them to be drub'd with a naked Cutlace. And he took out of her ſome Pepper, and Coffee, and Arabian Gold, and wearing Apparel, and ſeveral other Things.

Mr Knapp. What did he do with theſe Men, after he had plundered the Ship?

Bradinham. He let the Ship go, and kept Parker and the Portugueze aboard.

Dr Newton. How many Men were there aboard the Ship?

Bradinham. About Thirty.

Dr Oxenden. What Countryman was this Parker?

Bradinham. He was an Engliſh-man.

Dr Oxenden. How do you know That?

Bradinham. He told me ſo.

Mr Knapp. What Ship was it?

Bradinham. A Mooriſh Ship.

Mr Knapp. What Time was this done?

Bradinham. In September, 1697.

Mr Knapp. What did he do with the two Men he took out of this Ship?

Bradinham. He kept them aboard his Veſſel.

Mr Knapp. What Ship was Captain Kidd in then?

Bradinham. He was in the Adventure-Gally.

Mr Knapp. Tell us whether any other of theſe Priſoners at the Bar were in that Ship when this was done.

Bradinham. Every one of them;

Cl. of Arr. Was Captain Kidd himſelf there?

Bradinham. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Was Nicholas Churchill there?

Bradinham. To Carawar.

Mr Soll. Gen. What did they do there?

Bradinham. There the Captain wooded and watered his Ship.

Dr Oxenden. What is Carawar? Tell the Court.

Bradinham. There is an Engliſh Factory. They ſent ſome Men aboard, and demanded this Parker, and the Portugueze; and the Captain denyed them, and kept them in the Hold, and would not let them know he had them on board.

Dr Oxenden. Had they any notice of Parker's being on board Capt. Kidd's Ship.

Bradinham. I ſuppoſe they had Information from Bombay by the Marriners that went away, for Capt. Parker's Veſſel belonged to that Place.

Mr Soll. Gen. How far is that Carawar from Bombay?

Bradinham. About 40 Leagues.

Mr Soll. Gen. Where did you go after that?

Mr Soll. Gen. What Ship?

Bradinham. Some time in November; about the 17th of November, they took a Mooriſh Ship, Skipper Mitchel was the Commander.

Mr B. Hatſell. You need go no further now.

Mr Knapp. We will call the other Evidence, if you pleaſe, Mr. Sollicitor.

Mr Soll. Gen. We will give our Evidence upon both Indictments together.

Mr Knapp. They ſtand charged with taking another Ship. You have heard how far we have carry'd it: Now they went and took another Ship about the 17th of November.

Bradinham. They took a Mooriſh Ship four Leagues from Callicut.

Mr J. Turton. Now go on.

Bradinham. Capt. Kidd took this Mooriſh Ship on the Coaſt of Malabar, Skipper Mitchel was the Commander; ſhe was a Mooriſh Ship. He took out of her two Horſes, ſome Bails of Cotton, ſome Quilts.

Mr B. Hatſell. What Country-man was this Skipper Mitchel?

Bradinham. A Dutch-man.

Mr B. Hatſell. What Ship was it?

Bradinham. A Mooriſh Ship, ſhe belong'd to Suratt.

Mr Soll. Gen. What Burden was ſhe?

Mr Soll. Gen.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Were all these Persons aboard this Ship when she was taken?

Bradinham. Yes, my Lord.

Mr B. Hatsell. You say this Ship was about 150 Tun; What might she be worth?

Mr Soll. Gen. What did he do with this Ship afterwards?

Bradinham. She was carried to Madagascar.

Mr Soll. Gen. What did they do with the Ship?

Bradinham. They sunk her.

Mr Soll. Gen. Do you know why they sunk her?

Bradinham. She was sunk voluntarily.

Kidd. This Man contradicts himself in an hundred places.

Bradinham. The Ship was sunk purposely.

Dr Newton. What was done when you came to Madagascar?

Bradinham. When we came to Madagascar, there came off a Canooe with white Men aboard that belong'd to the Moco Frigat. Some of these Men belong'd formerly to Capt. Kidd. She was suppos'd to be a Pirate-Ship.

Mr Soll. Gen. What was the reason of sinking that Ship?

Bradinham. They sunk her in the Harbour, that she might be convenient for Vessels to Careen by. Some Men came off in this Canooe, and they told him, they heard he was come to take them, and hang them. He said it was no such thing.

Dr Newton. Who was the Captain of the Moco Frigat?

Bradinham. Captain Culliford.

Dr Newton. Was he a Pirate?

Bradinham. Yes, he was reputed so.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Well, go on.

Bradinham. Capt. Kidd swore he would be true to them, and that he would do them no harm.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did you hear all this?

Bradinham. Yes, he swore to be true to them.

Mr. Knapp. Was there any thing said about Capt. Kidd's taking her?

Bradinham. Nothing.

Dr Newton. What passed afterwards between Captain Kidd and Culliford?

Bradinham. He had a whole Share.

Cl. of Arr. Had R. Lamley any Share?

Bradinham. He had half a Share.

Cl. of Arr. Had W. Jenkins any Share?

Bradinham. He had half a Share.

Jenkins. How can you attest these wicked Lies? I had nothing.

Mr B. Hatsell. Who shared it?

Bradinham. The Captain.

Kidd. He tells a thousand Lies.

Cl. of Arr. Look on Hugh Parrot, had he any Share?

Bradinham. No, half a Share of Money, and a whole Share of Goods.

Cl. of Arr. Had R. Barlicorn any Share?

Bradinham. He had half a Share.

Cl. of Arr. Had Abel Owens any Share?

Bradinham. He had a whole Share.

Cl. of Arr. Had Darby Mullins any Share?

Bradinham. He had half a Share.

Mr Soll. Gen. Now if any of you will ask him any Questions you may?

Kidd. Mr Bradinham, Pray what Share had you?

Bradinham. If my Lord ask me, I will answer him.

Kidd. Had you any Share?

Bradinham. Yes.

Kidd. Did not you come aboard my Ship, and rob the Surgeon's Chest?

Bradinham. No, I did not.

Kidd. Did not I come to you, when you went away, and met you on the Deck, and said, why do you take the Chest away?

Bradinham. No, I did not do it.

Kidd. You are a Rogue.

Mr J. Turton. It were the same thing for him to confess it, as to deny it, if he had done it.

Kidd. He did certainly do it.

Mr B. Hatsell. But he says he did not.

Mr J. Turton. Would any of you ask him any Questions?

Cl. of Arr. Nich. Churchill, will you ask him any Questions?

Churchill. I came in on the King's Proclamation, and depend wholly on it.

Kidd. Were there not any French Passes aboard that Ship?

Bradinham. I heard say there were, I did never see them.

Kidd. I did not divide the Things, but the Men did what they pleased, and you took your Share, and saw the French Passes.

Mr B. Hatsell. What Ship is that you mean, that taken in September or that in November?

Bradinham. The Mooriſh Ship, that Parker was Commander of.

Mr B. Hatsell. There were two mentioned.

Kidd. Just now he told you of two in November, now he says one in November, another in September.

Mr B. Hatsell. He says that in September, that Parker was Commander of.

Kidd. There was no such Thing in November; he knows no more of these Things than you do. This Fellow used to sleep 5 or 6 Months together in the Hold.

Mr J. Turton. I assure you he gives a very good Account of the Matter.

Mr B. Hatſell. Why did you give him a Share then?

Kidd. Becauſe he was Surgeon. As for the Goods they took it amongſt them, and did what they pleaſed, I was never near them. They laid wait for me to kill me. They took away what they pleaſed, and went to the Iſland; and I, with about 40 Men, was left in the Ship, and we might go whither we pleaſed.

Mr Soll. Gen. Mr Kidd, will you ask him any Queſtions?

Kidd. No, no, ſo long as he ſwears it, our Words or Oaths cannot be taken.

Cl. of Arr. Will you ask him any more Queſtions?

Kidd. No, no, it ſignifies nothing.

Cl. of Arr. N. Churchill, Will you ask him any Queſtions?

Churchill. I came in on his Majeſty's Proclamation, and rely upon that.

Cl. of Arr. J. Howe, Will you ask him any Queſtions?

Howe. I ſurrendred my ſelf upon the King's Proclamation, and plead guilty.

Cl. of Arr. R. Lamley, Will you ask this Witneſs any Queſtions?

Lamley. Do you ſay I had half a Share of Money?

Bradinham. Yes.

Lamley. No, I had none.

Cl. of Arr. It was your Share, and you muſt make it appear if you accounted for it to your Maſter.

Lamley. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, I was an Apprentice.

Mr B. Hatſell. To whom was you a Servant?

Lamley. I was an Apprentice to A. Owens.

Mr J. Turton. Was Lamley an Apprentice to Owens?

Bradinham. My Lord, he was a Servant to Owens, who was a-board then.

Mr J. Turton. He had half a Share, but perhaps he might account for it to his Maſter afterwards.

Cl. of Arr. W. Jenkins, Will you ask the Witneſs any Queſtions?

Jenkins. My Lord, I beg he may ſpeak the Truth, whether I was a Servant.

Bradinham. My Lord, he was a Servant to George Bullen.

Mr J. Turton. Was this Bullen aboard then?

Bradinham. Yes.

Mr J. Turton. When both Ships were taken?

Bradinham. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Will you ask the Witneſs any Queſtions, G. Loff.

Loff. My Lord, when I came aboard, the Captain opened his Commiſſion there. Did I ever diſobey his Commands?

Bradinham. Not that I know of.

Loff. Did you ſee me receive any Share?

Bradinham. Yes, half a Share of Money, and a whole Share of Goods.

Loff. Where?

Bradinham. In the great Cabin.

Cl. of Arr. What Queſtions will you ask him Hugh Parrot?

Parrot. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I will give you an exact Account from the Time of my going out of England. In the Month of October, 1695.——

Cl. of Arr. You may make your Defence afterwards, in the mean time will you ask him any Queſtions now?

Parrot. I appeal to him, whether he ever ſaw me do any ſuch Cruelty as he mentions.

Mr J. Turton. You hear what he ſays, anſwer him.

Bradinham. I cannot ſay you were the very Man that did it. But thoſe Men were uſed ſo, they were hoiſted up, and drubb'd with a naked Cutlace.

Parrot. And then I ask him, whether I ever went any further than my Commander ordered me, or againſt the King's Commiſſion as I thought.

Bradinham. I cannot ſay you did any Thing contrary to your Commander's Orders.

Parrot. I ask him, whether, when I might have went aboard this Pirate, I did not ſtick cloſe to my Captain, and come home with him, and whether I had any Inclination to leave him.

Mr J. Turton. He knows not your Inclination. Where did you leave Captain Kidd? will you ask him that?

Parrot. I came home to Boſton with Captain Kidd. Doctor, did I go away with them that left Captain Kidd?

Bradinham. You went with Captain Kidd to Madagaſcar.

Parrot. I came home with Captain Kidd, and ſurrendred my ſelf to my Lord Bellamont.

Cl. of Arr. Abel Owens, will you ask the Witneſs any Queſtions?

Owens. I ask the Witneſs, whether I did not ſurrender my ſelf.

Bradinham. I cannot ſay any Thing to that.

Cl. of Arr. Will you ask him any more Queſtions?

Owens. No, I ſtand to his Majeſty's Proclamation, and the Mercy of the Honourable Bench.

Cl. of Arr. Darby Mullins, will you ask the King's Witneſs any Queſtions?

Mullins. No. May it pleaſe you, my Lord, I came in upon the King's gracious Proclamation, as the King's Evidence knows. Do you not know I came a-ſhore with you about the 28th of May?

Bradinham. I know he went a-ſhore.

Mullins. I went a-ſhore. I came home upon the King's Proclamation. We went a-ſhore at Cape May. I was very ſick of the Bloody-Flux, and not able to travel, and was like to die every Day.

Bradinham. My Lord, I know this Man was very ſick in the Paſſage.

Mullins. I was a Paſſenger aboard Captain Shelley's Ship.

Mr J. Turton. How came he to come aboard Captain Shelly? Where did he leave Captain Kidd?

Bradinham. He left Captain Kidd at Madagaſcar, and took his Paſſage with Captain Shelly afterwards, after theſe Ships were taken.

Mr Soll. Gen. How came he to leave Captain Kidd at Madagaſcar?

Bradinham. He went aboard Captain Culliford's Ship. There was about 60 or 70 Men went aboard Culliford.

Mr Knapp. Call Joſeph Palmer.

Dr Oxenden. He ſays he came in upon the King's Proclamation, to Cape May, do you know any Thing of that?

Bradinham. Yes.

Dr Oxenden. Where is that Cape May?

Bradinham. Off of Maryland; where Captain Shelly's

Shelly's Ship was at Anchor; and Captain Gravenport came on Board Captain Shelly's Ship, and ſaid he heard his Majeſty's Proclamation was out to receive Pirates that would come in; and the Men rejoiced that there was ſuch a Thing, and they went a-ſhore, and ſurrendered themſelves.

Dr Oxenden. Where?

Bradinham. At Cape May.

Dr Oxenden. Did he go to the Governour?

Bradinham. I did not ſee him go a-ſhore.

Cl. of Arr. D. Mullins, will you ask him any more Queſtions?

Mullins. You was aboard when I went a-ſhore.

Boadinham. I did not ſee you go a-ſhore.

Mr Soll. Gen. Was he ſick when he went a-ſhore?

Bradinham. He was ſick.

Mullins. I was ſick, and expected to die every Moment.

Cl. of Arr. All was done before that Time.

Mr Soll. Gen. Did he rejoice, when he heard the King's Proclamation was out?

Bradinham. I heard him ſay the King's Proclamation was out, and he rejoyced with others.

Mr Soll. Gen. Did he ſurrender himſelf to the Governour?

Bradinham. I cannot ſay that. He went a-ſhore.

Mr B. Hatſell. Now ſet up Joſeph Palmer.

Mr J. Turton. Gentlemen, I would not have you under any Miſtake; that ſurrendering himſelf comes not under your Conſideration, it was after all the Facts were done that the Priſoner is charged with.

Mr Knapp. Mr Palmer, give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what you know concerning Captain Kidd's Voyage from England in the Adventure-Gally, when he went out of England, and his Proceedings afterwards.

Palmer. About the laſt of April, or beginning of May, he went from Plymouth to New-York; and in the way took a French Banker, and carried her to New-York, and condemned her there. And at New-York he ſet up Articles, to invite Men to come aboard his Ship; that if any would come aboard, they ſhould have a Share of ſuch Treaſure as he ſhould take: He was to have forty Shares himſelf, and every Man a half or whole Share. And about the firſt of September following, he went from New-York to Maderas, from thence to Bonavis, from thence to St. Jauger, then to Madagaſcar, then to Malabar, then to Joanna, then to Mahala, than to Joanna again, then to the Red-Sea.

Mr Knapp. Pray give an Account of what was done there.

Palmer. There he watered, and took Guiny Corn to Victual his Ship. And then to Babs-Key, near the Red-Sea.

Mr Knapp. Give an Account what he did there.

Palmer. He ſent out his Boat three times to diſcover the Fleet, and likewiſe ſome Spies on the High Land to look out on both Sides, to ſee that the Ships did not paſs by.

Mr Soll. Gen. What Ships?

Palmer. Mooriſh Ships from Moco.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Whoſe Ships were thoſe Mooriſh Ships?

Palmer. They were Turks and Moors together.

Mr. Knapp. What did he do then?

Palmer. He called the Men by Lot to look out, and he ſent his Boat out twice, and they returned without bringing any Tidings. And he ſent the Boat the third time, with Orders to take a Priſoner, or to ſee what Ships lay there. And the third time word was brought, that there were about 14 or 15 Ships lay in the Road ready to ſail, with Dutch, Engliſh and Mooriſh Colours. And when this News came, Captain Kidd ordered the Men to go on the other ſide upon the high Lands, to ſee that the Ships did not paſs by in the Night. And in four or five Days the Ships came down, about the 14th of Auguſt. The Fleet came down in the Evening, and Capt. Kidd went after them. And ſome of the Men ſaid, we will go among them to Night. No, ſays Capt. Kidd, we will go in the Morning, and then we will take our choice.

Kidd. Did you hear me ſay ſo?

Palmer. I heard you ſay ſo.

Kidd. I am ſure you never heard me ſay ſuch a word to ſuch a Logger-head as you.

Palmer. Theſe are the words I heard him ſay. And the next Morning he fell in with this Fleet, and went through them; and there was a Dutch and Engliſh Convoy; and they fired at one another.

Kidd. Hear me——

Mr Knapp. You ſhall ask him what Queſtions you will preſently.

Mr J. Turton. Who fired firſt?

Palmer. The Dutch and Engliſh fired firſt. When we lay between the Engliſh and Dutch, a Mooriſh Ship came by, and he fired ſeveral Shot after her. And the Engliſh Ship flung a Shot almoſt home, and then he made Sail, and went out of the Fleet. And from thence he went to Carrawar, and in the way met with a Ship, whereof Parker was Commander, and there was one Antonio a Portugueze.

Mr Soll. Gen. Where was this done?

Palmer. About 50 Leagues from Carrawar.

Mr Soll. Gen. What time of the Year was it?

Palmer. It was about September.

Mr B. Hatſell. The Witneſs is now come to ſpeak to the Ship, for which the Priſoners are Indicted.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Go on, What did they do with that Ship?

Palmer. He fought the Ship, and took her, and took out of her ſeveral Bails of Coffee, and he retained only one Bail, and ſent the reſt back again. And he took a Bail of Pepper, and ſome Myrrh, to uſe inſtead of Pitch.

Mr Soll. Gen. What quantity of Pepper was there?

Palmer. About 60 pound weight.

Mr Soll. Gen. What Myrrh?

Palmer. About 30 pound weight.

Mr Soll. Gen. What Value was it of?

Palmer. I cannot tell that.

Mr Soll. Gen. What Arabian Gold?

Palmer. I did not ſee it. I did not ſee any taken out then. But a pretty while afterwards, when Captain Kidd came to Carrawar, he gave every Meſs two Pieces of Arabian Gold?

Mr Knapp. How long was this after the Ship was taken?

Palmer. Ten or twelve Days.

Mr Soll. Gen. How was the Pepper diſpos'd of?

Palmer. It was divided among the Meſſes.

Mr Soll. Gen. Had theſe Priſoners their part.

Palmer. Yes.

Mr Knapp. How did they uſe the Men of this Ship?

Palmer. There were ſeveral hoiſted up, and drubb'd with a naked Cutlace.

Kidd.

Kidd. Where was this done?

Palmer. In your Ship.

Kidd. What Ship?

Palmer. The Adventure-Galley.

Kidd. Did not a parcel of Rogues go aboard their Ship, and do it?

Mr Knapp. For what purpoſe was this done?

Palmer. Becauſe they thought they had more Money in the Ship.

Knapp. What Country-man was Parker?

Palmer. An Engliſh-man, born in the North of England. He ſaid ſo.

Mr J. Turton. Who elſe was detained, beſides Parker?

Palmer. One Antonio a Portugueze. Parker was detained for a Pilot, and the other for a Linguiſter.

Mr J. Turton. What do you mean by a Linguiſter?

Palmer. To ſpeak Mooriſh and Portugueze.

Mr Soll. Gen. Where did they go then?

Palmer. From thence we went to Carrawar, and watered and wooded the Ship; and a great many of his Men left him there. And when he ſaw his Men leave him, he went to Sea, he would not truſt any more to go aſhore. And the next Evening he met a Portugueze Man of War, and fought her, but did not take her.

Mr J. Turton. Did you know any that left him?

Palmer. Peter Lehair, and Churchill, and others. They went to the Engliſh Factory, to know whether they would entertain them or no.

Mr J. Turton. Who went?

Palmer. Mr Lehair, Nicholas Churchill, and another, they went to know whether they ſhould be entertained. And they told them, they were loth to entertain them, for fear Captain Kidd ſhould know of it, and do them an Injury.

Kidd. My Lord, a parcel of theſe Men went aſhore to run away with this Ship.

Mr J. Turton. Were there any more of theſe Priſoners at the Bar, that would have gone off, beſides Churchill?

Palmer. No, but he would have gone off.

Mr J. Turton. How do you know that?

Palmer. He told me ſo.

Mr B. Gold. Had they an opportunity to go off?

Palmer. Some more were taken going off afterwards, and had got a Boat for that purpoſe; but they were taken, and Captain Kidd order'd them to be brought aboard, and whipt at the Gun.

Kidd. Certainly you have not the Impudence to ſay that?

Palmer. I ſay you order'd them to be whipt for attempting to go aſhore.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Whither did you go then?

Palmer. That Evening we went and met with a Portugueze Man of War.

Mr Soll. Gen. You may go on from that. Whither did you go then?

Palmer. To the Malabar Iſlands.

Mr Soll. Gen. What to do?

Palmer. To take in Water. His Cooper went aſhore, and the Natives cut his Throat. And Capt. Kidd ſent his Men aſhore, and order'd them to divide themſelves into Squadrons, and to burn all the Houſes they came near, except the Houſes that had white Flags upon them.

Mr Soll. Gen. Why not them?

Palmer. Becauſe they helped us to water the Ship.

Mr Knapp. And were there any Houſes burnt?

Palmer. Yes, a great many.

Mr Knapp. What did he do more?

Palmer. I heard what he did, I did not ſee it.

Mr B. Hatſel. What do you know of any other Ship?

Palmer. About the 27th of November, he took the Ship Maden near Callicut. We ſpy'd a Ship in the Night, and chaced her all Night, and the next Morning he took her.

Mr J. Turton. What Ship was that?

Palmer. Skipper Mitchel was Commander, it was a Mooriſh Ship, ſhe belong'd to Suratt. She was taken in November, and after that ſhe was called, The November.

Mr Soll. Gen. How was ſhe taken?

Palmer. Capt. Kidd chaced her under French Colours, and this Ship had French Colours, and when he haled her, it was in French. And this Skipper Mitchell anſwered in French.

Mr Soll. Gen. Had the Mooriſh Ship French Colours before Capt. Kidd put up French Colours, or after?

Palmer. After.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What Colours had ſhe, when ſhe was chaced at firſt?

Palmer. It was in the Night: In the Morning Capt. Kidd hoiſted up French Colours, and then the Mooriſh Ship likewiſe hoiſted up French Colours.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What followed?

Kidd. Speak true.

Palmer. I will. He fired three or four Shot at the Ship, and commanded them aboard. And Mitchel did ſo, and ſome of his Men with him. And he ordered Monſieur Leroy to be as Captain. And he came from below Deck, and received him as Captain.

Kid. Did you ſee that?

Palmer. I did not ſee that, but I know he was ordered to do ſo, and he received him as Captain, I was not in the Cabin at that time. Monſieur Leroy received him as Captain, and carried him aft. They haled this Ship in French, and bid him come aboard in French, and this Frenchman received him as Captain. And I heard them ſay, that he brought a French Paſs along with him.

Mr Soll. Gen. Who did you hear ſay ſo?

Palmer. I heard People on board ſay ſo.

Kidd. Palmer, Did you not ſee that Paſs?

Palmer. Indeed Captain I did not.

Mr Soll. Gen. What did you do with the Ship?

Palmer. There were two Horſes on board, and ten or twelve Bails of Cotton, and ſome Quilts, and Capt. Kidd ſold them at Malabar.

Mr Soll. Gen. What Goods were there?

Palmer. Two Horſes.

Mr Soll. Gen. What beſides?

Palmer. Ten or twelve Bails of Cotton, and ſome Quilts.

Mr J. Turton. What Countryman was Skipper Mitchel the Captain?

Palmer. A Dutchman.

Mr Soll. Gen. What was the Ship worth?

Palmer. I cannot tell the Value of her.

Mr Soll. Gen. What Burden was ſhe?

Palmer. About 150 Tun.

Mr Soll. Gen. What did they do with thoſe Horſes, and the Cotton?

Palmer. They Sold them to the Banians.

Mr Soll. Gen. What did they do with the Proceed of thoſe Goods?

Palmer. Capt. Kidd kept it, till they had a pretty deal of Money together, and then they Shared it.

Mr Soll. Gen.

Mr Soll. Gen. Had the Priſoners at the Bar any Shares of it?

Palmer. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Captain Kidd himſelf any Share?

Palmer. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Nicholas Churchill any Share?

Palmer. Yes, he had a whole Share.

Cl. of Arr. Had James Howe any Share?

Palmer. Yes, a whole Share.

Mr J. Turton. Where did they Share it?

Palmer. On the Coaſt of Malabar.

Cl. of Arr. Had Robert Lamley any?

Palmer. Yes, half a Share.

Cl. of Arr. Had William Jenkins any Share?

Palmer. He had half a Share.

Cl. of Arr. Had Gabriel Loffe any?

Palmer. He had a half Share.

Cl. of Arr. Had Hugh Parrot any?

Palmer. He had a whole Share.

H. Parrot. Did you ſee me have any Share? Can you ſpeak that to my Face now? Did you ſee any of us have any?

Palmer. When Capt. Kidd ſhared this Money, I did not actually ſee him pay their Shares; but he called every Man by the Liſt, and they came with their Hats in their Hands, and he gave them their Money, and they ſwept it up, and went away.

Mr Soll. Gen. Were theſe Men called by the Liſt?

Palmer. Yes.

Mr Soll. Gen. And did they miſs none?

Palmer. Not that I know of.

Cl. of Arr. What ſay you to Richard Barlicorn? had he any?

Palmer. He had half a Share; whether his Maſter had it or no afterwards, I know not.

Cl. of Arr. Had Abel Owens any Share?

Palmer. He had a whole Share.

Cl. of Arr. What had Darby Mullins?

Palmer. He had a half Share.

Mr Knapp. I think you were ſpeaking of Arabian Gold, that they had it in Meſſes, had theſe Priſoners their Share of that?

Palmer. Yes, there was no difference, they had all their Shares.

Mr Knapp. Now, if you will ask this Witneſs any Queſtion, you may.

Kidd. What ſignifies it to ask him any Queſtions? We have no Witneſſes, and what we ſay ſignifies nothing.

Cl. of Arr. Nicholas Churchill, Will you ask him any Queſtions?

Churchill. No, I have acknowledged all theſe Crimes, and Surrender'd my ſelf, and rely on the King's Mercy.

Cl. of Arr. James Howe, Will you ask him any Thing?

Howe. No.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Lamley, Will you ask him any Thing?

Lamley. Mr. Palmer, How can you tell I had a half Share?

Palmer. There was a half Share directed for you.

Lamley. I had not a Farthing.

Mr J. Turton. Was he an Apprentice?

Palmer. Yes, he was Servant to Mr Owens.

Jenkins. Can you ſay I had any Share?

Palmer. I know there was a half Share appointed for you, but I know not whether your Maſter had it.

Mr J. Turton. Was his Maſter Aboard then?

Palmer. Yes, his Maſter was Aboard then.

Cl. of Arr. Gabriel Loffe, Have you any Queſtions to ask him?

Loffe. Had I any Share?

Palmer. You had a half Share, I did not ſee you take it, but you were in the Liſt.

Cl. of Arr. Hugh Parrot, Have you any Queſtions to ask him?

Jury-Man. Did you ſee them come out with the Money in their Hats?

Palmer. Yes.

Mr Soll. Gen. Did Gabriel Loffe come out as contented as the reſt?

Palmer. No, becauſe he had but half a Share.

Loffe. Did you ſee me come out with any Money?

Palmer. I ſaw you come out with Money in your Hat, and I heard you ſay you had half a Share.

Loffe. As I live I had no Hat then.

Cl. of Arr. Have you any Queſtions to ask him, Hugh Parrot?

Parrot. Did you ſee me have any Share?

Palmer. I did not ſee you receive any Share, but you was called among the reſt.

Mr J. Turton. He ſays they were all called Man by Man to take their Shares.

Cl. of Arr. Richard Barlicorn, Have you any Thing to ask him?

Barlicorn. I deſire of him, Whether he ſaw me have any Goods, or take any Share?

Palmer. My Lord, when the Goods were ſhared at Madagaſcar, I was at Bonavis; I was not preſent, but I heard of it afterwards.

Barlicorn. I hope the Jury will take notice of this.

Mr B. Hatſell. Mr Bradinham, Did any of theſe Men complain that they had not their Share?

Bradinham. No, no, I heard nothing of that.

Mr J. Turton. Were theſe Shares ſuch as were agreed on in the Articles at New-York?

Palmer. Yes. Capt. Kidd ordered the Goods to be hoiſted out.

Kidd. Did I order the Goods to be hoiſted out?

Palmer. Yes, you did.

Kidd. It was the Mutinous Men that did it.

Parrot. How do you know that I had any Share? you did not ſee me in a Year after.

Palmer. I do not ſay I ſaw it given you.

Kidd. My Lord, there were 95 Men that deſerted my Ship, and took away what they pleaſed, we could not ſtand in Defence of any Thing.

Barlicorn. Was not I an Apprentice to Captain Kidd, and waited on him continually in the Ship?

Palmer. Yes you were.

Mr Soll. Gen. Had he a Share allotted him?

Palmer. Yes, but I am apt to think his Maſter had it.

Mr J. Turton. Who was his Maſter?

Palmer. Captain Kidd.

Cl. of Arr. Abel Owens. have you any Thing to ſay for your ſelf?

Owens. I refer my ſelf to the King's Proclamation.

Cl. of Arr. Darby Mullins, have you any Thing to ſay for your ſelf?

Mullins. I came to Cape May, where I heard of the King's Proclamation. Did not you and I come aſhore together?

Palmer.

Palmer. Yes we did, the ſame Day.

Darby Mullins. Did not we come aſhore on the King's Proclamation?

Palmer. We did hear of it.

Darby Mullins. Did not you hear that all the Men were glad at the News, when they heard of the Proclamation?

Dr Oxenden. What did the Men ſay then?

Joſeph Palmer. They all rejoiced to hear of ſuch a Thing.

Darby Mullins. From the Time I came from Madagaſcar I was ſick of the Bloody-Flux, I could not walk a Mile in a Day.

Joſeph Palmer. I know you was ſick.

Darby Mullins. I have no more to ſay: I ſtand to your Lordſhip's Mercy, and the King's gracious Proclamation.

Mr Juſtice Turton. If you have any Witneſſes to call for your ſelves, you may call them. Captain Kidd, what have you to ſay for your ſelf? You may make your Defence firſt for that Ship taken in September, then for that in November.

William Kidd. What is it the near for me to ſpeak? I have no Witneſſes for theſe Things.

Mr Baron Hatſell. Yeſterday you produced your Commiſſions; if you will, they may be read now.

William Kidd. It availed nothing then. Here is all theſe Men ſaw the French Paſs.

Joſeph Palmer. Indeed, Captain, I never ſaw it.

William Kidd. You left my Ship, with 95 Men more, and you went a roguing afterwards.

Mr Soll. Gen. Why did you go aboard that Pirate?

William Kidd. My Lord, I had a Deſign to take that Frigate, and then I deſigned to come for England. I would not go with ſuch a Roguiſh Crew as you were. Was not I threatned to be ſhot in the Cabin by ſuch Villains as you, if I would not go along with you? This was the Reaſon I could not come home. Did not you, with others, ſet fire to the Boat, to deſtroy my Ship?

Palmer. I know nothing of that; but I am ſure I ſaved your Life on the Malabar Iſland, when you burnt the Boat.

Kidd. My Lord, they took what they pleaſed out of this Ship, and I was forced to ſtay by my ſelf, and pick up here a Man, and there a Man, to carry her home.

Cl. of Arr. N. Churchill, what have you to ſay for your ſelf?

Churchill. My Lord, I plead guilty and rely on the King's Proclamation.

Cl. of Arr. James Howe, have you any Thing to ſay for your ſelf?

Howe. I plead guilty, my Lord.

Kidd. Here are ſome Gentlemen here, I deſire they may be heard as to my Reputation. Here is Coll. Hewſon.

Mr J. Turton. What do you ask Coll. Hewſon?

Kidd. I ask him what he knows as to my Reputation in the Weſt-Indies?

Coll. Hewſon. My Lord, he was a mighty Man there. He ſerved under my Command. He was ſent to me by the Order of Coll. Codrington.

Mr Soll. Gen. How long was this ago?

Coll. Hewſon. About Nine Years ago. He was with me in two Engagements againſt the French, and fought as well as any Man I ever ſaw, according to the Proportion of his Men. We had ſix Frenchmen to deal with, and we had only mine and his Ship.

Kidd. Do you think I was a Pirate?

Coll. Hewſon. I know his Men would have gone a Pirateering, and he refuſed it, and his Men ſeized upon his Ship. And when he went this Voyage, he conſulted me, and told me they had engaged him in ſuch an Expedition; and I told him he had enough already, and might be contented with what he had: And he ſaid it was his own Inclination; but my Lord Bellamont told him, if he did not go the Voyage, that there were Great Men, and they would ſtop his Brigantine in the River, if he did not go.

Mr J. Turton. Who told you ſo, did he?

Coll. Hewſon. Yes, my Lord.

Mr J. Turton. If he had kept to the honeſt Deſign of that Expedition, he had done very well. Did you apprehend that his Intention in that Undertaking was to be a Pirate?

Coll. Hewſon. No, my Lord. He told me his Buſineſs was to go a cruiſing, and ſurprize Pirates.

Mr Soll. Gen. Did he tell you he had no ſuch Deſign?

Coll. Hewſon. Yes, he ſaid he would be ſhot to Death before he would do any ſuch Thing. I know he was very ſerviceable in the Weſt-Indies.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Lamley, have you any Thing more to ſay?

Lamley. I can ſay nothing, for I have none of my Friends here.

William Kidd. Call Thomas Cooper. (who appeared.)

Mr J. Turton. What Queſtions do you ask him?

Kidd. Sir, pray tell my Lord what you knew of me in the Indies.

Thomas Cooper. I was aboard the Lion, and this Captain Kidd brought his Ship from a Place that belonged to the Dutch, and brought her into the King's Service at the Beginning of the War, about Ten Years ago. And he took Service under the Colonel; and we fought Monſieur Du Caſs a whole Day, and I thank God we got the better of it, and Captain Kidd behaved himſelf very well in the Face of his Enemies.

Juryman. How many Years ago was this?

Tho. Cooper. About Ten Years ago.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Lamley, have you any Thing more to ſay?

Lamley. I have no Friends here, I am a Prentice, my Lord.

Cl. of Arr. William Jenkins, have you any more to ſay?

William Jenkins. I was an Apprentice, my Lord.

Cl. of Arr. Gabriel Loffe, have you any Thing to ſay for your ſelf?

Gabriel Loffe. My Lord, I was a Servant under Captain Kidd, and always obeyed his Commands, and had no Share. I came home with Captain Kidd to Boſton, and went to my Lord Bellamont, and the Men came and told us he had diſcharged us, and I went about my Buſineſs. And ſome Days after we were committed to Priſon, and I was ſick, and my Lord let me be in the Keeper's Houſe, and I was truſted by him four or five Months with the Keys to look after the Priſoners. Mr Davis can teſtify this. If I had had a Mind to have done any ill Thing, I might have done it then. (Then Davis appeared) Pray, Mr Davis, vis, declare what you know of me when I came to Boston, and how the Keeper intruſted me with the Priſoners.

Mr Davis. I remember when we came there to the Road-Iſland, Captain Kidd ſent him home. And when he came to Boſton, he was truſted with the Keys, and had Liberty to go where he pleaſed not out of the Yard.

Mr J. Turton. Was this after he was a Priſoner?

Mr Davis. Yes, my Lord.

Gabriel Loffe. I hope the Jury will take notice of this.

Kidd. Mr Davis, did you not hear of any French Paſſes that I had?

Mr Davis. I heard of them, and I ſaw them.

Mr Soll. Gen. How do you know they were French Paſſes?

Mr Davis. He told me they were French Paſſes, I did not know it, I could not read them.

Mr Juſtice Turton. They ſhewed you the Papers, did you know what Ship they belonged to?

Mr Davis. No, my Lord, not I.

William Kidd. I deſire Captain Hunt may be called, to know what my Lord Bellamont ſaid of me.

Mr Baron Hatſell. That will ſignify nothing.

Cl. of Arr. Hugh Parrot, have you any Thing to ſay for your ſelf?

Hugh Parrot. My Lord, I had no Share of the Goods.

William Kidd. My Lord, I deſire this Commiſſion may be read.

Mr Baron Hatſell. Is it under the Broad-Seal?

Mr Crawley. It is a Letter of Mart and Repriſal, my Lord.

(Then the Commiſſion was read, dated the 11*th of* December, 1695.)

William Kidd. Now, my Lord, in purſuance of this Commiſſion, I went and took theſe Ships, which had French Paſſes on Board, and my Lord Bellamont took them by force from me.

Mr J. Turton. You took one French Ship, and acted in a regular manner to condemn her; but did you do ſo with the reſt?

Will. Kidd. I could not carry theſe Ships home, by reaſon my Men left me.

Mr Juſtice Turton. Mr Bradinham, with what Number of Men did you go out of England?

Robert Bradinham. With about Seventy Men.

Mr Juſtice Turton. What Number had you when you went from New-York?

Robert Bradinham. About 155.

Mr Juſtice Turton. So that your Number was increaſed.

Robert Bradinham. Yes, my Lord.

Mr Juſtice Turton. Was there any other Ship condemned, beſides the French Banker.

Robert Bradinham. No, my Lord.

William Kidd. Theſe Men were ſome of them that left me, and took the Goods. What was left I carried with me.

Cl. of Arr. Hugh Parrot, have you any more to ſay?

Hugh Parrot. The Evidence cannot prove that I had any Share. I came with my Commander from Madagaſcar, and he paid me an hundred Pieces of Eight, and my Lord Bellamont ſeized all. And I had opportunity enough to have gone a pirateering with Captain Culliford, but I told them I would not. And I came to my Lord Bellamont, and ſurrendered my ſelf.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Barlicorn, have you any Thing to ſay in your own Defence?

Robert Barlicorn. I deſire Witneſs may be called, to know whether I was not a Servant aboard.

Mr Juſtice Turton. The King's Evidence ſay you were.

Cl. of Arr. Abel Owens, what have you to ſay?

Abel Owens. I own my ſelf guilty. I came in upon the King's Proclamation.

Cl. of Arr. D. Mullins, what have you to ſay?

Darby Mullins. I did what I did under the King's Commiſſion. I obeyed my Captain, and came home with him. I durſt not for my Life do othewiſe. Examine the Witneſſes, and they will not ſay otherwiſe. Mr Bradinham did I do any Thing againſt the Captain's Command?

Robert Bradinham. I cannot ſay but he did always obey the Captain's Commands.

Mr Soll. Gen. Did he not go aboard Captain Culliford afterwards?

Robert Bradinham. Yes, my Lord.

Darby Mullins. I went for want.

Cl. of Arr. Have any of you any more to ſay?

Hugh Parrot. My Lord, I did not go out of England with Captain Kidd, but I ſhipt my ſelf on Board a Merchant-man bound for Newfoundland, and I was taken by a French Privateer. And afterwards coming to Madagaſcar, Captain Kidd was there, and he took a Piſtol to ſhoot me, but I avoided it. But hearing afterwards that Captain Kidd had the King's Commiſſion, I went aboard him.

Mr Juſtice Turton. Had he any Commiſſion to take any Goods from the King's Subjects?

Mr Baron Hatſell. Captain Kidd ſays the Seamen forced him from the Ship, and you ſhared the Goods your ſelves.

Hugh Parrot. He does not ſay ſo of us. My Lord, with ſubmiſſion, be pleaſed to ask my Commander, whether I ever diſobeyed his Commands, or was forward to attempt any ill Thing, or did any Thing of that which is alledged againſt me.

William Kidd. Mr Bradinham, are not you promiſed your Life, to take away mine?

Mr Juſtice Turton. He is not bound to anſwer that Queſtion. He is very fit to be made an Evidence for the King, perhaps there can be no other in this Caſe, than ſuch who are in his Circumſtances.

Hugh Parrot. With Submiſſion, I ask the Evidence, whether I ever diſobeyed the Captain's Orders.

Mr Juſtice Turton. The Captain's Orders will excuſe you in honeſt Things, but not in unlawful Actions.

Hugh Parrot. As for the Ships that were taken, I had no Hand in it.

Mr Knapp. But you received your Share, and knew of the robbing of the Ships.

Mr Juſtice Turton. Gentlemen of the Jury, here is William Kidd, Nicholas Churchill, James Howe, Robert Lamley, William Jenkins, Gabriel Loffe, Hugh Parrot, Richard Barlicorn, Abel Owens, and Darby Mullins, the Priſoners at the Bar; who are all indicted for Piracy, or piratical and felonious taking a Mooriſh Ship on the High Seas, about fifty Leagues from Carawar in the Eaſt-Indies, and ſeizing the Goods that were in that Ship to a conſiderable Value. And they are alſo indicted for the piratical and felonious taking another Ship, which was likewiſe a Mooriſh Ship, with the Tackle and Apparel thereof, to the Value of a Hundred and Five Pounds, four Leagues from Calicut in the Eaſt-Indies. Now to theſe Indictments they have pleaded, not guilty. And whether they are guilty or no, you are to determine, on the Evidence you have heard.

I need not tell you the Heinouſneſs of this Offence wherewith they are charged, and of what ill Conſequence it is to all Trading Nations. Pirates are called Hoſtes humani generis, the Enemies to all Mankind, but they are eſpecially ſo to thoſe that depend upon Trade. And theſe Things that they ſtand charged with, are the moſt miſchievous and prejudicial to Trade that can happen. But as it is not my Buſineſs to aggravate the Offence, ſo it is yours to conſider whether they or any of them are guilty or not.

Two Witneſſes have been produced for the King, and both of them were concerned in all the Tranſactions relating to the Priſoners. And by their Evidence it appears, that in the Year 1696, about the beginning of May, Captain Kidd, who was Captain of the Adventure Galley, was fitted out on a very good Deſign, for he was to take Pirates, and to ſeize the Ships and Effects of the King's Enemies: That was the End of this Expedition. He went out from Plymouth with about Seventy Men from England; they ſailed to New-York, and in their Paſſage they ſeized a French Veſſel; and that Veſſel was condemned in a due manner, and that was purſuant to their Commiſſion.

When they came to New-York, there were other Things in Contemplation; then he made a Proclamation, to give notice, that if any would come aboard him, he propoſed Terms for their Encouragement, that they ſhould be Sharers in all they could acquire; he himſelf would have Forty Shares, becauſe the Ship, Arms, Ammunition and Proviſions were his, and the reſt ſhould be divided proportionably to thoſe that ſhould be aboard him. And whereas they went out with Seventy Men, there their Number was encreaſed to 155, for with that Number he ſailed from New-York.

Gentlemen, The Witneſſes tell you whither they went afterwards; I will not mention all the particular Places, but only ſuch where any Thing remarkable was done. They ſay they came to a Place called Babs-Key; and there it ſeems they had an Intention to obſerve a Fleet called the Moco Fleet, there they ſtayed about three Weeks, and in that Time Captain Kidd ſent his Boat Three Times to Moco, where this Fleet was; the Two firſt Times they brought no certain Account; but the laſt Boat that was ſent, brought Intelligence that there were Fourteen or Fifteen Ships lay in the River or Harbour there, and were ready to Sail, and that they had Dutch Colours, Engliſh Colours, and Mooriſh Colours. And Captain Kidd ſaid then, he expected to make a conſiderable Advantage of them. And after this Advertiſement, he ſent ſome Men to the High Lands to obſerve the Motion of this Fleet, who after ſome Time gave Notice that the Fleet was coming, and then he went out with his Veſſel; and as they tell you, he went into this Fleet, and diſcharged ſome Guns at them. But they having a Convoy, he found he was not a Match for them, and that it would be in vain to attempt any Thing further on ſo great a Diſadvantage; and ſo that Deſign was fruſtrated. But it muſt be obſerved, that theſe Ships were all Engliſh, Dutch, and Mooriſh, and none of them French, which ſhews Captain Kidd's Inclinations to take ſuch Ships for which he had no Authority by any Commiſſion.

But they tell you, after this, when he had met with this Diſappointment, then he ſailed towards the Coaſt of Carawar; And there they met with the firſt Mooriſh Ship that he is now charged with. And this Ship they ſeized, and took one Parker, who was the Captain; they ſeized him, and alſo a Portugueſe, whom they made uſe of as an Interpreter, and ſome of the Men, whom they treated in a barbarous manner. They tell you, that there happening to be an Engliſh Factory near that Place, they of that Factory underſtanding that this Parker and the Portugueſe were aboard the Ship, they ſent to demand them; and Captain Kidd denied them, and ſaid there were no ſuch Men on board, and yet he had hid them under the Deck. You are alſo told by the Witneſſes what they found and ſeized aboard this Ship, viz. Pepper, Coffee, Myrrh, and ſome Gold. They have told you, the Gold was ſhared amongſt them, and in Specie, as I remember, every Meſs had two Pieces, and the reſt of the Goods were divided amongſt them in Proportion, according to their Original Agreement, or they had their Shares of the Money for which they were ſold. This was the firſt Ship that he ſtands charged with the Piratical taking of; and this Ship was a Mooriſh Ship, and did belong to the Natives of that Place.

And then it appears they went to the Coaſt of Malabar, and there they took the other Ship that he is charged with by the other Indictment; the firſt was taken in September, and this in November. There was on Board that Ship two Horſes, and ſeveral Bails of Cotton, and ſome other Goods; and this alſo belonged to the Moors, and one Skipper Mitchel, a Dutchman, was Captain of her. When they had taken this Ship, they went to Madagaſcar; and there it is told you, they ſunk this Veſſel. And they having ſeveral other Goods that they had taken out of another Veſſel, the Goods were ſold, and divided between the Captain and the reſt of the Men, according to their ſeveral Proportions. And it is proved to you, that every one of theſe Priſoners had ſome Share of the Product of thoſe Goods. And now to ſhow what Captain Kidd was, and that he was a Favourer of thoſe he ought to have oppoſed, there was another Pirate there, one Captain Culliford, who had a Veſſel that he uſed to the ſame Purpoſe, called the Great Mahomet; and he having heard of Kidd's Commiſſion, had a Jealouſie that Captain Kidd had a Deſign to take him and his Company: But he told them he had no ſuch Deſign, he was ſo far from that, that he aſſured them, nay Swore he would be true to them, and there were great Appearances of Friendſhip between Captain Kidd and Captain Culliford, they made mutual Viſits to each other. And Captain Kidd did accommodate Culliford with ſome Guns, and gave him liberty to take any Thing he had; and Captain Culliford likewiſe preſented him with China Silks. Now this alſo is given in Evidence, to ſhow that Captain Kidd had a Piratical Deſign in all this, and that he did aſſiſt thoſe that were engaged in the the like Deſign with him, inſtead of endeavouring to ſuppreſs them.

Now, Gentlemen, the firſt Witneſs, Robert Bradinham, has declared all this to you; And likewiſe Joſeph Palmer has ſpoken to the ſame Purpoſe, though ſomething more than the other. And he tells you how they went aſhore on one of the Malabar Iſlands, and how they burnt ſome Houſes, and did other very barbarous Things. But that concerns not this Matter for which they are now Indicted. He tells you alſo, that when they took one of theſe Ships, whereof Captain Parker was Commander, they took two of the Men on board that Ship, and hoiſted them up, and uſed them ſeverely, which they did to cauſe them to diſcover what Things of Value they had on Board; but it ſeems they had nothing of any conſiderable Worth on Board. However this ſhows that Captain Kidd had a Deſign to act Piratically. The Witneſs gives you an Account of all the Tranſactions, in taking the two Ships, and diſpoſing of the Goods, and dividing of the Money. Indeed he ſays, when the Diſtribution was made, he was not in the Cabin, but tells you he heard the Liſt called over, and all the other Priſoners ſeverally went in, and brought out their Shares in their Hats, or otherwiſe, and did not hear any one complain that he had not his Share.

Gentlemen, There are three Perſons that were Servants, that is, Robert Lamley, he was Servant to Owens the Cook; William Jenkins, he was Servant to the Mate, and Richard Barlicorn, who was Servant to Captain Kidd. Now though theſe might have their Shares delivered them, yet it is to be preſumed that they were to be accountable to their Maſters; And they being Servants, I ſuppoſe you will think fit to diſtinguiſh them from the reſt.

Gentlemen, This is the Sum of the Evidence given for the King. And indeed this ſeems to be as ſtrong an Evidence againſt the Priſoners at the Bar as can be. They did endeavour to take the Moco Fleet, but they were too ſtrong for them; And they could have no ſuſpicion that they were French, for they had Engliſh, and Dutch, and Mooriſh Colours: So that Captain Kidd could have no pretence from his Commiſſion, to look after theſe Ships; There were no French among them, and yet there he lay three Weeks waiting for them. But they did actually take theſe two Ships mentioned in the Indictments, and diſpoſed of the Goods, and ſhared the Product among themſelves. Here is all the Evidence that can be given of Piracy.

Now Captain Kidd, when he comes to make his Defence, tells you, he had a Commiſſion, and it was produced; (and that is no more than what is common in time of War) whereby he is Authorized to take the Ships and Goods of any of the Subjects of the French King. But it is Penned with great caution, he is to take none but the Goods and Ships of the French King, or his Subjects, and he is to keep an exact Account of all that he takes, and to procure them to be condemned in the Admiralty. Now if he had purſued this Commiſſion, and gone no further, it had been well, he had done juſtly, and anſwered the end on which he was ſent out. And it does appear, that the firſt Veſſel that he took in his Paſſage to New-York, was thus condemned. But afterwards I do not find that he had any regard to his Commiſſion; but waited for that great Moco Fleet a conſiderable time, I think about three Weeks; and being diſappointed there, he afterwards did take theſe two Ships mentioned in the Indictment; and it does not appear that they were French Ships, neither were there any French Paſſes on board. One of the Witneſſes indeed ſays he heard of French Paſſes, but neither he or any other Perſon that hath been produced has ſeen one of them. Now I do not obſerve that his Commiſſion does any manner of way tend to excuſe the Captain in taking both, or either of theſe Ships. One of them was under an Engliſh Commander, which was Parker, the other under a Dutchman; there were no Frenchmen aboard, only Leroy, who was made a kind of a Mock-Captain by Kidd to ſerve a preſent Turn. But what Captain Kidd has ſaid from his Commiſſion, is ſo far from juſtifying him, that it ſeems rather an aggravation of his Crime. For he that will go out with the King's Commiſſion on a juſt and laudable Deſign to take the Ships and Effects of the French King in War, and alſo to deſtroy Pirates (which were the principal Ends of his being fitted out to Sea) and inſtead thereof will turn Pirate himſelf, make uſe of the Force with which he was entruſted for the promoting his Piratical Purpoſes, and for the Felonious taking the Ships and Goods of thoſe that were in Amity with the King of England, appears to be guilty of a manifeſt Breach and Violation of his Truſt; attended with very aggravating Circumſtances.

Now for thoſe three that were Servants, I muſt leave it to you, whether they did act otherwiſe than they might do. A Servant is to obey his Maſter, but it muſt be in Things lawful and honeſt; If they did any thing elſe, you who have heard the Evidence will conſider of their Guilt, and whether their Caſes differ from the reſt; but there is ſome probability that their Shares might be accounted for to their reſpective Maſters.

Now, as to the reſt, there are ſome of them that do pretend they did Surrender themſelves, one of them to Mr Riches, a Juſtice of Peace in Surrey, others to Colonel Baſs, that was a Commander in Eaſt-Jerſy; and it does appear that they did Surrender themſelves accordingly. But that does not come under your Conſideration, you are to conſider only whether they are Guilty of the Facts they ſtand charged with, or no. As to what effect their Surrendring themſelves may have with his Majeſty, muſt be left to the King's Royal Pleaſure; but we are to conſider the Evidence. Now they generally ſay, they did obey the Captain, and that they underſtood he had the King's Commiſſion; Truly, ſo far as he purſued the King's Commiſſion, they were to obey him; But when he acts contrary to the King's Commiſſion, in acts of Piracy upon the Ships, Goods and Effects of the King's Friends, and thoſe in Amity with the Crown of England, they ſhould have been ſo far from obeying and aſſiſting him, that they ſhould have obſtructed him, and ſeized him, that he might have been brought to Juſtice, and that would have been a greater Vindication of their Innocencies. But, as the Matter now appears, I do not ſee that any thing they have ſaid tends to their Defence, and therefore I muſt leave it to your Conſideration.

Indeed, there are ſome Witneſſes appear for Captain Kidd. Colonel Hewſon gives you this account of Captain Kidd, that he was under his Command in the beginning of the War, and that he Fought and behaved himſelf very well, and was ſerviceable in the Weſt-Indies; and he ſays, he diſcourſed him about his going out on the Expedition he was ſent, and that Kidd ſaid he had no Inclination to go. And Mr Cooper likewiſe tells you, that about ten or twelve Years ago he knew him, and that he Fought the French, and behaved himſelf very well at that time; and that ſeveral of his Men ran away with his Ship when he was at Antegoa.

Then there is Gabriel Loffe, he has produced a Witneſs for himſelf, one Davis. And Davis tells you, he was a Priſoner in New-York by order from my Lord Bellamont; and at firſt they were ſome Days there before they were taken into Cuſtody; and there was ſo little Apprehenſion of his being a dangerous Man, that he had ſome Favour allowed him, and had a great deal of Liberty. This is that he ſays. I find not that any of the reſt have produced any Evidence, only they ſay they were under the Commander, and were to obſerve him. But if that would excuſe them, then all Pirates would be excuſed. Now, as to Captain Kidd, it ſeems he has wofully tranſgreſſed the Buſineſs of his Commiſſion, and acted contrary to the End and Deſign of his being ſent out, in the Piratical taking the Ships and Goods mentioned in the Indictments, in which the other Priſoners at the Bar have joined with him; and they were ſo far from being the Ship and Goods of the French King, or his Subjects, or Pirates, that they were the Ships and Goods of Perſons of other Nations in Amity with the King of England. Now if you believe theſe Witneſſes, that Captain Kidd has taken theſe Ships in a Piratical manner, and that the other Perſons aſſiſted him in it, and had their Shares of the Money and Goods, which is an evidence of their conſenting to, and ſpontaneous acting, I believe you will think fit to find them Guilty, but I leave it to you. And as to theſe three Perſons that were Servants, I muſt leave their Caſe to your Conſideration, whether you will think fit to diſtinguiſh them from the reſt, or not.

Then an Officer was ſworn to keep the Jury.

And after about half an Hour the Jury return'd and brought in their Verdict.

Cl. of Arr. Nicholas Churchill, Do you confeſs this Indictment?

Churchill. Yes, my Lord.

Cl. of Arr. James Howe, What ſay you?

Howe. Guilty of that, and all the other.

Cl. of Arr. Abel Owens, What do you ſay?

Cl. of Arr. Set them three by. Gentlemen of the Jury, Here is William Kidd, Robert Lamley, William Jenkins, Gabriel Loffe, Hugh Parrot, Richard Barlicorn, and Darby Mullins, have been Indicted upon two ſeveral Indictments that have been read; and for Trial have put themſelves on God and their Country, which Country you are.

Mr Knapp. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, Theſe are two ſeveral Indictments of Piracy, againſt William Kidd, and the ſix other Priſoners at the Bar. The firſt ſets forth, That theſe Priſoners, the 28th of December, in the Eighth Year of his Majeſty's Reign, about four Leagues from Calicut, did Piratically enter a certain Ship, called a Mooriſh Ship; and that they took her, with the Apparel and Tackle, and took out of her ſeveral Goods that have been read to you in this Indictment. To this Indictment they have pleaded, Not Guilty. If we prove them Guilty, you muſt find them ſo. The other Indictment ſets forth, That on the 9th of January, &c. that they took another Ship, a Portugueſe Ship; and to this alſo they have pleaded, Not Guilty. If we prove them Guilty, you muſt find accordingly. Call Robert Bradinham, and Joſeph Palmer, (who appeared, and were ſworn.)

Mr Soll. Gen. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Council for the King againſt the Priſoners at the Bar. They ſtand Indicted for ſeveral Piracies committed on two Ships, and our Evidence againſt them will be to this Purpoſe: Captain Kidd had two Commiſſions, one was to take Pirates, the other was to take French Ships. William Kidd, in his Ship the Adventure Galley, went out of England in the Year 1696. He afterwards went to New-York, and there he increaſed the Number of his Men. And from thence went away with a Reſolution to commit the Piracies, ſome of which he has been Convicted of already. Then he went to Babs-Key, and laid in wait to intercept the Mocco Fleet; but was diſappointed of that, they being well guarded. He went afterwards to other Places, and took two Ships; which were not the Ships here mentioned. After that he ſeized a Ship, called a Mooriſh Ship, ten Leagues from Calicut, and there ſeizes one of the Ships for which he is now Indicted, a Mooriſh Ship, and takes out of her Sugar-Candy, and other Goods, to the Value of about five and twenty Pounds. In January following, he meets another Ship, and ſeizes her too, and takes out of her to the Value of ſixty Pounds. Theſe Goods he diſpoſes of, and divides the Proceed of it between himſelf and the Crew of the Ship. And this is the Piracy for which he is now Indicted. The Matter you are to inquire inquire into, is, Whether they be Guilty of Piracy on these two Ships, or no. We will call our Witnesses, and, if we prove them Guilty, I doubt not but you will do right to your Country and them. Mr. Bradinham, These Gentlemen have not been upon the Jury before, therefore you must give an Account of the whole Matter from the beginning, from your going out of Plymouth.

Bradinham. In the Year 1696, the beginning of May, we went from Plymouth to New-York.

Mr Soll. Gen. What Ship did you go in?

Bradinham. The Adventure Galley. And by the way he took a French Ship, which he condemned when he came to New-York. At New-York he put up his Articles, to get Men aboard his Ship, and they were to have a Share of what was taken. About the sixth of September we sailed.

Mr J. Gould. What Number of Men had you when you went from England?

Bradinham. About seventy Men.

Mr J. Gould. How many had you when you went from New-York?

Bradinham. About an hundred and fifty. The sixth of September we sailed from New-York, and went to Maderas, then to Bonavis, then to St. Jauger, then to Madagascar, then to Joanna, then to Mahala, then to Joanna again, then to Meta in the Red-Sea, and then to Babs-Key.

Mr Soll. Gen. What did you do there?

Bradinham. He lay there about a Fortnight or three Weeks, to wait for the Moco Fleet, and sent out his Boat three times to make Discovery; the two first times they made no Discovery, but the third time they brought Information that they were ready to Sail.

Mr B. Hatsell. What was the Moco Fleet?

Bradinham. They were Mooriſh Ships.

Mr B. Hatsell. To what end did he wait for them?

Bradinham. He said he would make a Voyage out of them.

Mr Soll. Gen. What happened on that?

Bradinham. He ordered some Men to look out for them on the High Lands; and when they saw them coming they were to give Notice, and he was to fetch them off in the Boat. This Fleet came, and he fell in with them, and fired at them; but they being under Convoy, he was forced to quit them. And then going to Carrawar, he met with one Parker's Ship; he took this Parker's Ship, and took him for a Pilot, and the Portuguese for a Linguister.

Mr Soll. Gen. How did he use the Men there?

Bradinham. Two of them were brought on board the Adventure-Galley, and they were hoisted up, and drubb'd with a naked Cutlass.

Mr Soll. Gen. Why did he do that?

Bradinham. That they might make Discovery of their Riches?

Mr Soll. Gen. What did they take out of that Ship?

Bradinham. Some Coffee, Pepper, &c.

Mr Soll. Gen. What did he do with the two Men?

Bradinham. He carried them with him to Carrawar; and when he came there they were demanded by the English Factory there, and he denied them, and said he had no such Men aboard.

Mr Soll. Gen. Where had he put them?

Bradinham. He confined them aboard in the Hold.

Mr Soll. Gen. Where did he go then?

Bradinham. He put to Sea, and the next Day he met with a Portuguese Man of War, and fought her.

Kidd. He tells nothing but meer Lies.

Bradinham. Then he went to the Malabar Islands, and Watered and Wooded, and caused his Men to burn several Houses, and plunder several Boats, and afterwards burnt them.

Mr J. Turton. Did you see them burnt?

Bradinham. I was not ashore, but I saw the Smoke.

Kidd. It is a fine Trade, that you must take away so many of the King's Subjects Lives, and know nothing at all of the Matter.

Mr Soll. Gen. What did you do with that Ship?

Bradinham. He took her, and disposed of the Goods, and carried her to Madagascar.

Mr Soll. Gen. What did he do after that?

Bradinham. We went to the Malabar Islands some time in December, and he took a Mooriſh Ketch.

Kidd. How came you to keep this Account, when for five or six Months together you were under Deck?

Mr Soll. Gen. Go on, Mr Bradinham, and give an Account of your further Proceedings.

Kidd. I hope the King's Council will not put him in the way. It is hard that a couple of Rascals should take away the King's Subjects Lives. They are a couple of Rogues and Rascals.

Bradinham. This Ketch was taken by the Ship's Crew, about December, 1697. and one of the Boat's Crew was wounded at the taking of this Ketch.

Mr Soll. Gen. What was there in this Ship?

Bradinham. Some Tubs of Sugar-Candy, Tobacco, &c.

Mr Soll. Gen. What did he do with these Goods?

Bradinham. They were carried aboard, and shared into Messes, two Tubs and a half of Sugar-Candy to a Mess.

Mr Soll. Gen. Had the Prisoners at the Bar any Share?

Bradinham. Yes; and then he set the Ship on fire.

Cl. of Arr. Had Captain Kidd himself any Share

Bradinham. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. How much had he?

Bradinham. He had 40 Shares.

Mr B. Hatsell. You should tell this Jury how many Shares the whole was divided into.

Bradinham. It was divided into 160 Shares, and Captain Kidd was to have 40 Shares, let them be as many as they would, and the rest were to be divided among the Men.

Cl. of Arr. Had Robert Lamley any Share?

Bradinham. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had William Jenkins a Share?

Bradinham. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Gabriel Loffe any Share?

Bradinham. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Hugh Parrot any Share?

Bradinham. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Richard Barlicorn any Share?

Bradinham. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Darby Mullins any Share?

Bradinham. Yes.

Mr Soll. Gen. What was done afterwards?

Bradinham. After they had done these things they burnt the Ketch.

Knapp. What did they do then?

Bradinham. The Moors were driven ashore by the Ship's Crew.

Kidd.

Kidd. How did you know they were Moors?

Bradinham. By Information of the Ship's Crew.

Kidd. He was not within five Leagues of the Place.

Knapp. What did you meet with afterwards?

Bradinham. A Portugueze Ship. Some time in January, 169$\frac{7}{8}$, we met with a Portugueze Ship on the Coaſt of Malabar, and he took her; and he took out of her ſome Opium, ſome Eaſt-India Goods, ſome Powder, and ſixty or ſeventy Bags of Rice.

Mr Soll. Gen. My Lord, this is the other Ship for which they are Indicted. What was the Value of theſe Goods?

Bradinham. There were ſome Eaſt-India Goods, Opium, Powder and Rice.

Kidd. Did you ſee them brought aboard?

Bradinham. I am anſwering the Bench.

Mr Soll. Gen. Were there any other Goods?

Bradinham. Yes, there was Bees-wax, and thirty Jarrs of Butter.

Mr Soll. Gen. What was the Value of theſe Goods?

Bradinham. About four or five hundred Pounds.

Kidd. It is a fine Trade indeed, that he muſt be inſtructed what to ſay.

Bradinham. After he had plunder'd this Ship, he was purſued by ſome Dutch Ships; ſeveral Ships gave him chace, and he was forced to leave this Ship.

Mr Soll. Gen. What did they do with the Goods?

Bradinham. He ſold the Opium on the Coaſt, and the reſt he kept for Proviſion.

Mr Soll. Gen. What became of the Money?

Bradinham. Captain Kidd ſhared it.

Mr Soll. Gen. Who had their Shares? Give an account of that.

Bradinham. The Priſoners at the Bar.

Cl. of Arr. Had Captain Kidd any Shares?

Bradinham. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Robert Lamley any Share?

Bradinham. He had halt a Share.

Cl. of Arr. Had William Jenkins any Share?

Bradinham. He had half a Share.

Cl. of Arr. Had Gabriel Loffe any Share?

Bradinham. He had half a Share.

Loffe. How do you know that? Did you ſee me bring it out?

Bradinham. I did not ſee you take it, but you brought it out, and acknowledged it.

Kidd. Before you ſwore, I paid them firſt, and now you ſay they paid me firſt.

Bradinham. They had all a Share as before.

Mr Knapp. Now proceed in your Voyage, What did you do after this?

Bradinham. After this we went a Cruizing on that Coaſt, and we met with the Queda Merchant, and took her: And afterwards, about fifty Leagues from the Cape, we met with a Mooriſh Veſſel; and Captain Kidd ſent his Men aboard that Veſſel, and they took out of her ten Jarrs of Butter, and a Main-ſail; and he took out two of the Men (that he carried to Madagaſcar) becauſe he wanted Men.

Mr Knapp. Can you tell of any thing elſe?

Bradinham. He took about a dozen Malabar Boats, and plundered them, and then let them go.

Mr Knapp. Go on.

Bradinham. Then we came to Madagaſcar.

Mr Knapp. What happened there?

Bradinham. There came a Canoe off, ſome of the Men in this Canoe belonged to the Moco Frigate; they came off to Captain Kidd, and they told him, they heard he was come to take them, and hang them.

Mr Knapp. What were thoſe Men?

Bradinham. They were ſuppoſed to be Pirates.

Mr Knapp. Who was the Commander of that Ship?

Bradinham. Captain Culliford.

Kidd. How came you to know this? He ſays any thing.

Mr Knapp. Go on with this Story, and give an Account what paſſed between them.

Bradinham. This Canoe came aboard Captain Kidd, and they told him, they heard he was come to take them, and hang them; but he aſſured them it was no ſuch thing: And he went aboard the Frigate, and ſwore to be true to them, and that he would aid them in any thing he had; and Captain Culliford came aboard him, and they made Preſents to one another.

Mr. Knapp. What Preſents did Captain Kidd make Culliford?

Bradinham. He gave him ſome ſhirting-ſtuff.

Kidd. What! Did I give him ſhirting-ſtuff?

Bradinham. Yes; and he gave him two great Guns.

Kidd. Did I go aboard him, you Raſcal?

Mr Soll. Gen. Mr Kidd, Ask him what Queſtions you will.

Mr J. Turton. Captain Kidd, Will you ask this Witneſs any Queſtions?

Kidd. My Lord, What ſignifies it? Were there not ninety of the Men that Mutinied? I ſaid, Let us take this Ship; and did they not all conſult, and ſaid, Where there is one that will fire againſt the Pirate, there are ten that will fire againſt you; and ſo they went, and took the Goods, and left me: I ask you whether this be not true?

Bradinham. My Lord, he never ſpoke any thing like it, that he would take Culliford, but he ſwore to be true to them.

Kidd. Did not I propoſe to my Men to take Captain Culliford? Did you never hear any body ſay ſo?

Bradinham. No.

Kidd. Did you not ſay yeſterday that I was come to take them?

Bradinham. I ſaid, they came and told you they heard ſo, and you aſſured them you intended no ſuch thing.

Kidd. You ſwore I gave him four Guns yeſterday, and now you ſay but two.

Mr Soll. Gen. It was Palmer that ſaid four.

Bradinham. I ſaid but two, and no more.

Cl. of Arr. Captain Kidd, Have you any thing more to ask him?

Kidd. It ſignifies nothing to ask him any thing.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Lamley, Will you ask this Witneſs any thing?

Lamley. I only ask him whether I was not an Apprentice?

Mr J. Turton. Anſwer that Queſtion.

Bradinham. My Lord, he was a Servant.

Mr J. Turton. To whom?

Bradinham. To Mr Owens.

Mr J. Turton. Was his Maſter aboard then?

Bradinham. Yes, my Lord.

Cl. of Arr. William Jenkins, Will you ask the Witneſs any thing?

Jenkins. I desire him to say whether I was a Servant, or not.

Bradinham. Yes, my Lord, he was Servant to the Mate.

Mr J. Turton. Was his Master aboard then?

Bradinham. He was aboard then.

Cl. of Arr. Gabriel Loffe, Will you ask him any Questions?

Loffe. No, Sir.

Cl. of Arr. Hugh Parrot, Will you ask him any Thing?

Parrot. No.

Cl. of Arr. R. Barlicorn, Will you ask this Witness any Thing?

Barlicorn. I have nothing to ask him, but to desire him to speak the Truth, whether I was not the Captain's Servant.

Bradinham. He was, my Lord.

Cl. of Arr. Darby Mullins, Will you ask him any Thing?

Mullins. I have nothing to say but what I said before. I submit my self to the King's gracious Proclamation.

Kidd. He has Perjured himself in many Things.

Mr J. Turton. In what? Give an instance.

Kidd. In a great many Instances: About the Guns, that is one thing; and then he says the Ship went from Plymouth the beginning of May, and before he said it was in April, that is another thing; and, my Lord, the Mariners came and took Anchors, and Cables, and what they would, and, he says, I gave them to them, and this is false; and now he says contrary to what he did before, for then he said we went out in April, and now the beginning of May.

Mr J. Turton. He did not confine himself to a Day, he said about the beginning of May.

Mr Soll. Gen. Call Joseph Palmer, (who appeared.) Mr Palmer, pray give my Lord, and the Jury, an account of Captain Kidd and his Crew, where they went, and what they did.

Palmer. We went from Plymouth to New-York, in the Year 1696, and in the way took a French Ship, and carried her to New-York, and sold her: And there he put up Articles to invite Men aboard his Ship, and what they took was to be divided into so many Shares, whereof Captain Kidd was to have forty, the rest to be divided among the Men; and in September following, we went from thence, and we had then about 160 Men: From thence we went to Maderas, from thence to Bonavis, then to St. Jauger, then to Joanna, then to Mahala, then to Joanna again, and then to Meta in the Red-Sea, where he watered and wooded his Ship, and then to Babs-Key, a small Island in the Red-Sea: And when he came there, he ordered his Men to look out on the High Lands for the Moco Fleet, and expected the Fleet to come that way; and he sent some Men in his Boat, with Orders either to take a Prisoner, or to bring word what Ships were there: He sent his Boat twice and they made no Discovery, but the third time they went they came within sight of the Ships, and brought word that there were 14 or 15 sail lying there, with Dutch, and English, and Mooriſh Colours, and a great Ship with red Colours ready to sail: And then Captain Kidd ordered his Men to look out on the other side the High Lands, for fear the Ships should pass him; and at last the Ships came down.

Kidd. There is no great occasion for this.

Palmer. There were Moors and Turks belonging to these Ships: And about the 15th of August the Fleet came down; and Captain Kidd fell in with them; his Quarter-master and some of his Men were saying, Let us go aboard them to Night; No, says he, we will take our choice of them in the Morning; and in the Morning he went among them, and fired at them, but took none of them; he found they were too strong for him, and went away. And after this going to Carrawar, he took a Ship called the Mayden; it was between Carrawar and this Place, they reckoned they were not far from the Island of St. John: He took this Ship, and took out of her some Pepper, a Bail of Coffee, and some more Bails of Coffee came on board, but he retained only one Bail and the Pepper, and said he would not cumber his Ship with such Stuff; and Parker and a Portugueſe he took out, one for a Pilot, the other for a Linguister: And two of the Men he ordered to be hoisted up, and whipt with a naked Cutlass.

Kidd. I ask this one Thing, Did the Moco Fleet fire first at me, or I at them?

Palmer. No, they fired first.

Kidd. And just now the other said I fired first; Is not he Perjured.

Mr J. Turton. Mr Bradinham, Did he fire first, or no?

Bradinham. He fired at them. I only said you fired at them, I did not say first or last.

Palmer. After this he went to Carrawar, to an Engliſh Factory, and Wooded and Watered his Ship; and one Harvey came and demanded these two Men; and Captain Kidd denied that he had any such Men on board, and kept them in the Hold.

Mr Soll. Gen. Is that an Engliſh Factory?

Palmer. Yes. Several of Captain Kidd's Men left him there, and several more would have left him, if they could have conveniently gone ashore: And the same Evening he put to Sea, he met a Portugueze Ship, and fought her.

Kidd. Who fired there first?

Palmer. The Portugueze fired first.

Kidd. You do not tell that Story right.

Palmer. After he left this Portugueze Ship he went to the Island of Malabar, and robbed the Natives, and set their Houses on fire, and took one of the Natives, and bound him to a Tree, and shot him to Death.

Mr Soll. Gen. Did you see the Houses on fire?

Palmer. Yes: And afterwards we went to Calicut, and met with a Mooriſh Ship in November, Schipper Mitchel was Commander; and there were taken out of her two Horses, and Cotton, and Quilts; and this Ship he carried to Madagascar: Some time in December following we came to the Coast of Malabar.

Mr Knapp. Can you tell what Year it was?

Palmer. It was in December, 1697.

Mr Knapp. Where was this?

Palmer. About twelve Leagues from Callicut.

Mr Knapp. What sort of Ship was it?

Palmer. A Mooriſh Ketch.

Mr Knapp. What Burden was she?

Palmer. About fifty Tun.

Mr Knapp. What did you do there?

Palmer. Captain Kidd was lying at Anchor, and this Ketch came between him and the Shore, and he sent the Boat, and they brought the Ketch to the Ship, and took out of her thirty Bails of Sugar-Candy, Tobacco, Sugar and Myrrh.

Mr Knapp. What did they do with these Goods?

Palmer.

Palmer. When they had taken them out, they were ſhared between the Men in Meſſes, ſeven Men to a Meſs, for their own ſpending.

Mr Knapp. Had the Priſoners at the Bar any Share?

Palmer. All the Men had.

Mr Knapp. What Share had Captain Kidd?

Palmer. I cannot tell whether he had his 40 Shares of that, or no.

Mr Knapp. What did they do with the Ship?

Palmer. They burnt her.

Mr Soll. Gen. Pray now go on: What did they do next?

Palmer. Some time in January they met with a Portugueze Ship.

Mr Soll. Gen. Where?

Palmer. Off of Anjingo, an Engliſh Factory: It was a pretty way off Shore.

Mr Soll. Gen. What Ship was it?

Palmer. A Portugueze Ship.

Kidd. You ſaid it was juſt by Callicut yeſterday.

Mr Soll. Gen. Whereabouts was it?

Palmer. On the Coaſt of Malabar; it might be about ten or twelve Leagues from Callicut.

Mr Soll. Gen. What Goods were in the Ship when ſhe was taken?

Palmer. There were two Cheſts of Indian Goods, two Cheſts of Opium, ſome Rice, Butter, Wax, and Iron.

Mr Soll. Gen. What was the Value of thoſe Goods?

Palmer. Truly I cannot tell the Value of them.

Mr Soll. Gen. What did they do with thoſe Goods?

Palmer. The Wax and Iron he put aboard the November, and ſome aboard his own Ship.

Mr Soll. Gen. Did he ſell any of theſe Goods?

Palmer. No, but he ſold the Opium on the Coaſt.

Mr Soll. Gen. Did he keep the Ship?

Palmer. No, but ſeven or eight Days, and then he quitted her; there were ſome Dutchmen coming, and he ſunk that Ship: The Produce of the Ship was ſhared.

Mr Soll. Gen. Had the Priſoners at the Bar any Share?

Palmer. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had William Kidd any Share?

Palmer. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Robert Lamley any Share?

Palmer. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had William Jenkins any Share?

Palmer. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Gabriel Loffe any Share?

Palmer. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Hugh Parrot any Share?

Palmer. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Richard Barlicorn any Share?

Palmer. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Had Darby Mullins any Share?

Palmer. Yes; theſe Goods were ſhared, and we bought Proviſion with them.

Kidd. You ſay this Ship was taken off of Anjingo, and that it was twelve Leagues from Calicut, and this Anjingo is fifty Leagues from Calicut.

Palmer. It is all upon one Coaſt.

Mr Soll. Gen. Give an Account of your coming to Madagaſcar, and what followed.

Palmer. They found a Ship called the Reſolution, Captain Culliford was Commander; and ſeveral of the Men came off to Captain Kidd, that were formerly acquainted with him; and they ſaid, We hear you are come to hang us; ſays he, It is no ſuch Thing: And afterwards they went aboard each other, and Captain Kidd made Proteſtations to be true to them. There were four Guns in the Ship, and he preſented theſe Guns to Culliford.

Kidd. Did I preſent him with my Guns? Becauſe I would not turn Pirate, you Rogues, you would make me one.

Mr Baron Hatſell. What did Captain Kidd ſay to Culliford, when they were drinking together?

Palmer. They made a Tub of Bomboo, as they call it (it is made of Water and Limes, and Sugar) and there they drank to one another; and ſays Captain Kidd, before I would do you any Damage, I had rather my Soul ſhould broil in Hell-fire.

Mr Soll. Gen. Was you there then?

Palmer. This was on the Quarter-deck of the Moco Frigate.

Mr Soll. Gen. What were thoſe Men in that Ship? What did you apprehend them to be?

Palmer. They were Pirates.

Mr Soll. Gen. Did Captain Kidd or his Men offer to take them?

Palmer. He did never propoſe any ſuch Thing.

Mr Soll. Gen. Now you may ask him what Queſtions you will.

Kidd. There went twenty of them aboard, and left me.

Palmer. Captain Kidd and Culliford were as great Friends as could be.

Mr Soll. Gen. Ask him what Queſtions you pleaſe.

Will. Kidd. It ſignifies nothing to ask any Queſtions, a couple of Rogues will ſwear any Thing.

Mr Soll. Gen. Will you ask him any Queſtions?

Kidd. No.

Cl. of Arr. R. Lamley, will you ask him any Queſtions?

Robert Lamley. No.

Cl. of Arr. William Jenkins, will you ask him any Queſtions?

William Jenkins. No; I have no more to ſay, but what I ſaid before.

Cl. of Arr. Gabriel Loffe, have you any Thing to ask him?

Gabriel Loffe. No.

Cl. of Arr. Hugh Parrot, will you ask the Witneſs any Queſtions?

Hugh Parrot. No.

Cl. of Arr. Richard Barlicorn, will you ask him any Thing?

Richard Barlicorn. No.

Cl. of Arr. Darby Mullins, will you ask him any Thing?

Darby Mullins. No; but only I ſay I came home upon his Majeſty's Proclamation; I came voluntarily, expecting to have the Benefit of it with the Evidence.

Mr J. Turton. That does not fall under the Jury's Conſideration.

Cl. of Arr. You, the Priſoners at the Bar, will you ſay any Thing for your ſelves upon theſe two Indictments?

Kidd. I will not trouble the Court any more, for it is a Folly.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Lamley, What have you to ſay for your ſelf?

Robert Lamley, Nothing, but that I was a Servant.

Cl. of Arr. W. Jenkins, what have you to ſay?

W. Jenkins. I was a Servant, my Lord.

Cl. of Arr. Gabriel Loffe, have you any Thing to ſay?

G. Loffe. My Lord, I ask him whether I ever acted any Thing in taking theſe Ships, but only under my Captain's Command.

Palmer. He acted as other Men did.

Cl. of Arr. Hugh Parrot, have you any Thing to ſay?

Hugh Parrot. I can ſay no more than I have ſaid.

Cl. of Arr. Richard Barlicorn, have you any Thing to ſay?

R. Barlicorn. My Lord, I am a Servant.

Cl. of Arr. Darby Mullins, what have you to ſay?

Darby Mullins. Did not Captain Kidd often ſay his Commiſſion would bear him out in what he did?

Palmer. Yes, I have heard him often ſay that.

Mr J. Turton. But how came you to go aboard Culliford?

Darby Mullins. For Want, my Lord.

Mr J. Turton. Gentlemen of the Jury, Here are ſeveral Perſons, viz. William Kidd, Rob. Lamley, Will. Jenkins, Gab. Loffe, Hugh Parrot, Richard Barlicorn, and Darby Mullins; They all ſtand Indicted for Piracy: Indeed there are three more Indicted with them, viz. Nicholas Churchill, James Howe, and Abel Owens; but they have confeſſed themſelves guilty, and you are now eaſed of any inquiry concerning them, and are only to conſider of the other Seven, who are indicted upon two ſeveral Indictments: One is, for the Piratical and Felonious taking away a Mooriſh Ketch, to the Value of fifty Pounds, and the Goods therein to the Value of one Hundred Pounds; this was in December, 1697. And the Other is, for Piratically ſeizing and taking away Goods to the Value of ſeventy Pounds from the Portugal Ship, twelve Leagues from Calicut in the Eaſt-Indies. Now to theſe two Indictments theſe Priſoners at the Bar have pleaded, Not guilty; and whether they are ſo or no, you are to determine, upon the Evidence given you. There have been two Witneſſes produced for the King, Robert Bradinham, and Joſeph Palmer, I will not trouble you with the Repetition of their diſtinct Evidence, becauſe they agree in all Things, and if I mention what one has ſaid, it is in effect what the other ſaid alſo.

Gentlemen, It appears that Captain Kidd, with ſeventy Perſons aboard his Ship called the Adventure Galley, went from England in the Year 1696, having a Commiſſion of Mart and Repriſal, to take the Veſſels, Ships and Goods of the French King, or any of his Subjects, he being then at War with the King of England; and another Commiſſion for ſeizing Pirates. He has not indeed produced theſe Commiſſions to you now, though he did on another Trial. But he went out on a very honeſt Deſign, and in purſuance of it he took a French Ship in his Paſſage to New-York, and brought her thither, and had her legally condemned. But while he was there, it appears that he had other Thoughts poſſeſſed him, and wicked Intentions to turn Pirate, and not to take them; and that he might be well Manned he makes Proclamation amongſt the Mariners there, that ſuch of them as would come aboard his Ship, and aſſiſt him in his Enterpriſes, ſhould have their Shares of what Prizes or Booties could be taken; and he propoſed that he would have forty Shares for himſelf, and the reſt ſhould be equally diſtributed amongſt the Mariners according to agreement, the whole being divided into 160 Shares as I remember; by this means his Number was increaſed from 70 to 150. They ſet ſail from New-York, and (after many other Places mentioned by the Witneſſes) they came to a Place called Babs-Key, which it ſeems is in the Red-Sea; and there they ſtayed a conſiderable Time, I think about three Weeks, and this was in expectation to meet with the Moco Fleet, which he intended to make a Prize; and during his Stay at Babs-Key he ſent his Boat three ſeveral times to get Intelligence of this Fleet; the two firſt Times there was no Account of any Thing, but the third Time there was notice brought that they were ready to ſail, and that they had Engliſh, Dutch, and Mooriſh Colours. And when he had this Intelligence, to prevent their eſcaping him, he ſends Men aſhore, to go on the High-Lands to obſerve when they did actually ſail; and when he had notice that they were under ſail, he likewiſe ſailed, and went through the Fleet, and made ſome Shots at ſome of the Ships; but it appearing that they had a Convoy, and that they were too ſtrong for him, he quitted the Prize there, of which he had ſo great Expectation. But afterwards he went on, and took his Courſe towards Carawar, and there he takes a Mooriſh Ship; and Parker an Engliſhman the Commander of her, and a Portugueſe alſo were taken out of her. From thence they went to Malabar, and there he ſent ſome Men aſhore, and there they burnt ſome Houſes; and after that took a Mooriſh Ship for which they have been tried. Afterwards, in December 1697, (now I come to the firſt Indictment) upon that very Coaſt, ſome Leagues from Calicut, they took a Mooriſh Ketch, and this Ketch and the Goods aboard it, which were ſome Quantities of Sugar-Candy, Sugar, and Tobacco: It ſeems theſe Goods were ſhared between them aboard the Ship; the Witneſs is not confident what Share the Captain then had, but what the Captain had not, was divided amongſt them. The Witneſſes ſay they burnt this Ketch, becauſe ſhe was not uſeful to them, and the Men that went on Board were put aſhore. Now this is the Matter of the firſt Indictment, the Piratically ſeizing and plundering this Ketch, and taking the Goods out of her, and dividing them amongſt the Priſoners; both the Witneſſes prove there was a Diſtribution of them.

They then come to the next Month, and that is January; and this is the Matter of the ſecond Indictment, for piratically taking ſeveral Goods, to the Value of ſeventy Pounds, from the Mariners of the Ship called the Portugal Ship: And theſe Witneſſes prove the taking of this Ship on the Coaſt of Calicut; and there were aboard this Ship ſeveral ſorts of Goods, Opium, Rice, Beeswax, Butter, and other ſorts of Goods, which they judge might be worth four or five hundred Pounds. Now after this, there were ſome Dutch Ships that gave chace to the Captain, and he was forced to leave the Ship; but he took ſome of the Goods into his own Ship, and the reſt were ſold, and the Money divided among the Men: The Captain called them one by one into his Cabbin, and ſo they had their ſeveral Shares according to the Propoſals at New-York. It is not poſſible for them to ſay they ſaw every Man's Share paid, but they ſay that they were all called by Name to receive their Shares, and they went into the

Cabbin

Cabbin for that Purpoſe, and they believe they had all their Shares according to Agreement, becauſe none complained that they had it not.

Gentlemen, There is but one Thing more that I will mention to you. When they came to Madagaſcar, there was one Culliford who was a Pirate; and he ſent ſome of his Crew aboard, to know whether Captain Kidd was not come with a Deſign to ſeize them, and hang them; and he declared he had no ſuch Deſign: And he and Culliford were extreamly kind to one another, and made Viſits and Preſents to each other: And Captain Kidd gave two Guns to Culliford, as one of the Witneſſes ſays; but the other Witneſs ſays there were four Guns that he gave to Culliford, who was engaged in the ſame Deſign of Piracy, and Culliford preſented other Things to Kidd.

But now, Gentlemen, the Buſineſs you are to inquire into is, the piratical taking of theſe Ships: And the Witneſſes have poſitively and directly proved not only the taking the Ships but the ſeizing the Goods, and ſelling them, and ſharing the Money. And if theſe Witneſſes ſay true, as nothing appears to the contrary, by the Priſoners croſs-examining them, or otherwiſe; they are not at all contradicted, or their Credibility made queſtionable: And they are ſuch as are moſt likely to know what was done, being with them in the whole Voyage, and engaged with them in theſe Enterpriſes. And if you can give entire Credit to the Witneſſes, you will probably find theſe Perſons guilty of the Piracy they are charged with; which I leave to your Conſideration.

Now indeed there are three of them that are Servants, and perhaps you may think their Caſe is different from the reſt; Robert Lamley, who was a Servant to Owens the Cook; William Jenkins, who was Servant to the Mate; and R. Barlicorn, who was Servant to Captain Kidd. And though the Witneſſes do prove that they had their ſeveral Shares of the Goods and Money; yet, notwithſtanding that, they being Servants, their Maſters might be entitled to their Shares. So that if you believe they were Servants, and commanded to ſerve and aſſiſt their Maſters in what they did, I muſt leave it to you whether you will think fit to diſtinguiſh their Caſe from the reſt. I do not find that the others ſay any Thing material in their own Defence, they have called no Witneſſes at all. The Captain lays the Blame on the Men, and the Men ſeem to lay the Blame on him. He went out on a good Deſign, to take Pirates, had he purſued it; but inſtead of that, it appears that he turned Pirate himſelf, and took the Ships and Goods of Friends inſtead of Enemies, which was a notorious Breach of Truſt, as well as a manifeſt Violation of Law. The Evidence ſeems ſtrong againſt them, which I leave to you to conſider of.

Then the Jury withdrew, and after a ſhort Space brought in their Verdict.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, anſwer to your Names. Jo. Watſon.

Jo. Watſon. Here, &c.

Cl. of Arr. Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Omnes. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who ſhall ſpeak for you?

Omnes. Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. William Kidd, hold up thy Hand, (which he did.) Look upon the Priſoner. How ſay you? Is William Kidd guilty of the Piracy and Robbery whereof he ſtands indicted in the firſt Indictment, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty,

Cl. of Arr. Is Robert Lamley guilty, or not guilty?

Foreman. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Is William Jenkins guilty, or not guilty?

Foreman. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Is Gabriel Loffe guilty, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Is Hugh Parrot guilty, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Is Richard Barlicorn guilty, or not guilty?

Foreman. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Is Darby Mullins guilty, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

The ſame Verdict was given as to all the Priſoners upon the other Indictment.

Robert Culliford, Nicholas Churchill, Darby Mullins, and John Eldrige, were arraigned for taking the Ship called the Great Mahomet, and ſeizing the Goods to a conſiderable Value, to which they pleaded not guilty.

Robert Culliford, Churchill, Howe, and Mullins, were again indicted for another Ship taken piratically by them, to which they pleaded not guilty.

Robert Culliford and Robert Hickman were again arraigned for piratically ſeizing another Ship called the Satisfaction, to which they pleaded not guilty.

Robert Culliford and Rob. Hickman were again indicted for Piracy committed on a Mooriſh Ship, to which they pleaded not guilty.

Then the Court proceeding to the Trials of the Perſons forementioned, Rob. Culliford retracted his Plea, and pleaded guilty, and argued his coming in upon his Majeſty's Proclamation; and his Caſe being particular, was argued by his Council, for the Benefit of his Majeſty's Pardon. And Churchill, Howe, Mullins, and Hickman, likewiſe pleading guilty; John Eldrige was tried by himſelf, and found guilty.

After the Trials were over, Judgment againſt Culliford was reſpited, and he ſet aſide; the other Priſoners were called to the Bar in order to receive their Sentence as follows:

Cl. of Arr. William Kidd, Hold up thy Hand, (which he did) What canſt thou ſay for thy ſelf? Thou haſt been indicted for ſeveral Piracies and Robberies, and Murder, and hereupon haſt been convicted; What haſt thou to ſay for thy ſelf, why thou ſhouldeſt not die according to Law?

Will. Kidd. I have nothing to ſay, but that I have been ſworn againſt by perjured and wicked People.

Cl. of Arr. Nich. Churchill, hold up thy Hand, What haſt thou to ſay, &c?

N. Churchill. I came in upon his Majeſty's Proclamation.

Cl. of Arr. James Howe, What haſt thou to ſay, &c?

Cl. of Arr.

J. Howe. I came in upon the King's gracious Proclamation, and hope I ſhall receive the Benefit thereof.

Cl. of Arr. Gabriel Loffe, What haſt thou to ſay, &c?

Cl. of Arr. Hugh Parrot, What haſt thou to ſay, &c?

Hugh Parrot. I came and ſurrendred my ſelf to my Lord Bellamont.

Cl. of Arr. Gabriel Owens, what haſt thou to ſay?

Gabriel Owens. I came in upon his Majeſty's Proclamation, and deſire the Benefit of it.

Cl. of Arr. Darby Mullins, What haſt thou to ſay?

Darby Mullins. I came home upon the King's gracious Proclamation.

Cl. of Arr. John Eldrige, What haſt thou to ſay? &c.

J. Eldrige. I have but little to ſay, I am accuſed but for one Thing, and that is all, and I have been falſely accuſed; I caſt my ſelf on your Lordſhips and the Honourable Bench.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Hickman, What haſt thou to ſay? &c.

Robert Hickman. I came in according to the King's Proclamation, I came in within the Time limited.

Then Proclamation for Silence was made, while Sentence was pronouncing.

Dr Oxenden. You the Priſoners at the Bar, Will. Kidd, N. Churchill, J. Howe, Gabriel Loffe, Hugh Parrot, Abel Owens, Darby Mullins, Robert Hickman, and J. Eldridge; you have been ſeverally indicted for ſeveral Piracies and Robberies, and you William Kidd of Murder. You have been tryed by the Law of the Land, and convicted; and nothing now remains, but that Sentence be paſſed according to the Law. And the Sentence of the Law is this.

You ſhall be taken from the Place where you are, and be carried to the Place from whence you came, and from thence to the Place of Execution, and there be ſeverally hanged by your Necks untill you be dead. And the Lord have Mercy on your Souls.

William Kidd. My Lord, It is a very hard Sentence. For my Part, I am the innocenteſt Perſon of them all, only I have been ſworn againſt by Perjured Perſons.

Die Mercurij 16° Aprilis, 1701.

The Houſe being moved, That an Addreſs be made to his Majeſty, that he will be pleaſed to paſs no Cenſure or Puniſhment upon the Lords Impeached, during the Dependance of the Impeachment in this Houſe :

After Debate, the Queſtion was put, That a Committee ſhall be immediately appointed to draw up an Addreſs to his Majeſty, That his Majeſty will be pleaſed not to paſs any Cenſure or Puniſhment againſt the Four Noble Lords, who ſtand Impeached of High Crimes and Miſdemeanors, until the Impeachments depending againſt them in this Houſe ſhall be tried. It was reſolved in the Affirmative.

A Committee appointed immediately to draw up an Addreſs to his Majeſty, That his Majeſty will be pleaſed not to paſs any Cenſure or Puniſhment againſt the Four Noble Lords, who ſtand Impeached of High Crimes and Miſdemeanors, until the Impeachments depending againſt them in this Houſe ſhall be tried.

The Houſe was Adjourned during Pleaſure, and the Lords went to the Committee.

After ſome Time, the Houſe was reſumed, and the Lord Steward reported, That the Committee had drawn an Addreſs, as ordered, which was read and agreed to, as followeth, viz.

WE Your Majeſty's moſt Loyal and Dutiful Subjects, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, beg Leave to repreſent to your Majeſty, That the Houſe of Commons have ſeverally Impeached, at the Bar of our Houſe, William Earl of Portland, John Lord Sommers, Edward Earl of Orford, and Charles Lord Halifax, of High Crimes and Miſdemeanors. And they having acquainted us, That they will in due time Exhibit particular Articles againſt the ſaid Lords, and make good the ſame: We do moſt humbly beſeech your Majeſty, That your Majeſty will be pleaſed not to paſs any Cenſure upon them, until they are tried upon the ſaid Impeachments, and Judgment be given according to the Uſage of Parliament, and the Laws of the Land.

Ordered, That the Lord Steward and Earl of Romney do attend his Majeſty with the Addreſs.

Die Lunæ 5° Maij, 1701.

A Committee appointed to draw a Meſſage to be ſent to the Houſe of Commons, to put them in mind of the Impeachments brought up by them againſt the Earl of Portland, the Earl of Orford, the Lord Sommers, and the Lord Halifax, and report to the Houſe.

Then the Houſe was adjourned during Pleaſure. After ſome time, the Houſe was reſumed, and the Lord Steward reported the Meſſage, which was read and agreed to, as followeth, viz.

A Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons by Sir Robert Legard, and Sir Richard Hotford, to acquaint them, That they having on the Firſt Day of April laſt ſent up to their Lordſhips an Impeachment againſt William Earl of Portland, of High Crimes and Miſdemeanors: And having alſo, on the Fifteenth Day of the ſame Month, ſeverally Impeached John Lord Sommers, Edward Earl of Orford, and Charles Lord Halifax, of High Crimes and Miſdemeanors; their Lordſhips think themſelves obliged to put them in mind, that as yet no particular Articles have been Exhibited againſt the ſaid Lords; which, after Impeachments have been ſo long depending, is due in Juſtice to the Perſons concerned, and agreeable to the Methods of Parliament in ſuch Caſes.

Die Veneris 9° Maij, 1701.

A Meſſage was brought from the Houſe of Commons by Colonel Bierly, and others, with the Articles of Impeachment againſt Edward Earl of Orford; and to acquaint this Houſe, That the Matter of the Charge was contained in the Articles; and alſo, that he was commanded to pray and demand, That the Earl of Orford do give ſufficient Security to abide the Judgment of the Houſe of Lords.

A Committee appointed to conſider of the Manner of the Commons delivering Articles of Impeachment, and demanding Security to abide the Judgment of this Houſe, and report to the Houſe.

The Houſe was Adjourned during Pleaſure, for the Committee to meet preſently. After ſome Time, the Houſe was reſumed, and the Earl of Stamford reported, That the Committee had met, and inſpected the Journals: That they do not find any mention of the Commons reading the Articles at the Bar; and as for giving Security, they find none.

Then the Articles were read by the Clerk, as follows, viz.

ARTICLES Exhibited by the Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes in Parliament aſſembled, in the Name of themſelves, and of all the Commons of England, againſt Edward Earl of Orford, in Maintenance of their Impeachment againſt him for High Crimes and Miſdemeanors.

I. THAT whereas for many Years paſt there hath been a long and expenſive War, both by Sea and Land, carried on by his Majeſty and his Allies againſt the French King, for the preſerving the Balance of Europe, and for preventing the Growth of the immoderate Power of the ſaid French King; towards the Proſecution of which War, great Sums of Money have been given and levied by Authority of Parliament, and many Debts have been contracted, which remain a very heavy Burden upon the People of England; the ſaid Earl being then of his Majeſty's moſt Honourable Privy-Council, but always preferring his private Intereſt to the Good of the Publick, and taking Advantage of the ready Acceſs he had to his Majeſty's Perſon, during the Continuance of the ſaid War, in Violation of his Duty and Truſt, hath procured from his Majeſty one or more Grant or Grants of ſeveral Manors, Meſſuages, Lands, Tenements and Hereditaments, within the Kingdoms of England or Ireland, or elſewhere within his Majeſty's Dominions, of a great Yearly Value; and alſo of exorbitant Sums of Money to be made to him, or others in Truſt for him, but to his Uſe, the Profits whereof he now enjoys; whereby the Standing Revenues of the Crown of England, which ought to be applied to the Service of the Publick, are greatly diminiſhed, and the People of England thereby burthened with Debts, and ſubjected to grievous Taxes.

II. That in Breach of the Truſt repoſed in him, whilſt he was Commander in Chief of the Navy Royal of England, in or near the Streights of Gibraltar, and within the Time aforeſaid, he the ſaid Earl did receive great Sums of the Publick Money, iſſued out to him for the Service of the Navy, which he hath converted to his own private Uſe, and unlawfully and unjuſtly procured a Privy-Seal, or Privy-Seals, to diſcharge him from accounting to the Publick for the ſame; and alſo hath received other great Sums of Money from his Majeſty's Exchequer, as Pay-Maſter or Receiver-General of the Navy,

The ANSWER of Edward Earl of Orford, to the Articles Exhibited againſt him by the Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes in Parliament aſſembled, in the Name of themſelves, and of all the Commons of England, in Maintenance of their Impeachment againſt the ſaid Earl, for High Crimes and Miſdemeanors, ſuppoſed to be committed by him. Deliver'd in 14° May, 1701.

THE ſaid Earl, ſaving to himſelf all Advantages of Exception to the ſaid Articles, and of not being prejudiced by any Words or Want of Form in this his Anſwer, and ſaving to him all Privileges and Rights belonging to him as one of the Peers of this Realm, for Anſwer to the ſaid Articles, humbly ſaith,

I. To the Firſt Article, That he having for ſeveral Years rendred his Majeſty his utmoſt Service and Duty, as a Good and Loyal Subject ought to do; his Royal Majeſty was graciouſly pleaſed, upon ſeveral Occaſions, to take notice of the ſame, and out of his wonted Bounty, and of his free Will, was pleaſed to give the ſaid Earl Two Grants, one whereof was a Reverſionary Grant for Years, of ſome Houſes depending upon a then precedent Eſtate for about Nine and Twenty Years; which being a Reverſionary Intereſt at ſo great a Diſtance, although the ſaid Earl thankfully received the ſame from his Majeſty as his Grace and Bounty, yet the ſame was of no great Value; and the other of them was a Grant of the Remainder of a groſs Sum amounting to about Two Thouſand Pounds a Year for Five Years; which are the only Grants of any Manors, Meſſuages, Lands, Tenements, Hereditaments, or Sums of Money whatſoever, which he, or any in Truſt for him, hath had from his Majeſty; and which ſaid Two Grants his Majeſty was graciouſly pleaſed, after many Years Service, freely to beſtow upon him the ſaid Earl, without any Surprize, ſiniſter or indirect Means of the ſaid Earl in obtaining the ſame, and which Grants he humbly conceives were not unuſual in like Caſes, the accepting whereof he humbly hopes was not any Violation of his Duty, or of any Truſt in him the ſaid Earl repoſed.

II. To the Second Article the ſaid Earl anſwereth and denieth, That he at any time converted to his own private Uſe, any Publick Money iſſued to him for the Service of the Navy; or that he the ſaid Earl ever procured, or had any Privy Seal or Privy-Seals, to diſcharge him from accounting for the ſame; but ſaith, That he the ſaid Earl did make up, and upon Oath paſs his Accounts for the Moneys Impreſs'd to him for the Service, in this Article mentioned: Which Account was legally declared and paſſed, upon very ſtrict and great Examination, by the Lords Commiſſioners of the Treaſury; and he the Navy, without giving a due and legal Account thereof, whereby he hath occaſion'd great Clamours and Diſcontents among the Seamen, and others belonging to his Majeſty's Navy, who are thereby reduc'd to great Miſeries and Neceſſities for want of their juſt Dues, to the great Diſcouragement and Diſcredit of the Publick Service.

the ſaid Earl hath his Quietus eſt in due Courſe of Law upon the ſame. But the Commiſſioners of the Victualing-Office making ſome unuſual Objections to part of the ſaid Account, concerning ſome Proviſions furniſhed to the Fleet by the ſaid Earl in the King of Spain's Dominions, altho' the ſame were truly and really had and ſpent by the Seamen in the Fleet, and paid for by him the ſaid Earl; and which Objections in like Caſes had not been made or ſtood upon, nor could be reaſonably expected; his Majeſty was pleaſed to direct and order a Privy-Seal to diſpenſe with the Form in that Particular; but the ſaid Earl did make no Advantage to himſelf thereby, nor was his Majeſty or the Government in the leaſt defrauded therein; it appearing, upon a very ſtrict Examination, that leſs Rates were allowed for the ſaid Proviſions than had been allowed before in like Caſes; or, as the ſaid Earl is inform'd, hath been ſince allowed. And to the latter Part of the ſaid Article ſaith, That for the Moneys by him received as Treaſurer or Receiver-General of the Navy, he hath already delivered in his Accounts, and is ready to perfect the ſame, according to the ordinary Method, ſome of them lying ready with the Auditors to be declared, and the reſt of them being made up and deliver'd in to be examin'd, in order to be paſſed; and ſaith, after juſt Allowances had, he does not believe he ſhall appear to be indebted upon the ſaid Accounts: And alſo denies, that any Perſons are Sufferers for want of their Dues, in reſpect of the ſaid Accounts; or that the Publick Service is, or hath been any ways diſcouraged or diſcredited thereby, as in the ſaid Article is alledg'd.

III. That he the ſaid Earl, while he was in ſeveral Ports belonging to the King of Spain's Dominions, did receive from the ſaid King of Spain and others, conſiderable Sums of Money, and great Quantities of Wine, Oil, and other Proviſions for the Fleet, to a very great Value; for all which he ought to have accounted. But the ſaid Earl did convert the ſame to his own Uſe, and did either embezzle thoſe Proviſions, or reckon them as bought with the Money allowed for furniſhing the Navy with freſh Proviſions; and that for the advancing his own private Intereſt, and ſecuring himſelf from rendring any Account to the Publick, he the ſaid Earl, during the ſaid War, procured, enjoyed, and poſſeſſed divers great Offices, which were inconſiſtent, and in their Nature improper to be executed by one and the ſame Perſon; and which ought to be, and by the Laws and Uſages of this Realm, were and are appointed and deſigned as Checks one upon the other; in Breach of the ſaid Laws, to the Diſhonour of his Majeſty, and Prejudice of his People.

III. To the Third Article the ſaid Earl anſwereth and denies, That he receiv'd any Moneys whatſoever from the King of Spain, or any other Perſon, as in the Article is alledged; and ſaith, that what Wine, Oil, or other Proviſions were received from the King of Spain, or any others, for the Fleet, were duly delivered and diſtributed amongſt the Officers and Seamen thereof; and denies he did convert the ſame to his own Uſe, or did imbezzle any of the Proviſions, or reckoned them, or any Part of them, as bought with the Moneys allowed for furniſhing the Navy with freſh Proviſions: And does alſo deny, That he the ſaid Earl did enjoy any Offices inconſiſtent in their Nature (as he is adviſed) one with the other, or which were or ought to be Checks one upon the other; or that he any ways ſecured, or pretended to ſecure himſelf from rendring any Account to the Publick, by any Office or Offices whatſoever; or that he is guilty of the Breach of any Laws to his Knowledge, by executing any Office or Offices, or ever executed the ſame to the Diſhonour of his Majeſty, or to the Prejudice of his People, as in the ſaid Article is alledged.

IV. That he the ſaid Earl, within the Time aforeſaid, hath clandeſtinely, contrary to the Law of Nations, ſold and diſpoſed of ſeveral Veſſels, with their Ladings and Cargo, taken under Pretence of Prize by his Majeſty's Ships of War, without Condemnation or judicial Proceedings, and converted the Money to his own Uſe; well knowing if they had been condemned, as by Law they ought to have been, one Tenth, (after Cuſtoms allowed) and one Third part of the Value thereof, the Cuſtoms and the ſaid Tenth being deducted, are by Act of Parliament appropriated to eſpecial Uſes. By which Proceedings the Publick has been greatly endamag'd and defrauded, and the Debts of the Nation increaſed.

IV. To the Fourth Article the ſaid Earl anſwereth and ſaith, he believes, That the Prizes taken in the late War, were appropriated as by the Act of Parliament in that behalf is provided; but denies that he did at any time ſell or diſpoſe of any Veſſel or Veſſels, or their Ladings or Cargo, taken as or under the Pretence of Prize, by any of his Majeſty's Ships of War, without Condemnation or judicial Proceedings, or converted the Moneys ariſing by Sale of any Veſſel or Veſſels, or their Lading or Cargo, taken as or under Pretence of Prize, by any of his Majeſty's Ships of War, to his own Uſe; but on the contrary, did from time to time, in his Station, give Orders, that the Prizes taken ſhould be carefully preſerved without Imbezzlement, and duly proceeded againſt, and the Produce anſwered as the Law directs: And therefore humbly inſiſteth, that the Publick hath been no ways endamag'd, or the Debts of the Nation increas'd by any Neglect or Default of the ſaid Earl.

V. And whereas Complaints were made to the Commiſſioners for executing the Office of Lord High Admiral of England, (where the ſaid Earl at that Time preſided) by the Company Trading to the Eaſt-Indies, of divers Piracies committed in the South-Eaſt Seas, to the Deſtruction of their Trade, deſiring they might have Letters of Marque granted to them, whereby to be empower'd (tho' at their own Charge) to ſuppreſs ſuch Pirates. But the ſaid

V. To the Fifth Article, the ſaid Earl ſaith, That the Eaſt-India Company about the beginning of March, One thouſand ſix hundred ninety and ſix, did apply to the Admiralty Board, of which the ſaid Earl was one, to impower their Ships and Officers to ſeize and take all Pirates, infeſting the Seas within the Limits of their Charter; and likewiſe to erect a Court of Admiralty in thoſe Parts, to try and condemn ſuch Pirates as they ſhould

Earl preferring his own Intereſt, diſcouraged and rejected their Requeſt and Propoſal; and in ſome ſhort Time after, jointly with others, did procure a Commiſſion for one William Kidd; as likewiſe a Grant under the Great Seal of England, to and for the Uſe of him the ſaid Earl and others, of the Ships and Goods of certain Perſons therein nam'd, and alſo of all Goods found on Board the ſaid Ships. And the ſaid Company having Intimation of a Commiſſion granted to the ſaid Kidd, being apprehenſive of the ill Conſequences of the ſame, did apply themſelves to the ſaid Board of Admiralty, deſiring to know what Powers and Inſtructions were given: But ſuch their reaſonable Requeſt was denied; and Kidd, who was known to be a Perſon of ill Fame and Reputation, ordered to purſue the intended Voyage; in which he did commit divers Piracies and Depredations on the High Seas, being thereto encouraged through the Hopes of being protected by the high Station and Intereſt of the ſaid Earl, in Violation of the Law of Nations, and the Interruption and Diſcouragement of the Trade of England.

VI. That the ſaid Earl, within the Time aforeſaid, when an horrid Conſpiracy was diſcovered againſt his Majeſty's ſacred Perſon, and the Kingdom was under an Apprehenſion of an immediate Invaſion from France; and divers Ships of War (particularly the Ship Dutcheſs) were Arm'd out, Equipp'd and Mann'd in Defence of the Realm, to oppoſe the intended Invaſion, did his utmoſt Endeavour to prejudice and weaken the Navy Royal of England; for that he the ſaid Earl, by Colour of his Office, (being then Firſt Commiſſioner for executing the Office of Lord High Admiral of England) without the Privity of the other Commiſſioners, contrary to his Oath and Duty, and preferring his Hopes of Gain to himſelf, to the Safety of the Publick, did order Captain Steward, Commander of the Ship Dutcheſs, to deliver over and put on Board the ſaid Kidd, mention'd in the foregoing Article, out of the ſaid Ship the Dutcheſs, a great Number of able Seamen, levied and provided at the Expence of the Publick, and then diſcharging their Duty in Defence of their Country, and againſt their own Conſent, to the Prejudice of the Publick Security, and to the endangering of the ſaid Ship the Dutcheſs, if it had been attack'd by the Enemy.

VII. That the ſaid Earl, during the ſaid War, and at a Time of the greateſt Exigency and Neceſſity, when Ships, Men, and Money were wanting to guard the Seas, and protect our Trade, did by Miſrepreſentations, and contrary to his bounden Duty, and the Truſt repoſed in him, procure a Grant or Order for his Majeſty's Ship the Dolphin, then fitted out, mann'd and equipp'd for the Service of the Publick, to be employ'd in a private Voyage and Undertaking, for the Advantage of himſelf and others concerned with him. In Purſuance whereof, and for their private Gain, the Ship was, at the Publick Expence, continued in Foreign Parts for ſeveral Months, to the Deſtruction and Loſs of his Majeſty's Subjects on Board the ſame, to the weakning the Navy, by rendring the ſaid Ship unſervicetake. Upon which Application, the Board of Admiralty did take Advice, and were inform'd they had no Authority to grant the ſame; and denies he the ſaid Earl ever diſcouraged or rejected the Companies Requeſt therein, unleſs it were by telling them, that the Admiralty by Law could not grant the ſame. And denies that the Company was ever denied Letters of Marque in common Form, to the Knowledge of the ſaid Earl. And ſaith, as to the Matter of Kidd in this Article mention'd, he was gone upon his Expedition about Twelve Months before that Time. And as to his Commiſſion, and the Grant in the ſaid Article mention'd, the ſaid Earl humbly conceives, and is adviſed, the ſame were not contrary to Law; but ſure he is, the ſaid Expedition was intended for the Publick Good and Service; and ſaith, the ſaid Kidd had no Powers or Inſtructions from the Board of Admiralty, other than the ordinary and common Letters of Marque, the Contents whereof are common, and well known to Merchants. And the ſaid Earl doth deny that he knew the ſaid Kidd to be of ill Fame and Reputation; but in caſe the ſaid Kidd hath committed any Piracies, he the ſaid Kidd is anſwerable, and ought to anſwer for the ſame, he never being ordered by the ſaid Earl ſo to do; nor had he ever any the leaſt Encouragement given him by the ſaid Earl, or any other, to his Knowledge, to expect or hope for any Protection therein, or in any illegal Action done or committed by him.

VI. To the Sixth Article the ſaid Earl ſaith, he believes it to be true, that there was a horrid and barbarous Plot and Conſpiracy againſt his Majeſty's ſacred Perſon; and that there was an Apprehenſion of an immediate Invaſion; but the ſaid Earl hopes, no Neglect of Duty in his Station can be imputed to him to prevent the ſame. And as for the Ship Dutcheſs, which was, amongſt many others, arm'd and equipp'd in Defence of the Realm, the ſaid Earl ſaith, that the Men in the ſaid Article mention'd to be taken from on Board her, were but ſome of the very Perſons that were juſt before taken from on Board Captain Kidd, and returned by their own Conſent on Board Captain Kidd again, not being above twenty in Number; and ſaith, all Fears of the Invaſion were then over and at an end: And denies that the ſame was intended to weaken, or did weaken the ſaid Ship, or the Navy Royal; or that the ſaid Seamen ſo returning on Board the ſaid Kidd, were levied or provided at the Expence of the Publick, or did return or were put on Board the ſaid Kidd, againſt their own Conſent, or to the Prejudice of the Publick Security; or that the Ship Dutcheſs was thereby endanger'd, if ſhe had been attack'd, as in the ſaid Article is alledg'd.

VII. To the Seventh Article the ſaid Earl anſwereth and denies, That he did by Miſrepreſentation, or otherwiſe, obtain or procure a Grant or Order for his Majeſty's Ship Dolphin, to be employ'd in a private Voyage or Undertaking; but what was done therein, was done after the Peace concluded, and by his Majeſty's Command, at the Inſtance and Requeſt of other Perſons, and not of the ſaid Earl, but contrary to his Opinion. Nor was the ſaid Earl any way concerned in Intereſt therein, till after his Majeſty's Orders were given about the ſaid Ship; and then, and not before, ſome of the Perſons concerned in the ſaid Adventure, deſired the ſaid Earl to take ſome Shares therein, (the Number whereof he doth not remember) which the ſaid Earl accordingly did; but humbly inſiſts that his Actings therein were not ſervicеable, and the increaſing the Debts of the Publick.

VIII. That the ſaid Earl, during the Time of his Commanding the Navy Royal of England, did, through Neglect, and in Contempt of Orders, unneceſſarily hazard and expoſe to imminent Danger the ſaid Navy; and that during the Time aforeſaid, having had many Opportunities of taking or deſtroying the Ships belonging to the French King, the ſaid Earl, contrary to Advice, in Diſobedience to Orders, and in Neglect of his Duty, did ſuffer and permit the ſaid Ships to return ſafe into their own Harbours.

IX. That the ſaid Earl, well knowing our Sovereign Lord the King to have been engaged in ſeveral Alliances with the Emperor of Germany, and other Princes and States, particularly in a Treaty concluded with his Imperial Majeſty, in the Year of our Lord One Thouſand Six Hundred Eighty Nine, the End and Intention of all which Leagues and Treaties were to prevent the Growth of the Power of the French King, and to ſecure England, and the ancient Allies of England, againſt the ſame, did notwithſtanding in concert with other Falſe and Evil Councellors, adviſe our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, in the Year One Thouſand Six Hundred Ninety Eight, to enter into one Treaty for dividing the Monarchy and Dominions of Spain; in purſuance whereof, in the Year One Thouſand Six Hundred Ninety Nine, one other Treaty was entred into to the like Purpoſe; by which Treaties great Injuſtice was done to the Emperor, an ancient Ally of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, and a large Part of the ſaid Spaniſh Dominions were to be added to the Crown of France; both which Treaties were prejudicial to the Intereſt of the Proteſtant Religion all over Europe, Ruinous to the Trade of England, and Diſhonourable to our Sovereign Lord the King, and the People of theſe Kingdoms.

All which Crimes and Miſdemeanors, were committed and done by him the ſaid Earl, againſt our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, the Peace and Intereſt of this Kingdom, and in Breach of the ſeveral Truſts repoſed in him the ſaid Earl.

X. And he the ſaid Earl of Orford was one of the Lords Juſtices, during his Majeſties Abſence beyond the Seas, the Firſt Commiſſioner for Executing the Office of Lord High Admiral of England, Commander in Chief of his Majeſties Navy-Royal, one of his Majeſties Privy-Council, and Treaſurer of his Majeſty's Navy, or in ſome or one of the ſaid Stations, during the time that all and every the Crimes before ſet forth were done and committed.

That the ſaid Commons by Proteſtation, ſaving to themſelves the Liberty of Exhibiting, at any time hereafter, any other Accuſation or Impeachment againſt the ſaid Earl, and alſo of Replying to his Anſwers or to any of them, and of offering Proofs to all the ſaid Premiſſes or any of them, or any other Impeachment or Accuſation that ſhall be Exhibited by them, as the Caſe ſhall according to the Courſe of Parliament Require; do Pray and Demand, That the ſaid Earl may be put to Anſwer for all and every of the Premiſſes, and that ſuch Proceedings, Examinations, Tryals and Judgments, may be upon every of them had and uſed, as is agreeable to Law and Juſtice.

contrary to his Duty, or the Truſt in him repoſed, or the Debts of the Nation thereby increas'd.

VIII. To the Eighth the ſaid Earl anſwereth and denies, That at any Time while he commanded the Navy Royal, he did through Neglect or Contempt of Orders, unneceſſarily hazard or expoſe to Danger the ſaid Navy; and alſo denies, that upon any Opportunity of taking or deſtroying the Ships of the French King, he did, contrary to Advice, or in Diſobedience to Orders, neglect to do the ſame: And alſo denies that he did ſuffer or permit any of the French King's Ships to return into their own Harbours, when he had Opportunity to prevent the ſame; and humbly inſiſts he is not guilty of any Neglect or Omiſſion of his Duty herein, nor did expect in this Particular, to be charged therewith, conſidering his faithful Services rendred againſt the French Fleet.

IX. To the Ninth Article the ſaid Earl ſaith, He believes it to be true, that his Majeſty hath been engaged in ſeveral Alliances with ſeveral Princes, and particularly with the Emperor, in the Year One Thouſand Six Hundred Eighty Nine; and that the End of thoſe Alliances was to prevent the Growth and Power of France, and to ſecure this Kingdom and its Allies: But the ſaid Earl does deny, that he did adviſe his Majeſty to enter into the Treaty of Partition, charged upon the ſaid Earl in this Article, and ſo far as the ſaid Earl was any ways acquainted therewith, he objected to, and gave his Opinion againſt the ſame.

X. To the Tenth Article the ſaid Earl anſwereth and ſaith, That true it is, his Majeſty was pleaſed to Employ and Intruſt him in the ſeveral Offices and Stations in this Article mentioned, for ſeveral Years, as his Majeſties Occaſions required, although not for all the Time in the ſaid Article mentioned; and hopes and humbly inſiſteth upon it, that he the ſaid Earl did from time to time, according to his Duty, and the Truſts in him repoſed, diſcharge the ſaid Offices and Employments with Loyalty, Faithfulneſs and Zeal to his Majeſty, and his People.

And having thus laid his Caſe before your Lordſhips, he the ſaid Earl does humbly inſiſt and Anſwer to the ſaid Impeachment, and all and every the Articles aforeſaid, exhibited againſt him, that he is not guilty of all or any of them, or of all or any the Matters or Things by the ſaid Articles charged, in Manner and Form as the ſame are therein, and thereby alledged againſt him; and that the Matters by him before ſet forth to be done and tranſacted, or any of them, were not done or committed by him the ſaid Earl, againſt our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, or the Peace or Intereſt of this Kingdom, or in Breach of the Truſt repoſed in him the ſaid Earl, and humbly ſubmits himſelf herein to your Lordſhip's Judgment.

ORFORD.

After

The Committee appointed to conſider of the manner in delivering Articles of Impeachments by the Commons being Revived, the Houſe was adjourned during Pleaſure; and the Lords went to the Committee. After ſome Time the Houſe was reſumed, and the Earl of Stamford reported, that they had inſpected the Journals, and find the firſt Step, after Anſwers to Impeachments are delivered, is, to ſend a Copy thereof to the Houſe of Commons. Whereupon it is Ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, that the Anſwer of Edward Earl of Orford, delivered this Day to the Articles of Impeachment depending againſt him, be Copied, in order to be ſent to the Houſe of Commons to Morrow Morning, by two Maſters of Chancery.

A Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons, by Sir Richard Holford and Mr. Pitt, to carry down a Copy of the Earl of Orford's Anſwer to the Articles of Impeachment againſt him.

A Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons by Sir Richard Holford and Mr. Pitt, to acquaint them, That they having on the Firſt Day of April laſt, ſent up to their Lordſhips an Impeachment againſt William Earl of Portland, for High Crimes and Miſdemeanors: And having alſo on the Fifteenth Day of the ſame Month ſeverally Impeached John Lord Sommers, and Charles Lord Halifax, of High Crimes and Miſdemeanors; their Lordſhips think themſelves obliged to put them in Mind, that as yet no particular Articles have been exhibited againſt the ſaid Lords; which after Impeachments have been ſo long depending, is due in Juſtice to the Perſons concerned, and agreeable to the Methods of Parliament in ſuch Caſes.

The Meſſengers ſent to the Houſe of Commons return Anſwer, viz. That the Articles againſt William Earl of Portland, John Lord Sommers, and Charles Lord Halifax, are preparing, and in a ſhort time their Houſe will ſend them up to the Houſe of Lords.

Die Lunæ 19° Maij, 1701.

A Meſſage was brought from the Houſe of Commons by Mr. Harcourt, and others, with the Articles of Impeachment againſt John Lord Sommers; and to acquaint this Houſe, that the Matter of the Charge was contained in the Articles; and alſo that he was commanded to Pray and Demand, that the Lord Sommers do give ſufficient Security to abide the Judgment of the Houſe of Lords.

The Articles were read by the Clerk, as follows, viz.

ARTICLES Exhibited by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, in Parliament Aſſembled, in the Name of themſelves, and of all the Commons of England, againſt John Lord Sommers, Baron of Eveſham, in Maintenance of their Impeachment againſt him for High Crimes and Miſdemeanors.

I. THAT a Treaty and Alliance between Leopold the Emperor of Germany, and the States-General of the United Provinces, was made and concluded in the Year of our Lord One Thouſand Six Hundred Eighty Nine, upon their conſideration of the greatneſs of the Common Danger, which then threatned all Chriſtendom from the exceſſive Power of France, and the unconſtant Faith of the French in the Obſervance of Treaties; whereby it was agreed, that there ſhould be, and remain for ever, a Conſtant, Perpetual, and Inviolable Friendſhip, and good Correſpondence between his Imperial Majeſty and the States-General, that each of them ſhould be obliged to promote the others Intereſt, and as much as in them lay, prevent all Damages and Inconveniencies to each other.

That during the continuance of the War, there ſhould be not only a Defenſive but alſo an Offenſive Alliance between the ſaid Parties, by Virtue whereof they ſhould both of them Act in an Hoſtile manner, with all their Forces by Sea and Land, againſt the French

The ANSWER of John Lord Sommers, Baron of Eveſham, to the Articles Exhibited by the Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes in Parliament Aſſembled, in the Name of themſelves, and of all the Commons of England, in Maintenance of their Impeachment againſt him for High Crimes and Miſdemeanors, ſuppoſed to be by him committed. Delivered in 24° May, 1701.

THE ſaid Lord Sommers, ſaving to himſelf all Advantages of Exception to the ſaid Articles, and of not being prejudiced by any Words or want of Form in this his Anſwer, and alſo ſaving to himſelf all Rights and Privileges belonging to him as one of the Peers of this Realm; for Anſwer to the ſaid Articles humbly ſaith;

I. To the Firſt Article, That he believes the now Emperor of Germany, and the States-General of the United-Provinces, being in the Year One Thouſand Six Hundred Eighty and Nine, engaged in a War with France, a Treaty and Alliance was concluded between them, and a Separate Article then made, to the Effect in this Article mentioned; and that his Sacred Majeſty did afterwards Enter into, Ratify and Approve the ſame; to which Treaty, Separate Article, and Ratification, (for Certainty thereof) he referreth himſelf; and further ſaith, That in the Year One Thouſand Six Hundred Ninety and Eight, his Majeſty before he left England, was pleaſed

French King, and ſuch of his Allies as ſhould refuſe to ſeparate themſelves from him. That after the War ſhould be ended, and a Peace concluded, there ſhould remain, between his Imperial Majeſty, his Heirs and Succeſſors, and the States-General, a perpetual Defenſive Alliance againſt the Crown of France, and its Adherents.

That if the Crown of France ſhould again Attack either of the ſaid Confederate Parties, at what time ſoever the ſame ſhould be done, they ſhould faithfully aſſiſt each other.

That his Imperial Majeſty, and the States-General ſhould at all times, by all means, with all their Forces, Protect and Defend all the Rights of each other againſt the Crown of France, and its Adherents.

And other Proviſions were thereby made for their mutual Security, as well during the Continuance of the War, as after the Concluſion of a Peace.

That certain ſeparate Articles were alſo at or about that time made, whereby the States General maturely conſidering that France had openly declared in ſeveral Courts, that (notwithſtanding the moſt ſolemn Renunciation) they continued their Pretenſions by Force of Arms to aſſert for the Dauphin the Succeſſion of the Spaniſh Monarchy, in caſe the King of Spain ſhould die without Iſſue; and alſo conſidering what a Blow their State would receive, and what a Prejudice might happen thereby to the publick Affairs, and Quiet, did promiſe, That in caſe his ſaid Catholick Majeſty ſhould die without lawful Iſſue, they would with all their Forces aſſiſt his ſaid Imperial Majeſty, or his Heirs, in taking the Succeſſion of the Spaniſh Monarchy, lawfully belonging to that Houſe, together with its Kingdoms, Provinces, Dominions and Rights, and in their obtaining and ſecuring the quiet Poſſeſſion thereof, againſt the French, and their Adherents, who ſhould directly or indirectly oppoſe that Succeſſion, and with Force repel the Force that ſhould be brought againſt them.

That at the Inſtance of the States General, in Purſuance of the ſaid Treaty and ſeparate Articles, our moſt Gracious Lord and Sovereign his moſt Excellent Majeſty King William IIId. was invited to enter into an Alliance of the aforeſaid Treaty, and into the Agreement of the ſaid ſeparate Articles; and thereupon for reſtoring and preſerving the publick Peace and Quiet, did afterwards in the ſaid Year of our Lord One thouſand ſix hundred and eighty nine, enter into, and under the Great Seal of England accept, approve and ratify, and in the moſt ſolemn Manner, engage and promiſe religiouſly and inviolably to obſerve the ſame, without violating the ſaid Treaty or ſeparate Articles in any Article, or ſuffering the ſame to the utmoſt of his Power to be violated.

That in the Year of our Lord 1698. a Treaty was projected and contrived in France, to be ſet on Foot between his Majeſty, the French King, and the States General, for a Partition of the Spaniſh Monarchy, whereby many large Territories thereunto belonging were to be allotted and delivered up to France.

That the Tenor and Deſign of the ſaid laſt mentioned Treaty, whilſt the ſame was in Negotiation, was communicated to the ſaid John Lord Sommers, then one of the Lords Juſtices of England, Lord Chancellor of England, and one of his Majeſty's moſt Honourable Privy Council.

That the ſaid Lord Sommers, well knowing the moſt apparent evil Conſequences, as well as the Injuſtice of the ſaid Partition, did not, according to the Truſt pleaſed to tell him, that ſome Intimation had been given to the Earl of Portland, when in France, that the French King inclined to come to an Agreement with his Majeſty, concerning the Succeſſion to the Crown of Spain. And afterwards in Auguſt, One Thouſand Six Hundred Ninety and Eight, (his Majeſty being then in Holland, and the ſaid Lord Sommers at Tunbridge Wells, by his Majeſty's Permiſſion, for Recovery of his Health) Mr. Secretary Vernon communicated to him a Letter he had then received, written by the Earl of Portland, by his Majeſty's Order, wherein it was mentioned, that Count Tallard (who was then Ambaſſador from the French King to his Majeſty) had declared an Accommodation might be found out in relation to the Succeſſion of Spain, in Caſe of that King's Death; and that his Majeſty had ſounded France upon what Terms an Agreement might be made, and the Conditions were near of this Nature, (viz.) That the Electoral Prince of Bavaria ſhould have the Kingdom of Spain, the Indies, the Low Countries, and all that depends upon the Spaniſh Dominions (except the Kingdoms of Naples and Sicily, Sardinia, the Province of Guypuſcoa on this ſide of the *Pyrenean*s, Fontarabia and St. Sebaſtian, Final, and the Places in Tuſcany, of which Spain then ſtood poſſeſſed;) in Conſideration of which, France was abſolutely to renounce the Right it pretended to the Succeſſion of Spain, and Milan was to be given to the Arch-Duke, Second Son to the Emperor: And that his Majeſty commanded the ſaid Mr. Secretary to ſpeak to him the ſaid Lord Sommers touching that Matter; and that his Lordſhip ſhould diſcourſe it with thoſe he thought he might truſt with that Secret, which to keep with the utmoſt Care was by the ſaid Letters mentioned to be of the higheſt Importance; and at the ſame Time, the ſaid Lord Sommers received a Letter from his Majeſty, ſigned by himſelf, intimating that Count Tallard had made ſome Propoſitions touching an Agreement with his Majeſty concerning the Succeſſion of the Kingdom of Spain, the which the ſaid Earl of Portland would write to Mr. Secretary Vernon, to the End his Majeſty might have ſome Opinions upon that Affair, which required the greateſt Secreſy, and in which no Time was to be loſt, if that Negotiation were to be carried on; and for that End his Majeſty thereby commanded the ſaid Lord Sommers to ſend full Powers to him under the Great Seal of England, with Blanks for the Names of Commiſſioners to treat with Count Tallard; which his Majeſty by his ſaid Letter was pleaſed to ſay, he believed might be done ſecretly: That none but the ſaid Lord Sommers and Mr. Secretary Vernon, and thoſe to whom the ſaid Lord Sommers and Mr. Secretary ſhould communicate it, might have knowledge thereof; and that the Clerks who were to write the full Powers might not know what they were, or to the like Effect; and the ſaid Lord Sommers did immediately return the Earl of Portland's ſaid Letter to Mr. Secretary Vernon, and deſired him to communicate the Contents thereof to the Earl of Orford and the now Lord Halifax (Two of the then Lords Juſtices, who as he was aſſured were then in Town) and alſo to ſuch others as they and Mr. Secretary Vernon ſhould think fit; who in regard of the King's Command to have that Affair kept a Secret, thought fit to impart it to the Duke of Shrewsbury only (as the ſaid Mr. Secretary afterwards acquainted the ſaid Lord Sommers;) and ſome Time afterwards the ſaid Lord Halifax came down to the ſaid Wells, and Mr. Secretary Vernon coming thither alſo about the ſame Time, they and the ſaid Lord Sommers had Diſcourſe together concerning the ſaid Propoſal; and the and Duty of his ſaid ſeveral Offices, diſſuade or endeavour to obſtruct its taking Effect; but on the contrary, having neither Regard to his Majeſty's Honour engaged by the ſaid Treaty with the Emperor and States General, as aforeſaid; to the Trade and known Intereſt of this Kingdom, or the Peace of Europe; did adviſe his Majeſty to enter into the ſaid Treaty, and did ſo far encourage and promote the ſame, that the ſaid Treaty was concluded and ratified under the Great Seal of England, then in the Cuſtody of the ſaid Lord Sommers; and thereby the Kingdoms of Naples and Sicily, the Places depending on the Monarchy of Spain, ſituate on the Coaſt of Tuſcany, or the adjacent Iſlands, comprehended under the Name of Santo Stephano, Porto Hercole, Orbitello, Telamone, Porto Longone, Piombino, the Town and Marquiſate of Final, the Province of Guypuſcoa, particularly the Towns of Fontarabia, and St. Sebaſtian, ſituate in that Province, and eſpecially the Port of the Paſſage which is therein compriſed, with ſeveral other Parts and Things, of or belonging to the ſaid Kingdom of Spain, were allotted to the Dauphin for his Share; and the Crown of Spain, and the other Kingdoms, Iſlands, States, Countries and Places depending thereon, (except ſuch Part, as aforeſaid which was thereby allotted to the Dauphin for his Share, and the Dutchy of Milan herein after mentioned) was given and aſſigned to the Electoral Prince, eldeſt Son to the Elector of Bavaria, for his Share, to enjoy the ſame to him, his Heirs and Succeſſors for ever, never to be moleſted therein on any Pretence of Right or Claim on the Part of the French King, or the Dauphin, or his Iſſue, Heirs or Succeſſors, nor of the Part of the Emperor, the King of the Romans, the Arch-Duke Charles his Second Son, and other Children, or his Heirs or Succeſſors; and the Dutchy of Milan was thereby agreed to be given to the ſaid Arch-Duke for his Share, and in Extinction of all Pretenſions and Rights which the ſaid Emperor, the King of the Romans, the ſaid Arch-Duke Charles, all his other Children, Succeſſors, and Heirs, might have to the ſaid Succeſſion of Spain. By which Treaty it was alſo further agreed, That if any Prince whatſoever ſhould oppoſe the taking Poſſeſſion of the Shares thereby agreed on, as aforeſaid, his Majeſty, the French King, and the States General, ſhould aſſiſt one another againſt ſuch Oppoſition, and hinder the ſame with all their Power.

That by a ſecret Article of the ſaid Treaty, in like Manner ratified under the Great Seal of England, 'twas provided, That if the King of Spain ſhould die without Iſſue, and the Electoral Prince, of Bavaria ſhould afterwards die without Iſſue, his Electoral Highneſs of Bavaria his Father ſhould ſucceed him in all the Kingdoms, Iſlands, States, Countries, and Places aſſigned to the Electoral Prince, as aforeſaid, and enjoy the ſame to him and his Children, Succeſſors, and Heirs, then born, or to be born; ſo as neither the Emperor, his Children, nor any other Perſon, ſhould or might, under any Pretext, form the leaſt Pretenſion to that Succeſſion; his Majeſty, the French King, and States General, thereby engaging themſelves to employ all their Power by Land and by Sea, for maintaining the Order eſtabliſhed by the ſaid ſecret Article, relating to the Succeſſion of the Monarchy of Spain.

That the ſaid Treaty was ratified under the Great Seal of England, (then in the Cuſtody of the ſaid Lord Sommers) as an Agreement between his Majeſty, the French King, and States General, notwithſtanding the ſaid Lord Sommers well knew that the ſame had been concluded between his Majeſty's Commiſſioners and ſaid Lord Sommers by Letter dated the Twenty eighth of Auguſt, One thouſand ſix hundred ninety and eight, did (as his own Thoughts, and as what he apprehended to be the Reſult of their Conſideration) humbly repreſent to his Majeſty, Firſt, That the entertaining of ſuch a Propoſal, as was mentioned by Count Tallard, ſeemed to be attended with very many ill Conſequences, if the French did not act a ſincere Part; but that they were ſoon at Eaſe, as to any Apprehenſion of that Sort, being fully aſſured his Majeſty would not act but with the utmoſt Niceneſs in an Affair, wherein his Glory, and the Safety of Europe was ſo highly concerned. That the ſecond Thing they conſidered, was the very ill Proſpect of what was like to happen upon the Death of the King of Spain, in caſe nothing was done previouſly towards the providing againſt that Accident, which ſeems probably to be very near; the King of France then having ſo great a Force in ſuch a Readineſs, that he was in a Condition to take Poſſeſſion of Spain before any other Prince could be ready to make a Stand; That his Majeſty was the beſt Judge whether that was the Caſe, who was ſo perfectly informed of the Circumſtances of all Parts abroad. But ſo far as related to England, it would be the want of Duty not to give his Majeſty this clear Account, That there was a Deadneſs and want of Spirit in the Nation univerſally, ſo as not at all to be diſpoſed to the Thoughts of entring into a new War; and that they ſeemed to be tired out with Taxes to a Degree beyond what was diſcerned, until it appeared upon the Occaſion of the then late Elections: That that was the Truth of the Fact; upon which his Majeſty would determine what Reſolutions were proper to be taken. The remaining Conſideration was, what would be the Condition of Europe, if the Propoſal took Place; but of that they thought themſelves little capable of judging; but it ſeemed that if Sicily was in the French Hands, they would be entirely Maſters of the Levant Trade; That if they were poſſeſſed of Final, and thoſe other Sea-Ports on that ſide (whereby Milan would be entirely ſhut out from Relief by Sea, or any Commerce) that Dutchy would be of little Signification in the Hands of any Prince; and that if the King of France had Poſſeſſion of that Part of Guypuſcoa which is mentioned in the Propoſal, beſides the Ports he would have in the Ocean, it did ſeem he would have as eaſy a way of invading Spain on that ſide, as he then had on the ſide of Catalonia. But it was not to be hoped that France ſhould quit its Pretenſions to ſo great a Succeſſion, without conſiderable Advantages; and they were aſſured his Majeſty would reduce the Terms as low as could be done, and make them (as far as was poſſible in the then preſent Circumſtances of Things) ſuch as might be ſome Foundation for the future Quiet of Chriſtendom, which all his Majeſty's Subjects could not but be convinced was his true Aim. And if it could be brought to paſs, that England might be ſome way a Gainer by that Tranſaction whether it was by the Elector of Bavaria (who was the Gainer by his Majeſty's Interpoſition in that Treaty) his coming to an Agreement to let the Engliſh into ſome Trade to the Spaniſh Plantations, or in any other Manner, it would wonderfully endear his Majeſty to his Engliſh Subjects; That it did not appear, in Caſe the Negotiation ſhould proceed, what was to be done on his Majeſty's Part, in order to make it take place; whether any more was required than that the Engliſh and Dutch ſhould ſit ſtill, and France it ſelf was to ſee it executed; and if that were ſo, what Security ought to be expected, that if by their being Neuters, the French ſhould be ſucceſsful, and the French Ambaſſador, or the Commiſſioner of the French King only; and that the Purport thereof had never been communicated to the States General at the Time of the Ratification thereof under the Great Seal of England, notwithſtanding the Negotiation thereof in Holland.

they

they would confine themſelves to the Terms of the Treaty, and not attempt to make further Advantages of their Succeſs. And the ſaid Lord Sommers ſaith, That after the Writing of his ſaid Letter, he had no Account whatſoever, nor heard any thing of the ſaid Treaty, or knew or heard whether the ſame was proceeded upon or not, until towards the latter End of September following; when he was acquainted by Mr. Secretary Vernon, that he had receiv'd an Account, that a Treaty relating to the Succeſſion of the Crown of Spain had been adjuſted, concluded and ſigned by the Commiſſioners named by his Majeſty for that Purpoſe, and the Ambaſſador and Plenipotentiary of the French King. And the ſaid Lord Sommers doth deny, that the ſaid Treaty of Partition, or any Propoſition for ſuch Treaty, or the Tranſaction thereof, was communicated to him the ſaid Lord Sommers, nor was he acquainted with the ſame, or the Deſign thereof, or any other Matter relating thereto, at any other Time, or in any other Manner, before he was told of the Concluding and Signing thereof, as aforeſaid, than as is herein before-mentioned to be done by his Majeſty, as aforeſaid, and by his and the ſaid Earl of Portland's Letter, herein before-mentioned. And the ſaid Lord Sommers doth deny he did, at any Time whatſoever, adviſe his Majeſty to enter into the ſaid Treaty, or any way encourage or promote the ſame; but having made the Objections before-mentioned in his ſaid Letter to his Majeſty, againſt the Propoſitions ſo communicated to him, as aforeſaid, and clearly laid open ſuch Thoughts and Obſervations as occurred to him upon the ſaid Matter; he did thereby (as he conceived) fully and faithfully diſcharge his Truſt, and the Duty incumbent on him. And the ſaid Lord Sommers further ſaith, That afterwards Mr. Secretary Vernon did acquaint him, that he had received, by his Majeſty's Command, a Copy of the Treaty relating to the Succeſſion of the Crown of Spain, and of Two Secret Articles relating to the Matter of that Treaty; and that he had likewiſe his Majeſty's Command to prepare the Inſtruments for the Ratification of the ſame, and to leave Blanks therein for the Names of the Commiſſioners of the States General. And accordingly the ſaid Mr. Secretary did prepare the ſaid ſeveral Inſtruments, and did bring the ſame, ſo prepared, to the ſaid Lord Sommers, to paſs the ſame under the Great Seal; which was done accordingly, the ſaid Lord Sommers having a good and lawful Warrant ſo to do; and the ſaid Ratification was tranſmitted to his Majeſty, to have the ſame perfected in his Preſence: Which Treaty and Secret Articles were to ſuch or the like Effect, as in this Article is ſet forth; but for more Certainty, he refers himſelf to the ſaid Treaty and Articles. And the ſaid Lord Sommers not being privy in any other manner, than as aforeſaid, to the ſaid Treaty, or the Tranſaction thereof, doth not know when or in what manner the ſame was communicated to the States-General.

II. That for the more effectual carrying on the ſaid Treaty, one or more Commiſſion or Commiſſions was or were prepared, amended, enlarged or altered by the ſaid Lord Sommers, without any lawful Warrant for his ſo doing; whereunto the ſaid Lord Sommers, contrary to the Duty of his ſaid ſeveral Offices, and in Violation of the great Truſt repoſed in him, in or about the Month of September, 1698. without communicating the ſame to the reſt of the then Lords Juſtices of England, or adviſing in Council with his Majeſty's Privy-Council thereupon, did preſume to affix the Great Seal of England.

That no certain Perſons of known Honour, Fidelity and Experience were therein nominated Commiſſioners, at the Time of the affixing the Great Seal of England thereto, but a Blank or empty Space was left in the ſaid Commiſſion or Commiſſions at the Time of the Sealing thereof, wherein the Commiſſioners Names were to be afterwards inſerted beyond the Seas; notwithſtanding which, an Unlimited Power was thereby granted to the Commiſſioners, whoſe Names were therein afterwards to be inſerted, as aforeſaid, or to either of them, without any Written Inſtructions whatſoever to reſtrain, guide, or direct them in the Exerciſe thereof; in his Majeſty's Name, to confer and treat with the Commiſſioner or Deputy, or Commiſſioners or Deputies of the French King, and alſo with the Commiſſioners or Deputies of the States General, for preſerving the publick Peace, and touching the Succeſſion to the Crown of Spain; and his Majeſty did thereby engage himſelf to Approve, Ratify, and Confirm whatſoever ſhould be thereupon concluded by them, or either of them.

III. That the ſaid Lord Sommers, contrary to the Duty of his ſaid Office of Lord Chancellor, did affix the Great Seal of England to the ſaid Commiſſion or Commiſſions, not having firſt received any

II, and III. To the Second and Third Articles the ſaid Lord Sommers ſaith, That he having received his Majeſty's expreſs Commands, by his Letter mentioned in his Anſwer to the Firſt Article, to ſend to his Majeſty full Powers, under the Great Seal of England, for negotiating the ſaid Treaty, with Blanks for his Majeſty's Commiſſioners Names, which he humbly conceives, and is adviſed, was a ſufficient Warrant for him to paſs a Commiſſion under the Great Seal for that Purpoſe; and the ſame being prepared in uſual Form of Commiſſions of full Powers, with Blanks for Commiſſioners Names, according to his Majeſty's Directions, he did affix the Great Seal to the ſame; and the ſaid Commiſſion was ſent to his Majeſty then in Holland, to be perfected in his Preſence, by inſerting the Names of ſuch Perſons as his Majeſty ſhould think fit to commiſſionate therein (as he conceives might legally be done); which Commiſſioners were to receive their Inſtructions from his Majeſty, for the Execution of their ſaid Power, together with the ſaid Commiſſion, in uſual manner: But what Inſtructions, or whether any Inſtructions in Writing were given to the Commiſſioners, in relation to the Executing the ſaid Power (the ſame no ways concerning the ſaid Lord Sommers) he knows not. And the ſaid Lord Sommers ſaith, he did deſire his Majeſty, that a particular Warrant for the ſaid Commiſſion (which had been before ſent by Mr. Secretary Vernon to his Majeſty (as he informed the ſaid Lord Sommers) for his Signing) might be Signed and returned: Not that he doubted his Majeſty's ſaid Letter to be a ſufficient Warrant, but for that ſuch Warrant might be more proper to be produced, if Occaſion ſhould require, than his Majeſty's ſaid Letter; which, by Reaſon of other Matters therein contained, ought not to be produced without his Majeſty's Permiſſion, and which is now made uſe of by his Majeſty's gracious Leave. And the ſaid Lord Sommers lawful Warrant for that purpoſe. In hopes of concealing which evil and moſt dangerous Practice, the ſaid Lord Sommers, after he had Sealed the ſaid Commiſſion or Commiſſions, uſed his Endeavours to procure a Warrant to be tranſmitted to him for affixing the Great Seal to the ſaid Commiſſion or Commiſſions, and that it might not be known but that he had it in due time.

IV. That the ſaid Lord Sommers, contrary to the Duty of his ſaid ſeveral Offices, affixed the Great Seal of England to the Ratification of the ſaid Treaty, made in the Year of our Lord 1698. not having firſt communicated the ſame to the reſt of the then Lords Juſtices of England, or adviſed in Council with his Majeſty's Privy-Council thereupon; and at the Time of his affixing the Great Seal thereto, one entire Blank Sheet, and many other Blanks were left in the ſaid Ratification, with an Intent to be afterwards filled up by other Perſons beyond the Seas, as ſhould be thought fit.

V. That in the Year of our Lord 1699, another Treaty was entred into, in purſuance of the ſaid Treaty made in the Year 1698, and concluded by and between his Majeſty, the French King, and the States-General, and alſo ratified under the Great Seal of England, then in the Cuſtody of the ſaid Lord Sommers; whereby the Kingdom of Spain (in caſe his Catholick Majeſty ſhould die without Iſſue) was agreed to be divided, and many large Territories thereof were allotted to the Dauphin for his Share: Which Treaties were evidently deſtructive of the Trade of this Realm, diſhonourable to his Majeſty, highly injurious to the Intereſt of the Proteſtant Religion, and manifeſtly tended to diſturb the General Peace of Europe, by altering the Balance of Power therein, and ſtrengthning France againſt the Good Friends and Ancient Allies of our Sovereign Lord the King.

VI. That whereas by the Laws and Uſages of this Realm, all Commiſſions under the Great Seal of England, for the making any Treaties or Alliances with any Foreign Princes, States or Potentates, and all Ratifications under the Great Seal of all ſuch Treaties or Alliances, ought to be Enrolled and entred of Record in the Court of Chancery, with or by the Prothonotary of the ſaid Court, for a perpetual Memorial thereof; and that the Merchants and other Subjects of England, having Commerce or Correſpondence in Foreign Parts, may not, through Ignorance of the ſame, incur the Pains and Penalties by the Law due to thoſe who ſhall any ways Infringe, Break, or Act contrary to ſuch Treaties; He the ſaid Lord Sommers, not minding the Duty of his Office, did not in any manner Enrol, or Enter of Record, or cauſe to be Enrolled or Entred of Record, any of the ſaid Commiſſions or Ratifications in the foregoing Articles mentioned, as by the Duty of his Place he ſhould and ought to have done; but ſo to do did totally neglect and omit, in Breach of his Duty, and in Violation of the Laws of this Realm.

VII. That the ſaid Lord Sommers, when the Cuſtody of the Great Seal of England was committed to him, did ſwear well and truly to ſerve our Sovereign Lord the King, and his People, Poor and Rich, after the Laws and Uſages of this Realm, and truly to counſel the King, and his Counſel to keep, and not to know, nor ſuffer the Hurt or Diſinheriting of the King, or that the Rights of the Crown ſhould be decreaſed, as far forth as he might Let it, and if he could not Let it, that he further ſaith, That his Majeſty having by his own, and the Earl of Portland's Letter before-mentioned, directed, That his Majeſty's ſaid Commands ſhould be kept ſecret; he did not communicate the making of the ſaid Commiſſion, otherwiſe than to the Perſons mentioned in his Anſwer to the ſaid Firſt Article.

IV. To the Fourth Article he ſaith, That Mr. Secretary Vernon having prepared, by his Majeſty's Command, the Inſtruments for Ratification of the ſaid Treaty, with Blanks therein, as is before ſet forth; he did affix the Great Seal to the ſaid Ratification with ſuch Blanks (which he conceives, and is adviſed, he might lawfully do); and having alſo his Majeſty's Command that the ſaid Treaty ſhould be kept ſecret, he did not communicate the ſame to the reſt of the then Lords Juſtices, or his Majeſty's Privy-Council; which beſides he conceived was unneceſſary to be done, in regard his Majeſty had then by his Commiſſioners, perfected the ſaid Treaty, ſo that the ſame could not be altered.

V. To the Fifth Article the ſaid Lord Sommers ſaith, He believes that in the Year One Thouſand Six Hundred Ninety and Nine, another Treaty was entred into and concluded between his Majeſty, the States-General, and the French King, to ſuch or ſuch like Effect, as in this Article is mentioned; to which Treaty, for more Certainty thereof, he referreth himſelf: And denieth that he had any Knowledge of ſuch Treaty, or any Tranſaction in order thereunto; ſave only that a Draught of the ſaid Treaty was read over in the Preſence of divers of the Lords of his Majeſty's Privy-Council (whereof the ſaid Lord Sommers was one) to which Draught the ſaid Lord Sommers, as well as others then preſent, did make ſeveral Objections; but they were informed by his Majeſty's Plenipotentiaries for tranſacting the ſaid Treaty, who were then alſo preſent, That the ſaid Treaty was ſo far perfected, that nothing could then be altered therein; and his Majeſty afterwards, by his Warrant, requiring the Ratifying of the ſaid Treaty under the Great Seal, he did affix the Great Seal to ſuch Ratification, being (as he conceives) obliged ſo to do.

VI. To the Sixth Article he ſaith, He conceives it was not incumbent upon him, as Lord Chancellor, to ſee the Commiſſions or Ratifications, in this Article mentioned, Enrolled; the ſame being prepared and brought to the Great Seal by the Secretaries of State ready Ingroſſed; and when Sealed, taken away by them, and the Original Treaties remaining in their Cuſtody: But the Care of Enrolling the ſame, if neceſſary, doth (as he conceives) belong to the Prothonotary of the Court of Chancery.

VII. To the Seventh Article he ſaith, That when the Great Seal was committed to his Cuſtody, he took the Oath of Office to the Effect in that Article ſet forth; and during the time he had the Cuſtody thereof, he did carefully, diligently and honeſtly endeavour to keep the ſaid Oath, and hopes and believes he hath duly obſerved the ſame; and doth acknowledge, that during the time he was Lord-Keeper and Lord-Chancellor, he did paſs ſeveral Grants to divers Perſons, of ſeveral Lands, Tene-he would make it clearly and expreſly to be known unto the King, with his true Advice and Counſel; and that he ſhould do and purchaſe the King's Profit in all he reaſonably might, or to that Effect; and the ſaid Lord Sommers afterwards took the ſaid Oath as Lord Chancellor of England.

That the ſaid Lord Sommers, being Lord Keeper of the Great Seal, or Lord Chancellor of England, and one of his Majeſty's moſt Honourable Privy-Council, whilſt this Nation was engaged in a tedious and moſt expenſive War againſt the French King, for preſerving the Balance and Liberties of Europe, and almoſt exhauſted with Supplies and Taxes for carrying on the ſame, and under ſuch heavy Debts, as without the utmoſt Frugality, or laying inſupportable Taxes on the Commons of England, were impoſſible to be ſatisfied; contrary to his ſaid Oath, did paſs many great, unreaſonable, and exorbitant Grants under the Great Seal of England, of divers Manors, Lordſhips, Lands, Tenements, Hereditaments, Revenues, and Intereſts belonging to the Crown of England, amounting to a moſt prodigious and exceſſive Value; and did Adviſe, Promote, and Procure, divers great, unreaſonable, and exorbitant Grants to be made of ſeveral of the late Forfeited Eſtates in Ireland, in contempt of the Advice of his Majeſties moſt Dutiful and Loyal Subjects the Commons of England in Parliament aſſembled, and without any regard to his Majeſties moſt gracious Aſſurance thereupon to both his Houſes of Parliament; and engaged to procure, and accordingly did procure divers Acts, prepared for confirming the ſaid Grants in Parliament in Ireland, to be approved in Council in England, and afterwards remitted the ſame, under the Great Seal of England, to be paſſed into Laws in Ireland.

VIII. That the ſaid Lord Sommers, during the time of his being Lord-Keeper of the Great Seal, and Lord-Chancellor of England, did not only receive and enjoy the Fees, Profits, and Perquiſites, of, or belonging to the Great Seal, eſtabliſhed by Law, as a ſufficient and ample Recompence and Reward for the faithful Diſcharge of that high Station; but alſo as a further Encouragement, through his Majeſty's moſt abundant Grace and Bounty, received an Annual Penſion or Allowance from the Crown of Four Thouſand Pounds, and many other Profits and Advantages; notwithſtanding which, the ſaid Lord Sommers, not being contented therewith, contrary to his ſaid Oath, begged and procured, for his own Benefit, many great, unreaſonable and exorbitant Grants of ſeveral Manors, Lands, Tenements, Rents, Hereditaments, and Revenues belonging to the Crown of England.

That in, or about the Month of April, 1697, the ſaid Lord Sommers, being then Lord Chancellor of England, and one of his Majeſty's moſt Honourable Privy-Council, contrary to his ſaid Oath, did procure and paſs a Grant under the Great Seal of England, without any real Conſideration whatſoever, to Joſeph Jekyll, Eſq; and his Heirs for ever, of the Manor or Manors of Rygate and Howleigh, with all and ſingular their Rights, Members, and Appurtenances, ſituate, and being in the Pariſh of Rygate, or elſewhere, within the County of Surry; and of all Quit-Rents, Rents of Aſſize, Free-Rents, Conventionary-Rents, Copyhold and Cuſtomary-Rents, and all other Rents whatſoever, to the ſaid Manor or Manors belonging, or appertaining, with the Site of the ruined Caſtle, and of all other Demeſne Lands of the ſaid Manor or Manors, with the Rents reſerved on any Leaſes then in being, of any Tenements, and Hereditaments, belonging to his Majeſty, in Right of his Crown of England; but ſaith, that before any of them came to the Great Seal, the ſame were regularly paſſed through the proper Offices, and brought with ſufficient Warrants for the Great Seal; and believes more conſiderable Grants have paſſed in the like Number of Years, in moſt of his Predeceſſors Times; and Conceives and is Adviſed, That being required by his Majeſty, by Warrant, to paſs the ſame, he ought ſo to do; and denies that he did ever Adviſe, Promote or Procure any Grant to be made to any Perſon whatſoever, of any Forfeited Eſtate in Ireland, or did procure any Act or Bill prepared for confirming any ſuch Grant in the Parliament in Ireland, to be approved in the Privy-Council in England; and ſaith, That what Bills of this Nature were remitted under the Great Seal of England, to be paſſed into Laws in Ireland, the ſame were firſt Approved and Paſſed in the Privy-Council in England, according to the uſual Form in ſuch Caſes; and being ſo Approved, were, by Order of Council, ſent to the ſaid Lord Sommers, who was by the ſaid Order required to Affix the Great Seal thereto.

VIII. To the Eighth Article he ſaith, He did, during the time he had the Cuſtody of the Great Seal, receive the Profits and Perquiſites thereto belonging, which before his time were become very inconſiderable; and did alſo receive an Annual Penſion or Allowance from His Majeſty, of Four Thouſand Pounds, being the like Penſion that had been allowed to ſeveral of his Predeceſſors; but denies that he did ever beg, or uſe any means to procure any Grant whatſoever from His Majeſty, for his own Benefit: But ſaith, That what his Majeſty was pleaſed to give him proceeded from his Majeſties own Motion, and of his meer Bounty; and (as his Majeſty was pleaſed to declare upon that Occaſion) as an Evidence of his Gracious Acceptation of the ſaid Lord Sommers's Zealous Endeavours for his Service; and the ſame was done without any previous Solicitation by him the ſaid Lord Sommers, or any other to his Knowledge or Belief. And that in the Year One Thouſand Six Hundred, Ninety-Seven, his Majeſty of his own Motion did grant, for the Benefit of the ſaid Lord Sommers, the Manor or Manors of Rygate and Howley, as in the ſaid Article is mentioned; but the ſame was, and is far ſhort of the Value thereby ſuggeſted: And the ſaid Lord Sommers further ſaith, He never pretended to purchaſe in his own Name, or in the Name or Names of any other Perſon or Perſons in Truſt for him, any of the Fee-farm Rents, or other Rents veſted in Truſtees for Sale. But his Majeſty taking Notice, that ſeveral of the ſaid Fee-farm Rents and other Rents, ſo veſted in Truſtees, were unſold, and the ſaid Truſtees being, by the Acts of Parliament veſting in them the ſaid Rents, declared to hold the ſame for the Benefit of his Majeſty, his Heirs and Succeſſors, his Majeſty did in the Year any Parts thereof, and of all other Lands, Meadows, Feedings, Paſtures, Meſſuages, Houſes, Edifices, Buildings, Barns, Stables, Dove-Houſes, Tolls of Markets or Fairs, with the Market-houſe there; and alſo of all Warrens, Chaſes, Parks, Commons, Woods, Underwoods, Wood-lands, Waſte-grounds, Courts-Leet, Courts-Baron, and other Court-Services, Franchiſes, Heriots, Fines, Iſſues, Amerciaments, and all other Profits and Perquiſites of the ſaid Courts, Rights, Royalties, Juriſdictions, and of divers other Matters, Hereditaments, and Appurtenances to the ſaid Manor or Manors, or either of them, or to the Royalties thereof belonging, or in any wiſe appertaining, which Premiſſes were Parcel of the Demeſnes and Revenues of the Crown, and of the Value of Twelve Thouſand Pounds and upwards.

That under Pretence of purchaſing divers Fee-Farm Rents, and other Rents, veſted in Truſtees for Sale thereof, in purſuance of ſeveral Acts of Parliament, made in the Reign of his late Majeſty King Charles the Second, the ſaid Lord Sommers, in the Year of our Lord 1697, procured a Warrant from his Majeſty, under his Sign Manual, to the Commiſſioners of the Treaſury then in Being, to contract or give Warrant to the Truſtees for Sale of Fee-Farm Rents, to contract with Humphry Hetherington, Eſq; or ſuch as he ſhould nominate, for as many Fee-Farm, and other Rents, then remaining unſold (except ſuch Rents as were ſet apart for Payment of Penſions in the Penſion-Deed) as ſhould amount unto Eight Hundred Pounds per Annum, at the Rate of Sixteen Years Purchaſe; and that upon ſuch Contract, the ſaid Commiſſioners of the Treaſury ſhould give Warrant for conveying the ſaid Rents to the ſaid Humphry Hetherington, or ſuch as he ſhould appoint, and his Heirs.

That under the like Pretence, and at or about the ſame time, the ſaid Lord Sommers procured another Warrant from his Majeſty, under his Sign Manual, to the ſaid Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, to Contract, or give Warrant to the ſaid Truſtees, to Contract with Richard Adney, Eſq; or ſuch as he ſhould Nominate, for as many Fee-Farm, and other Rents, then remaining unſold (except as aforeſaid) as ſhould amount to Seven Hundred Pounds per Annum, at the Rate of Sixteen Years Purchaſe; and that upon the ſaid Contract the ſaid Commiſſioners ſhould give Warrant for conveying the ſaid Rents unto the ſaid Richard Adney, or ſuch as he ſhould Nominate, and his Heirs.

That under the like Pretence, and at or about the ſame Time, the ſaid Lord Sommers procured another Warrant from his Majeſty, under his Sign Manual to the ſaid Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, to contract, or give Warrant to the ſaid Truſtees to contract with Samuel Newton, Eſq; or ſuch as he ſhould nominate, for as many Fee-Farm, and other Rents, then remaining unſold, (except as aforeſaid) as ſhould amount to Six hundred Pounds per Annum, at the Rate of Sixteen Years Purchaſe; and that upon ſuch Contract, the ſaid Commiſſioners ſhould give Warrant for conveying the ſaid Rents unto the ſaid Samuel Newton, or ſuch as he ſhould nominate, and his Heirs.

That in purſuance of Warrants of the ſaid Commiſſioners of the Treaſury thereupon, certain Contracts were made, or pretended to be made, with the ſaid Humphry Hetherington, Richard Adney, and Samuel Newton, for the real Sale of divers Fee-Farm Rents, and other Rents, of the ſeveral and reſpective yearly Values aforeſaid; by vertue whereof the ſaid Humphry Hetherington, Richard Adney, and Samuel Newton, became obliged to pay into the Receipt of his Majeſty's Exchequer at Weſtminſter, for the Purchaſe of the ſeveral and reſpective Rents to them reſpectively to be conveyed as aforeſaid, the Sums herein after mention'd; (that is to ſay) the ſaid Humphry Hetherington Twelve thouſand eight hundred Pounds, the ſaid Richard Adney Eleven thouſand two hundred Pounds, and the ſaid Samuel Newton Nine thouſand ſix hundred Pounds.

That in purſuance of ſuch Contracts, or pretended Contracts, thro' the Power of the ſaid Lord Sommers, and by his Means and Procurement, divers Fee-Farm Rents, and other Rents, were by certain Indentures Tripartite of Bargain and Sale, bearing Date on or about the Sixth Day of January, 1697. in Conſideration of Three thouſand two hundred Pounds, therein mention'd to have been paid by the ſaid Humphry Hetherington unto his Majeſty, at the Receipt of his Exchequer at Weſtminſter, or by other Aſſurance in the Law, granted and conveyed by the ſaid Truſtees, by the Appointment of the ſaid Humphry Hetherington, to Leonard Hancock of Cheſhunt, in the County of Hertford, Eſq; and John Warner, of the Pariſh of St. Clements Danes in the County of Middleſex, Goldſmith, and their Heirs.

And by other Indentures of Bargain and Sale, of the ſame Date, or other Aſſurance in the Law, divers other Fee-Farm Rents, and other Rents therein mention'd, in Conſideration of Nine thouſand ſix hundred Pounds, therein mention'd to have been paid by the ſaid Humphry Hetherington to his Majeſty, at the Receipt of his Exchequer at Weſtminſter, (being the Reſidue of the ſaid Sum of Twelve thouſand eight

One Thouſand Six Hundred Ninety Seven, of his own Motion, without any Soliciation, Procurement or Means uſed by the ſaid Lord Sommers, acquaint the then Lords Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, or ſome or one of them, that it was his Majeſties Pleaſure that Two Thouſand one Hundred Pounds per Annum of thoſe Rents ſhould be granted to or for the Benefit of the ſaid Lord Sommers, and his Heirs; and that all proper Methods ſhould be uſed for veſting the ſame for his Benefit, as of his Majeſties Free Gift: And the ſaid Acts of Parliament having directed, that the ſaid Truſtees, on Sales, ſhould convey the ſaid Rents, purſuant to Contracts to be Signed by the Lord Treaſurer, or Lords Commiſſioners of the Treaſury for the time being, or any Two of them, for the Satisfaction of the ſaid Truſtees only, and according to the Method that had been uſed from the time of making the ſaid Acts, in paſſing Grants of any of the ſaid Rents, even ſuch as were meerly of the Bounty of his Majeſties Predeceſſors, and of his Majeſty; ſuch Warrants were made by his Majeſty to the Lords Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, to Contract or Give Warrants to the Truſtees to Contract for the ſaid Rents; and ſuch Contracts were, purſuant thereunto made, and ſuch Grants of the ſaid Rents were paſſed, as in the ſaid Article is mentioned; and the Money mentioned in ſuch Contracts was for the perfecting of his Majeſties ſaid intended Free Gift, diſcharged by Tallies ſtruck for that Purpoſe: And the ſaid Lord Sommers ſaith, the ſaid Contracts were not intended or deſigned to make the Grantees of the ſaid Rents appear to be Purchaſers; but the ſaid Lord Sommers always acknowledged he received the ſaid Grants of his Majeſties Bounty; and he humbly conceives it was lawful for him ſo to accept the ſame.

eight hundred Pounds) were by the ſaid Truſtees granted and conveyed to the ſaid Humphry Hetherington, and his Heirs; which Fee-Farm, and other Rents, ſo conveyed unto or by the Appointment of the ſaid Humphry Hetheirngton, amount to the full Yearly Value of Eight hundred Pounds.

And by other Indentures of Bargain and Sale of the ſame Date, or other Aſſurance in the Law, and in Conſideration of Two thouſand four hundred Pounds, therein mention'd to have been paid by the ſaid Richard Adney unto his Majeſty, at the Receipt of his Exchequer at Weſtminſter, other Fee-Farm Rents, and other Rents were by the Appointment of the ſaid Richard Adney, granted and conveyed by the ſaid Truſtees to the ſaid Leonard Hancock, and John Warner, and their Heirs.

And by other Indentures of Bargain and Sale of the ſame Date, or other Aſſurance in the Law, in Conſideration of Eight thouſand eight hundred Pounds, in the ſame Indentures mention'd to have been paid by the ſaid Richard Adney to his Majeſty, at the Receipt of his Exchequer at Weſtminſter, (being the Reſidue of the ſaid Sum of Eleven thouſand two hundred Pounds) divers other Fee-Farm Rents, and other Rents therein mention'd, were granted and conveyed by the ſaid Truſtees, to the ſaid Richard Adney and his Heirs; which Fee-Farm, and other Rents ſo conveyed to, or by the Appointment of the ſaid Richard Adney, amount to the full Yearly Value of Seven hundred Pounds per Annum.

And by other Indentures of Bargain and Sale, bearing Date on or about the 25th Day of April, 1698. or other Aſſurance in the Law, in Conſideration of Two thouſand four hundred Pounds, therein mention'd to have been paid by the ſaid Samuel Newton to his Majeſty at the Receipt of his Exchequer at Weſtminſter, other Fee-Farm Rents, and other Rents therein mention'd, were by the Appointment of the ſaid Samuel Newton, granted and conveyed by the ſaid Truſtees to the ſaid Leonard Hancock, and John Warner, and their Heirs.

And by other Indentures of Bargain and Sale of the ſame Date, or other Aſſurance in Law, in Conſideration of Seven thouſand two hundred Pounds, therein mention'd to have been paid by the ſaid Samuel Newton to his Majeſty at the Receipt of his Exchequer at Weſtminſter, (being the Reſidue of the ſaid Sum of Nine thouſand ſix hundred Pounds) divers other Fee-Farm Rents, and other Rents therein mention'd, were granted and conveyed by the ſaid Truſtees to the ſaid Samuel Newton, and his Heirs; which ſaid ſeveral Rents ſo conveyed unto, or by the Appointment of the ſaid Samuel Newton, amount to the Yearly Value of Six hundred Pounds.

That the ſaid ſeveral Manors and Rents aforeſaid, were granted to the ſaid Joſeph Jekyl, Humphry Hetherington, Richard Adney, and Samuel Newton, and their Heirs reſpectively, as aforeſaid, in Truſt for the ſaid Lord Sommers, and his Heirs.

IX. That the ſaid Lord Somers, in order to procure a Grant of the ſaid Fee-Farm Rents for his own Benefit, whilſt he was Lord Chancellor of England, and one of his Majeſty's moſt Honourable Privy-Council, whilſt his Majeſty was engaged in the ſaid War, and the Nation under ſuch heavy Debts, as aforeſaid, did enter into ſeveral Treaties, and had many Communications with divers Perſons entruſted with the Care and Management of the ſaid Fee-Farm Rents; and particularly with Reginald Marriott of the Pariſh of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middleſex, Auditor of the Rates, or acting as Auditor, and with John Digby of the Pariſh of St. Brides, London, Clerk of the Truſtees for Sale of the ſaid Fee-Farm Rents, and other evil-diſpos'd Perſons; and for encouraging the ſaid Marriott, Digby, and others, to diſcover to him ſuch particular Fee-Farm, and other Rents, as then remained undiſpos'd of, to the Intent the ſaid Lord Sommers might beg the ſame, he the ſaid Lord Sommers contracted and agreed with the ſaid Marriott, to give the ſaid Marriott for himſelf and his Accomplices, as a Reward for the ſaid Diſcovery, one full Fourth Part of all ſuch Rents ſo diſcover'd, whereof the ſaid Lord Sommers ſhould procure a Grant from the Crown: And accordingly the ſaid ſeveral Grants from the ſaid Truſtees to the ſaid Hancock and Warner, being together of the Yearly Value of Five hundred Pounds per Annum, and upwards, were ſo made by the Direction of the ſaid Lord Sommers, in Truſt for the ſaid Marriott, Digby, or others.

X. That notwithſtanding the ſaid pretended Contracts and Payments, there was not any Sum of Money whatſoever really and bona fide paid, as the Conſideration of the Conveyances of the ſaid Rents from the ſaid Truſtees; but ſuch Contracts and Payments of the ſaid ſeveral Conſiderations (amounting in the whole to Thirty three thouſand and ſix hundred Pounds) were colourably and fraudulently contrived and made by Direction of

IX. and X. To the Ninth and Tenth Articles the ſaid Lord Sommers ſaith, That after his Majeſty had given ſuch Directions to the Lords of the Treaſury for granting Fee-Farm Rents, and other Rents, to the Yearly Value aforeſaid, for the Benefit of the ſaid Lord Sommers, and his Heirs; and after Warrants were ſigned by the Lords of the Treaſury to the ſaid Truſtees, for making Contracts for conveying Rents of the ſaid Yearly Value, for the Benefit of the ſaid Lord Sommers, it did appear, that the ſaid intended Contracts and Grants could not be perfected; for that neither the Lords of the Treaſury, nor the ſaid Truſtees, were ſufficiently informed what Fee-Farm Rents, or other Rents, remain'd undiſpos'd of; ſo that the whole Benefit of his Majeſty's intended Bounty would have been loſt, without Information could be gained of ſuch particular Rents. And the ſaid Lord Sommers being inform'd, that Reginald Marriott and John Digby, in this Article named, were the moſt likely, if not the only Perſons capable to give Information therein, Application was made to them for that Purpoſe; and the ſaid Marriott and Digby being ſo applied to, after the ſaid Warrants of his Majeſty and the ſaid Lords of the Treaſury were executed, as aforeſaid, did refuſe to give any Account of ſuch Rents, unleſs they might have, as a Reward for their ſo doing, Rents amounting to near a Fourth Part of ſuch Rents whereof they ſhould give ſuch Account, conveyed in Truſt for them in ſuch manner as in the ſaid Article is mention'd; which the ſaid Lord Sommers did (as he conceives he lawfully might, it being only to his own Loſs and Prejudice) comply with; not in order to any ſuch End as is ſuggeſted in the ſaid Article; but that he might perfect the Grant before deſigned and appointed to be made to him by his Majeſty, of his own Free Will, and not at the ſaid Lord Sommers's Solicitation; the Diſcovery of any of the ſaid Rents not being made by the ſaid Marriott and Digby, or any other Perſon, till after the ſaid Warrants of his Majeſty and of the ſaid Lord Sommers, contrary to his ſaid Oath, in Deceit of his Majeſty, and Eluſion of the ſaid Acts of Parliament.

and the Lords of the Treaſury, as aforeſaid. And accordingly the ſeveral Grants in this Aritcle mentioned, were made to Hancock and Warner, in Truſt for the ſaid Marriott and Digby (as was affirmed to the ſaid Lord Sommers); and the ſaid Lord Sommers ſaith, There was not any Sum of Money paid as the Conſideration of the Grants of the ſaid Rents; but the Contracts were made, and the Payment of the ſeveral Conſiderations thereof were diſcharg'd, in the Manner and for the Reaſons herein before ſet forth, and were not colourably or fraudulently contriv'd, in Deceit of his Majeſty, or Eluſion of the ſaid Acts of Parliament.

XI. That many Quit-Rents, and Copy-hold Rents, ſtanding in Charge as Parcel of, or belonging to ſeveral Manors, or reputed Manors, Rents reſerved upon Leaſes or Eſtates, the Reverſion whereof was in his ſaid Majeſty King Charles the Second, at the making the ſaid Acts, Rents conveyed before in Leaſe, or granted to other Perſons, Rents appropriated by, or in purſuance of Act or Acts of Parliament, for Payment of Penſions, Stipends, Salaries, Annuities, Alms and Allowances for the maintenance of Grammar-Schools or Scholars; or for, or towards the Reparation of Churches, Chapels, Highways, Cauſeys, Bridges, Schools, Almſhouſes, Caſtles, or other Uſes, and many Quit-Rents of Manors, and other Rents by Act of Parliament united and annexed to the Caſtle of Windſor, with intent to ſupport and maintain the Yearly Reparations and Charges of the ſaid Caſtle, and Diſcharge and Pay the Fees and Wages of the Officers, Servants, and Attendants in the ſame Caſtle, and the Foreſts, Chaſes and Parks to the ſame belonging, and for many Years applied, according to the intention of the ſaid Act; and alſo many Quit-Rents of or belonging to divers ancient Manors, heretofore and yet Parcel of the Demeſnes or Poſſeſſions of the Crown, as if the ſame had been entire Fee-Farm Rents iſſuing out of thoſe Manors; were by the aforeſaid ſeveral Indentures of Bargain and Sale, through the Direction and Power of the ſaid Lord Sommers, conveyed by the ſaid Truſtees for Sale of Fee-Farm Rents, to the ſaid Humphry Hetherington, Richard Adney, and Samuel Newton, and to the ſaid Hancock and Warner, and their Heirs, or unto ſome of them, contrary to the true intent and meaning of the ſaid Acts of Parliament, to the great Vexation and Oppreſſion of many of his Majeſty's good Subjects, and creating many new and unreaſonable Charges on other Revenues of the Crown.

XI. To the Eleventh Article the ſaid Lord Sommers ſaith, He believeth, that ſeveral of the Rents mentioned to be granted in Truſt for him, as aforeſaid, had been before granted to other Perſons by the ſaid Truſtees, and that others of them were not in the Power of the ſaid Truſtees to Grant, which was and is very much to his Prejudice; and believes the ſame were inſerted by miſtaken Informations given touching the ſame, and not out of any Deſign; and the like Miſtakes have frequently happened in other Grants of other of the ſaid Rents; and denies that to his Knowledge or Belief, any of the ſaid Rents ſo granted for his Benefit, were ever united or annexed to the Caſtle of Windſor, for any Purpoſe whatſoever, or that any Oppreſſion or Vexation hath happen'd to any of his Majeſty's Subjects, by reaſon of the granting of any of the ſaid Rents, and, as he believes, little or no new Charge to the Crown.

XII. That by the Direction of the ſaid Lord Sommers, the ſaid Humphrey Hetherington, Richard Adney, Samuel Newton, Leonard Hancock, and John Warner, ſurrendred ſeveral of the ſaid Rents to them granted as aforeſaid, amounting to the yearly Value of Three hundred forty ſeven Pounds eleven Shillings and five Pence Farthing, on Suggeſtion that the ſame were either conveyed before in Leaſe ſet apart for Payment of Penſions, old Supers bad or illeviable, or part thereof bad or illeviable, or wrong conveyed; and the ſaid Lord Sommers, in the Year of our Lord 1699, being then Lord Chancellor of England, and one of his Majeſty's moſt Honourable Privy Council, in Breach of his Duty, and contrary to the Laws and Statutes of this Realm, procured other Rents of the yearly value of Three hundred ninety one Pounds three Pence half-penny, to be allowed by way of Repriſe, and to be conveyed to the ſaid Richard Adney, and his Heirs, in Truſt for the ſaid Lord Sommers and his Heirs, as if the ſaid yearly Rents of Three hundred forty ſeven Pounds eleven Shillings and five Pence Farthing, ſo ſurrendred, had been really and bona fide purchaſed, in purſuance of the ſaid Acts for Sale of Fee-Farm Rents.

XII. To the Twelfth Article the ſaid Lord Sommers ſaith, That his Majeſty having deſigned of his Bounty to him the ſaid Lord Sommers and his Heirs, Fee-Farm and other Rents, to the annual Value in the ſaid Grants mentioned; and the ſaid Truſtees having covenanted, as was uſual for them to do, that they had not made any former or other Grant, or Conveyance of the ſaid Rents, or any of them; and Three hundred forty ſeven Pounds eleven Shillings and Three Pence Farthing per Annum, of the ſaid Rents ſo granted, as aforeſaid, having appeared to be granted before, or not to be grantable by the ſaid Truſtees, or not leviable on Surrender of ſuch Rents, the ſaid Truſtees by Warrant of the Lords Commiſſioners of his Majeſty's Treaſury (who were thereunto ſufficiently authorized) in Lieu and Satisfaction of the ſaid Rents and Arrears thereof, and in diſcharge of the Covenants of the ſaid Truſtees, did, the Twenty firſt Day of October, One thouſand ſix hundred ninety and nine, grant divers other Rents, amounting to the yearly value of Three hundred ninety one Pounds and three Pence half-penny, to Richard Adney and his Heirs, as in the ſaid Article is mentioned; which were not ſo granted as if the ſaid yearly Rents of Three hundred forty ſeven Pounds eleven Shillings and three Pence Farthing, had been bona fide purchaſed; but was in Lieu and Repriſe for the ſame as granted of his Majeſty's Bounty, for the Benefit of the ſaid Lord Sommers, and his Heirs

XIII. That

XIII. That in the Year of our Lord 1695. the ſaid Lord Sommers, being then Lord Keeper of the Great Seal of England, and alſo one of his Majeſty's moſt Honourable Privy Council, together with Edward Earl of Orford, then firſt Commiſſioner for executing the Office of Lord High Admiral of England, and Commander in chief of his Majeſty's Navy Royal, and one of his Majeſty's moſt Honourable Privy Council, Richard Earl of Bellamont in the Kingdom of Ireland, Governor of New-York, New-England, and others then in High Stations, and in great Power and Authority, procured a Commiſſion to be granted unto one William Kidd, a Perſon of evil Fame and Reputation, and ſince that Time convicted of Piracy, to apprehend and take into his Cuſtody divers Perſons therein named, and all ſuch Pirates as the ſaid Kidd ſhould meet with upon the Coaſts or Seas of America, or in any other Seas or Parts, with their Ships and Veſſels, and alſo ſuch Merchandizes, Goods, and Wares as ſhould be found on board or with them. And afterwards the ſaid Lord Sommers, in the Year of our Lord 1697, with the Aſſiſtance of the ſaid Earl of Orford, and other Perſons aforeſaid, procured a Grant from his Majeſty, and the ſaid Lord Sommers paſſed the ſame under the Great Seal of England; whereby all and whatſoever Ships, Veſſels, Goods, Merchandizes, Treaſure, and other Things whatſoever, which ſince the Thirtieth Day of April, One thouſand ſix hundred ninety ſix, had been taken or ſeized upon or with, or did belong to, or which ſhould be taken or ſeized upon or with, or did, or ſhould belong to Thomas Too, John Ireland, Thomas Wake, and William Maze, (in the ſaid Letters Patents mentioned to have been complained of, and informed againſt for committing many Robberies, Piracies, and Depredations upon the Seas in the Parts of America, and other Places, but never convicted or attainted for the ſame) or which ſince the ſaid Thirtieth Day of April One thouſand ſix hundred ninety ſix, had been taken or ſeized upon, or which did, or ſhould belong to any of the Adherents of the ſaid Thomas Too, John Ireland, Thomas Wake, and William Maze, or any other Pirates, Free-Booters, and Sea-Rovers, by the ſaid William Kidd, or other Commander of the Adventure-Galley, or which by, or by means of the ſaid Ship or Galley, ſhould be taken or forced on ſhore in any of his Majeſty's Plantations of America, were granted unto the ſaid Richard Earl of Bellamont, and unto Edmund Harriſon Merchant, Samuel Newton Gent. William Rowland Gent. George Watſon Gent. and Thomas Reynolds of St. Martins, their Executors, Adminiſtrators, and Aſſigns, to their own ſole Uſe and Benefit, and as their own proper Goods and Chattels, without any Account thereof, or therefore to be made; in which Grant the Name of the ſaid Samuel Newton was uſed in Truſt, and for the only Benefit and Advantage of the ſaid Lord Sommers; which ſaid Grant under the Great Seal of England manifeſtly tended to the Obſtruction and Diſcouragement of Trade and Navigation, the great Loſs and Prejudice of Merchants, and others being his Majeſty's Subjects, or Subjects of the Friends and Allies of his Majeſty, and the Diſhonour of the King and Kingdom; and the ſaid Lord Sommers was, by procuring and paſſing the ſaid Grant, Guilty of a notorious Breach of his Duty.

as aforeſaid; which he conceives might be, and was lawfully done.

XIII. To the Thirteenth Article the ſaid Lord Sommers doth admit, That in the Year One thouſand ſix hundred ninety five, he being then Lord Keeper of the Great Seal of England, his Majeſty being informed, as the Truth was, That Thomas Too, John Ireland, Thomas Wake, and William Maze, and ſeveral other of his Majeſty's Subjects in his Plantations of America, had aſſociated themſelves, and did frequently commit great Piracies, Robberies, and Depredations on the Seas in the Parts of America, and other Parts, to the Hindrance and Diſcouragement of Trade and Navigation, for preventing the ſaid Miſchiefs, did grant a Commiſſion, as in this Article is mentioned, unto William Kidd, in this Article named (who was then Commander of the Ship called, The Adventure-Galley, and was not then, to the Knowledge or Belief of the ſaid Lord Sommers, eſteemed a Perſon of ill Fame or Reputation) to apprehend, ſeize and take into his Cuſtody, the ſaid Thomas Too, John Ireland, Thomas Wake, and William Maze, and all ſuch other Pirates as he ſhould meet with in the Seas of America, or any other Seas, with their Ships and Veſſels, and ſuch Merchandizes, Moneys and Wares as ſhould be found on Board or with them, and to cauſe ſuch Pirates to be brought to a legal Tryal; the granting of which Commiſſion was then apprehended to be neceſſary for the Preſervation of Trade and Navigation: And the ſaid Lord Sommers doth alſo admit, That a Grant dated the Seven and twentieth Day of May, One thouſand ſix hundred ninety ſeven, did paſs under the Great Seal of England, as in this Article is mentioned, whereby reciting the ſaid Commiſſion ſo granted to the ſaid William Kidd, and that the ſaid Adventure-Galley, was with his Majeſty's Knowledge, and Royal Encouragement bought and fitted out to Sea for the Execution of the ſaid Commiſſion, at the Charge of the Earl of Bellamont, Edmund Harriſon, Samuel Newton, William Rowley, George Watſon, and Thomas Reynolds, in this Article named; his Majeſty, for encouraging and rewarding the ſaid Undertaking, did grant unto the ſaid Earl of Bellamont, Edmund Harriſon, William Rowley, George Watſon, Thomas Reynolds and Samuel Newton (who was named by, and in Truſt for the ſaid Lord Sommers) their Executors and Adminiſtrators, all and whatſoever Ships, Veſſels, Goods, Merchandizes, Treaſure, and other Things whatſoever, which ſince the Thirtieth Day of April, One thouſand ſix hundred ninety ſix, had been taken or ſeized upon or with, or did belong to, or ſhould happen to be taken or ſeized upon or with, or which did, or ſhould belong to the ſaid Thomas Too, John Ireland, Thomas Wake and William Maze, or their Adherents, or any other Pirates, by the ſaid William Kidd, or other Commanders of the ſaid Adventure Galley, or which by or by Means of the ſaid Ship or Galley, ſhould be taken, or forced on ſhoar on any of his Majeſty's Plantations in America, ſo far as the ſaid Premiſſes, or any of them, did, ſhould or might belong to his Majeſty, or could or might be granted or grantable by him, or was or were in his Power to diſpoſe of; which Grant was not intended to be without an Account: For the ſaid Lord Sommers ſaith, That by Indenture, bearing date the Two and twentieth Day of May, one thouſand ſix hundred ninety ſeven, made (after the Warrant for the ſaid Grant was ſigned, and before it was paſſed) between his Majeſty, of the One Part, and the ſaid Earl of Bellamont, Edmund Harriſon, William Rowley, George Watſon, Thomas Reynolds, and Samuel Newton of the other Part; They the ſaid Earl of Bellamont, Edmund Harriſon, William Rowley, George Watſon, Thomas Reynolds, and Samuel

Newton, did Covenant, Promiſe and Agree with his Majeſty, his Heirs and Succeſſors, well and truly to account for, and deliver upon Oath, to the Uſe of his Majeſty, his Heirs and Succeſſors, or the Commiſſioners of his or their Treaſury, or his or their High-Treaſurer, a clear Tenth Part (the whole in Ten equal Parts to be divided) of all and every ſuch Ships, Veſſels, Goods, Merchandizes, and other Things whatſoever, which in and by the ſaid Grant ſhould be given, or which ſhould from Time to Time be taken, or ſeized, or ſecured by them, or any of them, their, or any of their Executors or Adminiſtrators, Officers, Agents, Servants, or Aſſigns, by Virtue or Colour thereof: To which Grant and Indenture the ſaid Lord Sommers, for more Certainty, referreth himſelf; and further ſaith, He conceives, and is adviſed, that the ſaid Grant did not any way tend to the Obſtruction or Diſcouragement of Trade or Navigation, or to the Loſs or Prejudice of Merchants, or others his Majeſty's Subjects, or the Subjects of his Friends or Allies, nor to the Diſhonour of his Majeſty or the Kingdom, nor was the Paſſing of the ſame any Breach of the Duty of the ſaid Lord Sommers; but the ſaid Grant was formed as a Recommence to the ſaid Grantees, who, at their own Charge, had provided and fitted out the ſaid Ship, to enable the ſaid William Kidd to execute the Powers in the ſaid Commiſſion mention'd; whereby the Publick might have received great Benefit, had the ſaid William Kidd faithfully diſcharged the Truſt in him repoſed by his Majeſty, and the ſaid Grantees: Which he failing to do, the Owners of the ſaid Ship have loſt their Expences, and have not received any Benefit of his Majeſty's ſaid Grant.

XIV. That the ſaid John Lord Sommers, to the great Oppreſſion of the Subject, and contrary to Magna Charta, and divers good Statutes of this Realm, and in manifeſt Breach and Violation of his Oath, as Lord High-Chancellor of England, hath, in ſeveral Cauſes depending before him, by many extraordinary Methods, and unwarrantable Practices for ſeveral Years, delayed Proceedings in the ſaid Cauſes; and by Colour of his Office, hath made divers Arbitrary and Illegal Orders, in Subverſion of the Laws and Statutes of this Realm; and hath, of his own Authority, reverſed Judgments given in the Court of Exchequer, and without calling before him the Barons of the Exchequer to hear their Informations, and the Cauſes of their Judgments, as the Statute in thoſe Caſes expreſsly directs; aſſuming thereby to himſelf an Arbitrary and Illegal Power; and hath declared and affirmed in publick Places of Judicature, that particular Subjects might have Rights and Intereſts without any Remedy for Recovery of the ſame, unleſs by Petition to the Perſon of the King only, or to that Effect: Which Poſition was highly dangerous to the legal Conſtitution of this Kingdom, and abſolutely deſtructive to the Property of the Subject.

And the ſaid Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, by Proteſtation, ſaving to themſelves the Liberty of exhibiting at any Time hereafter, any further Articles or other Accuſation or Impeachment againſt the ſaid Lord Sommers; as alſo of replying to his Anſwers which he ſhall make unto the ſaid Articles, or any of them; and of offering Proofs to all, and every the aforeſaid Articles, and to all and every other Articles, Impeachment or Accuſation which ſhall be exhibited by them, as the Cauſe ſhall, according to the Courſe of Parliament require; do pray, That the ſaid John Lord Sommers may be put to anſwer the ſaid Crimes and Miſdemeanors; and that ſuch Proceedings, Examinations, Tryals, and Judgments, may be thereupon had and given, as is agreeable to Law and Juſtice.

XIV. To the Fourteenth Article the ſaid Lord Sommers ſaith, He did not delay any Proceedings in any Cauſe or Cauſes depending before him, as Chancellor of England, longer or otherwiſe than as the Circumſtances and Juſtice of each Cauſe required; but did, to the very manifeſt impairing of his Health, conſtantly apply himſelf to the Diſpatch of the Cauſes depending before him; and denies that he did ever make, by Colour of his Office, any Arbitrary or Illegal Order, to the Subverſion of any Law or Statute of this Realm, or did ever aſſume to himſelf any Arbitrary or Illegal Power, or ever reverſe any Judgment given in the Court of Exchequer, otherwiſe than as is warranted and allowed by the Law, and in the Preſence of the Barons of the Court of Exchequer, who were always preſent in the Court of Exchequer Chamber, when their Judgments were examined, as the Statute in ſuch Caſes directs; nor did ever deliver in any Court of Judicature, or other Place whatſoever, any Poſition whatſoever, dangerous to the Legal Conſtitution of the Kingdom, or deſtructive to the Property of the Subject, as is charged by the ſaid Articles.

And as to all other Matters and Things in the ſaid Articles contained, and not herein before particularly anſwered unto, The ſaid Lord Sommers ſaith, He is not guilty of them, or any of them, in Manner and Form as the ſame are charged upon him in and by the ſaid Articles; and humbly ſubmitteth himſelf to your Lordſhips Judgment.

SOMMERS.

After reading this Day the Articles of Impeachment brought up from the Houſe of Commons againſt John Lord Sommers, and hearing his Lordſhip thereupon, who deſired a Copy of the ſaid Articles, and ſaid he would put in his Anſwer ſo ſoon as poſſibly he could; It is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, That the Lord Sommers may have a Copy of the ſaid Articles againſt him.

Die Martis 20° Maij, 1701.

The Earl of Orford deſiring that a Day may be appointed for his Tryal, the Houſe thereupon ordered, That the Committee appointed to conſider of the Manner in delivering Articles of Impeachments by the Commons, be revived, to inſpect the Books, and meet immediately.

Then the Houſe was adjourn'd during Pleaſure, and the Lords went to the Committee.

After ſome Time, the Houſe was reſumed, and the Earl of Stamford reported the Precedents following, viz.

' 21. Decemb. 1680. That Mr. Seymour was Im-
' peached, and Articles delivered.
' 23. Decemb. 1680. He delivered in his An' ſwer.

' 3. Jan.

' 3. Jan. That he petition'd for a Tryal; where-
' upon the ſame Day a Meſſage was ſent to the ' Commons, That the Houſe finding no Iſſue joined
' by Replication from the Commons, thought fit
' to give them Notice thereof.
' Then Council were aſſigned him.
' 8. Jan. Saturday the 15th was appointed for ' his Tryal.
' 27. Apr. 1695. The Duke of Leeds was Impeached.

' and a Copy thereof was ſent to the Commons.
' 1. May. The Lords ſent to the Commons to ' know when they ſhould be ready to make good
' the ſame.
' 3. May. The Commons deſired a Conference
' on the Lords Meſſage; and at the Conference ac-
' quainted the Lords, That Mr. Robart, a material
' Witneſs was withdrawn. The Lords moved the ' King, that a Proclamation might be iſſued for his
' Apprehenſion. The ſame Day the Parliament
' was Prorogued.

A Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons by Sir Robert Legard and Mr. Gery, to acquaint them, " That the Houſe having been deſired by the " Earl of Orford, That a Day may be appointed " for his ſpeedy Tryal, their Lordſhips finding no " Iſſue joined by Replication of the Houſe of Com- " mons, think fit to give them Notice thereof.

A Meſſage was alſo ſent to the Houſe of Commons by Sir Robert Legard and Mr. Gery, to acquaint them, " That they having on the Firſt Day " of April laſt, ſent up to their Lordſhips an Im- " peachment againſt William Earl of Portland, for " High Crimes and Miſdemeanors; and having alſo, " on the Fifteenth Day of the ſame Month, Im- " peached Charles Lord Halifax for High Crimes " and Miſdemeanors; and there being as yet no " particular Articles exhibited againſt the ſaid " Lords, their Lordſhips think themſelves obliged " to put them in mind thereof; which, after Im- " peachments have ſo long depended, is a Hardſhip " to the Perſons concerned, and not agreeable to " the uſual Methods and Proceedings of Parliament " in ſuch Caſes.

A Meſſage was brought from the Houſe of Commons by Mr. Bromley and others (the 31ſt of May) to acquaint this Houſe, " That in Anſwer to the " Meſſage of the One and Twentieth Inſtant, the " Commons have prepared a Replication to the Earl " of Orford's Anſwer to the Articles of Impeach- " ment of High Crimes and Miſdemeanors exhibi- " ted againſt him; and at preſent defer bringing it " up to your Lordſhips, becauſe in the Tryals of " the ſeveral Impeachments now depending, the " Commons think it moſt proper, from the Nature " of the Evidence that will be given at the ſaid " Tryals, to begin with the Tryal of the Impeach- " ment of John Lord Sommers of High Crimes " and Miſdemeanors. And as to your Lordſhips " other Meſſage, the Commons take it to be with- " out Precedent, and Unparliamentary; they, as " Proſecutors, having a Liberty to exhibit their Ar- " ticles of Impeachment in due time; of which " they who are to prepare them are the proper " Judges: And therefore, for your Lordſhips to " aſſert, That having not yet exhibited particular " Articles againſt William Earl of Portland, and " Charles Lord Halifax, is a Hardſhip to them, and " not agreeable to the uſual Methods and Proceed- " ing in Parliament in ſuch Caſes, does, as they " conceive, tend to the Breach of that good Cor- " reſpondence betwixt the Two Houſes, which " ought mutually to be preſerved.

Die Mercurij 21° Maij, 1701.

The Meſſengers ſent Yeſterday to the Houſe of Commons return Anſwer, That the Commons will ſend an Anſwer to the ſaid Meſſages relating to the ſaid Impeachments by Meſſengers of their own.

Die Sabbati 24° Maij, 1701.

Die Veneris 30° Maij, 1701.

It is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, That Monday the Ninth Day of June next, ſhall be, and is hereby appointed for the Tryal of Edward Earl of Orford in Weſtminſter-Hall, upon the Articles brought up againſt him by the Houſe of Commons, whereby he ſtands charged with ſeveral High Crimes and Miſdemeanors.

A Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons by Sir Robert Legard and Sir John Hoskins, to let them know, " That this Houſe hath appointed " Monday the Ninth Day of June next, for the " Tryal of Edward Earl of Orford in Weſtminſter- " Hall, upon the Articles ſent up againſt him, and " that the Commons may reply if they think fit.

A Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons by Sir Robert Legard and Sir John Hoskins, to acquaint them, " That they having on the Firſt Day " of April laſt, ſent up to their Lordſhips an Im- " peachment againſt William Earl of Portland, for " High Crimes and Miſdemeanors; and having al-

A Meſſage was brought from the Houſe of Commons by Mr. Harcourt, and others (the 5th of June) to acquaint this Houſe, " That the Commons, on " Conſideration of your Lordſhips Meſſage to them " of the One and Thirtieth of May, concerning " the Earl of Orford, think it their Undoubted " Right, when ſeveral Perſons ſtand Impeached be- " fore your Lordſhips, to bring to Tryal ſuch of " them, in the firſt place, as the Commons appre- " hend, from the Nature of the Evidence, ought " firſt to be proceeded againſt; to the intent all " ſuch Offenders may, in due time, be brought to " Juſtice: And that no Day ought to be appointed

" by your Lordſhips for the Tryal of any Impeach- " ment by the Commons, without ſome previous " Signification to your Lordſhips from the Com- " mons, of their being ready to proceed thereon.

" The Commons could not receive this Meſſage " from your Lordſhips, without the greateſt Sur- " prize; your Lordſhips Proceedings in this Caſe " being neither warranted by Precedents, nor (as " the Commons conceive) conſiſtent with the Me- " thods of Juſtice, or with Reaſon: Wherefore the " Commons cannot agree to the Day appointed by " your Lordſhips for the Tryal of the Earl of Orford.

" As to your Lordſhips Meſſage, at the ſame time, relating to the Earl of Portland, and Charles Lord " Halifax, the Commons take the ſame to be without Precedent, and Unparliamentary; and conceive " your Lordſhips frequent Repetition thereof, in ſo ſhort a Time, after the Commons had tranſmitted to " your Lordſhips their Articles againſt Two of the Impeached Lords, and were daily preparing their Ar- " ticles againſt the others, manifeſtly tends to the Delay of Juſtice, in obſtructing the Tryals of the Im- " peached Lords, by introducing Diſputes, in Breach of that good Correſpondence between the Two " Houſes, which ought inviolably to be preſerved.

It is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, That the Lord Great Chamberlain do attend his Majeſty, humbly to acquaint his Majeſty, That this Houſe hath appointed Monday the Ninth Day of June next, for the Tryal of Edward Earl of Orford, in Weſtminſter-Hall, and humbly to move his Majeſty, that he will be pleaſed to give Order for a Place to be prepared in Weſtminſter-Hall againſt the ſaid Time, for this Houſe to proceed upon the ſaid Tryal.

Then the Houſe was Adjourned during Pleaſure.

After ſome time, the Houſe was reſumed, and the Earl of Stamford reported the Anſwer drawn by the Committee, to be ſent to the Houſe of Commons, to their Meſſage received the One and Thirtieth of May laſt, which was Read as follows, viz.

" The Lords do think fit, upon Occaſion of the " Meſſage of the Commons of the 31ſt of May, " to acquaint that Houſe, That having been deſired " by the Lord Sommers, that a Day may be ap- " pointed for his ſpeedy Tryal, and their Lordſhips " finding no Iſſue joined by Replication of the " Houſe of Commons, judge it proper to give " them notice thereof, that the Commons may Re- " ply, if they think fit; and at the ſame Time their " Lordſhips let the Commons know, that they will " proceed to the Tryal of any of the Impeached " Lords, whom the Commons ſhall be firſt ready " to begin with, ſo as there may be no occaſion " taken from thence for any unreaſonable Delay in " the Proſecution of any of them: And further to " acquaint them, that having ſearched their own " Journals, they do not find, that after a general " Impeachment, there has ever been ſo long a Delay " of bringing up the particular Articles of Im- " peachment, ſitting the Parliament: And therefore " the Lords do think they had Reaſon to aſſert, " that it was a Hardſhip to the Two Lords con- " cerned, (eſpecially after this Houſe had put the " Houſe of Commons in mind of exhibiting ſuch " Articles) and not agreeable to the uſual Proceed- " ings in Parliament. And as the Lords do not " controvert what Right the Commons may have of impeaching in general Terms, if they pleaſe; ſo " the Lords, in whom the Judicature does entirely reſide, think themſelves obliged to aſſert, That the " Right of limiting a convenient Time for bringing the particular Charge before them, for the avoiding " of Delay in Juſtice, is lodged in them.

" The Lords hope the Commons, on their Part, will be as careful not to do any Thing that may tend " to the Interruption of the good Correſpondence between the Two Houſes, as the Lords ſhall ever be " on their Part: And the beſt way to preſerve that, is, for neither of the Two Houſes to exceed thoſe Li- " mits which the Law and Cuſtom of Parliament have already eſtabliſhed.

Mr. Harcourt at a Conference (the Sixth of June) delivered himſelf in the following manner:

" The Commons have deſired this Conference " upon your Lordſhip's Meſſage of the Fourth of " June, in order to preſerve a good Correſpondence " with your Lordſhips; which will always be the " Endeavour of the Commons, and is at this Time " particularly neceſſary, in order to bring the im- " peached Lords to a ſpeedy Tryal. And becauſe " the Meſſages which your Lordſhips have thought " fit to ſend to the Commons, and the Anſwers " thereunto, ſeem not to tend towards expediting " the Tryals, which the Commons ſo much deſire, " but may rather furniſh Matter of diſpute between " the two Houſes; the Commons therefore chuſe " to follow the Methods formerly uſed with good " Succeſs upon the like Occaſions: And for the " more ſpeedy and eaſy adjuſting and preventing " any Differences which have already happened, or " may ariſe, previous to, or upon theſe Tryals " the Commons do propoſe to your Lordſhips, That " a Committee of both Houſes be Nominated, to " conſider of the moſt proper Ways and Methods " of Proceeding on Impeachment, according to the " Uſage of Parliament.

The Houſe went into Conſideration of this Report, and after Debate, it was ordered, That the further Conſideration thereof, and Debate thereupon, be adjourned till to-Morrow Twelve a Clock.

Die Martis 3° Junii, 1701.

The Houſe Reſumed the Adjourned Debate Yeſterday, in Relation to the Report of the Anſwer drawn by the Committee to be ſent to the Houſe of Commons, to their Meſſage received the One and Thirtieth of May laſt.

The Report was read by Paragraphs, and agreed to, and ſent to the Houſe of Commons by Sir Richard Holford and Mr. Pitt.

Die Jovis, 5° Junii, 1701.

A Meſſage was brought from the Houſe of Commons by Mr. Harcourt, and others. See Pag. 529.

Upon receiving a Meſſage from the Houſe of Commons, in Anſwer to a Meſſage ſent to them by this Houſe the One and Thirtieth of May laſt, it is Ordered, That the Lords Committees appointed to conſider of the Manner of Proceedings on Impeachments, do meet to-Morrow at Nine of the Clock in the Forenoon, to conſider the ſaid Meſſage, inſpect the Journals, and report to the Houſe what they ſhall think proper in this Caſe.

Die Veneris, 6° Junii, 1701.

A Meſſage was brought from the Houſe of Commons by Mr. St. John, and others, to deſire a Conference with this Houſe, upon the Subject Matter of the Meſſage of this Houſe, of the Fourth Inſtant.

It being propoſed to return Anſwer, That this Houſe will ſend an Anſwer by Meſſengers of their own, and Debate thereupon:

The Houſe agreed to a preſent Conference.

Then the Commons being called in, were told, That the Lords agree to a Conference as deſired, and appoint it preſently in the Painted Chamber.

Lords were named Managers of the Conference.

The Commons being come to the Conference, the Houſe was adjourned during Pleaſure, and the Lords went to the Conference; which being ended, the Houſe was reſumed, and the Lord Steward reported, That the Lords had attended the Conference, and that Mr. Harcourt managed the Conference and ſaid, As above.

Ordered, That the Lords Committees appointed to conſider of the Manner of Proceedings on Impeachments, do meet to-Morrow upon the Report of this Conference, and Inſpect the Journals, and Report to the Houſe.

'8. January, Ordered, That Saturday the Fifteenth is appointed for the Tryal of Mr. Seymour.

Upon Consideration of the Precedents abovementioned, it is Ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the Lords Committees appointed to consider of the manner of Proceedings on Impeachments, do meet on Monday next at Ten a Clock in the Forenoon, to draw an Answer to be sent to the House of Commons, to their Message received the Fifth Instant.

Die Lunæ, 9° Junij, 1701.

The Earl of Stamford reported from the Lords Committees (appointed to consider of the Manner of of Proceedings on Impeachments) what was drawn by them, to be ſent to the Commons in Anſwer to their Meſſage of the Fifth Inſtant, which was read, amended and agreed to, as follows, viz.

A Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons by Sir Richard Holford and Mr. Gery, to acquaint them, "That in Anſwer to the Meſſage of the Houſe "of Commons of the Fourth Inſtant, the Lords ſay "by their Meſſage ſent on the Third, wherein they "declare themſelves ready to proceed to the Tryal "of any of the Impeached Lords, whom the Com- "mons ſhould be firſt ready to begin with, They "have given a full Proof of their Willingneſs to "comply with the Commons in any Thing which "may appear reaſonable, in order to the ſpeedy de- "termining of the Impeachments now depending; "and therefore, (as the Lords conceive) the Com- "mons had no Occaſion to begin any Diſpute on "that Head; ſo their Lordſhips are careful to de- "cline entring into a Controverſy, which ſeems to "them to be of no uſe at preſent.

"The Lords think themſelves obliged to aſſert "their undoubted Right to appoint a Day for the "Tryal of any Impeachment depending before them, "if they ſee good Cauſe for it, without any previ- "ous Signification from the Commons of their be- "ing ready to proceed; which Right is warranted "by many Precedents, as well as conſonant to Ju- "ſtice and Reaſon; and their Lordſhips, according "to the Example of their Anceſtors, will always "uſe that Right, with a Regard to the equal and "impartial Adminiſtration of Juſtice, and with a "due Care to prevent unreaſonable Delays.

"This being the Caſe, the Lords cannot but won- "der, that the Commons, without any Foundation "for it, ſhould make uſe of Expreſſions, which as "their Lordſhips conceive have never been uſed be- "fore by one Houſe of Parliament to another, and "which, if the like were returned, muſt neceſſarily "deſtroy all good Correſpondence between the Two "Houſes.

"The laſt Part of the Commons Meſſage being "in effect a Repetition only of their former of the "One and thirtieth of May, to which the Lords "have already returned a full Anſwer, their Lord- "ſhips think it not requiſite to ſay more, than that they cannot apprehend with what Colour their calling "upon the Houſe of Commons to ſend up Articles againſt Two Lords, whom the Commons have ſo "long ſince impeached in general Terms, can be ſaid to tend to the Delay of Juſtice; and therefore, as "the Lords think the Commons ought to have forborn that Reflection, ſo their Lordſhips, in ſaying "no more upon the Occaſion of this Meſſage of the Commons, think they have given a convincing Proof "of their Moderation, and of their ſincere Deſire of preſerving a good Correſpondence between the "Two Houſes, which is ſo neceſſary for the Publick Security, as well as doing Right upon the "Impeachments.

A Meſſage was brought from the Houſe of Commons by Mr. Harcourt, and others, (on the Tenth of June) to acquaint this Houſe, "That the Commons, "in hopes of avoiding all Interruptions and Delays in "proceeding againſt the Impeached Lords, and the "many Inconveniencies which might ariſe thereby, "having propoſed to your Lordſhips at a Conference, "that a Committee of both Houſes might be nomi- "nated to conſider of the moſt proper Ways and "Methods of Proceedings on Impeachments, Think "they might have juſtly expected your Lordſhips "Compliance with their ſaid Propoſition inſtead of "your Lordſhips Anſwer to their Meſſage of the Fourth "Inſtant; which they yeſterday received: In which "Anſwer of your Lordſhips, though many Matters "of great Exception are contained, a ſuitable Reply "whereunto would inevitably deſtroy all good Corre- "ſpondence between the Two Houſes, yet the Com- "mons, from an earneſt Deſire inviolably to preſerve "the ſame, as well as give the moſt convincing Proof "of their Moderation, and to ſhew their Readineſs to "bring the Impeached Lords to ſpeedy Juſtice, at pre- "ſent inſiſt only on their Propoſition, for a Committee "of both Houſes to ſettle and adjuſt the neceſſary Pre- "liminaries to the Tryals; particularly, Whether the "Impeached Lords ſhall appear on their Tryals at "your Lordſhips Bar, as Criminals? Whether being "under Accuſations of the ſame Crimes, they are to ſit "as Judges on each others Tryals for thoſe Crimes, or "can Vote in their own Caſes, as we find from your "Lordſhips Journals, ſince their being Impeached, they "have been admitted to do? Which Matters, and ſome "others, being neceſſary to be adjuſted, the Commons "cannot but inſiſt on a Committee of both Houſes, to "be appointed for that Purpoſe; their departing from "which would be giving up the Rights of the Com- "mons of England, known by unqueſtionable Prece- "dents, and the Uſages of Parliaments, and making "all Impeachments, the greateſt Bulwark of the Laws "and Liberties of England, impracticable for the future.

The Earl of Stamford alſo reported from the Lords Committees appointed to conſider of the Manner of Proceedings on Impeachments, what Precedents they have found in purſuance of the Order of the Seventh Inſtant, which are as follow, viz.

'21. May, 1614. A Meſſage from the Com- 'mons to deſire a Conference upon the Point of 'Impoſitions.

'24. May, The Queſtion being propoſed, Whe- 'ther this Houſe ſhall meet with the Lower Houſe, 'and give them hearing, touching the Point of Im- 'poſitions: The greater Number of the Lords an- 'ſwered, Not Content.

'26. May, A Meſſage to the Commons, That 'the Lords are, and always will be ready and wil- 'ling to hold a loving and mutual Correſpondence 'with them; but their Lordſhips having entred into 'a grave and ſerious Conſideration, as well of the 'Matter it ſelf, as of divers incident and neceſſary 'Circumſtances, do not think it convenient to enter 'into any Conference of this Cauſe, concerning the 'Point of Impoſitions at this Time.

'1. February, 1666. A Meſſage from the Com- 'mons to deſire a Conference, touching the Manner 'of Proceedings upon the Impeachment againſt the 'Lord Viſcount Mordant.

'The Lords anſwer, That they will ſend Anſwer 'by Meſſengers of their own.

'Then a Committee was appointed to conſider, 'whether ever the Commons deſired any Conferences 'concerning the Manner of Proceedings upon Judi- 'cature before their Lordſhips.

'4. February, 1666. After Report of the Conference 'ſo had, the Lords reſolved to let the Commons 'know at a Conference, That they are reſolved, 'That their former Anſwer given them, the Eight 'and twentieth of January, and confirmed the One 'and thirtieth of the ſame Month, ſhall ſtand.

'31. January, Which Answer was, That they 'judge it a Right inherent in every Court, to order 'and direct such Circumstances, and Matters of 'Form, that can have no Influence to the Prejudice 'of Justice, in such way as they shall judge fit, where 'the same are not settled otherwise by any pos-'sitive Rule.

'4. February, Post Meridiem, A Conference was 'accordingly had, at the Desire of the Lords.

'5. February, A Message from the Commons to 'desire a free Conference upon the Subject matter 'of the last Conference.

'The Answer returned was, That the Lords have 'already stated the Manner of Proceedings in the 'Impeachment of the Lord Mordant, and have decla-'red it in their last Conference, and in that Conference 'gave the House of Commons notice, That they 'were ready to proceed this Morning in that Busi-'ness.

'They adhere to their former Resolution, and are 'ready to proceed in the Tryal.

'6. February, A Message from the Commons to 'desire a Conference upon the last mentioned An-'swer.

'7. February, The Lords gave the Conference 'desired; whereat the Commons acquainted their 'Lordships, that Conferences, and Free Conferences, 'when desired, are essential to the Proceedings of 'Parliament, the only Means to preserve the good 'Correspondence between the Two Houses, and the 'Denial thereof destructive to the Proceedings of 'Parliament, and unprecedented.

'Eodem die. A free Conference was had at the 'Desire of the Lords, concerning the Subject Mat-'ter of the last Conference; whereat the Managers 'were to let the Commons know, That their Lord-'ships desire not this Conference in reference to the 'free Conference lately desired by them, but in re-'lation to the Assertion of the Commons in their 'last Conference, which their Lordships can no 'way allow; and therefore commanded the 'Lords that are to manage this Free Conference, as 'to justify the Proceedings of their Lordships, so 'to make it appear to the Commons, that what 'they have done is neither destructive to the Pro-'ceedings of Parliament, nor unprecedented.

'27. May, 1674. The Lords did not agree to a 'Conference desired by the Commons on the One 'and twentieth, because it was desired upon the 'Answer sent by the Lords of the Seventeenth Instant, 'wherein the whole Matter concerns the Judicature 'of the Lords, on which they can admit no De-'bate, nor grant any Conference. But the Lords 'agree to a Conference desired concerning the Pri-'vileges of the Commons; always provided nothing 'be offered thereat, that may concern their Lordships 'Judicature.

'6. May, 1679. A Message to the Commons to 'acquaint them, That the Lords have appointed to try 'the Five Lords on the Thirteenth Instant.

'8. May, Post Meridiem, A Message from the 'Commons to desire a Conference, concerning the 'Matter of their Lordships Message concerning the 'Tryal of the Lords in the Tower; and a Confe-'rence was had thereupon.

'At the Conference, the Commons proposed to 'have a Committee of both Houses nominated to 'consider the proper ways of Proceedings upon 'Impeachments; and upon the Question, it was 'carried, Not to agree with the Commons in this 'Proposal.

'9 May, A Message to the Commons for a free 'Conference; upon the Subject Matter of the last 'Conference, which was had; and at the Conference 'the Lords told the Commons, That they did not 'agree to the nominating a Committee of both 'Houses, because they do not think it conformable 'to the Rules and Orders of Proceedings of this 'Court, which is, and ever must be, tender in 'Matters relating to Judicature.

'10 May, A Message from the Commons for a 'Conference, &c. which was had; and the Com-'mons told the Lords, That Things standing thus, 'they cannot proceed to the Tryals of the Lords, 'before the Method of Proceedings be adjusted be-'tween the Two Houses.

'11 May, A Message to the Commons for a Con-'ference, &c. which was had; and the Lords asked 'the Commons, what were the Methods of Pro-'ceedings they would confer about: The Commons 'answer, They had no Directions from their House 'concerning the same.

'A Message from the Commons for a Free Con-'ference, which was had; and upon the Report of 'it, the Lords appointed a Committee to meet with 'a Committee of the House of Commons, to con-'sider of Propositions and Circumstances, in refe-'rence to the Tryals of the Five Lords in the Tower; 'and a Message sent to the Commons to let them 'know it.

'12 May, A Report from the Committee of both 'Houses, That (inter alia) the Commons propose 'a longer Day for the Tryal of the Lords; where-'upon the Lords order'd their Tryals to be put off 'till further Order.

'16 May, The Lords appointed a Day for the 'Tryal of the Five Lords.

'19 May. The Commons tell the Lords, That 'when the Methods of Proceedings are adjusted, 'their House will be ready to proceed upon the Try-'al of the Earl of Danby, against whom they al-'ready demanded Judgment, and afterwards to the 'Tryal of the Five Lords; and proposed several 'Difficulties, in respect of the Bishops being pre-'sent at the Tryal of the Earl of Danby. They 'say further, That the Lords seem to lay the Stop 'at the Commons Door, by naming a Day; which 'they conceive ought not to have been appointed 'before the Methods be considered; that the Lords 'may as well make the Judges Part of their Court, 'as the Bishops, in this Point. The Commons will 'give no disturbance to the ancient Judicature, and 'they conceive they have a Right to know before 'what Court they shall appear.

'20 May. Upon Debate of the Report from the 'Committee of both Houses, the Lords appoint a 'Day, for the Tryal of the Five Lords.

'22 May. The Lords sent a Message to the House 'of Commons to acquaint them, That the Lords have 'appointed a Day for the Tryal of the Five Lords.

Then it being moved to have a Conference with the Commons, to let them know, That the Lords do not agree to a Committee of both Houses in relation to the Tryals of the Impeached Lords: And Debate thereupon: The Question was put, Whether a Committee of this House shall be appointed to meet with a Committee of the House of Commons, in relation to the Proceedings upon the Impeachments.

It was resolved in the Negative.

It is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, that the Lords Committees appointed appointed to conſider of the Manner of Proceedings on Impeachments, do meet To-Morrow at Ten of the Clock in the Forenoon, and draw Reaſons to be given at a Conference with the Houſe of Commons, Why their Lordſhips cannot agree, that a Committee of both Houſes be nominated to conſider of the Methods of Proceedings on Impeachments.

It is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, that Friday the Thirteenth Day of this Inſtant June, is hereby appointed for the Tryal of John Lord Sommers in Weſtminſter-Hall, upon the Articles brought up againſt him by the Houſe of Commons, whereby he ſtands charged with ſeveral High Crimes and Miſdemeanors.

A Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons by Sir Richard Holford and Mr. Gery, to let the Commons know, "That the Lords have appointed Friday next for the Tryal of John Lord Sommers upon the Impeachment againſt him.

A Meſſage was brought from the Houſe of Commons by Mr. Harcourt and others, (the 11th of June) to acquaint this Houſe, "That the Commons on Monday laſt received a Meſſage from your Lordſhips, that your Lordſhips had appointed the Tryal of John Lord Sommers upon Friday next, upon their Impeachment againſt him. In which, they obſerve, your Lordſhips have not nominated any Place for his Tryal, tho' your Lordſhips thought fit to make that Matter, on the laſt Impeachment for Miſdemeanors, the Subject of a long Debate.

"And they cannot but take Notice, That your Lordſhips have taken as long a Time to give your Anſwer to the Commons Deſire of a Committee of both Houſes, deliver'd at a Conference on Friday laſt, as you are pleaſed to allow the Commons to have of the Day appointed by your Lordſhips for the ſaid Tryal.

"Your Lordſhips appointing ſo ſhort a Day, eſpecially whilſt the Propoſition made to your Lordſhips for a Committee of both Houſes was undetermin'd, the Commons take to be ſuch a Hardſhip to them, and ſuch an Indulgence to the Perſon accus'd, as is not to be parallel'd in any Parliamentary Proceeding.

"The Commons muſt likewiſe acquaint your Lordſhips, that their Experience of the Interruption of a former Tryal on an Impeachment for Miſdemeanor, for want of ſettling the Preliminaries between the Two Houſes, obliges them to inſiſt on a Committee of both Houſes, for preventing the like Interruption.

"And they conceive, 'twould be very prepoſterous for them to enter upon the Tryals of any of thoſe Lords, till your Lordſhips diſcover ſome Inclination to make the Proceeding thereupon practicable; and therefore they think they have Reaſon to inſiſt upon another Day to be appointed for the Tryal of the Lord Sommers. And the Commons doubt not but to ſatisfy your Lordſhips at a Free Conference, of the Neceſſity of having a Committee of both Houſes, before they can proceed upon the ſaid Tryal.

Die Martis 10 Junij, 1701.

The Earl of Stamford reported from the Lords Committees (appointed to conſider of the manner of Proceedings on Impeachments) the Reaſons drawn by them, to be given to the Houſe of Commons, at a Conference upon the Subject-Matter of the laſt Conference. Which Report was read, and agreed to, as follows, viz.

"The Lords have deſired this Conference, upon occaſion of the laſt Conference, in order to preſerve a good Correſpondence with the Houſe of Commons, which they ſhall always endeavour.

"As to the late Meſſages between the Two Houſes, their Lordſhips are well aſſured, that on their part, nothing has paſſed, but what was agreeable to the Methods of Parliament, and proper to preſerve that good Underſtanding between both Houſes, which is neceſſary for the carrying on of the Publick Buſineſs.

"As to the Propoſal of the Commons, That a Committee of both Houſes ſhould be appointed, to conſider of the Ways and Methods of Proceeding on Impeachments, their Lordſhips cannot agree to it:

I. "Becauſe they do not find that ever ſuch a Committee was appointed, on occaſion of Impeachments for Miſdemeanors; and their Lordſhips think themſelves obliged to be extremely cautious in admitting any thing new, in Matters relating to Judicature.

II. "That altho' a Committee of this Nature was agreed to, upon the Impeachments of the Earl of Danby, and the Five Popiſh Lords, for High-Treaſon, yet it was upon occaſion of ſeveral conſiderable Queſtions and Difficulties which did then ariſe; and their Lordſhips do not find, that the Succeſs in that Inſtance was ſuch as ſhould encourage the purſuing the ſame Methods again, tho' in the like Caſe; the Lords obſerving, that after much Time ſpent at that Committee, the Diſputes were ſo far from being there adjuſted, that they occaſioned the abrupt Concluſion of a Seſſion of Parliament.

III. "Their Lordſhips are of Opinion, That the Methods of Proceedings on Impeachments for Miſdemeanors, are ſo well ſettled by the Uſage of Parliament, that they do not foreſee any Difficulties likely to happen, at leaſt none have been yet ſtated to them; and all the Preliminaries in the Caſe of Stephen Goudet, and others, (which was the laſt Inſtance of Impeachments for Miſdemeanors) were eaſily ſettled and agreed to, without any ſuch Committee.

IV. "The Lords cannot but obſerve, that this Propoſal of the Commons comes ſo very late, that their Lordſhips can expect no other Fruit of ſuch a Committee, but the preventing of the Tryals during this Seſſion.

"The Lords aſſure the Commons, that in caſe any Difficulties ſhall ariſe in the Progreſs of theſe Tryals, (which their Lordſhips do not foreſee) they will be ready to comply with the Commons in removing them, as far as Juſtice and the Uſage of Parliament will admit.

A Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons by Sir Richard Holford and Mr. Gery, to deſire a preſent Conference in the Painted Chamber, upon the Subject-Matter of the laſt Conference.

A Meſ-

A Meſſage was brought from the Houſe of Commons by Mr. Harcourt, and others. See Page 533.

Ordered, That the Meſſage received this Day from the Houſe of Commons, ſhall be conſider'd To-morrow at Twelve a-Clock.

The Meſſengers ſent to the Houſe of Commons, return Anſwer, that the Commons will give a Conference as deſired.

Then the Commons being come to the Conference, the Managers Names of the laſt Conference were read, and the Houſe adjourn'd during Pleaſure, and the Lords went to the Conference; which being ended, the Houſe was reſumed, and the Lord Steward reported, that the Lords had been at the Conference, and delivered their Reaſons as ordered.

Die Mercurij 11° Junij.

The Meſſage received Yeſterday from the Houſe of Commons was read; and after Debate of the ſeveral Particulars contained in it, this Queſtion was propoſed,

That no Lord of Parliament, Impeached of High Crimes and Miſdemeanors, and coming to his Trial, ſhall, upon his Tryal, be without the Bar.

Then the previous Queſtion was put, Whether this Queſtion ſhall be now put?

It was reſolved in the Affirmative.

The Earl of Stamford reported from the Lords Committees appointed to conſider of the Manner of Proceedings on Impeachments, what was drawn by them in Anſwer to a Meſſage from the Houſe of Commons of the 10th Inſtant; which was read and agreed unto, as follows:

A Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons by Dr. Newton and Mr. Gery, to acquaint them, "That in Anſwer to the Meſſage from the Houſe "of Commons of the Tenth Inſtant, the Lords "ſay, That altho' they take it to be Unparliamen-"tary in many Particulars, yet to ſhew their real "Deſire of avoiding Diſputes, and removing all "Pretence of delaying the Tryals of the Impeached "Lords, they will only take notice of that Part of "their Meſſage, wherein the Commons propoſe "ſome Things as Difficulties, in reſpect of the "Tryals; which Matters relating wholly to their "Judicature, and to their Rights and Privileges as "Peers, they think fit to acquaint the Commons "with the following Reſolutions of the Houſe of "Lords.

A Meſſage was brought from the Houſe of Commons by Mr. St. John, and others (the 13th of June) to acquaint this Houſe, "That the Houſe of Com-"mons find greater Reaſons to inſiſt upon their Pro-"poſal of a Committee of both Houſes, from the "Two Meſſages received Yeſterday from your Lord-"ſhips; for their Ambiguity and Uncertainty do "ſhew the Methods of former Parliaments to be "the moſt proper Way for Diſpatch of Buſineſs.

A Meſſage was brought from the Houſe of Commons by Mr. Granvill and others, to deſire a Free Conference with this Houſe, upon the Subject-Matter of the laſt Conference.

The Commons were called in, and told, That the Lords will return an Anſwer by Meſſengers of their own.

It is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, That John Lord Sommers ſhall be tried in Weſtminſter-Hall upon the Articles of Impeachment againſt him, on Tueſday the Seventeenth Day of this Inſtant June, at Ten of the Clock in the Forenoon.

Ordered, That the Committee appointed to conſider of the Manner of Proceeding upon Impeachments, do meet preſently, and draw an Anſwer to the Meſſage received Yeſterday from the Houſe of Commons.

The Earl of Stamford reported from the Lords Committees, appointed to conſider of the Manner of Proceedings on Impeachments, what is drawn by them to be ſent to the Houſe of Commons, in Anſwer to their Meſſage of the Eleventh Inſtant; which was read and agreed to, as follows:

A Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons by by Dr. Newton and Mr. Gery, to acquaint them,

" That in Anſwer to the Meſſage of the Houſe of " Commons Yeſterday, the Lords ſay, That they " cannot give a greater Evidence of their ſincere " and hearty Deſires of avoiding all Differences " with the Houſe of Commons, and of proceeding " on the Tryals of the Impeachments, than by not " taking Notice of the ſeveral juſt Exceptions to " which that Meſſage is liable, both as to the Matter and Expreſſions.

" The Lords have nothing further from their " Thoughts, than the going about to do any thing " which might have the leaſt Appearance of Hardſhip, in relation to the Commons.

" But the Anſwer of the Lord Sommers to the " Articles exhibited againſt him, having been ſent " down to the Commons on the Four and Twentieth " of May laſt; and they having by their Meſſage of " the One and Thirtieth of May, ſignify'd to their " Lordſhips their Intention of beginning with the " Tryal of his Impeachment in the firſt place:

" The Lords conſidering how far the Seſſion is " advanc'd, thought it reaſonable to appoint the " Thirteenth Inſtant for the ſaid Tryal; their Lordſhips finding ſeveral Precedents of appointing " Tryals on Impeachments within a ſhorter Time.

" The Lords alſo think it incumbent upon them " to endeavour to diſpatch the Tryals of all the Impeach'd Lords before the Riſing of the Parliament. This is what Juſtice requires, and cannot be look'd upon as a Matter of Indulgence. " Nevertheleſs, that the Commons may ſee how " deſirous their Lordſhips are to comply with them " in any thing which may be conſiſtent with Juſtice, " they have appointed the Tryal of Impeachment " againſt John Lord Sommers, on Tueſday the Seventeenth Day of this Inſtant June, at Ten of " the Clock in the Forenoon, in the Houſe of " Lords, which will be then ſitting in Weſtminſter-Hall.

A Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons by Dr. Newton and Mr. Gery, to acquaint them, That the Lords agree to a Free Conference, as deſired, and appoint the ſame to be To-morrow at One a-Clock in the Painted Chamber.

Die Veneris 13° Junij, 1701.

A Meſſage was brought from the Houſe of Commons by Mr. St. John and others. See Page 536.

The Meſſengers were called in, and told, That the Lords will ſend an Anſwer to the Commons Meſſage, by Meſſengers of their own.

The Commons being come to the Free Conference, the Managers Names were read; then the Houſe was adjourn'd during Pleaſure; and the Lords went to the Free Conference: Which being ended, the Houſe was reſumed, and the Lord Steward reported, That the Lords had attended the Free Conference, as commanded; and that Mr. Harcourt opened the Free Conference, and argued againſt the Reaſons given by this Houſe why they could not agree to a Committee of both Houſes; and that the Lord Haverſham, in Anſwer to ſome Part of the Arguments of Mr. Harcourt and Sir Bartholomew Shower, uſed ſome Expreſſions, at which the Commons taking Exceptions, abruptly broke up the Conference.

After Debate thereupon, a Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons by Dr. Newton and Mr. Gery, to acquaint them, That the Lords having been informed by their Managers, that ſome Interruption happened at the Free Conference, which their Lordſhips are concern'd at, becauſe they wiſh that nothing ſhould interrupt the Publick Affairs, do deſire the Commons would come again preſently to the ſaid Free Conference, which they do not doubt will prove the beſt Expedient to prevent the Inconvenience of a Miſunderſtanding upon what has paſs'd.

The Meſſengers ſent to the Houſe of Commons, return Anſwer, That they have deliver'd their Meſſage to the Commons, as ordered; and that the Commons ſay, they will return an Anſwer by Meſſengers of their own.

A Meſſage was brought from the Houſe of Commons by Sir Chriſtopher Muſgrave and others, to acquaint this Houſe, That the Commons deſiring to keep up a good Correſpondence with your Lordſhips, do think it neceſſary to acquaint your Lordſhips with what has happen'd at the Free Conference.

" One Thing there is, tho' I can't ſpeak to it, " becauſe I am bound up by the Orders of the " Houſe; yet it muſt have ſome Anſwer: That is, " as to the Lords voting in their own Caſe; it re- " quires an Anſwer, tho' I can't go into the Debate " of it. The Commons themſelves have made " this Precedent; for in theſe Impeachments they " have allowed Men guilty of the ſame Crimes to " Vote in their own Houſe; and therefore we have " not made any Diſtinction in our Houſe, that " ſome ſhould Vote, and ſome not. The Lords " have ſo high an Opinion of the Juſtice of the " Houſe of Commons, that they hope Juſtice ſhall " never be made uſe of as a Mask for any Deſign. " And therefore give me Leave to ſay, (tho' I am " not to argue it) 'tis a plain Demonſtration, that " the Commons think theſe Lords innocent: And I " think the Propoſition is undeniable; for there are " ſeveral Lords in the ſame Crimes, in the ſame " Facts, there is no Diſtinction; and the Commons " leave ſome of theſe Men at the Head of Affairs, " near the King's Perſon, to do any Miſchief, if their " Perſons were inclined to it; and Impeach others, " when they are both alike guilty, and concerned " in the ſame Facts. This was a Thing I was in " hopes I ſhou'd never have heard aſſerted, when " the Beginning of it was from the Houſe of Commons.

Theſe were the Words ſpoken by John Lord Haverſham; and the Commons have ordered me to communicate this Reſolution to your Lordſhips:

Reſolved, That John Lord Haverſham be charged before the Lords, for the Words ſpoken by the ſaid Lord this Day at the Free Conference; and that the Lords be deſired to proceed in Juſtice againſt the ſaid Lord Haverſham, and to inflict ſuch Puniſhment upon the ſaid Lord, as ſo high an Offence againſt the Houſe of Commons doth deſerve.

Ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, That the Lords, who were at the Free Conference, do meet preſently at a Committee, and draw up what was offered at the Free Conference, and report to the Houſe Tomorrow at Eleven a-Clock.

Die Sabbati 14° Junij, 1701.

A Meſſage was brought from the Houſe of Commons by Mr. Bruges and others, with the Articles of Impeachment againſt Charles Lord Halifax; and to acquaint this Houſe, That the Matter of the Charge was contained in the Articles; and alſo that he was commanded to pray and demand, That Charles Lord Halifax do give ſufficient Security to abide the Judgment of the Houſe of Lords.

The Articles were read by the Clerk as follows, viz.

ARTICLES Exhibited by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes in Parliament aſſembled, in Maintenance of their Impeachment againſt Charles Lord Halifax, of High Crimes and Miſdemeanors.

WHereas ſeveral Perſons, contrary to their Duty and Allegiance to his Majeſty, and his late Royal Conſort, of ever Bleſſed Memory, traiterouſly adhering to their Majeſties Enemies, did levy and maintain within their Majeſties Realm of Ireland, a deſperate and bloody War and Rebellion againſt their Majeſties; and were, by his Majeſty's Conduct and Courage, at the great Expence of his Engliſh Subjects, reduced to their due Obedience to the Crown of England.

And whereas upon the Fourth Day of April, in the Year of our Lord One Thouſand Six Hundred and Ninety, 'twas reſolved by the Commons of England in Parliament aſſembled, That a Bill ſhou'd be brought in to Attaint all Perſons guilty of Rebellion in Ireland, or elſewhere, againſt their Majeſties King William and Queen Mary, and to Enact and declare their Eſtates to be Forfeited, and to be Sold for the reducing of that Kingdom.

And whereas his Majeſty, in his gracious Speech to both Houſes of Parliament, did, upon the Fifth Day of January, One Thouſand Six Hundred and Ninety, aſſure them, That he would not make any Grant of the Forfeited Lands in Ireland, till there ſhould be another Opportunity of ſettling that Matter in Parliament, in ſuch manner as ſhould be thought moſt expedient.

And whereas the Commons of England in Parliament aſſembled, by their humble Addreſs to his Majeſty upon the Fourth Day of March, One Thouſand

The ANSWER of Charles Lord Halifax, to the Articles exhibited againſt him by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes in Parliament aſſembled, in Maintenance of their Impeachment againſt the ſaid Lord Halifax, for High Crimes and Miſdemeanors, ſuppoſed to be committed by him.

THE ſaid Lord Halifax, ſaving to himſelf all Advantages of Exceptions to the ſaid Articles, and of not being prejudiced by any Words, or want of Form; and ſaving to himſelf all Privileges and Rights belonging to him, as one of the Peers of this Realm; for Anſwer to the ſaid Articles, humbly ſaith,

I. To the Firſt Article he ſaith, True it is, that ſeveral Perſons did levy and maintain a deſperate and bloody War and Rebellion in Ireland againſt their Majeſties, and were by his Majeſty's Courage and Conduct, at the great Expence of his Engliſh Subjects, ſuppreſs'd and reduc'd to their Obedience, as in this Article is alledged. And he further anſwereth and ſaith, He believes it to be true, That on the Fourth of April, 1690. ſuch Vote or Reſolve was made by the then Houſe of Commons for that Purpoſe; and ſuch Aſſurance was given by his Majeſty, and ſuch Addreſſes were made by the Houſe of Commons in the Year 1690, and 1692, That no Grant ſhould be made of the Forfeited Lands in Ireland, till there ſhould be another Opportunity of ſettling that Matter in Parliament, in ſuch manner as ſhould be thought moſt expedient; and ſuch Anſwers were given thereunto, as in this Article is and are ſet forth, as by the ſaid ſeveral Votes, Reſolves, Speeches, Addreſſes, and Anſwers, to which the ſaid Lord craves Leave, for more Certainty, to refer himſelf, may appear.

That

Thouſand Six Hundred Ninety Two, did humbly beſeech his Majeſty, That (according to the Aſſurance his Majeſty had been pleaſed to give them) no Grant might be made of the Forfeited Eſtates in Ireland, till there ſhould be an Opportunity of ſettling that Matter in Parliament, in ſuch manner as ſhould be thought moſt expedient: To which his Majeſty was pleaſed to give a moſt gracious Anſwer. Whereby, and by many other Endeavours of the Commons in the following Seſſions of Parliament, it appears, That what has ſince been declared by Act of Parliament, was the continued Senſe of the Commons of England, That it was highly reaſonable that the Forfeited Eſtates of Rebels and Traitors in Ireland, ſhould be applied in Eaſe of his Majeſty's Faithful Subjects of the Kingdom of England.

And whereas 'twas the apparent Duty of every Officer or Miniſter of State, to have had ſo much Regard to the Reſolutions and Addreſs of the Houſe of Commons, to the Publick Good, and his Majeſty's Honour, as to have diſſuaded and prevented (as much as in them lay) the procuring or paſſing any Grant or Grants of the ſaid Forfeited Eſtates in Ireland; yet Charles (now) Lord Halifax, then the Honourable Charles Montague, Eſq; being a Member of the Honourable Houſe of Commons, one of the Lords of the Treaſury, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and one of his Majeſty's moſt Honourable Privy-Council, hath, ſince the aforeſaid Fourth Day of March, One Thouſand Six Hundred Ninety Two, preſumed to adviſe, paſs, or direct the paſſing, a Grant to Thomas Railton, Eſq; in Truſt for himſelf, of ſeveral Debts, Intereſts, Sum and Sums of Money, amounting in the whole to the Sum of Thirteen Thouſand Pounds, or thereabout, due, owing, and which ought to have accrued to his Majeſty, by reaſon of the Attainders, Outlawries, or other Forfeitures of the reſpective Perſons, for whom the ſame were entred on Record; whereby he hath much contributed to the contracting great Debts upon the Nation, the laying heavy Taxes upon the People, hath highly reflected on his Majeſty's Honour, and failed in the Performance of his Truſt and Duty.

II. Whereas by an Act of Parliament made in the Eleventh and Twelfth Years of his Majeſty's Reign, Entituled, An Act for granting an Aid to his Majeſty by Sale of the Forfeited and other Eſtates and Intereſts in Ireland, and by a Land-Tax in England, for the ſeveral Purpoſes therein mentioned; 'tis, amongſt other Things, Enacted, That all and every Perſon or Perſons whatſoever, who had by Virtue of any Grant or Diſpoſition from his Majeſty, or from his Majeſty and the late Queen, received for his or their own Uſe or Benefit, any Debt or Debts, or Sum or Sums whatſoever, due from any Debt or Debts of any Forfeiting Perſon mentioned or deſcribed in the ſaid Act, or from any Perſon or Perſons ſubject or liable to the Payment of any Sum or Sums of Money whatſoever, to any of the ſaid Forfeiting Perſons, ſhould be, and they are thereby declared to be reſpectively liable, and are required to repay every ſuch Debt or Debts, Sum or Sums of Money whatſoever, ſo by him, her or them reſpectively received, into the Receipt of his Majeſty's Exchequer in Ireland, on or before the Four and Twen-

That in the Years 1693, 1694, 1695, the Parliament of England did meet; and no Act was paſſed touching the Forfeited Eſtates, tho' by other Ways great Sums were raiſed for the carrying on and defraying the Charges of the War in thoſe Years; and his Majeſty did after, as Rewards to ſeveral Perſons who had ſerved him in Ireland and elſewhere, grant to them ſome of the Forfeited Eſtates in Ireland, and the Grantees did enjoy the ſame.

And the ſaid Lord Halifax further ſaith, That his Majeſty did never grant to him, or any in Truſt for him, or to his Uſe, any of the ſaid Forfeited Lands; but of his Grace and Favour, and as a Reward for his Faithful Services (which his Majeſty was pleaſed to accept) did, by Letters Patents under the Great Seal of England, bearing Date on or about the Eleventh Day of May, 1697, grant to Thomas Railton, Eſq; in Truſt for the ſaid Lord Halifax, (who was then one of the Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and one of the Members of the Houſe of Commons, as in this Article is ſet forth) ſeveral Debts, Intereſts, Sum or Sums of Money, amounting in the whole to the Sum of 11546 Pounds, Seventeen Shillings and Eight Pence, or thereabouts: Which Grant he conceives, and is adviſed, his Majeſty might then lawfully make; and was lawful for him to accept, without Breach of his Duty, or the Truſt repoſed in him: and denies that he did ask for, or procure the ſaid Grant; but confeſſeth, he accepted the ſame as a Mark of his Majeſty's Grace and Favour: And ſaith, The ſaid Grant hath ſince been taken away by Act of Parliament; and ſaith, That the ſaid Grant made to Thomas Railton, is the ſame which is mentioned or intended by the ſaid Article of Impeachment; and although the Debts therein mentioned to be granted, amount to 11546 Pounds, Seventeen Shillings and Eight Pence, and no more; yet the ſaid Grant it ſelf, at the Time of making thereof, or at any Time afterwards, would not be valued at near the ſaid Sums, becauſe a great Part of the ſaid Debts were not recoverable; and he hath not made clear thereof, as yet, above 400 l. And humbly hopes the ſaid Grant hath very little, if at all, contributed to the contracting any Debts upon the Nation, or laying heavy Taxes upon the People, or any ways reflected upon his Majeſty's Honour, or that he hath failed in the Performance of his Truſt or Duty, as in the Article is ſuggeſted.

II. To the Second Article the ſaid Lord Halifax ſaith, That he believes it to be true, that ſuch Act was made, and ſuch Clauſe therein, as in this Article is mentioned; and alſo in the ſaid Act there is a further Clauſe, That the Grantees from the King of any of the Forfeited Eſtates thereby reſumed, ſhould not be accountable for the Rents, Iſſues, and Profits of the ſame, by them received before the Second Day of November, 1699. but might retain the ſame to their own Uſes.

And the ſaid Lord Halifax doth acknowledge, That after the making the ſaid Grant before-mentioned to the ſaid Thomas Railton, the Agents of the ſaid Lord Halifax did receive ſome Moneys, not exceeding One Thouſand Pounds (as he is informed) out of the Rents and Profits of the Forfeited Eſtate of the Earl of Clancarty; of which no more than the aboveſaid Sum did come clear to him the ſaid Lord Halifax, and no more, to his Knowledge or Belief, hath been received or recovered upon the aforeſaid Grant. That the ſaid Lord Halifax gave Direction, after the ſaid Act paſſed, to his Agents Twentieth Day of Auguſt, One Thouſand Seven Hundred.

And whereas the ſaid Charles Lord Halifax had, before the making of the aforeſaid Act, procured for Thomas Railton, Eſq; in Truſt for himſelf, a Grant of ſeveral Debts by Judgments, and otherwiſe, to ſeveral of the ſaid Forfeiting Perſons, amounting to the Sum of Thirteen Thouſand Pounds, or thereabouts, forfeited to his Majeſty by the Attainder, Outlawries, or other Forfeitures of the reſpective Perſons to whom ſuch Debts were originally due; and by Virtue of the ſaid Grant, the ſaid Lord Halifax actually received to his own Uſe the Sum of One Thouſand Pounds, Part of the before-mentioned Sum of Thirteen Thouſand Pounds; which ſaid Sum of One Thouſand Pounds he the ſaid Charles Lord Halifax ought to have repaid before the ſaid Four and Twentieth Day of Auguſt, One Thouſand Seven Hundred, into the Receipt of his Majeſty's Exchequer in Ireland, as by the ſaid Act he was required to have done; yet the ſaid Charles Lord Halifax did not repay the ſaid Sum of One Thouſand Pounds, as by the ſaid Act he was required to do; but has hitherto, in Contempt of the Act, refuſed or neglected to repay the ſame: Which Neglect or Refuſal of him the ſaid Charles Lord Halifax, to repay the ſaid Sum of One Thouſand Pounds, is a manifeſt Wrong to his Majeſty and the Publick, and a Miſapplication of that Sum to other Uſes and Purpoſes than by the Act 'tis appropriated and ought to have been applied.

III. That the ſaid Charles Lord Halifax, being a Member of the Honourable Houſe of Commons, one of the Commiſſioners for Executing the Office of Lord-Treaſurer of England, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and one of his Majeſty's moſt Honourable Privy-Council; not contented with the many Employments and Places of Honour beſtowed upon him by his Majeſty, nor with the large and exceſſive Gains by him made, by the Incomes and Profits ariſing from ſuch Offices and Preferments, did (in Oppoſition to what he well knew to be the true Intereſt of England, and contrary to his Oath as a Privy-Councellor, and his Duty as a Publick Miniſter, at a Time when the Nation was engaged in a tedious and expenſive War againſt France, for preſerving the Balance and Liberties of Europe, and under ſuch heavy Debts as, without laying unſupportable Taxes on the People, were impoſſible to be ſatisfied) Adviſe, Procure and Aſſent, not only to the paſſing of divers Grants to others in England and Ireland, but did obtain and accept of ſeveral beneficial ones to or in Truſt for himſelf: Which ſaid Practices of him the ſaid Lord Halifax, were a moſt notorious Abuſe of his Majeſty's Goodneſs, a great Breach of his Truſt, and a very high Vexation and Oppreſſion of his Majeſty's other Subjects.

IV. Whereas by the Common Law, and by many Statutes and Ordinances of this Realm, it appears to have been the great Care of our Anceſtors, that the Kings Foreſts ſhould be preſerved, and in particular the Timber therein growing, for the building and repairing the Navy Royal, which has ever been accounted (as it undoubtedly is) the great Security in Ireland to do, in relation to the Money received, as ſhould be adviſed by Council there; by whom his Agents were adviſed (as they informed the ſaid Lord, and which he believes to be true) that the ſaid Moneys being received out of the mean Profits which were remitted by that Act, were not within the firſt mentioned Clauſe in the ſaid Act: And therefore the ſaid Lord does believe and admit the ſame were not paid into the Receipt of his Majeſty's Exchequer in Ireland, nor ought to have been paid into the Exchequer, as he humbly inſiſts and is adviſed: And he doth deny, that the Non-payment of the ſaid Money into the ſaid Receipt, is any Wrong to his Majeſty or the Publick, or any Miſapplication; and in Caſe the ſaid Money ought to have been paid into the ſaid Receipt, there are proper Methods and Remedies in the ſaid Act preſcribed, to compel the Payment of the ſame.

1 of

III. To the Third Article he ſaith, He was a Member of the Houſe of Commons, one of the Commiſſioners of his Majeſty's Treaſury, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Privy-Councellor, as in the Article is ſet forth; and ſerved his Majeſty faithfully, as he hopes and believes, in thoſe Stations, and was contented with the Employments and Places of Honour beſtowed upon him, and with the Incomes and Gains by him made, by the juſt and lawful Fees and Profits of the ſame; and his Majeſty graciouſly accepted of ſuch his Services; and as a Mark of his Royal Favour to him, did make, for his Benefit, the Grant in the Anſwer to the precedent Article, and the Grant in the Anſwer to the ſubſequent Article mentioned; which were all the profitable Grants he, or any in Truſt for him, ever had from his Majeſty. And the ſaid Lord Halifax ſays, He conceives, and is adviſed, that his accepting ſuch Grants were not any Abuſe of his Majeſty's Goodneſs, nor Breach of the Truſt repoſed in him, nor were any of his Majeſty's Subjects thereby oppreſſed; And denies that he ever did, in Oppoſition to what he knew to be the true Intereſt of England, or contrary to his Oath or Duty, at any Time Adviſe, Procure, or Aſſent to the paſſing of any Grant or Grants to himſelf, or to any Perſon in Truſt for him, or to any other Perſon or Perſons whatſoever: But ſaith, He, as one of the Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, in Conjunction with the other Commiſſioners, did Sign ſeveral Warrants and Dockets for ſuch Grants as his Majeſty was pleaſed to direct to be paſſed by them, and which he humbly conceives, and is adviſed, he was, by the Duty of his Place, obliged to do.

IV. To the Fourth Article, He ſaith he believes it to be true, that our Anceſtors did take great Care to preſerve the King's Foreſts, and the Timber therein growing, for the Building and Repairing the Navy-Royal, which the ſaid Lord doth own hath ever been accounted (and as he believes very rightly) the great Security of the Realm: And ſaith, True it is,

of this Realm. And whereas Charles Lord Halifax was, in the Year of our Lord One Thousand Six Hundred Ninety Seven, one of the Commissioners of the Treasury, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and of his Majesty's Privy-Council, and obliged as well by repeated Oaths, as by the Duty he owed to his Majesty and his Countrey, to have advised, consulted and promoted such Matters and Things as should, or at least were most likely to redound to his Majesty's Honour, and the Nations Safety: Yet the said Charles Lord Halifax, not regarding the Laws and Ordinances of this Realm, nor his said Duty to his Majesty and the Publick, but pursuing his private Interest, did, by Letters of Privy-Seal, bearing Date on or about the Sixth Day of May, which was in the Year of our Lord One Thousand Six Hundred Ninety Seven, (the Kingdom being then engaged in an expensive War, and the Debts of the Nation requiring the best and most frugal Management) procure from his Majesty a Grant to Henry Segar, Gent. in Trust for himself, of the Sum of Fourteen Thousand Pounds, of so much Scrub'd Beech, Birch, Holly, Hazle, Thorns and Orle, as should by Sale raise the said Sum of Fourteen Thousand Pounds, to be Fallen in his Majesty's Forest of Dean, in the County of Gloucester, within the Space of Seven Years Time, from the Five and Twentieth Day of December, One Thousand Six Hundred Ninety Seven: Under Colour of which Grant, Beech of a much greater Value, great Number of Sapling Oaks, which might and would have been serviceable to the Realm, and also many Tuns of well-grown Timber, fit for the present Use of the Navy, have been Cut and Fallen, and sold and disposed of for the Benefit of the said Lord Halifax.

V. Whereas there is not any Thing that so much conduceth to his Majesties, and the Nation's Honour and Safety, as the due Ordering and Managing of the King's Treasure and the Publick Revenues; for the Receiving and Issuing forth of which, the Wisdom and Policy of this Nation has provided and appointed several and distinct Officers with beneficial Salaries, in order that they may be a Check to each other, and that no Loss may accrue to his Majesty or the Publick, by the Corruption, Unskilfulness or Negligence of any particular Officer: Yet he the said Charles Lord Halifax, being one of the Lords of the Treasury, when by the Death of the Honourable Sir Robert Howard, the Office of the Auditor of the Receipts, and Writer of the Tallies, became Vacant; not regarding the ancient Constitution and approved Methods in ordering his Majesty's Treasury and the Publick Revenues, did Grant or procure to be Granted to Christopher Montague, Esq; the Brother of him the said Charles Lord Halifax; and then one of the Commissioners of the Excise, the said Place and Office of Auditor of the Receipts and Writer of the Talleys; which said Grant was so made and procured by the said Lord Halifax, in Trust as to the Profits thereof for himself; so that from and after the passing of the said Grant, he the said Lord Halifax was in effect at the same time one of the Commissioners of the Treasury, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Auditor of the Receipts, and Writer of the Talleys, and enjoyed the Profits of the said several Offices; which by the Constitution of the Treasury are manifestly inconsistent, and never were or ought to be trusted in the same Person: The making and procuring of which said Grant by him the said Charles Lord Halifax, as aforesaid, was a manifest Violation of the Established Course and Constitution of the Exchequer, a Breach of is, he was in the Year 1697, one of the Commissioners of the Treasury, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and one of his Majesties Privy-Council, and did from time to time Advise and Promote such Matters and Things, as were most likely to redound to his Majesty's Honour, and the Nations Safety; and denies that he at any time preferred his Private Interest to that of the Publick. But doth confess and admit, that his Majesty by his Letters of Privy-Seal, Dated the Sixth of May, 1697, did out of his Grace and Favour designed to the said Lord Halifax, Grant unto Henry Segar in the Article mentioned, and which was in Trust for the said Lord, the Sum of 2000*l. per Annum*, to be raised by the Fall of Scrub'd Beech, Birch, Holly, Hazle, Thorns and Orle, in the Forest of Dean in the County of Gloucester, for the Space of Seven Years, from the 25th of December 1697, as by the said Letters of Privy-Seal, to which the said Lord for more certainty referreth himself, may appear; which Grant was not, nor could be prejudicial to any Timber growing in the said Forest; and believes no Sapling Oaks, or Timber, or Trees likely to be Timber, were cut down by colour of the said Grant; and if any Abuse were in cutting the Wood, he conceives he is not answerable for the same; such Cutting not having been by his Direction, nor he any ways concerning himself therein; the Setting out and Cutting whereof did belong to his Majesty's Surveyor-General, and other his Majesty's Officers, who (as the said Lord hath been informed and believes) faithfully discharged their Trust in the Execution thereof, and took particular Care to preserve the Timber there.

V. To the Fifth Article, the said Lord Halifax answereth and saith, He believes it to be true, that the due ordering and Management of the King's Treasure and Publick Revenues, conduceth very much to the Honour and Safety of his Majesty and the Nation, and that there are several distinct Officers with Salaries, for the better receiving and issuing forth of the same, and that are Checks upon each other, to prevent any Loss to his Majesty, or the Publick; and the said Lord saith, True it is, he was one of the Commissioners of the Treasury when by the Death of Sir Robert Howard, his Office of Writer of the Talleys and Counter-Talleys, commonly called Auditor of the Receipt of Exchequer, became vacant; and thereupon the then Commissioners of the Treasury did grant the said Office to Christopher Montague, then one of the Commissioners of Excise, and Brother to the said Lord; which the said Lord does own and admit was done at his Desire and Request; but humbly insisteth, the same was not Granted contrary to the ancient Constitution, or approved Methods in ordering his Majesty's Treasury or Publick Revenue; And saith, he the said Lord, did procure the said Office to be granted to his Brother, intending in a short time after, by his Majesty's Permission, when his Majesty's Affairs would permit thereof, to leave his the said Lord's Employments and Places in the Treasury, and to obtain a Surrender from his said Brother of the said Office, and procure a Grant thereof to himself; which he hopes and humbly insists was lawful for him to do. And saith, his said Brother duly executed the said Office, till after the said Lord had left or laid down, by his Majesty's Leave, his Places in the Treasury; and then, and not before, his said Brother surrendred the said Office; and the said Lord obtained a Grant of the same, as he conceives of his Truſt, of Evil Example, and tending very much to the Great Loſs and Prejudice of his Majeſty and the Publick, by opening a way to all manner of Corrupt Practices in the future Management of the Revenues.

VI. Whereas a Treaty and Alliance between Leopold the Emperor of Germany, and the States-General of the United Provinces, was made and concluded in the Year of our Lord One Thouſand Six Hundred Eighty Nine, upon the Conſideration of the Greatneſs of the Common Danger, which then threatned all Chriſtendom from the exceſſive Power of France, and the unconſtant Faith of the French in the Obſervance of Treaties; whereby it was agreed, that there ſhould be and remain for ever a Conſtant, Perpetual and Inviolable Friendſhip and good Correſpondence between his Imperial Majeſty and the States-General, that each of them ſhould be obliged to promote the others Intereſt, and, as much as in them lay, prevent all Damages and Inconveniencies to each other.

And whereas certain Separate Articles were alſo at or about that time made and annexed to the aforeſaid Treaty; whereby the States-General, maturely conſidering, that France had openly declared in ſeveral Courts (that notwithſtanding the moſt ſolemn Renunciation) they continued their Pretenſion by Force of Arms, to aſſert for the Dauphin the Succeſſion of the Spaniſh Monarchy, in caſe the King of Spain ſhould die without Iſſue; and alſo conſidering what a Blow their State would receive, and what Prejudice might happen thereby to the Publick Affairs and Quiet, did promiſe, that in caſe his ſaid Catholick Majeſty ſhould die without Iſſue, they would, with all their Force, aſſiſt his ſaid Imperial Majeſty, or his Heirs, in taking the Succeſſion of the Spaniſh Monarchy, lawfully belonging to that Houſe, together with its Kingdoms, Dominions and Rights, and in their obtaining and ſecuring the quiet Poſſeſſion thereof, againſt the French and their Adherents, who ſhould directly or indirectly oppoſe that Succeſſion, and with Force repel the Force which ſhould be brought againſt them.

That at the Inſtance of the States-General, in purſuance of the ſaid Treaty and Separate Articles, our moſt Gracious Lord and Sovereign, his moſt Excellent Majeſty King William the Third, was invited to enter into the Alliance of the aforeſaid Treaty, and into the Agreement of the ſaid Separate Articles; and thereupon for reſtoring and preſerving the Publick Peace and Quiet, did afterwards in the ſaid Year of our Lord One Thouſand Six Hundred Eighty Nine, enter into, and under the Great Seal of England, Accept, Approve and Ratify, and in the moſt ſolemn manner, Engage and Promiſe, Religiouſly and Inviolably to obſerve the ſame, without Violating the ſaid Treaty or Separate Articles in any Article, or ſuffering the ſame, to the utmoſt of his Power to be Violated.

That in the Year of our Lord, One thouſand ſix hundred ninety eight, a Treaty was projected and contrived in France, to be ſet on foot between his Majeſty, the French King, and the States-General, for a Partition of the Spaniſh Monarchy, whereby many large Territories thereunto belonging, in caſe of the Deceaſe of the King of Spain, without Iſſue, were to be allotted and delivered up to France.

The Tenor and Deſign of which laſt mentioned Treaty, whilſt the ſame was in Negotiation, was communicated to the ſaid Charles Lord Halifax, then one of the Commiſſioners for executing the Office of Lord High Treaſurer, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and one of his Majeſty's moſt Honourable Privy Council:

That was lawful for him to do. In all which Proceedings nothing was done by him the ſaid Lord, as he is adviſed, in violation of the Eſtabliſhed Courſe and Conſtitution of the Exchequer, or to the Loſs or Prejudice of his Majeſty or the Publick; and ſaith, he does not know or believe, that the ſaid ſeveral Offices, as they were executed, were in their Nature inconſiſtent with one another; and is very ſure his Majeſty or the Publick were no Ways prejudiced by the Execution of the ſame.

VI. To the Sixth Article the ſaid Lord Halifax ſaith, That he believes, that in the Year 1689, ſuch Treaty and Alliance, and Separate Article, were made between the Emperor of Germany and the States-General of the United-Provinces, (into which his Majeſty and the late Queen entred) and ſuch Ratifications thereof were made, as in this Article is mentioned; and alſo ſaith, he hath heard and believes, that in the Year of our Lord 1698, a Treaty was made to ſuch Effect as in this Article is mentioned; and ſaith, he never ſaw the ſaid Treaty, or heard the ſame read, or does as yet know the Articles or Agreement it contains; and denies that he ever adviſed his Majeſty to enter into or make the ſaid Treaty, or was ever conſulted upon any Clauſe or Article thereof, or ever encouraged or promoted the ſame. And the ſaid Lord ſaith, That as he remembers, Mr. Secretary Vernon did at one time ſend for him, and diſcourſe with him and others, upon an Intimation that was given by a Letter from the Earl of Portland, as he remembers, that the French King was diſpoſed to commence a Negotiation upon ſome general Terms that were then mentioned, to prevent a War, in caſe of the King of Spain's Death, who was then reported to be very ill; and afterwards the ſaid Matter was diſcourſed between the Secretary, the then Lord Chancellor, and the ſaid Lord Halifax at Tunbridge-Wells, when and where the ſaid Lord Halifax made ſeveral Objections to the ſame; and denies that he gave any Opinion to encourage or promote the ſaid Treaty, or ever afterwards was informed of any one Particular relating to it, or was ever Conſulted or Adviſed upon any Clauſe or Article of it, or was ever after told or informed that the ſaid Negotiation or Treaty did go on or proceed; and ſaith, That not being adviſed with, or any ways knowing of the ſaid Treaty or Negotiation (except as aforeſaid) he could not diſſuade or obſtruct its taking Effect; and ſaith, As he cannot tell what the Effects of the Treaty might have been, if the ſaid Treaty had been obſerved, ſo he conceives and inſiſteth, that he is not, nor ought to be anſwerable for the ſame.

And having thus laid his Caſe before your Lordſhips, he humbly ſaith and inſiſteth upon it, That he is not Guilty of all or any the Matters by the ſaid Articles charged, or in them ſpecified, in Manner and Form, as the ſame are therein and thereby charged againſt him.

HALIFAX.

That the ſaid Charles Lord Halifax, well knowing the moſt apparent evil Conſequences, as well as the Injuſtice of the ſaid Partition, did not, according to the Truſt and Duty of his ſaid ſeveral Offices, diſſuade, or endeavour to obſtruct its taking Effect; but on the contrary, having neither Regard to his Majeſty's Honour, engaged by the above-mentioned Treaty with the Emperor, and the States-General, to the Trade and known Intereſt of theſe Kingdoms, or the Peace of Europe, did adviſe his Majeſty to enter into the ſaid Treaty, and did ſo far encourage and promote the ſame, that the ſaid Treaty was concluded and ratified under the Great Seal of England; which ſaid Treaty was evidently deſtructive of the Trade of this Realm, a Breach of the former Treaty made with the Emperor, in One thouſand ſix hundred eighty nine, diſhonourable to his Majeſty, highly injurious to the Intereſt of the Proteſtant Religion, and manifeſtly tended to diſturb the general Peace of Europe, by altering the Balance of Power therein, and ſtrengthning France againſt the good Friends and ancient Allies of our Sovereign Lord the King.

And the ſaid Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes, by Proteſtation, ſaving to themſelves the Liberty of exhibiting at any Time hereafter, any further Articles or other Accuſation or Impeachment againſt the ſaid Lord Halifax; and alſo of replying to his Anſwers which he ſhall make unto the ſaid Articles, or any of them, and of offering Proofs to all, and every the aforeſaid Articles, and to all and every other Articles, Impeachment or Accuſation, which ſhall be exhibited by them, as the Caſe ſhall, according to the Courſe of Parliament, require, do pray, That the ſaid Charles Lord Halifax may be put to anſwer the ſaid Crimes and Miſdemeanors, and that ſuch Proceedings, Examinations, Tryals, and Judgments, may be thereupon had and given, as is agreeable to Law and Juſtice.

After reading this Day the Articles of Impeachment brought up from the Houſe of Commons againſt Charles Lord Halifax, and hearing his Lordſhip thereupon, who deſired a Copy of the ſaid Articles, and ſaid he would put in his Anſwer ſo ſoon as poſſibly he could: It is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, That the Lord Halifax may have a Copy of the Articles againſt him.

Ordered, That the Lords Committes (appointed to draw what was offered at the Free Conference) do inſpect the Journals, as to what hath happened upon any Occaſion, in relation to what paſt at a free Conference yeſterday, and what hath been done thereupon, and Report to the Houſe.

A Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons by Sir John Hoskins and Dr. Newton, to acquaint them, " That upon the Occaſion of their laſt Meſ-
" ſage yeſterday, in order to continue a good Cor-
" reſpondence between the Two Houſes, their Lord-
" ſhips did immediately appoint a Committee to
" ſtate the Matters of the Free Conference, and alſo
" to inſpect Precedents of what has happened of the " like Nature: And that the publick Buſineſs may " receive no Interruption, the Time deſired by their
" Lordſhips for renewing the Free Conference being
" elapſed, their Lordſhips deſire a preſent free Con" ference in the Painted-Chamber, upon the Subject-
" Matter of the laſt Free Conference.

A Meſſage was brought from the Houſe of Commons by the Lord Cheney, and others, (Eodem Die) to acquaint this Houſe, viz. " That the Commons
" are extremely deſirous to preſerve a good Corre-
" ſpondence between the Two Houſes, and to expe-
" dite the Tryals of the Impeached Lords; but con-
" ceive it is not conſiſtent with the Honour of the
" Houſe of Commons to renew the Free Conference,
" until they have received Reparation by your Lord-
" ſhips doing Juſtice upon John Lord Haverſham,
" for the Indignity he yeſterday offered to the Houſe
" of Commons.

The Lord Steward reported from the Committee appointed to draw up what was offered at the Free Conference, viz.

That Mr. Harcourt opened the Conference, and argued firſt againſt the Reaſons given by this Houſe why they could not agree to a Committee of both Houſes; but afterwards entred into a Debate againſt the Two Reſolutions of this Houſe relating to Impeachments depending, viz.

Reſolved by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, Nemine Contradicente, That no Lord of Parliament Impeached of High Crimes and Miſdemeanors, and coming to his Tryal, ſhall, upon his Tryal, be without the Bar.

Reſolved by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, That no Lord of Parliament Impeached of High Crimes and Miſdemeanors, can be precluded from voting on any Occaſion, except in his own Tryal.

And in his Arguments he uſed this Expreſſion, That he wiſhed their Lordſhips had ſent their Reaſons as well as their Reſolutions.

Sir Bartholomew Shower ſpoke next, in Purſuance of the Argument begun by Mr. Harcourt, againſt the aboveſaid Reſolutions; and in giving Reaſons againſt the latter of the ſaid Reſolutions, amongſt other things did affirm, That ſuch a Proceeding would be abhorrent from Juſtice.

In Anſwer to thoſe Gentlemen, the Lord Haverſham uſed ſome Arguments and Expreſſions which the Managers for the Houſe of Commons took Exceptions at; but what thoſe were the Committee cannot ſo charge their Memories as to give the Houſe a particular Account of them; and the Lord Haverſham being deſired by the Committee to recollect what he had ſaid, did inform their Lordſhips, That obſerving in the Free Conference ſeveral Things ſaid by Mr. Harcourt and Sir Bartholomew Shower, that reflected on the Honour and Juſtice of this Houſe, as he apprehended, and that he took to be Foreign to the Subject-Matter of the Free Conference, he thought it his Duty to take notice thereof; but in what Expreſſions, he hoped their Lordſhips would excuſe him from giving a particular Account; but denies that he ſaid ſeveral things contained in the Paper ſent up by the Houſe of Commons; but ſays, that he deſired to be heard out, and that the Words he had ſpoken might be writ down; but the Managers for the Commons broke up abruptly.

The Lord Haverſham this Day moved, that he may have a Copy of the Commons Charge againſt him, and and Time to anſwer: It is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, That the Lord Haverſham ſhall have a Copy of the Charge againſt him, and do Anſwer thereunto; and that he ſhall have Council allowed him, in order to anſwer the Charge againſt him.

The Meſſengers ſent to the Houſe of Commons, return Anſwer, That the Commons will ſend an Anſwer by Meſſengers of their own.

A Meſſage was brought from the Houſe of Commons by the Lord Cheney, and others, to acquaint this Houſe ----- See Page 543.

The Houſe being moved, to inſiſt not to have a Committee of both Houſes, touching the Tryal of the Impeached Lords: And Debate thereupon:

The Queſtion was put, Whether this Houſe ſhall inſiſt upon their Reſolution, of not allowing a Committee of both Houſes?

It was reſolved in the Affirmative.

A Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons by Sir Robert Legard and Dr. Newton, to acquaint them, " That the Lord Sommers having informed " this Houſe, That Sir Stephen Fox, John Smith, Eſq; " William Lowndes, Eſq; Stephen Harvey, Eſq; and " William Gulſton, Eſq; Members of their Houſe, may " be material Witneſſes for him at his Tryal on " Tueſday next in Weſtminſter-Hall, this Houſe de- " ſires, That they may have Leave to attend, and " give their Teſtimonies at the ſaid Tryal; and that " a Letter which his Majeſty was pleaſed to write " to him in One thouſand ſix hundred ninety eight, " being now in their Houſe, will be neceſſary for his " Defence at his Tryal; this Houſe deſires that the " ſaid Letter may be produced at the ſaid Tryal.

It is Ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, That an humble Addreſs be made to his Majeſty from this Houſe, That he will be pleaſed to give Order that the Original Treaties of Partition, of One Thouſand Six Hundred Ninety Eight, and One Thouſand Six Hundred Ninety Nine, and the Earl of Portland's, and Mr. Secretary Vernon's Letters relating thereunto, or Authentick Copies of them, may be laid before this Houſe on Monday next, at Eleven of the Clock; and that the Lords with White-Staves attend his Majeſty with this Addreſs.

Die Lunæ 16° Junij, 1701.

That the whole Impeachment is to be read, and then the Anſwer; which being done, the Lord Keeper is to tell the Commons, That now they may go on with their Evidence.

Then the Lord Keeper is to declare, That now the Court is proceeding to hear the Evidence, and deſire the Peers to give Attention.

That his Majeſty would do what he could towards it; and that he had not the Original Papers.

As to the Addreſs for Guards, his Majeſty hath complied with it, and given Order for them accordingly.

A Meſſage was brought from the Houſe of Commons by the Earl of Dyſert and others, (the 17th of June,) to acquaint this Houſe, " That the Commons, in this whole Proceeding againſt the Impeached Lords, have acted with all imaginable Zeal to bring them to a ſpeedy Tryal; and they doubt not but 'twill appear, by comparing their Proceedings with all others upon the like Occaſion, That the Houſe of Commons have nothing to blame themſelves for, but that they have not expreſſed the Reſentment THEIR ANCESTORS have juſtly ſhewed upon much leſs Attempts which have been made upon their Power of Impeachments.

" The Commons on the 31ſt of May, acquainted your Lordſhips, that they thought it proper from the Nature of the Evidence, to proceed in the firſt Place upon the Tryal of the Lord Sommers. Upon the firſt Intimation from your Lordſhips ſome Days afterwards, That you would proceed to the Tryal of any of the Impeached Lords, whom the Commons ſhould be firſt ready to begin with; notwithſtanding your Lordſhips had before thought fit to appoint which Impeachment ſhould be firſt tried, and affix a Day for ſuch Tryal, without conſulting the Commons, who are the Proſecutors:

" The Commons, in this whole Proceeding againſt the Impeached Lords, have acted with all imaginable Zeal to bring them to a ſpeedy Tryal; and they doubt not but 'twill appear, by comparing their Proceedings with all others upon the like Occaſion, That the Houſe of Commons have nothing to blame themſelves for, but that they have not expreſſed the Reſentment THEIR ANCESTORS have juſtly ſhewed upon much leſs Attempts which have been made upon their Power of Impeachments.

" The Commons on the 31ſt of May, acquainted your Lordſhips, that they thought it proper from the Nature of the Evidence, to proceed in the firſt Place upon the Tryal of the Lord Sommers. Upon the firſt Intimation from your Lordſhips ſome Days afterwards, That you would proceed to the Tryal of any of the Impeached Lords, whom the Commons ſhould be firſt ready to begin with; notwithſtanding your Lordſhips had before thought fit to appoint which Impeachment ſhould be firſt tried, and affix a Day for ſuch Tryal, without conſulting the Commons, who are the Proſecutors:

A Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons by Sir John Francklyn and Sir Lacon William Child, (on the 20th Inſtant) to acquaint them, " That the Lords in Anſwer to the Meſſage of the Commons of the Seventeenth Inſtant, ſay, the only true way of determining which of the Two Houſes has acted with the greateſt Sincerity, in order to bring the Impeached Lords to their Tryals, is to look back upon the reſpective Proceedings.

" The Lords do not well underſtand what the Commons mean by that Reſentment which they ſpeak of in their Meſſage. Their Lordſhips own the Houſe of Commons have a Right of Impeaching: And the Lords have the undoubted Power of doing Juſtice upon thoſe Impeachments, by bringing them to Tryal, and condemning or acquitting the Parties in a reaſonable Time. This Power is derived to them from their Anceſtors, which they will not ſuffer to be wreſted from them by any Pretences whatſoever.

" Their Lordſhips cannot but wonder, that the Commons ſhould not have propoſed a Committee of both Houſes much ſooner, if they thought it ſo neceſſary for the bringing on the Tryals; no mention being made of ſuch a Committee from the Firſt of April to the Sixth of June, although during that Interval their

" The Commons determining to expedite the " Tryals to the utmoſt of their Power, in hopes of " attaining that End, and for the more ſpeedy and " eaſy adjuſting and preventing any Differences " which had happened, or might ariſe, previous to " or upon theſe Tryals, propoſed to your Lordſhips " at a Conference, the moſt Parliamentary and Ef- " fectual Method for that Purpoſe, and that which " in no manner intrenched upon your Lordſhips " Judicature, That a Committee of both Houſes " ſhould be nominated to conſider of the moſt " proper Ways and Methods of Proceedings upon " Impeachments according to the Uſage of Par- " liament.

" In the next Meſſage to the Commons upon " Monday the 9th of June, your Lordſhips thought " fit, without taking the leaſt Notice of this Pro- " poſition, to appoint the Friday then following, " for the Tryal of the ſaid Lord Sommers; where- " unto, as well as to many other Meſſages and Pro- " ceedings of your Lordſhips upon this Occaſion, " the Houſe of Commons might have juſtly taken " very great Exceptions; yet, as an Evidence of " their Moderation, and to ſhew their Readineſs to " bring the Impeached Lords to ſpeedy Juſtice, the " Commons inſiſted only on their Propoſition for " a Committee of both Houſes, to Settle and Ad- " juſt the neceſſary Preliminaries to the Tryal; parti- " cularly, Whether the Impeached Lords ſhould ap- " pear on their Tryal at your Lordſhips Bar as " Criminals: Whether being under Accuſations " of the ſame Crimes, they ſhould ſit as Judges on " each others Tryal for thoſe Crimes, or ſhould " Vote in their own Caſes, as 'tis notorious they " have been permitted by your Lordſhips to do in " many Inſtances which might be given: To which " Particulars your Lordſhips have not yet given a " direct Anſwer, though put in Mind thereof by " the Commons.

" Your Lordſhips, at a Conference, having of- " fered ſome Reaſons why you could not agree to " a Committee of both Houſes, to adjuſt the ne- " ceſſary Preliminaries, the Commons thereupon " deſired a Free-Conference, and your Lordſhips " agreed thereunto; at which 'tis well known to " many of your Lordſhips, who were then preſent, " what moſt ſcandalous Reproaches and falſe Expreſſions, highly reflecting upon the Honour and Juſtice of " the Houſe of Commons, were uttered by John Lord Haverſham, whereby the Commons were under a " neceſſity of withdrawing from the ſaid Free-Conference; for which Offence the Commons have, with " all due regard to your Lordſhips, prayed your Lordſhips Juſtice againſt the Lord Haverſham, but have " as yet received no manner of Satisfaction.

" Delays were frequently complained of by the " Houſe of Lords.

" The Manner in which the Commons demand " this Committee, the Lords look upon as a direct " invading of their Judicature; and therefore, as " there never was a Committee of both Houſes " yielded to by the Lords in caſe of any Impeach- " ment for High Crimes and Miſdemeanors; ſo " their Lordſhips do inſiſt, that they will make no " new Precedent upon this Occaſion. Many Im- " peachments for Miſdemeanors have in all times " been determined without ſuch a Committee: And " if now the Commons think fit, by an unprece- " dented Demand, to form an Excuſe for not pro- " ſecuting their Impeachments, it is demonſtrable " where the Obſtruction lies.

" As to the Preliminaries which the Commons " mention in particular, as proper to be ſettled at " ſuch a Committee, they have received the Re- " ſolutions of the Houſe of Lords therein by their " Meſſage of the Twelfth Inſtant; from which (be- " ing Matters relating entirely to their Judicature) " their Lordſhips cannot depart.

" As to the laſt Pretence the Commons would " make to ſhelter the delaying the Tryals, from " ſome Expreſſions which fell from the Lord Ha- " verſham at the Free-Conference, at which Offence " was taken; their Lordſhips will only obſerve,

" Firſt, That they have omitted nothing which " might give the Commons all reaſonable Satisfa- " ction, of their Purpoſe to do them Juſtice in that " Matter, ſo far as is conſiſtent with doing Juſtice " to that Lord; and alſo to preſerve all good Cor- " reſpondence with them, as appears by the ſeveral " Steps they have taken.

" Secondly, That this Buſineſs has no Relation to " the Tryals of the Impeached Lords: And there- " fore their Lordſhips cannot imagine why the " Commons ſhould make Satisfaction and Repara- " tion againſt the Lord Haverſham, a neceſſary Con- " dition for the going on with the Tryals, and at " the ſame time find no Difficulty in proceeding " on other Buſineſs.

" The Commons reſtrain themſelves from enumerating your Lordſhips very many irregular and unpar- " liamentary Proceedings upon this Occaſion; but think it is what they owe to Publick Juſtice, and all " the Commons of England, whom they repreſent, to declare ſome few of thoſe Reaſons, why they pe- " remptorily refuſe to proceed to the Tryal of the Lord Sommers on the 17th of June.

" Firſt, Becauſe your Lordſhips have not yet agreed, that a Committee of both Houſes ſhould be ap- " pointed for ſettling the neceſſary Preliminaries; a Method never until this time denied by the Houſe " of Lords, whenſoever the Commons have thought it neceſſary to deſire the ſame.

" Secondly, Should the Commons (which they never will do) be contented to give up thoſe Rights " which have been tranſmitted to them from THEIR ANCESTORS, and are of abſolute neceſſity to " their Proceedings on Impeachments; yet whilſt they have any Regard to Publick Juſtice, they never can " appear as Proſecutors before your Lordſhips, till your Lordſhips have firſt given them Satisfaction, " that Lords Impeached of the ſame Crimes ſhall not ſit as Judges on each others Tryals for thoſe Crimes.

" Thirdly, Becauſe the Commons have, as yet, received no Reparation for the great Indignity offered " to them at the Free-Conference by the Lord Haverſham. The Commons are far from any Inclination, " and cannot be ſuppoſed to be under any neceſſity of delaying the Tryal of the Lord Sommers: There is " not any Article exhibited by them in maintenance of their Impeachment againſt the Lord Sommers, for " the Proof whereof they have not full and undeniable Evidence, which they will be ready to produce as " ſoon as your Lordſhips ſhall have done Juſtice upon the Lord Haverſham; and the neceſſary Prelimina- " ries, in order to the ſaid Tryal, ſhall be ſettled by a Committee of both Houſes.

" The Commons think it unneceſſary to obſerve to your Lordſhips, that moſt of the Articles whereof " the Lord Sommers ſtands Impeached, will appear to your Lordſhips to be undoubtedly true, from Mat- " ters

" ters of Record, as well as by the Confeſſion of the ſaid Lord Sommers, in his Anſwer to the ſaid Ar" ticles; to which the Commons doubt not but your Lordſhips will have a due Regard when his Tryal
" ſhall regularly proceed.

The Houſe being moved to go into Weſtminſter-Hall, in order to the Tryal of the Lord Sommers:

After Debate this Queſtion was put, Whether this Houſe ſhall go this Day into the Court in Weſtminſter-Hall, in order to proceed upon the Tryal of the Lord Sommers, according to the Order of the Day?

It was reſolved in the Affirmative.

A Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons by Mr. Baron Tracy, and Mr. Baron Berry, to acquaint them, that the Lords intend preſently to proceed to the Tryal of John Lord Sommers in Weſtminſter-Hall.

The Meſſengers being returned acquainted the Houſe, that the Commons were adjourned.

Then this Queſtion was propoſed, Whether the Earl of Orford, and Lord Halifax may withdraw at the Tryal of the Lord Sommers?

Then this previous Queſtion was put, Whether this Queſtion ſhall be now put?

It was reſolved in the Affirmative.

Then the Main Queſtion was put, Whether the Earl of Orford, and Lord Halifax ſhall have Leave to withdraw at the Tryal of the Lord Somers?

It was Reſolved in the Affirmative.

Then the Lord-Keeper deſired, that ſome further Directions be given to him in order to the Tryal in the Hall; and thereupon it was propoſed that this Proclamation be made in the Hall, viz.

Whereas a Charge of High Crimes and Miſdemeanors has been exhibited by the Houſe of Commons, in the Name of Themſelves, and all the Commons of England, againſt John Lord Sommers, all Perſons concerned are to take notice, that he now ſtands upon his Tryal, and they may now come forth in order to make good the ſaid Charge.

After Debate the Queſtion was put, Whether this Proclamation ſhall be made.

It was reſolved in the Affirmative.

Ordered, That the ſaid Proclamation be made in the Hall before the reading the Articles of Impeachment, and the Lord Sommers Anſwer; and alſo after they are read.

Ordered, That the Court in Weſtminſter-Hall be cleared for the Lords.

Then the Houſe adjourned to Weſtminſter-Hall, and the Lords were called by the Herald, and went as Ordered; and being Seated in the Hall the Houſe was reſumed.

Then Proclamation was made for Silence, as follows:

Our Sovereign Lord the King, ſtrictly Charges and Commands all manner of Perſons to keep Silence, upon pain of Impriſonment.

Then the Lord-Keeper asked Leave for the Judges to be Covered; which was agreed to.

Then Proclamation, as Ordered, was made.

After which, the Articles againſt John Lord Sommers were Read, and alſo his Lordſhip's Anſwer to them.

After which the ſame Proclamation was again made.

Then the Lord-Keeper declared the Houſe was ready to hear the Evidence againſt John Lord Sommers, and therefore deſired the Lords to give Attention.

The Lord Sommers moved to have his Council heard.

Whereupon the Houſe adjourned to the Houſe above, and went back in the ſame manner as they came down, and being there the Houſe was reſumed.

The Houſe being moved to acquit the Lord Sommers; and after long Debate, and hearing the Judges to ſeveral Queſtions asked them by the Lords; This Queſtion was propoſed,

That John Lord Sommers be acquitted of the Articles of Impeachment againſt him exhibitted by the Houſe of Commons, and all things therein contained, and that the ſaid Impeachment be diſmiſſed.

Then this Queſtion was put, Whether the Queſtion now Stated, ſhall be put in the Court below.

It was Reſolved in the Affirmative.

Then it was agreed and ordered, That in Weſtminſter-Hall the Lord Keeper ſhall read the Queſtion, and then call the Junior Baron preſent firſt, and ask every Lord, Whether Content, or Not Content, and that every Lord ſtand up when called to, and give his Vote Content, or Not Content; and that the Lord-Keeper, having taken their Votes, declare the Majority; and if the Majority be for Acquitting the Lord Sommers, the Lord-Keeper is to declare it ſo, and particularly to the Lord Sommers.

Then the Houſe adjourned again to Weſtminſter-Hall, and the Lords went in the ſame manner as before; and being come there, the Houſe was Reſumed, and Proclamation was made for Silence.

The Lord-Keeper put the Queſtion as follows,

That John Lord Sommers be Acquitted of the Articles of Impeachment againſt him, Exhibited by the Houſe of Commons, and all Things therein contained, and that the ſaid Impeachment be diſmiſſed.

Then the Lord-Keeper aſked every Lord, Whether Content, or Not.

That John Lord Sommers was Acquitted of the Articles of Impeachment againſt him Exhibited by the Houſe of Commons, and all Things therein contained, and that the ſaid Impeachment was diſmiſs'd.

And alſo declared to the Lord Sommers, That he was Acquitted.

Then the Houſe adjourned to the Houſe above; and being come thither, the Houſe was reſumed, and the following Order made:

It is Conſidered, Ordered, and Adjudged by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, That John Lord Sommers ſhall be, and he is hereby Acquitted of the Articles of Impeachment againſt him Exhibited by the Houſe of Commons, and all Things therein contained; and that the ſaid Impeachment ſhall be, and is hereby diſmiſſed.

It is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, That the Proceedings in this Houſe upon the Impeachments be printed; and that the Lords Committees appointed to conſider of the Manner of Proceeding on Impeachments, do meet To-morrow at Ten a-Clock, and inſpect the Journals, and draw up the Matter relating thereunto, in Order to be printed, and report to the Houſe.

Die Mercurii 18° Junij, 1701.

It is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, That this Houſe will proceed to the Tryal of Edward Earl of Orford, on Monday the Three and Twentieth Day of this Inſtant June, at Ten of the Clock in the Forenoon, in Weſtminſter-Hall.

A Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons by Sir John Francklyn, and Dr. Edisbury, to acquaint them, That this Houſe hath appointed Monday, the Three and Twentieth Day of this Inſtant June, for the Tryal of Edward Earl of Orford, in Weſtminſter-Hall, at Ten a-Clock.

A Meſſage from the Houſe of Commons by the Lord Mordant and others (on June the 20th) to acquaint this Houſe, That in Anſwer to the Meſſage of the Lords, appointing Monday next for the Tryal of the Earl of Orford, that the Lords have been acquainted, That the Commons would proceed, in the firſt place, againſt the Lord Sommers; and they are ready to go to that Lord's Tryal, as ſoon as ever the Commons have received Satisfaction for the Affront offer'd to the Houſe of Commons by the Lord Haverſham at the Free Conference; and that the neceſſary Preliminaries are adjuſted by a Committee of both Houſes.

Die Jovis 19° Junij, 1701.

The Houſe being moved, That an Anſwer be drawn to the Meſſage received from the Houſe of Commons the Seventeenth Inſtant, it is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, That the Committee appointed to conſider of the Manner of Proceeding on Impeachments, do withdraw preſently, to draw an Anſwer to the ſaid Meſſage.

Then the Houſe was adjourned during Pleaſure, and the Lords went to the Committee; which being ended,

The Houſe was reſumed, and the Earl of Stamford reported what they had drawn in Anſwer to the Meſſage received from the Houſe of Commons the Seventeenth Inſtant; which was read, and agreed to.

A Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons by Sir John Francklyn, and Sir Lacon William Child. See Page 545.

This

This Day John Lord Haverſham delivered his Anſwer to the Charge of the Houſe of Commons Exhibited againſt him the Thirteenth Inſtant; which was read by the Clerk, as follows, viz.

The ANSWER of John Lord Haverſham to the Charge Exhibited againſt him by the Commons, for Words ſpoken at a Free Conference, on the Thirteenth Day of this Inſtant June, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and One.

THE ſaid Lord Haverſham, ſaving to himſelf all Advantages of Exception to the ſaid Charge, and of not being prejudiced by any want of Form in this his Anſwer; and alſo ſaving to himſelf all Rights and Privileges belonging to him, as one of the Peers of this Realm; for Anſwer to the ſaid Charge, ſaith, That on the Sixth Day of June, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and One, the Commons, by a Meſſage ſent to the Lords, deſired a Conference upon their Meſſage to the Commons of the Fourth of June: In which Conference they propoſed to the Lords, That a Committee of both Houſes might be nominated, to conſider of the moſt proper Ways and Methods of proceeding on the Impeachments of the Lords, according to the Uſage of Parliament. That on the Tenth of June, the Lords deſired another Conference with the Commons; in which they delivered them their Reaſons, why they could not agree to the appointing of ſuch Committee, (viz.) Firſt, That they could not find that ever ſuch a Committee was appointed on Occaſion of Impeachments for Miſdemeanors; and their Obligation to be cautious in admitting any Thing new in Matters relating to Judicature. Secondly, That although a Committee of this Nature was agreed to, upon the Impeachments of the Earl of Danby, and the Five Popiſh Lords for High-Treaſon; yet the Succeſs, in that Inſtance, was not ſuch as ſhould encourage the purſuing the ſame Method, though in the like Caſe: And that after much Time ſpent at that Committee, the Diſputes were ſo far from being there adjuſted, that they occaſioned the abrupt Concluſion of a Seſſion of Parliament. Thirdly, That the Method of Proceedings on Impeachments for Miſdemeanors, are ſo well ſettled by the Uſage of Parliament, that no Difficulties were likely to happen, nor none had been ſtated to them: And that all the Preliminaries in the Caſe of Stephen Goudett, and others, (which was the laſt Inſtance of Impeachments for Miſdemeanors) were eaſily ſettled and agreed to, without any ſuch Committee. Fourthly, That the Propoſal of the Commons came ſo very late, that no other Fruit could be expected of ſuch a Committee, but the preventing of the Tryals during this Seſſion. Whereupon the Commons, on the Twelfth of June, deſired of the Lords a Free Conference, on the Subject-Matter of the laſt Conference. That the Lords, on the ſaid Twelfth of June, came to Two Reſolutions in relation to the Lords Impeached: " Firſt, That no Lord of " Parliament, Impeached of High Crimes and Miſ- " demeanors, and coming to his Tryal, ſhall, upon " his Tryal, be without the Bar. Secondly, That " no Lord of Parliament, Impeached of High " Crimes and Miſdemeanors, can be precluded " from Voting on any Occaſion, except in his own " Tryal. And by Meſſengers of their own, the Lords acquainted the Commons with the ſaid Two Reſolutions, and alſo that they agreed to a Free Conference with the Commons, and appointed the next Day. That upon the Thirteenth of June, Mr. Harcourt, one of the Managers, begin the Free Conference on the Part of the Commons, and argued upon the Four Reaſons given by the Lords, why they could not agree to the appointing a Committee of both Houſes; and principally relied upon the Inſtance in the Caſe of the Popiſh Lords; and inſiſted upon the Delay, that the not agreeing to the Nomination of ſuch a Committee would neceſſarily occaſion, whereby the Lords Tryals, and the Juſtice due to the Nation, would be retarded. And departing from the Subject-Matter of the ſaid Conference, (which was, whether it were requiſite to appoint or not appoint ſuch a Committee) the ſaid Manager diſcourſed upon the latter of the Two Reſolutions of the Lords communicated to the Commons, and ſaid, That he wiſhed the Lords had ſent down their Reaſons, as well as their Reſolutions: Which Words ſeemed to the ſaid Lord Haverſham, to carry therein an Implication as if the ſaid Reſolution could have no Reaſon to juſtify it. That Sir Bartholomew Shower, another Manager for the Commons, obſerved the ſame Method of Diſcourſe: And having argued upon the Lords Reaſons, departed from the Subject-Matter of the Free Conference; and inveighing againſt the Manner of the Lords Judicature aſſerted by their Reſolutions, ſaid, That it was abhorrent to Juſtice. Which Expreſſions being foreign (as the ſaid Lord Haverſham apprehended) to the Subject-Matter of the ſaid Free Conference, which was, Whether ſuch Committee of both Houſes ſhould be appointed or not? the ſaid Lord being appointed by the Lords for one of the Managers of the ſaid Free Conference on their Behalf, in Vindication of the Honour and Juſtice of the Houſe of Peers, and of their Judicature and Reſolutions, in Anſwer to what had been ſaid by the Managers for the Commons, he ſpoke to the Effect following:

" Gentlemen, I ſhall begin what I have to ſay, " as that worthy Member who opened this Con- " ference, That there is nothing the Lords more " deſire that to keep a good Correſpondence, which " is ſo neceſſary to the Safety of the Nation, and " the Diſpatch of publick Buſineſs; and nothing " they have more carefully avoided, than what " might create a Miſunderſtanding between the " Two Houſes. A greater Inſtance of which could " not be given, than the Meſſages my Lords " returned to ſome the Commons had ſent them up; " in which they took care to expreſs themſelves ſo " cautiouſly, that no Heat might ariſe from any " Expreſſion of theirs. And as to what the worthy " Members mentioned, in relation to Delay, the " repeated Remembrances ſent the Commons, with " relation to the ſending up the Articles againſt " the Impeached Lords, are a ſufficient Inſtance " how deſirous they are that theſe Matters ſhould " proceed. And the Lords have this Satisfaction, " that it is not on their Part that the Tryals " are not in a greater Forwardneſs; they cannot but " look upon it as a great Hardſhip that any ſhould " lie under long Delays on Impeachments. Perſons " may be incapable; Facts may be forgotten; Evi- " dences may be laid out of the way; Witneſſes " may dye; and many the like Accidents may hap- " pen. The Inſtance the worthy Members give of " the Popiſh Lords, as it is a Crime of another Na- " ture, and not fully to the Point, ſo it ſeems to " make againſt what it was brought for: For the " worthy Members ſay there was but One of the " Lords brought to Juſtice, though Four more (as " I take it) were Accuſed. And can any Man be- " lieve that the Commons have a Mind to bring " only

" only One of theſe Lords to Tryal? It is incon-
" ſiſtent with the Opinion that every Body muſt
" have of their Juſtice. And as to the Point of " Judicature, it were very hard upon the Lords,
" that no Perſon ſhould be brought to Tryal, till
" the Judicature of the Houſe be ſo firſt. The Ju-
" dicature of the Lords is their Peculiar, and hath,
" in former Ages, been Sacred with the Commons
" themſelves. And this Houſe perhaps hath as " much Reaſon to be jealous and careful of it, as " any other Houſe ever had; eſpecially when one
" ſingle Precedent is ſo urged and inſiſted upon.
" One Thing there is, which a Worthy Member
" mentioned, though I cannot ſpeak to it at large,
" becauſe I think my ſelf bound up by the Reſolu-
" tions of the Houſe; yet it muſt have ſome An-
" ſwer; (that is) As to the Lords Voting in their " own Caſe; it requires an Anſwer, though I can" not enter into the Debate of it. The Commons
" themſelves have made this Precedent; for in theſe
" Impeachments they have allowed Men, equally
" concerned in the ſame Facts, to Vote in their own
" Houſe: And we have not made the Diſtinction in " ours, that ſome ſhould Vote, and ſome not. The " Lords have ſo high an Opinion of the Juſtice
" of the Houſe of Commons, that they believe
" Juſtice ſhall never be made uſe of as a Maſk for " any Deſign. And therefore give me Leave to ſay,
" though I am not to argue it, 'Tis to me a plain De-
" monſtration, that the Commons think theſe Lords
" innocent; and I think the Propoſition is undenia-
" ble: For when there are ſeveral Lords in the ſame
" Circumſtances, in the ſame Facts, there is no
" Diſtinction; and the Commons leave ſome of " theſe Men, at the Head of Affairs, near the King's
" Perſon, to do any Miſchief, if they were inclina-
" ble to it; it looks as if they thought them all in" nocent. This is a Thing I was in hopes I ſhould
" never have heard aſſerted, when the Beginning of
" it was from the Houſe of Commons.

The ſaid Lord being here interrupted, he deſired to be heard out, and that his Words might be taken down in Writing. But the Managers for the Commons broke up, and departed, refuſing to hear any Explanation. Now the ſaid Lord, as to any implicit Charge of a Deſign to reflect on, or diſhonour the Houſe of Commons, denies any ſuch Deſign or Intention, having for many Years had the Honour to ſit in the Houſe of Commons, and having ever had an honourable and reſpectful Senſe thereof: But the ſaid Lord was led to expreſs himſelf in the manner aforeſaid, for the Reaſons aforeſaid, and takes himſelf to be juſtified therein, by the Facts and Reaſons following.

That the Nature of that Conference was, That it ſhould be free: The Occaſion of it, Becauſe either Houſe apprehended the other to be in an Error: And the End of it, That each Side may urge ſuch Facts as are true, and ſuch Reaſons as are forcible to convince. That one Article of the Impeachment againſt John Lord Sommers was, That the Treaty of Partition, of One Thouſand Six Hundred Ninety Nine, was ratified under the Great Seal, which then was in the Cuſtody of the ſame Lord, then Lord Chancellor of England. That the Commons, on the Firſt of April, One Thouſand Seven Hundred and One, reſolved, That the Earl of Portland, by negotiating and concluding the Treaty of Partition, was guilty of a High Crime and Miſdemeanor; and purſuant thereto, lodged an Impeachment againſt him in the Houſe of Peers: Which Vote and Impeachment could not have Reference to any Treaty, other than the Treaty of Partition of One Thouſand Six Hundred Ninety Nine; the Treaty of One Thouſand Six Hundred Ninety Eight, not being before the Houſe of Commons till after the Time of that Vote and Impeachment; and yet the Earl of Jerſey, who then was Secretary of State, and a Privy-Counſellor, and actually Signed the ſaid Treaty of One Thouſand Six Hundred Ninety Nine, as a Plenipotentiary with the Lord Portland, ſtands Unimpeached, and continues at the Head of Affairs, being Lord-Chamberlain, near his Majeſty's Perſon, and in his Preſence and Councils (without Complaint.) That the Earl of Orford, and the Lords Sommers and Halifax, are ſeverally Impeached for adviſing the Treaty of Partition of One Thouſand Six Hundred Ninety Eight; and yet Mr. Secretary Vernon, who then was Secretary of State, and a Privy-Counſellor, and acted in the promoting of the Treaty of Partition of One Thouſand Six Hundred Ninety Eight, ſtands Unimpeached, and ſtill continues one of the Principal Secretaries of State: And Sir Joſeph Williamſon, who then was a Privy-Counſellor, and tranſacted and Signed the Treaty of Partition of One Thouſand Six Hundred Ninety Eight, as a Plenipotentiary, ſtands Unimpeached. That the Lord Halifax is Impeached, for that he, being a Commiſſioner of the Treaſury, aſſented to the paſſing of divers Grants from the Crown, to ſeveral Perſons, of Lands in Ireland; and yet Sir Edward Seymour, Sir Stephen Fox, and Mr. Pelham, who being ſeverally Lords Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, did ſeverally aſſent to the paſſing of divers like Grants from his Majeſty of Lands in Ireland, ſtand Unimpeached. That in the Impeachments againſt the Earl of Orford and Lord Sommers, one of the Articles againſt them is for procuring a Commiſſion to Captain William Kidd; and likewiſe a Grant under the Great Seal, of the Ships and Goods of certain Perſons therein named, to certain Perſons in Truſt for them; and yet other Lords, equally concerned in procuring the ſaid Commiſſion and Grant, ſtand Unimpeached. That the ſaid Mr. Secretary Vernon, Sir Edward Seymour, Sir Stephen Fox, and Mr. Pelham, notwithſtanding their being Parties in the ſame Facts charged in the ſaid reſpective Impeachments, have been permitted to Sit and Vote in the Houſe of Commons touching the ſaid Impeachments, and the Matters thereof. That theſe Facts being true and publickly known, the Conſequences reſulting therefrom (as the ſaid Lord Haverſham apprehended) are undeniable, (viz.) That the doing of the ſame Thing by Two Perſons in equal Circumſtances, cannot be a Crime in one, and not in the other. That the Commons had no Reaſon to inſiſt, That the Lords ſhould not permit that in their Members, which the Commons had firſt permitted, and continued to permit, and ſo begun the firſt Precedent in their own Members. That it muſt be thought, that the Impeached Lords (notwithſtanding the Facts alledged in the Impeachments) are innocent of Danger to the King, when the Lord Jerſey and Mr. Secretary Vernon, who are reſpectively concerned in the Partition-Treaties, are permitted, without Complaint, to be at the Head of Affairs, and in the King's Preſence, and of his Councils, as not dangerous: That the Word Innocent, uſed in the Words ſpoken by the ſaid Lord Haverſham, can extend no farther than to ſuch Matters as were done by the Impeached Lords, of the ſame Nature with whae was done by thoſe Unimpeached. All which Facts being true, and the Conſequences obvious, the ſaid Lord being ready to prove the ſame; he inſiſts,

That the Words ſpoken by him at the ſaid Free Conference, were not ſcandalous or reproachful, nor falſe or reflecting on the Honour or Juſtice of the Houſe of Commons, but were ſpoken upon a juſt occaſion given, in anſwer to ſeveral Expreſſions that fell from the Managers for the Commons, remote (as he conceives) from the Matter in Queſtion, and reflecting on the Honour and Juſtice of the Houſe of Peers, and in Maintenance and Defence of the Lords Reſolution and Judicature, and conformable to the Duty he owes to the ſaid Houſe. And the ſaid Lord humbly demands the Judgment of this Honourable Houſe therein. And the ſaid Lord Haverſham denies, That he ſpoke the Words ſpecified in the ſaid Charge, in ſuch Manner and Form as the ſame are therein ſet down. And having thus given a true Account of this Matter, and it being true and indiſputable, That ſome Lords in this Houſe, equally concerned in Facts, for which other Lords are Impeached by the Houſe of Commons, are ſtill near the King's Perſon, in the greateſt Places of Truſt, and Honour, and unimpeached; and alſo, That ſeveral Members of the Houſe of Commons, equally concerned in the ſame Facts, for which ſome of the Lords are Impeached, do however remain unimpeached: The ſaid Lord thinks ſuch a Truth could never have been more properly ſpoken, in the Maintenance and Defence of your Lordſhips Judicature and Reſolutions. And inſiſteth, That what he ſaid at the Free Conference was not any ſcandalous Reproach, or falſe Expreſſion, or any ways tended to make a Breach in the good Correſpondence between the Lords and Commons, or to the interrupting the Publick Juſtice of the Nation, by delaying the Proceedings on the Impeachments; as in the ſaid Charge alledged, but agreeable to Truth, in Diſcharge of his Duty, and in the Defence of the undoubted Right and Judicature of this Houſe.

HAVERSHAM.

Ordered, That a Copy of the Lord Haverſham's Anſwer be ſent to the Houſe of Commons.

Then a Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons, by Sir John Francklyn and Sir Lacon William Child, to carry down a Copy of the aboveſaid Anſwer.

Die Veneris 20° Junij. 1701.

A Meſſage from the Houſe of Commons by the Lord Mordant and others. See Page 548.

Ordered, That the Committee appointed to conſider of the manner of Proceedings on Impeachments, do meet preſently and draw an Anſwer to this Meſſage.

The Earl of Stamford reported from the Lords Committees appointed to conſider of the Manner of Proceedings on Impeachments, the Anſwer drawn by them, in Anſwer to the Commons Meſſage this Day; which was read and agreed to as follows:

A Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons by Mr. Gery and Dr. Newton, to acquaint them,

" That in Anſwer to the Meſſage of the Houſe " of Commons of this Day, the Lords do acquaint " the Commons, That they might have known by " the Records of the Houſe of Lords, That the Lords " have proceeded to the Tryal of the Lord Somners, " on Tueſday laſt being the Day appointed; and " the Commons not appearing to maintain their " Articles againſt the ſaid Lord, the Lords have by " Judgment of their Houſe acquitted him of the " Articles of Impeachments againſt him, exhibited " by the Houſe of Commons, and all things therein " contained, and have diſmiſſed the ſaid Im- " peachment.

" And the Lords have appointed Monday next " for the Tryal of the Earl of Orford, on which " Day they will proceed on the ſaid Tryal.

" The Commons ſtill preſſing for a Committee " of both Houſes, (which the Lords never can con- " ſent to, for the Reaſons already given,) their " Lordſhips can infer nothing from their perſiſt- " ing in that Demand, than that they never de- " ſigned to bring any of their Impeachments to a " Tryal.

" As to the Lord Haverſham, his Anſwer is now " before the Houſe of Commons, and the Lords " reſolve to do Juſtice in that Matter.

Die Sabbati 21° Junij, 1701.

The Houſe being moved to conſider what is fit to be done, in Relation to the Charge of the Houſe of Commons againſt John Lord Haverſham, and after due Conſideration thereof, and the Lord Haverſham deſiring to be proſecuted, it was propoſed as follows,

That the Anſwer of John Lord Haverſham to the Charge ſent up againſt him by the Houſe of Commons, having been ſent down to that Houſe, It is reſolved by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, That unleſs the ſaid Charge ſhall be proſecuted againſt the ſaid Lord Haverſham with effect by the Commons, before the End of this Seſſion of Parliament, the Lords will declare and adjudge him wholly innocent of the ſaid Charge.

Die Lunæ 23° Junij 1701.

The Houſe reſumed the adjourned Debate upon the Printed Votes of the Houſe of Commons of the Twentieth tieth Inſtant. After Debate, It was propoſed declare, That the Reſolutions of the Houſe of Commons in their Votes of the Twentieth Inſtant, contain moſt unjuſt Reflections on the Honour and Juſtice of the Houſe of Peers, and are contrived to cover their affected, and unreaſonable Delays in proſecuting the Impeached Lords.

The Queſtion was put, Whether this ſhall be the Reſolution of the Houſe?

It was reſolved in the Affirmative.

I. It is reſolved by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, That the Reſolutions of the Houſe of Commons in their Votes of the Twentieth Inſtant, contain moſt unjuſt Reflections on the Honour and Juſtice of the Houſe of Peers, and are contrived to cover their affected and unreaſonable Delays in proſecuting the Impeached Lords.

The Proſecution and Tryal of Col. NICHOLAS BAYARD, in the Province of New-York, for High-Treaſon, Anno $170\frac{1}{2}$.

ON the 16th of January, 1701, Capt. John Nanfan, Lieut. Governor, and the Council, made the following Order, viz.

At a Council held at Fort William Henry, this 16th of January, 1701. Preſent the Honourable John Nanfan, Eſq; &c.

"IT is hereby ordered, That Alderman John Hutchins do appear before this Board to Morrow Morning, and then and there produce to the Board the Addreſs to his Majeſty, the Addreſs to the Parliament, and the Addreſs to the Lord Cornbury, which was Signed by ſeveral of the Inhabitants of this City, and Soldiers of the Gariſon, in his Houſe about three Weeks ſince, on the Penalty that ſhall thereon enſue.

By Order of Council, B. Coſens.

Whereupon Mr. Hutchins appeared, and for neglecting or refuſing to deliver up the ſaid Addreſſes, on the 19*th* of January was committed to the common Goal of the City of New-York, for the ſigning of Libels, ſaid to be againſt the Adminiſtration of the Government.

"THAT whereas by a Mittimus, bearing Date the 19th of January, 1701. Alderman " Hutchins ſtands committed for ſigning of Libels " ſaid to be againſt the Adminiſtration of the Go- " vernment; which pretended Libels we underſtand " to be an Addreſs to his Majeſty, another to the " Parliament, and another to my Lord Cornbury, " whom we underſtand by certain Advice we have " received from England, to be nominated by his " Majeſty to ſucceed the late Earl of Bellomont, as " our Governor; Copies of which (by ſaid Mitti- " mus) we find are expected from ſaid Hutchins, " and is Part of his Charge in the Commitment, " the Copies of which Originals (being in our " Hands or Cuſtodies) he cannot deliver: If there " be no further Crime to be alledged againſt him, " we hope to make good the Legality of the ſaid " Addreſſes, and pray that the ſaid Hutchins may be " releas'd from his Impriſonment, or be admitted " to Bail; and your Petitioners ſhall ever pray.

N. B. R. v. D. P. F. T. W.

Col. Bayard, and the other three Gentlemen, having perſonally delivered this Writing, and refuſing to ſurrender the Copies of the ſaid Addreſſes, had time given them, on their Parole, to appear next Day. And afterwards, the ſame Day, the Lieut. " 1*ſt*, That neither the Addreſs or Petition it ſelf, " or any Matter therein contained, is Criminal or " Illegal.

" 2*dly*, That the Refuſal of the Petitioners at the " Council-Board to produce the Copies (of certain " Original Addreſſes mentioned in their Petition) " owned by them to be in their Cuſtody, and by " their Petition alſo, is not ſuch a Contempt to the " Council, or other Offence againſt the Law, for " which the Petitioners may legally be committed.

Which Act of Aſſembly, mentioned in the Warrant of Commitment, followeth in theſe Words, viz.

An Act for the quieting and ſettling the Diſorders that have lately happened within this Province, and for the eſtabliſhing and ſecuring their Majeſties preſent Government againſt the like Diſorders for the future.

" FOraſmuch as the Good and Quiet, Eaſe, Pro- fit, Benefit and Advantage of the Inhabitants " within this Province, doth chiefly conſiſt in and

" altogether

" altogether rely and depend upon their bearing true " Faith and Allegiance unto their Majesties Crown " of England, which is, and can only be the Sup- " port and Defence of this Province. And whereas " the late hasty and inconsiderate Violation of the " same, by the setting up a Power over their Ma- " jesty's Subjects, without Authority from the " Crown of England, hath vitiated and debauched " the Minds of many People, &c. and hath also " brought great Waste, Trouble and Destruction " upon the good People of this Province, their Ma- " jesty's Loyal Subjects: For the Prevention whereof " in Time to come, be it therefore Enacted and Or- " dained by the Governor and Council, and Repre- " sentatives met in General Assembly, and it is " hereby Published, Declared, Enacted and Or- " dained by the Authority of the same, That there " can be no Power and Authority held and exer- " cised over their Majesty's Subjects in this their " Province and Dominion, but what must be de- " rived from their Majesties, their Heirs and Suc- " cessors. And we do hereby recognize and ac- " knowledge, That their Majesties William and " Mary are, and as of Right they ought to be by " the Laws of the Realm of England, our Liege " Lord and Lady, King and Queen of England, " France, and Ireland, and the Dominions there- " unto belonging, &c. That thereby their Princely " Persons are only invested with the Right to rule " this their Dominion and Province; and that none " ought or can have Power, upon any Pretence " whatsoever, to use or exercise any Power over " their Subjects in this Province, but by their im- " mediate Authority under their Broad Seal of their " Realm of England, as now establish'd.

" And be it further Enacted by the Authority " aforesaid, That whatsoever Person or Persons shall " by any manner of Way, or upon any Pretence " whatsoever, endeavour by Force of Arms or other- " wise, to disturb the Peace, Good, and Quiet of " this their Majesties Government, as it is now " established, shall be deemed and esteemed as Re- " bels and Traytors unto their Majesties, and incur " the Pains, Penalties, and Forfeitures, as the Laws " of England have, for such Offences, made and " provided.

Upon Col. Bayard's Commitment, the City Militia were by Beat of Drum called to Arms, and a whole Company daily appointed to guard the Prison for about a Week following, and Defaulters strictly punished; which was burdensome to the People, and occasioned great Clamour; whereupon it was taken off.

The Prisoners being informed, that a Special Commission was order'd for their speedy Tryal, petitioned the Lieutenant-Governor and Council, on the Sixth of February, in these Words.

To the Honourable John Nanfan, Esq; Lieutenant-Governor, &c. and the Honourable Council, &c.

The Humble Petition of Nic. Bayard and John Hutchins, Sheweth,

" THAT your Petitioners are very sensible of " the Favour intended them by your Ho- " nours, in appointing a Special Court for their " Tryal; that, in Consideration of their Age, they " might not be confin'd in a Prison till the ordinary " Time for meeting of the Supreme Court. But " the Papers being at present out of their Hands, " which they shall have Occasion for, in order to " make their Innocency appear, and not being like- " ly to get them in so short a Time as is prefix'd " for the said Tryal; your Petitioners humbly pray, " That they may not be obliged to come to Tryal " before the usual Sitting of the Supreme Court. " And your Petitioners shall ever pray, &c.

To which a verbal Answer was given to Col. Bayard's Son, That out of mere Grace the Court shou'd be deferred for Five Days.

On the 19th of February, the Commissioners sate, and published their Commission in these Words, viz.

" WILLIAM the Third, by the Grace of " God, of England, &c. To our loving " Subjects William Atwood, Esq; Abraham D'Peyster, " Esq; and Robert Walters, Esq; sendeth Greeting. And Proclamation being made in the usual manner, the Pannel of the Grand Jury was called over; those who appeared and were sworn, were

Johan. D'Peyſter, Forem.	Aryen Hogelant,
David Provooſt,	William Jackſon,
Martin Clock,	John Corbitt,
Leendert Huygen,	Johannis van Cortland,
Barent Reynders,	Caleb Cooper,
Johannis vander Spiegell,	John van Hoorn,
Johannis Outman,	Burger Myndero,
Hendrick Gilliſen,	Gerret van Hoorn,
Peter van Tillburgh,	Jacobus D'Key,
Johannis van Gieſen,	Abraham Kipp,
Abraham Keteltas,	Johannes van Santa.

Jacob Boelen and Johannes Hardenbrook did not then appear.

Before the Jurors were ſworn, the Council for the Priſoner objected againſt ſome of them, for declaring before ſeveral Witneſſes, then ready to be produc'd in Court, That if Bayard's Neck was made of Gold, he ſhould be hang'd; at the ſame time boaſting that they were of the Jury; and prayed, That ſince that Jury was ſummoned upon that Special Matter, ſuch might not be ſworn. Which the Court over-ruled.

Mr. Atwood, the firſt Commiſſioner, gave a long Charge to the Jury, aggravating the Facts ſuppoſed againſt the Priſoner, and poſitively aſſerting, That thoſe Facts were Treaſon not only within the Words of this Act of Aſſembly, but alſo by the Common Law before the Statute of the 25 of Edw. 3.

The Jurors having received the Charge, the Court adjourned till next Day.

The Court being met the 20th, the Indictment againſt Col. Bayard was delivered by the Court to the Grand Jury; and Mr. Weaver (appointed Sollicitor-General for this Service) attended them with the Proofs, and inſiſted to be preſent with the Grand Jury, and that no Perſon ſhould be ſent for, but whom he ſhould name; and that no Queſtion ſhould be aſk'd them, but ſuch as he ſhould approve of. On the other hand, John Corbitt, Caleb Cooper, John Cortland, and Jacob d Key inſiſted, that the King's Council ought not be preſent with them at their private Debates, and that they had a Right to ſend for what Perſons, and aſk what Queſtions for their Information they ſhould think needful. Whereupon Mr. Weaver did threaten them, and (to uſe his own Expreſſion) would cauſe them to be trounced, taking down their Names. And the Grand Jury broke up without acting.

The Court, in the Afternoon, met according to Adjourment; and the Grand Jury being ſent for, Mr. Weaver made Complaint, That he was obſtructed by ſome of the Grand Jury, who would not acquieſce to his being preſent at the Examination of the King's Evidence, and would have other Evidences ſent for than what were by him produced. And thereupon Mr. Atwood did diſcharge the aboveſaid Four Perſons from their further Service; and cauſed Jacob Boelen, who was abſent when the others were ſworn, to be ſent for from his Houſe, ſworn and added to the Grand Jury; and the Court adjourned till Seven a-Clock that Evening, but did not meet till about Midnight, when ſending to know if the Jury had found the Bill, and being informed they were ſeparated, he adjourn'd the Court till next Morning at Eight a Clock; and in the way from the Court, in Paſſion ſaid, [If the Grand Jury will not find a Bill againſt Col. Bayard, I will bring an Information againſt him of High-Treaſon, and try him upon that.]

February 21. The Court met, and the Grand Jury appearing in Court, the Indictment was brought in by the Foreman, endorſed Billa Vera, and ſigned with his Name. Upon which Mr. Atwood immediately diſcharged the Jury.

Whereupon the Council for the Priſoner informed the Court, that the Bill was not found by Twelve Jurors. And upon Examination it appeared to the Commiſſioners, that of ſuch of the Jurors who remained in Court, Eight of the Nineteen were againſt finding the Bill; as appears by the Minutes of the Court entred by Order, viz.

Jacob Boelen,	Johannis Van Santa,
Abraham Kipp,	William Jackſon,
John Van Hoorn,	Burger Myndero,
Gerret Van Hoorn,	Johannis Vanderſpiegel.

Which Eight importuned the Court, that the Foreman might be brought upon his Oath, and the reſt ſent for to witneſs the Truth, That they only found the Signing the Addreſſes, and not the Treaſon. To which Mr. Atwood made Anſwer, They were no longer Jurors; they had preſented the Bill, and the Court was poſſeſs'd of it; it was now a Record, and there is no Averment againſt a Record.

Ordered, The Priſoner come to Tryal on Monday next come Sevennight; to which Day the Court adjourned accordingly.

On Monday the 2d of March, the Commiſſioners met according to Adjournment.

Mr. Nicoll (Council aſſigned for Coll. Bayard) moved, that the Indictment might be quaſhed, not being found by Twelve Men. And to prove the Matter of Law, offered to produce Authorities; and to prove the Matter of Fact, offered to produce Evidences in Court, if either were inſiſted on, the Grand Jury being then by Subpœna in Court.

Mr. Sollicitor-General. What is moved in Behalf of the Priſoner, is moſt improper; foraſmuch as the Indictment is found, and ſigned by the Foreman Billa Vera, there can be no Averment allowed againſt a Record brought in by the Body of a Grand Jury; and therefore I deſire the Priſoner may be ſent for, and arraigned.

Mr. Nicoll. This is a Matter of great Weight and Moment; and concerns not only the Life and Fortune of the Priſoner and his Poſterity, but the Right of every Engliſhman in the Province: It is not only lawful, but highly reaſonable, that an Indictment for High-Treaſon ſhould be found by Twelve Men at leaſt. By the Statute 13 E. 1. W. 2. c. 13. reciting, that Sheriffs feigning many times certain Perſons to be indicted of Felonies and other Treſpaſſes, take Men not culpable nor lawfully indicted, and impriſon them.

" Whereas they were not lawfully indicted by " Twelve Jurors, it is ordained, That Sheriffs, " where they have Power to enquire of Treſpaſſes " by the King's Precept or by Office, ſhall cauſe " Inqueſts, &c. to be taken by lawful Men, and by " Twelve at leaſt, which ſhall put their Seals to " ſuch Inquiſitions. [Here it is obſervable, that there is twice legitimo modo in a few Lines.]

Coke Inſt. 2. Part 387. ſays, Two Things are provided, or rather declared by this Act:

1. Per legales homines ad minus duodecim faciant Inquiſitiones.

Coke Inſt. 1. fol. 126. The Indictment is defin'd an Accuſation found by an Inqueſt of Twelve or more upon their Oath.

Poulton de pace, &c. An Indictment of Treaſon, Felony, Treſpaſs, or any other Offence, is an Inquiſition taken and made by Twelve Men at leaſt.

Coke

Coke Inſt. 3. fol. 30. No Peer of the Realm, or other Subject, ſhall be convicted by Verdict; but the ſaid Offence muſt be found by above Four and Twenty, that is, by Twelve or above, at his Indictment, &c.

11 H. 4. 9. Inqueſts had been taken of Perſons named to the Juſtices, without due Return of the Sheriff; of which ſome outlaw'd before the ſaid Juſtices of Record, ſome fled to Sanctuary, &c. for Treaſon, ſome for Felony: Granted, that henceforth no Indictment be made by ſuch Perſons, but by Inqueſts of the King's lawful Liege People, in ſuch manner as was uſed in the Time of his Noble Progenitors; and if any Indictment be made hereafter in any Point to the contrary, that the ſame Indictment be alſo void, revoked, and for ever holden for none.

Crook Eliz. 654. Clyncard was indicted on the 8th of H. 6. the Record was ad Seſſionem Pacis, &c. per Sacramentum A. B. C. D. & aliorum legalium hominum in Comitatu prædicto preſentatus exiſſit, &c. And it appeareth not that it was per Sacramentum duodecim; for if it were preſented by a leſſer Number, it was clearly ill, therefore it was revers'd.

Mr. Atwood. There can be no Averment againſt a Record: If you can produce any Authority that it was ever allowed to make an Averment againſt a Record, and ſpeak to that Head, you ſhall be heard; but to go on upon this Head, Whether or no the Grand Jurors are or can be brought to reveal the Counſel which they are ſworn to keep ſecret, cannot be allowed.

Mr. Nicoll. The Grand Jury conſiſted of Nineteen Perſons, whereof Eight have openly in Court proteſted that they found no Treaſon.

Mr. Atwood. I have by me the Oaths of Two Men, That the Bills were found by Fourteen Billa Vera; they are ſo endors'd, have been publickly read in Court, and are of Record; for which Reaſon I nor no body elſe can enquire further of it.

Mr. Nicoll. This concerns the Subject's Life, and your Honour ought to be Council for the Priſoner; and if a Miſunderſtanding happens by the Ignorance of the Jurors, ſo that the Bill is returned contrary to their Intendment, the Priſoner ought to be aſſiſted.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray ſhew us any Authority, where an Averment has been offered againſt a Record?

Mr. Emot. May it pleaſe your Honour, I am joined with Mr. Nicoll as Council for the Priſoner. The Queſtion that now ſeems to lie before your Honour is, Whether there can be any Averment offer'd againſt a Record? There is an Act of Parliament of the 11th of H. 4. wherein it is enacted, That a Grand Jury ſhall conſiſt de bonis & legalibus hominibus: And ſo likewiſe runs the Tenor of the Writ of Venire; for want of ſuch Perſons, the ſame Statute does declare the Indictment void. So that it is a good Exception to an Indictment, to aver that any one of the Grand Jury was an Alien; which is Matter of Fact. How ſhall this Averment be made, if ſo be there be no Averment againſt a Record? And what Benefit has the Priſoner of this Act, unleſs an Averment be allowed againſt the Record of this Indictment, if it ſhould ſo happen that ſome of the Grand Jury are not ſo qualified as the Act requires? Which ſeems to me ſufficient Reaſon, that an Averment in the Caſe at the Bar, is good againſt a Record.

Mr. Atwood. The Statute gives the Particulars that may be averred, and no others can be allowed.

Mr. Emot. 'Tis very hard upon the Subject: The Court appoints the Foreman of the Grand Jury, and he may chance to be a Perſon prejudiced againſt the Priſoner, who may ſign and return the Bill Billa Vera, without the Conſent of his Fellows, or a ſufficient Number; and becauſe it's Matter of Record, ſhall no Averment be allowed againſt the Bill?

Mr. Atwood. A Grand Jury, in a certain Caſe, on an Indictment for Words ſpoken, found Billa Vera; but as to the malitioſe, Ignoramus; which made the Bill void: So in this Caſe, if the Jury, as to the Fact in the Indictment, had found Billa Vera, and as to Treaſon Ignoramus; the Bill had been void, and the Court muſt have taken notice of it. But to this Bill there is no Endorſement but Billa Vera: The Court has received and publiſhed the Verdict, and therefore will proceed.

Mr. Emot. But the Matter of Fact only appeared to the Jury; and when they underſtood the Bill to be laid treaſonable, they immediately objected againſt it.

Mr. Atwood. The Bill is found, and appears to the Court Matter of Record; ſo that you need not inſiſt any further upon that Head. A Grand Jury is an Inqueſt of Office, and an Inqueſt of Office may be found by a leſs Number than Twelve. Mr. Sheriff, bring your Priſoner to the Bar.

Mr. Nicoll. I have ſomething elſe to offer.

Mr. Atwood. Sheriff, ſtay a little.

Mr. Nicoll. I have a Second Objection in Behalf of the Priſoner; and it is, That the Juries ſhould have been returned by Precepts under the Hands and Seals of the Commiſſioners; which we underſtand was not.

This appears in Hale's Pleas of the Crown, pag. 134. Sir Edw. Coke's 4th Page of the Inſtitutes, Title Oyer and Terminer, ſays the ſame. There is a ſpecial Clauſe in the Writ of Oyer and Terminer, which ſays, We have commanded our Sheriff to ſummons, at ſuch Days and Places as you ſhall appoint, ſuch good and lawful Men, by whom the Truth may be the better known. How ſhall the Sheriff know thoſe Days and Places, but by the Commiſſioners Precept? And how ſhall the Truth be known, if the Grand Jury are permitted to have no other Evidence but what are brought ex parte Regis?

Mr. Sol. The Grand Jury are only to enquire for the King, and to receive or ſend for no other Evidence than what are brought for the King.

Mr. Nicoll. You may tell that to ſomebody elſe, not to me; that is contrary to their Oath, which is, That they ſhall diligently enquire, and true Preſentment make.

Mr. Atwood. All the Books ſpeak of the King's Evidence only, and agree that the Grand Jury may and ought to find upon probable Evidence, as appears in Babbington.

Mr. Emet. Sir Edw. Coke ſays, Part 4. of the Inſtitutes, Title Oyer and Terminer, That the Juries ought to be returned by Precepts under the Hands and Seals of the Commiſſioners. There is no Diſtinction made between the Grand Jury and the Petty Jury; ſo that the Venire's as well for one as the other, ought to have been under the Hands and Seals of the Commiſſioners.

Mr. Sol. When you had the Government, Dr. Staats had a Bill found againſt him by Eight Men of a Jury of Fifteen.

N. B. A private Perſon oppoſed the Aſſertion, but he was commanded Silence.

Mr. Nicoll. I never heard of it, nor believe it to be true; but that is not to be taken for a Precedent, were it true.

Mr. Atwood. Gentlemen you ſeem to miſtake the Lord Chief Juſtice Coke, where he ſays, There ſhall be 24 Peers upon the Arraignment of a Peer, &c. for if there be but 13 Peers, and the Majority agree to it, it is underſtood to be found by 12 of them.

There is ſomething in that which you offer, of the Precept being under the Hands and Seals of the Cnmmiſſioners in the Return of the Petty Jury; but this does not at all affect the Grand Jury: For which Reaſon, if you ſee Cauſe to move it, Time may be granted to mend that Miſtake. Is there nothing elſe you have to offer?

Mr. Nicoll. Nothing at preſent.

Mr. Atwood. Mr. Sheriff, bring the Priſoner to the Bar.

Which was done accordingly.

Clerk of the Crown. Nicholas Bayard, hold up thy Hand. You ſtand indicted, &c.

Clerk What ſay you, Are you Guilty, or Not Guilty of the Indictment?

Priſoner. Not Guilty. And puts himſelf upon God and the Country, &c.

Priſoner. I deſire I may be allowed Two Clerks to take the Minutes of the Tryal.

Mr. Atwood. No, you have a Solicitor allowed, he may take Notes; any other will not be ſuffered to do it.

Priſoner. I find it was allowed my Lord Ruſſel and others, to employ Clerks to take their Tryals: I pray the ſame Liberty.

Mr. Atwood. It was allowed my Lord Ruſſel, but you would not be willing to meet with the Hard- ſhips of his Tryal.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Perhaps the Council will not inſiſt upon the Miſtake of the Venire.

Mr. Nicoll. We ſhall not inſiſt on that.

Mr. At-

Mr. Atwood. But we will have it amended; and thereupon ordered a Precept to be directed to the Sheriff, under the Hands and Seals of the Commiſſioners, to return a Petty-Jury the 6th Inſtant; to which Day the Court adjourned.

March 6th. The Commiſſioners met. The Priſoner was brought to the Bar, and the Petty-Jury being called, conſiſting of Eighty, ſome of them did not appear. Whereupon it was ordered, that the Defaulters of the Petty-Jury be amerced Ten Pounds each, if they did not appear in the Afternoon, or ſhew a reaſonable Cauſe; and the Court adjourned till Three in the Afternoon, when they met again.

Mr. Sol. Gen. moved, That the Court might be adjourned till To-morrow Morning, the King's Evidence being diſguiſed with Drink, which was granted.

Mr. Nicoll moved, That it would be a Favour to the Priſoner to put off the Tryal till Monday.

Mr. Atwood. No, I will take care to do my Duty, whatever other People do. We ſhall not give Mr. Veaſy the Opportunity of another Sermon againſt us.

Mr. Veaſy was then Miniſter at New-York.

Mr. Atwood. I obſerve Mr. Jamiſon to have Pen and Ink. Mr. Jamiſon, you are not permitted to write.

Jamiſon. I only take Minutes for my private Satisfaction.

Mr. Atwood. 'Tis true, an Attorney or Practitioner of the Court may take Notes for his private uſe, but you are no longer an Attorney of this Court, nor ſhall you be permitted to practiſe, until you purge your ſelf of having ſigned the Addreſſes. Put up your Pen and Ink.

March 7. The Commiſſioners met, and the Attorney-General was called, but did not appear.

Mr. Atwood. Mr. Secretary, let a Minute be made, That it appears to this Court that the Attorney-General hath neglected his Majeſty's Service. It is no wonder the People here contemn his Majeſty's Authority; ſince the Attorney-General, tho' commanded to proſecute by the Government, hath neglected to do the ſame, and hath given a Judgment and Opinion directly contrary to the Lieut. Governor and Council.

Mr. Atwood. Sheriff, fetch the Priſoner. Which was done.

Mr. Secretary. Before we proceed, read the Petition which was given me this Morning by Col. Bayard's Son. Which was read in hæc Verba.

To the Honourable William Atwood, Eſq; Abraham D' Peyſter, Eſq; and Robert Walters, Eſq; Judges of this Special Court.

The Humble Petition of Nicholas Bayard, Sheweth,

"THAT your Petitioner's Council have informed him, that on Yeſterday they prayed, in the Petitioner's behalf, the Favour of this Court to prove before your Honours by the Oaths of the major Parts of the Grand Jury, there alſo ſubpœna'd in Court, that the Indictment brought in for High-Treaſon againſt your Petitioner by Capt. Johannes D' Peyſter (as being Foreman of the ſaid Grand Jury) was not found nor agreed to by any Twelve of that Jury, tho' the moſt Part of them (as is evidently known) are your Petitioner's mortal Enemies, for no other Cauſe, but on Account of the unhappy Diviſions within this Province. Which ſaid Prayer of your Petitioner's Council (as he is alſo informed) you Honours have been pleaſed to over-rule, as not being practicable by the common Form of Court's Proceedings. But, May it pleaſe your Honours, This being a Matter of that moment, whereof hardly a Precedent is to be found, as that a Foreman ſhall ſo far impoſe upon a whole Grand Jury, as to bring in an Indictment Billa Vera, which the ſaid Inqueſt did not find nor agree unto, neither in Matter nor Form: Your Petitioner therefore moſt humbly prays, that your Honours will be pleaſed to take the Premiſes into your Honours ſerious Conſideration, and to grant your Petitioner that Favour, as to have all the ſaid Nineteen of that Grand Inqueſt ſworn before your Honours, to diſcover the Truth, and to afford your Petitioner ſuch Relief therein, as to your Honours ſhall be thought moſt juſt and expedient. But if it ſhould ſo happen (as your Petitioner does not hope) that your Honours do not think fit to grant this your Petitioner's moſt humble Requeſt; your Petitioner further prays leave to acquaint your Honours with the exceſſive and almoſt unparallel'd Hardſhips your Petitioner, in this very Tryal, labours under. In the firſt Place, for that the Grand Jury, altho' your Petitioner had often prayed Mr. Sheriff that he might have the Favour and Juſtice of being tried by Engliſhmen, and of Engliſh Extraction, of the beſt Character for Knowledge, Integrity, Juſtice, Conſcience and Eſtates; yet notwithſtanding your Petitioner had not one allowed him of Engliſh, but all of them of Dutch Extraction and Education, and ſeveral of 'em ignorant to that degree, that they can neither write nor read, nor ſo much as underſtand the Engliſh Language; tho' ſufficient Numbers of Engliſhmen of very good Ability, Underſtanding, Integrity, Conſcience, and Eſtate, were to be had in the Bailiwick.

"And for a ſecond Inſtance of your Petitioner's Hardſhips, he finds now alſo a Petty Jury impanell'd to ſerve upon his Tryal, all of 'em except five or ſix, in like Manner of Dutch Extraction and Education, moſt of 'em handy-craft and labouring Men; very few that ever were of any Juries whatſoever, and extreme ignorant in the Engliſh Language.

Your Petitioner therefore moſt humbly prays, That your Honours will be pleaſed to take the Premiſes into your Honours favourable and ſerious Conſideration, and to afford your Petitioner ſuch Relief therein, as to your Honours in Juſtice and Equity ſhall think fit. And as in Duty bound, &c.

N. Bayard.

Mr. Atwood. Let a Minute be entred, that the Petition was read, and that it does appear to the Court that the Bill was found by more that Twelve of the Grand Jury.

Mr. Atwood. Col. Bayard, the Laws do indulge you with Council, did you adviſe with them concerning this Petition?

Bayard. No, I did not.

Mr. Atwood. 'Twere better you had; for you have acted very indiſcreetly in this Matter; to arraign the Juſtice of the Grand Jury.

The Jury being called, appeared.

Timon van Burſert. Priſoner accepts.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I challenge him for the King.

Mr. Emot.

Mr. Emot. You are not to challenge, Mr. Solicitor, without Cauſe, by the Statute 23 Ed. 1.

Mr. Sol. By the common Law the King could challenge without Cauſe, but by the Statute that was taken away; and in the late Tryal of Peter Cook it is ſaid by Lord Chief Juſtice Treby, That the King ſhould ſhew Cauſe, if not enough on the Pannel to ſerve, but not elſe.

Mr. Atwood. It is a Thing ſo plain, I wonder you will inſiſt on it.

Mr. Nicoll. We ſay the King ſhould ſhew Cauſe, but do not ſay when.

Gysber van Inbrough. Priſoner accepts.

Mr. Sol. Challenges for the King.

Gerryt Unckle. Priſoner accepts.

Mr. Sol. Challenges, &c.

William Janeway. Priſoner accepts.

Mr. Sol. Challenges, &c.

Iſaac Stoutenburgh. Priſoner accepts.

Mr. Sol. I don't challenge him, but deſire he may be ſworn on a Voire dire, whether any Perſon hath been with him on behalf of the Priſoner, to deſire him to be favourable to the Priſoner on this Tryal. [Who was ſworn upon a Voire dire, and afterwards for the Tryal.]

Richard Sacket. Priſoner. I make no Challenge.

Mr. Sol. I deſire to know whether I may not firſt have him ſworn upon a Voire dire, and afterwards challenge him?

Mr. Atwood. No, you muſt challenge peremptorily firſt.

Priſoner. I pray the Sollicitor may firſt make all his Challenges, and only leave me a Pannel of Forty-Eight Jurors.

Mr. Atwood. No, that muſt not be.

[Memorandum. The reſt of the Eighty Jurors in the Pannel were in like manner challenged by the Priſoner or Sollicitor, till the Number of Twelve were ſworn, viz. one of them an Alien, two no Freeholders, and all the reſt Dutchmen, or of Dutch Extraction born here, very ignorant of the Engliſh Language, and of mean Capacities to an extreme Degree.]

The Name of the Petty Jurors were as follows, viz.

Iſaac Stoutenburgh,	Barent Kool,
Jacobus Vanderſpiegel,	Goert Olpherto,
Andries Marſhalk,	Samuel Beekman,
Gerret Viele,	Cornelis Clopper,
Thomas Saunders,	Conrael Teneyck,
Jacob Corneliſſe,	Jacobus Goelet.

Mr. Sollicitor made an Introductory Diſcourſe and Harangue of about an Hour long, and had ſome Sheets of Paper in his Hand, out of which he read ſeveral ſcurrilous and falſe Reflections on the Engliſh Inhabitants of this Colony, with the French and principal Dutch, having Retroſpection for many Years paſt, only deſigned to incenſe and inflame the Jury, charging the Priſoner to be the Head of a Faction, a malignant Party, who had endeavoured to introduce Popery and Slavery, Diſturbers of our Iſrael, as they had been that of Capt. Leyſler's Government, which (he ſaid) was now juſtified at Home to be Legal; that the ſaid Party was a Neſt of Pirates, Betrayers of our Prince and his Laws, a Parcel of Banditti's, who had offered the late Earl of Bellamont a Reward of Ten Thouſand Pounds to connive at Piracies, and One Thouſand Pounds to himſelf to ſolicit it. That ſome mean and broken Merchants in London had made Complaints in their Behalf to the Lords of Trade and Plantations, and to the Parliament againſt the ſaid Earl, but that the ſaid Earl's Proceedings were approved of: And uſed ſcandalous Reflections on Mr. Veaſy the Miniſter of Trinity-Church, and againſt Col. Smith the firſt Member of Council, though nothing relating to this Tryal, and owned himſelf of the Leyſlerian Party, and that he would ſtand and fall by it, &c.

Then called his Witneſſes, who gave their Evidences in the following Words, as they were taken in open Court, and ſince agreed unto by all of them reſpectively, as followeth:

Samuel Clows ſworn, ſaith,

Gentlemen, When I come to ſpeak of the Addreſſes, I muſt pray you to take notice, that I can ſpeak poſitively to but very few Things that is in them; what I ſay is to the beſt of my Remembrance and Underſtanding; for I may be miſtaken in both. 'Twas about a Fortnight or three Weeks before Col. Bayard's Commitment, that I happened to come to his Houſe about ſome Buſineſs not at all relating to this Matter; concerning which, as we were talking, Col. Bayard ask'd me, if I had ſeen the Addreſſes? I anſwered, No. He then ſhewed me three Addreſſes, the firſt was to my Lord Cornbury, the Perſons addreſſing in it called themſelves Inhabitants of New-York, and others diſtant from it, and being ſome of them could not perhaps be preſent at his Lordſhip's Arrival here, did, by way of Addreſs, congratulate his Lordſhip into this Government, wiſhing him all Health and Proſperity here, and that the Name of Party might be baniſh'd from among us. After I had read it, Col. Bayard ask'd me if I had any Thing to ſay againſt it? I anſwered no, and then ſigned it. The other two Addreſſes were one to the King, and the other to the Houſe of Commons, or to the Parliament, (I am not poſitive which); as I had read them, I remember I made this Obſervation in my ſelf, that they contained nearly both the ſame Things; and in them, or one of them, to the beſt of my Remembrance, were contained theſe Things, The Perſons addreſſing called themſelves Engliſhmen, and others, who though Foreigners, yet entituled to the Privileges of Engliſhmen here. It ſpeaks concerning the late Revolution here, of which I have but a confus'd Idea, and can remember nothing particular; afterwards it ſpeaks concerning my Lord Bellamont's Adminiſtration, in ſeveral Articles, of which I can remember but one, which is, that the Hotteſt and Ignoranteſt of the People were put into Places of Truſt. Then it ſpeaks concerning the late Aſſembly here, and tells you, That after this Aſſembly had choſe a Speaker, ſome of the Repreſentatives were informed that he was an Alien; upon which they made a Motion to the Houſe, that that Matter might be enquired into; but that Motion being refuſed, one Half of the Repreſentatives, or Ten of them, left the Houſe; notwithſtanding which, the remaining Part of the Repreſentatives, with ſome others they took in, did proceed to make Acts; in one of which Acts they gave a Sum of Money to the Lieut. Governor, to tempt him to paſs theſe Acts; and likewiſe a Sum to the Chief Juſtice of this Province, to find Law and Form for their Proceedings; and that theſe Things tended to the rendring the Government vile and cheap in the Eyes of the People.

Sol. What Names do you remember you ſaw to the Addreſſes?

Clows. I ſaw ſeveral Names there, but whether to all Three or to Two of them, or only to that of my Lord Cornbury, I cannot ſay; but I did, to the beſt beſt of my remembrance, ſee the Names of Rip van Dam, Matthew Ling, Charles Wooley, Robert Livingſtone, and Mr. Anderſon; but I am not certain whether I ſaw Mr. Jamiſon's Name there or no. When I had read them, I told Col. Bayard they contain'd Things done before my time, and I did not therefore think it proper for me to ſign them; upon which he replied, then don't ſign them.

Mr. Sol. I ſhall read what you ſaid before the Council.

Clows. Do ſo, if you pleaſe.

Mr. Sol. Don't you remember that it was ſaid, that my Lord Bellamont had put the moſt ingenious and honeſteſt Men of the Province out of all Places of Truſt?

Clows. No, I cannot remember that.

Mr. Sol. I think you ſaid ſo before the Council.

Clows. Perhaps I might ſay ſomething like it when I was before the Council, though I don't believe there is any eſſential Difference between what I now ſay, and what I ſaid to the Council; yet if there be, I hope what I then ſaid will not be taken to my Prejudice: I was then ſent for by the Governor's Letters, which ſeemed to import that he had Buſineſs with me of a far different Nature than to examine me about this Matter, ſo that I was then in a Surprize.

Mr. Sol. But you believe what you then ſpoke was true.

Clows. Without doubt; and I hope Mr. Coſens took care truly to write down what I then delivered; but whether he did expreſs my Meaning right or no, I know not; for I did not look over his Notes till the Day I ſaw them at your Chamber.

Mr. Sol. Was not the Aſſembly called an Illegal Aſſembly? And that they had made Acts prejudicial to the Country.

Clows. No, I do not remember that.

Mr. Sol. Was it not ſaid, that the Scum of the People were put into all Places of Truſt?

Clows. Perhaps I might before the Council uſe the Word Scum, but I now think it was, that the Hotteſt and Ignoranteſt were put into Places of Truſt.

Mr. Sol. Mr. Clows, Pray tell us what was the Reaſon you did not ſign the other two Addreſſes?

Clows. I think I am not at this time obliged to tell that, being it does not at all affect the Matter.

Mr. Atwood. Yes but it does; you muſt tell us.

Clows. One of the chief Reaſons was, becauſe I then thought that the ſaying the Aſſembly had given a Gift to the Lieut. Governor to tempt him to paſs their Acts, was a Reflection upon the Lieut. Governor; but it is my Judgment now that it was no Reflection at all upon him.

Mr. Sol. How! And don't you think ſo now?

Mr. Atwood. He only ſpeaks it as his Judgment.

Mr. Sol. Don't you remember that the Aſſembly was called the Pretended Aſſembly?

Clows. No.

Mr. Sol. Don't you remember it was ſaid, their Illegal Proceedings? Don't you remember the Word Illegal?

Clows. No, I cannot remember that; and I did deſire you at your Chamber to put that Word out of the Clerk's Notes.

Col. Bayard. Did I ever ask you to ſign them?

Clows. No, you did not, you was ſo far from doing that, that you rather perſuaded me not to ſign them, and ſo did Madam Bayard who was then in the Room.

Mr. Nicoll. Do you remember any Thing of the Word Oppreſſion in the Addreſs?

Clows. No, I do not remember that Word.

Mr. Sol. That the King's Subjects were oppreſſed here?

Mr. Nicoll. Was the Aſſembly called an Unlawful Aſſembly?

Clows. No. Gentlemen, I can ſpeak poſitively to but few of theſe Things: What I ſay, is to the beſt of my Remembrance and Underſtanding.

Peter Odyre a Frenchman Sworn; and for that he could ſpeak no Engliſh, Mr. Brieſack Chaplain to the Gariſon was Sworn to be his Interpreter.

Mr. Sol. What do you know of the Papers that were at Col. Bayards; and did you ſign them, or who deſired you ſo to do?

Odyre. Going by Col. Bayard's Houſe, one Mr. Bodinot told me I muſt ſtep into Col. Bayard's, and ſign an Addreſs to the King; and as I was a going in, I met Col. Bayard coming forth of his Houſe; and going in I ſaw the Addreſſes lying on the Table.

Mr. Sol. Did Col. Bayard then perſuade you to ſign them, or did he tell you it was for your good to ſign them?

Odyre. Col. Bayard then told me, I might ſign if I would, or that I might not; and the Col. alſo told me it was for the good of the Country, and that if I was willing I might ſign them, if not I might let them alone, and then went away.

Mr. Sol. I will now prove the Addreſſes ſigned at the Coffee-Houſe, and that Col. Bayard attended there for that Purpoſe.

W. Richardſon, Inhabitant and Houſe-keeper in the City Sworn.

Mr. Sol. What do you know, Mr. Richardſon, concerning the ſigning the Papers at the Coffee-Houſe?

Richardſon. One Day drinking at one Spencers, I was deſired to go to the Coffee-Houſe, which I did; and when there, I ſaw a great many People, I believe near a Hundred; and coming above Stairs, I ſaw Papers on the Table, which were called Addreſſes, which I ſigned with others; and I ſaw among others Col. Bayard there, but he ſeemed to be no more acting or concerned than any other.

Mr. Atwood. You are very forgetful of what you ſwore before the Governor and Council; but to put you in Mind ſomewhat of it; Did no Body tell you what Papers were to be ſigned?

Richardſon. No Body at all.

Mr. Sol. How many Papers did you ſign?

Richardſon. I ſigned Three, but did not know what they were, but was told they were Addreſſes to the King and my Lord Cornbury, and the Parliament; but did not read any of them; but I think one of them complained that the People lay under ſome Hardſhips here.

Mr. Sol. You declared much more before the Council.

Richardſon. I was then called ſuddenly before the Council, and was ſurprized.

John Baſhford ſworn.

Mr. Sol. Mr. Baſhford, tell the Court and Jury what you know concerning the Papers at the Coffee-Houſe.

Baſhford. I was at the Coffee-Houſe, where I ſaw the Papers or Addreſſes, but don't know what they were or contained; and I ſigned Four or Five Papers there, but did not ſtay half a Quarter of an Hour. When I was there, I ſaw Col. Bayard amongſt many others in the Room, but did not ſee his Name as I remember, to any of the Papers.

[N. B. Theſe five Papers were the three Addreſſes, and the two Duplicates.]

Mr. Atwood. Theſe Witneſſes are very unwilling or very forgetful, having given a much different Account of Things upon their Oaths before the Governor and Council.

Baſhford. I have now had time to recollect my ſelf, but was then under a Surprize, not knowing what I was ſent for.

Mr. Michael Chriſtian ſworn.

Mr. Atwood. Mr. Chriſtian, What do you know concerning the Papers or Addreſſes ſigned at the Coffee-Houſe?

Chriſtian. I remember ſome time ſince, about Chriſtmas I believe, I was at the Coffee-Houſe, where I ſaw the Addreſſes with many other People, but can't tell how many.

Mr. Atwood. Do you believe there were more than Twenty?

Chriſtian. No, I believe there were not. I found three Addreſſes there, and ſigned them all, but the Subſtance thereof I cannot now remember; it is a good while ſince, and therefore cannot ſpeak poſitively to it. I remember a Queſtion was asked me at the Council, Whether there was any Complaints in the Addreſſes that the Soldiers wanted their Pay? I believe I might then anſwer ſomething about it, but I do not know any ſuch Thing in the Addreſſes, either of the Soldiers or their Pay. I remember that Col. Bayard was then at the Coffee-Houſe when I ſigned the Addreſſes, but don't remember that any Body deſired me to ſign.

Mr. Atwood. How many Hands, Mr. Chriſtian, did you ſee to the Addreſſes?

Chriſtian. I cannot tell how many, but remember Col. Bayard amongſt others was there; but he never asked me to ſign either of the Addreſſes, nor can I remember that there was any Thing concerning either the Soldiers or their Pay in the Addreſſes.

Mr. Atwood. Certainly theſe Gentlemen are very unwilling Evidences: Mr. Chriſtian is a Gentleman of good Learning, and it's ſtrange that he ſhould be ſo forgetful, that he cannot remember what was given in on his Oath before the Governor and Council; he has either a weak or treacherous Memory.

Mr. Hugh Gray ſworn.

Mr. Sol. Mr. Gray, What do you know concerning the ſigning of thoſe Papers at the Coffee-Houſe?

Gray. About December laſt being at the Coffee-Houſe, I met there one Mr. Scot, who asked me to go up into the Upper Room, which I accordingly did; and when there, I ſaw on the Table ſome Papers, which afterwards I underſtood were Addreſſes to the King, Parliament, and Lord Cornbury: Some Body asked me to ſign them, which I did accordingly, but don't know who it was. I remember Col. Bayard was there amongſt others, ſmoaking a Pipe of Tobaccco; I believe there might then be about Ten Hands to the Papers, and about Five in the Room; that I read all the Addreſſes, but cannot now remember the Contents of them.

Mr. Atwood. Mr. Gray, Do you remember there was any Complaints againſt the Government in thoſe Addreſſes?

Gray. No.

Mrs. Hannah Hutchins ſworn.

Mr. Sol. Now, May it pleaſe your Honours, I will prove the Papers ſigned at another Place.

Mr. Atwood. Mrs. Hutchins, What do you know concerning theſe Papers brought to your Houſe?

Mrs. Hutchins. About Chriſtmas laſt Col. Bayard brought ſome Papers to my Houſe, and left them with me, but did not ſtay at all, but bid me ſhew them to my Husband, who was then at Church; theſe Papers remained at my Houſe about Three Days, and then I delivered them to a Negro, who was ſent for them, but do not remember whoſe Negro it was: Col. Bayard was not at our Houſe while the Papers lay there.

Mr. Sol. Now I ſhall proceed to prove what ſort of People were drawn in to ſign theſe Papers.

John Read ſworn.

Mr. Atwood. What do you remember concerning any Addreſſes or Papers at the Houſe of Alderman Hutchins.

Read. Being on the 26th of December at Mr. Hutchins's Houſe, I there ſaw ſome Papers, which one Mr. Burroughs then preſent asked me to ſign, telling me they were Addreſſes to the King, Parliament and Lord Cornbury, made for the good of the Country, and which were lying on the Bed there; and thereupon I ſigned them, but did not read them; I did not ſee Col. Bayard there, but believe I ſaw his Name to the Papers. I ſaw a great Number of Names ſubſcribed to the Papers, as near as I can judge about Two Hundred.

Mr. Sol. Of what Age are you?

Read. About Seventeen Years of Age.

Edward Marſhal Sworn.

Mr. Atwood. Where did you ſee theſe Papers, and what do you know of them?

Marſhal. Going one Day about Chriſtmas to the Houſe of Mr. Hutchins, to get a Witneſs to a Letter of Attorney, I ſaw there Five Addreſſes which I ſigned; one was to the King, another to the Parliament, and another to the Lord Cornbury, congratulating his Arrival. I read ſome of them, but found nothing in any of them that reflected upon the Governor; there was ſome Complaint of the Speaker of the Aſſembly being an Alien. Looking on the Names of the Subſcribers, I ſaw the Name of Edward Marſhal before I had ſigned, but I don't know but there may be more Edward Marſhals than one in the Province. I did not ſee Col. Bayard at the Houſe, nor his Name to the Papers.

John Buckly Sworn.

Mr. Atwood. What do you know concerning any Papers at the Houſe of Mr. Hutchins?

Buckly. Coming home from the Fort, and paſſing by Mr. Hutchins's Houſe, I was asked to walk in by Mr. Hutchins, which I did; and being come into the Upper Room I ſaw ſome Papers there, which were called Addreſſes, but I did not read any of them, but that to my Lord Cornbury, which as I underſtood was a Compliment and Congratulation to him at his Arrival here. Mr. Hutchins then asked me to ſign it, but I refuſed it, becauſe being a Lieutenant in the Gariſon, I was unwilling to do any ſuch Thing before any of my Elder Officers had done it. But I did not ſee Col. Bayard nor his Name there.

Francis Cherman Sworn.

Mr. Atwood. Give an Account what you know concerning any Papers or Addreſſes at the Houſe of Alderman Hutchins.

Cherman. Coming a while ago to Mr. Hutchins's Houſe, and going up Stairs, I ſaw certain Papers there, and ſome People: Mr. Hutchins asked me to ſign thoſe Papers, telling me they were Addreſſes to the King and my Lord Cornbury; that they were for the Good of the Country and the Engliſh, and I expected by it to be made free of the City, and ſigned therefore; therefore; but did not ſee Col. Bayard there, nor don't remember the Contents of the Papers.

One Button Sworn.

Mr. Atwood. What do you know concerning theſe Papers, &c.

Button. Hearing by ſome of my Fellow-Soldiers that there were ſome Papers or Addreſſes at Capt. Hutchins's, I was willing to go and ſee what they were; and coming to the Houſe there I found Five Papers, and ſigned them all Five, but do not remember to whom they were directed. Capt. Hutchins was there, but ſaid nothing at all to me about the Papers or ſigning them; nor can I remember whether they were in Paper or Parchment. I believe there were then about Thirty Names ſubſcribed, but ſaw neither Col. Bayard nor his Name there.

i. e. The Three Addreſſes, and the Duplicates of two of them.

Robert Crannel Sworn.

Mr. Atwood. What do you know, &c.?

Crannell. Some time ſince I came to Mr. Hutchins's, and there found Five Addreſſes; I read that to my Lord Cornbury, and ſome of the Two others to the King and Parliament: In one of them, to the beſt of my remembrance, was contained a Complaint that the People of this Province lay under more Hardſhips than formerly, and that the Speaker of the Aſſembly of this Province was an Alien. I ſaw Col. Bayard's Name to that to my Lord Cornbury, but am not acquainted with his Hand-Writing at all. After I had read ſome Part, and been told what the reſt of the Papers were, I ſigned them all Five, but no Body deſired or perſwaded me to do it.

Mr. Atwood. Your Evidence is not ſo full as when you gave in your Information on Oath before the Council.

Crannel. But it is, and I know nothing more.

One Griggs Sworn.

Mr. Atwood. What do you know, &c.

Griggs. I was deſired by one Bovell a Soldier in the Gariſon, to go to Mr. Hutchins's Houſe, and ſign ſome Papers; I was told and believed it was to make me free of the City; thereupon I went to Mr. Hutchins's, and there ſigned them, but did not ſee Col. Bayard there.

One Garnet Sworn.

Mr. Atwood. Tell the Court what you know, &c.

Garnet. A great many of the Soldiers of the Gariſon ſigned, and they expected thereby to be made free of the City, many of them being Tradeſmen.

One Fleming Sworn.

Mr. Atwood. What do you know, &c.?

Fleming. Coming ſome time ſince to the Houſe of Mr. Hutchins, I there ſaw ſome Rolls opened, with a great many Names thereto, but did not ſee any other Writing, to this I put my Name, and alſo then put down two or three Names for others, at their Requeſt, they having firſt put their Marks: I and the others expected by this to be made free of the City. I believe out of 160 Men now belonging to the Fort, or thereabouts, there may be about Thirty that ſigned.

After the Addreſſes were full, they ſigned on the Back ſide.

One Bovell Sworn.

Mr. Atwood. What do you know, &c.?

Bovell. Coming to Capt. Hutchins's, I was ſhewn ſome Papers, which I was told were Addreſſes, to which I put my Mark, without being deſired by any Body; I cannot Write nor Read. When I had ſet my Mark, Mr. Hutchins told me, that if any of my Fellow Soldiers would come and ſign alſo, they might; if not, they might let it alone. By this ſigning I expected to be made free of the City, but not from being a Soldier; but never heard Capt. Hutchins ſay ſo.

Mr. Sol. I have now no more Witneſſes againſt the Priſoner. Here is a Paper ſigned by him, I deſire the Clerk of the Council may be ſworn to prove the ſame.

Mr. Coſens the Clerk of the Council Sworn.

Col. Bayard. I own that Paper, It is a Petition to the Lieut. Governor and Council in Behalf of Alderman Hutchins then in Priſon; owning, with Mr. French, Mr. Wenham, and Mr. Van Dam, that the Copies of the three Addreſſes to the King, the Parliament, and the Lord Cornbury, were in our Hands.

Then the Petition was read, and was the ſame as is Enter'd in Pag. 554.

After this, the Act of Aſſembly on which the Mittimus is grounded, was read. And after that, the Commiſſion to the Lord Bellamont at large, and the Lieut. Governor's Commiſſion.

Mr. Sol. I deſire Mr. Emot may be ſworn, whether he did not give Advice to a certain Perſon about that Clauſe in the Addreſs to the Lieut. Governor in Favour of Alderman Hutchins, viz. That the Lord Cornbury ſucceeded the Earl of Bellamont as Governor in New-York.

Mr. Emot was commanded by Mr. Atwood to be ſworn; and being ſworn, ſaid, I told Mr. French theſe Words in the ſaid Addreſs did not run current, and might give ground of Exception to ſome who would be apt to ſtrain every Word to the Priſoner's Diſadvantage. To which Mr. French replied, They had drawn the Addreſſes themſelves, and believed it was well enough.

Mr. Sol. I have now proved by the Witneſſes thoſe falſe and ſcandalous Libels ſet forth in the Indictment, whereby the Good, Peace and Quiet of the Government has been diſturbed, which by this Act of Aſſembly is High-Treaſon. I have likewiſe proved that the Soldiers were drawn in to ſign thoſe ſcandalous Libels, and that ſome did ſign blank Rolls, which was liſting of Soldiers, and is Treaſon. By theſe Words in the Petition to the Lieut. Governor and Council, viz. [Who we underſtand by certain Advice we have received from England, to be nominated by his Majeſty to ſucceed the late Earl of Bellamont as our Governor] is a diſowning and caſting off the preſent Authority, and his Majeſty's Government.

Mr. Nicoll. Your Honour and the Jury will pleaſe to take Notice that the Indictment conſiſts of divers Heads, as, That the Priſoner did compaſs, imagine, contrive, purpoſe and deſign to deſame, ſubvert, &c. the Peace, Good and Quiet of this his Majeſty's Government.

That he uſed divers indirect Practices and Endeavours to procure Mutiny and Sedition amongſt the Soldiers.

That he drew in Numbers of them the ſaid Soldiers and others, to ſign falſe and ſcandalous Libels; and that he had ſigned them himſelf.

That in theſe Libels it is declared, That the Subjects in this Province are and have been for many Years laſt paſt, by thoſe entruſted in the Adminiſtration of the Government, oppreſs'd; and that the Government hath been and is rendred cheap and vile in the Eyes of the People; as alſo that the General Aſſembly of this Province is not a lawful Aſſembly:

By which means, &c. he hath incited his Majeſty's Subjects to caſt off their Obedience to his Majeſty's ſaid Government.

The Priſoner is not directly charged here with any Fact, except his own ſigning the ſaid Libels, but for Endeavours; the reſt are forc'd Concluſions and ſtrain'd Inferences drawn from thence. It is not alledged, that the Peace of the Government hath been diſturbed, or that any Mutiny or Sedition hath been amongſt the Soldiers, or that any one of his Majeſty's Subjects hath caſt off his Obedience to his Majeſty's ſaid Government. By the Courſe of the Evidence, it appears there was an Addreſs to the King, an Addreſs to the Houſe of Commons, and an Addreſs to my Lord Cornbury, and a Petition or Addreſs to the Lieutenant-Governor and Council; but all the Evidence is very lame and weak, as to the Three firſt. If we ſhould admit the making or ſigning of them to be any Fault or Crime, more eſpecially if the ſame ſhould amount to Treaſon: For by none of the Evidence it does appear, that thoſe Addreſſes ſigned at the Coffee-houſe were the ſame Addreſſes which were at Col. Bayard's, or that the Addreſſes at Alderman Hutchins's were the ſame which were at the Coffee-houſe, or the ſame which were at Col. Bayard's: There is no Proof that the Priſoner ſigned theſe Addreſſes: Here is not ſo much as the Likeneſs or Compariſon of Hands produced, alledged, or proved; tho' if it were, that would not do. In the great Tryal of the Biſhops, Mr. Pollexfen there affirms, p. 60. That Compariſon of Hands is not good in a criminal Caſe; and offers the Lady Car's Caſe in Siderfin's Reports, p. 418, 419. where it is ſo adjudged.

But I ſhall not dwell upon the Evidence; it is certainly the Right of the Subject to petition the King, whenever he conceives himſelf aggriev'd. In the Biſhops Tryal, p. 160. Mr. Pollexfen ſays, I never thought it, nor hath it ſince been thought by any body elſe, to be a Crime to petition the King. Pag. 121. Serjeant Levinz affirms, The Subjects have a Right of petitioning the King in all their Grievances. So ſay all our Books of Law; ſo ſays the Statute of the 13th of Charles 2. They may petition. Pag. 126. Sir Thomas Powis, then Attorney-General, acknowledges Acceſs to the King by Petition is open to every body; the moſt inferior Perſon is allowed to petition the King. Pag. 135. Mr. Juſtice Holloway ſays, It's the Birthright of the Subject to petition the King. If it's the Birthright of the Subject to petition the King, to procure or draw in Men to do what it's their Birthright to do, can never amount to a Crime.

Mr. Atwood. I do not ſay Petitioning the King is a Crime, but it may be to petition the Houſe of Commons in the Plantations, where the King governs by his Prerogative.

Mr. Nicoll. I cannot think it a Crime, for the Subjects of the Plantations to petition the Houſe of Commons; it's every Day's Practice: Conſult the Votes in every Seſſions, you'll find many Addreſſes, Petitions, and Complaints from the Subjects of the Plantations: It ſeems to be the Right of the Subjects to petition the Houſe of Commons. The Statute of the 13th of Charles the 2d, c. 5. reſtrains the Common Law; by that it plainly appears to be the Right of the Subject to petition the Houſe of Commons, or the King. The Proviſo in that Act ſays, That neither that Act, nor any thing therein contained, ſhall be conſtrued to extend or hinder any Perſon or Perſons, not exceeding the Number of Ten, to preſent any publick or private Grievance or Complaint to any Member of the Houſe of Commons after his Election, or to the King's Majeſty. The Act of Recognition of primo William and Mary, declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subjects, and ſettling the Succeſſion of the Crown, thereby it is enacted amongſt other Things, That it is the Right of the Subject to petition the King; and all Commitments and Proſecutions for ſuch Petitioning are illegal. And they do claim, demand, and inſiſt upon all and ſingular the Premiſes, as their undoubted Rights and Liberties; and that no Declaration, Judgment, Doings or Proceedings to the Prejudice of the People, in any the ſaid Premiſes, ought in any wiſe hereafter to be drawn into Conſequence or Example. Here is no Grant of any new Privilege, but a Claim and Acknowledgment of an Ancient Right; and Petitions to the Parliament are as ancient as Parliaments themſelves. If the Subjects of the Plantations may not petition and complain to their Prince, they are in a worſe Condition than Slaves. The Cries of the Oppreſſions in the Plantations have gone up to Heaven, and are again come down upon the Earth, and have inſpired and moved the King and Parliament of England, to make a Law to check the exorbitant Actions of Governors in the Plantations, and make them accountable in England for their Miſcarriages abroad; which can never be diſcovered to the King but by Petition. The Statute is in theſe Words:

An Act to puniſh Governors of Plantations in this Kingdom, for Crimes by them committed in the Plantations.

'WHereas a due Puniſhment is not provided 'for ſeveral Crimes and Offences committed out of this his Majeſty's Realm of England; 'whereof divers Governors, Lieutenant-Governors, 'Deputy-Governors, or Commanders in Chief of 'Plantations and Colonies within his Majeſty's Dominions beyond the Seas, have taken Advantage, 'and have not been deterred from oppreſſing his 'Majeſty's Subjects within their reſpective Governments and Commands, nor from committing ſeveral other great Crimes and Offences, not deeming themſelves puniſhable for the ſame here, nor 'accountable for ſuch their Crimes and Offences to 'any Perſon within their reſpective Governments 'and Commands: For Remedy whereof, Be it enacted by the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty, by and with the Advice and Conſent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons in Parliament aſſembled, and by Authority of the ſame, That if 'any Governor or Commander in Chief of any Plantation or Colony within his Majeſty's Dominions 'beyond the Seas, ſhall, after the Firſt Day of Auguſt, 1700, be guilty of oppreſſing any of his Majeſty's Subjects beyond the Seas, within their reſpective Governments or Commands, or ſhall be 'guilty of any other Crime or Offence, contrary to 'the Laws of this Realm, or in force within their 'reſpective Governments and Commands, ſhall be 'enquired of, heard and determined in his Majeſty's Court of Kings-Bench here in England, or 'before ſuch Commiſſioners, and in ſuch County of 'this Realm, as ſhall be aſſigned by his Majeſty's 'Commiſſion, and by good and lawful Men of the 'ſame County; and that ſuch Puniſhments ſhall be 'inflicted on ſuch Offenders, as are uſually inflicted 'for Offences of the like Nature committed here 'in England.

This

This Profecution ſeems to be made to fruſtrate and evade this Act of Parliament. The Subject is oppreſs'd, or conceives himſelf to be ſo, and complains of this Oppreſſion; this complaining is made TREASON! Here is a ſtrange and fatal Dilemma on the Subjects of the Plantations: They muſt either ſuffer their Oppreſſions, or be hang'd for Traytors if they complain!

What relates to the Act of Aſſembly of this Country, it can by no natural or legal Conſtruction be extended to make the Priſoner culpable. It is plain by the whole Purport of the Act, that it has made no new Treaſon; it only recognizes the King and Queen; and enacts, That thoſe who ſhall do any thing deſtructive to that Eſtabliſhment, by Force of Arms or otherwiſe, ſhall be Rebels and Traitors; which they would be without this Act. If this Addreſs and Petition had been to the French King, the Thing had been of another Nature. By the ſame Conſtruction every petty Battery, or other little Treſpaſs, may be a Treaſon.

The Petition of Col. Bayard, and the other Three, is ſo far from diſowning the Government, that it is a direct acknowledging of the ſame. The Direction of the Petition is, To the Lieutenant-Governor, and the Council: The Expreſſion (That they have Advice that the Lord Cornbury is to ſucceed the Earl of Bellamont) can with no Juſtice or common Senſe be conſtrued to be a diſowning and caſting off of the Government. I think it will hardly be affirmed, that the Council ſucceeded the Earl of Bellamont, and Captain Nanfan the Council; if ſo, after the Earl of Bellamont, who was Captain-General? We had Seven Captains-General; which is an Abſurdity I ſuppoſe none will alledge. A familiar Example will demonſtrate the Weakneſs and Falſity of this Conſtruction: If a Captain of a Company be killed or abſent, the Lieutenant or next Officer has the full Command of the Company, as the Captain had, or could have; but I think no Man will ſay he ſucceeds the Captain, or that when another Captain is appointed, he ſucceeds that Lieutenant or other Officer. So that I cannot think there is any Fact or Crime alledged or proved againſt the Priſoner, to charge him with this high Crime of Treaſon, or indeed with any other Crime whatſoever.

Some time after the E. of Bellamont's Death, Capt. Nanfan, the Lieut. Governor, was at Barbadoes.

Mr. Emot. By your Honours Permiſſion, I am of Council for Col. Bayard the Priſoner at the Bar: But by reaſon I am unwilling to ſpend too much of your Time, this Tryal already having been very long; and Mr. Nicoll, who is alſo of Council of the ſame Side, having amongſt other things made it very evident, that for the Subject to petition his Majeſty, is their ancient and undubitable Right;

I ſhall therefore make it my Buſineſs only, as near as I can, to demonſtrate to this Court and Jury, That had the King's Council made ample Proof of all the Matters of Fact alledged in the Indictment, as the ſigning the Addreſſes, and other Things therein contained, to have been true; yet, in point of Law, they cannot amount to that Grand Crime of High-Treaſon.

In order to this, I ſhall, with as much Brevity as I can, examine into, and put your Honours in mind, and withal inform the Gentlemen of the Jury, what the Law of England (by which we are, or ought to be govern'd here) hath been, for near the Space of Four Hundred Years laſt paſt, relating to this Grand Crime of High-Treaſon; whereby it will manifeſtly appear, how cautious the Parliaments of England have been in making and increaſing the Laws to take away Mens Lives, and particularly for High-Treaſon. And I ſhall begin with the Statute of the 25th of Edw. 3. a Statute to which the greateſt Regard has been paid of any Act of Parliament whatſoever, unleſs Magna Charta, as hereafter I ſhall briefly ſhew.

I muſt alſo obſerve to your Honours, that before the making of this Act of Parliament of the 25th of Edw. 3. which was in Anno 1350, and which was the very firſt Act relating to Treaſons, ſo many Things were charged as High-Treaſon by the Common Law, and there were ſo many Ambiguities and Diverſities of Opinions, that both Hiſtory and our Books of the Law ſufficiently inform us, ſcarce any Man knew how to behave himſelf. But now, by this Statute, the Particulars and Species of this Grand Crime are reckoned up, and all others excluded, till declared by Parliament. For tho' nothing can concern the King, his Crown and Dignity, more immediately than High-Treaſon, which our Law calls Crimen læſæ Majeſtatis, a Crime wronging Majeſty; yet this good King Edward III. at the Requeſt of the Lords and Commons of England, in a Parliamentary Way, and to make all After-Ages happy, makes a plain Declaration of ſuch Offences as ſhould for the future be deem'd for High-Treaſon, and none other, unleſs declared by Parliament.

This Act of Parliament is branch'd out by Sir Edward Coke, in the Third Part of his Inſtitutes, into Six Claſſes or Heads; which I ſhall the rather take notice of, for that Tryals of this Nature are very rare in the Plantations; and they are theſe:

1. The Compaſſing or Imagining the Death of the King, Queen or Prince, and declaring the ſame by ſome Overt-Act.

The Killing or Murthering of the Chancellor, Treaſurer, Juſtices, &c. in their Place doing their Office, &c.

2. To violate, or carnally to know the King's Conſort or Queen, the King's Eldeſt Daughter unmarried, or Prince's Wife.

3. Levying of War againſt the King.

4. Adhering to the King's Enemies, and declaring the ſame by ſome Overt-Act; and this muſt not be Inimicus, ſed Hoſtis.

5. Counterfeiting of the Great Seal, Privy Seal, or King's Coin, &c.

6. And Laſtly, Bringing into the Realm Counterfeit Money, to the Likeneſs of the King's Coin, &c.

Now, if there is any other Offence which was not comprehended within one of theſe Claſſes, the ſame was thereby declared to be no Treaſon.

In a Clauſe of which Act of Parliament we find theſe Words; which I ſhall the rather read, becauſe I apprehend it will very much concern this enſuing Tryal.

" And becauſe that many other like Caſes may " happen in Time to come, which a Man cannot " think or declare at this preſent Time, it is or- " dained, That if any other Caſe, ſuppoſed Trea- " ſon, which is not above ſpecify'd, do happen be- " fore any Juſtices, the Juſtices ſhall tarry, without " any going to Judgment of the Treaſon, till the " Cauſe be ſhewed and declared before the King " and his Parliament, whether it be judged Treaſon " or other Felony.

By this we may eaſily perceive, and it's very obvious, that this Clauſe was made to prevent the Judges from taking upon them to declare any things to be High-Treaſon, but ſuch as are particularly expreſs'd by this Statute of the 25th of Edw. 3. or by ſome other ſubſequent Act.

Again, in the Reign of Richard II. we find ſundry other Things were declared by Parliament to be High-Treaſon, which were not comprehended within the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. But yet upon the coming in of Hen. 4. it was again enacted and declared, That nothing ſhould for the future be adjudged High-Treaſon, but what was ſo ordained by the aforeſaid Statute 25 Edw. 3. The Words are theſe:

1 H. 4. c. 10. " That whereas in Parliament, in " the 21ſt Year of the late King Richard, divers " Pains of Treaſon were ordained by Statute, inaſ- " much as there was no Man who knew how he " ought to behave himſelf, to do, ſpeak or ſay, for " doubt of ſuch Pains; it's accorded and aſſented " by the King, Lords and Commons, That in no " Time to come, any Treaſon be adjudged other- " wiſe than it was ordained by the Statute, in the " Time of his Noble Grandfather King Edw. 3.

Now this Statute, I am humbly of Opinion, is directly in the Negative, which ſays, That for the future nothing ſhall be adjudged Treaſon, otherwiſe than it was ordained by the aforeſaid Statute of the 25th of Edw. 3.

Yet nevertheleſs, this Indictment is grounded upon an Act of Aſſembly of this Province; which is, I am humbly of Opinion, not only contrary, but directly repugnant to the aforeſaid Statute, (which appeareth to me to limit all new Species of Treaſon to be declared in Parliament, and not elſewhere) which, if it ſhould admit of ſuch a Conſtruction as is now intended, I think I may modeſtly ſay, it will introduce Five Hundred ſeveral new Species of Treaſon: So that his Majeſty's good Subjects of this Province would fall under much greater Hardſhips than whatever the People of England were ſenſible of before the making of this Act (which I cannot too often mention) the 25th of Edw. 3.

If we look further downward, upon the coming in of Edw. 6. which was in the Year 1546, ſundry new Species of Treaſon having been again introduced by Act of Parliament, it was in the very firſt Year of his Reign enacted, That no Offence made Treaſon by any Statute, ſhould be ſo deemed and adjudged for the future, but ſuch as were made Treaſon by the aforeſaid Statute of 25 Edw. 3. other than ſuch as were by that preſent Statute ordained and declared.

But yet in Queen Mary's Time, in the firſt Year of her Reign, this grand Crime was brought to its Ancient Standard; and it was then declared in Parliament, That no Act nor Offence whatſoever ſhould be deemed Treaſon or Miſpriſion of Treaſon, but ſuch as were declared by the Statute 25 Edw. 3. And the Subſtance of the Preamble is this, That the State and Safety of the King ſtandeth more aſſuredly by the Love of his Subjects, than Fear of his Laws.

So that upon Examination, we find how careful and cautious the People and Parliament of England have been in introducing and increaſing of Sanguinary Laws, and that through the Revolution of many Ages. And hereby it's very remarkable, what a great Regard has been in all Ages paid to this venerable Statute of 25 Edw. 3. which with great Care has been continued down to us to this very Time, and is now in its full Force. Sir Edward Coke, treating thereof, tells us, That the Parliament in which this Act was made, for many Years after was called, Benedictum Parliamentum, the Bleſſed Parliament.

If we look but into the Bill of Attainder of Thomas Earl of Strafford, in the Year 1640 and 41, even in thoſe Times, what Regard was paid to this Statute, which I have ſo often mentioned, wherein it was provided, That the Judgment againſt the ſaid Earl ſhould never be drawn into Precedent: And the Words are theſe, " Provided, That no Judge or " Judges, Juſtice or Juſtices whatſoever, ſhall ad- " judge or interpret any Act or Thing to be Treaſon, " nor hear or determine any Treaſon in any other " manner, than he or they ſhould or ought to have " done before the making of this Act.

Now, if we do but reflect upon the great Concern and Care that has been taken through all Ages, by the wiſe People of England, in preventing the Judges from interpreting any Act or Thing whatſoever to be Treaſon, but ſuch only as are enumerated in the Statute 25 Edw. 3.

And at the ſame time give our ſelves leave to think, how induſtriouſly we labour to introduce an Act of Aſſembly of this Province, to make, as I ſaid before, even Five Hundred new and never-heard-of Species of Treaſon: I ſay, if we do but conſider this, 'tis Matter of great Amazement, and more eſpecially in ſuch an Age as this, and in ſo happy a Reign, where no Man ever queſtioned, or at leaſt doubted of the true Enjoyment of our Laws and Liberties, tho' never ſo remote from the Fountain Head.

I am afraid, I have already treſpaſſed upon your Honours Patience; I ſhall therefore conclude with ſome Obſervations upon the Act of Aſſembly, upon which this Indictment is laid.

Now both the Title, Preamble and Words of this Act of Aſſembly, and the Cauſe of making thereof, is very obvious, (however the ſame may be now interpreted) which were theſe Two:

1ſt, For the future, to prevent the ſetting up a Power over his Majeſty's Subjects in this Province, without Authority from the Crown of England; which was found to be of fatal Conſequence in the late unhappy Diſorders in this Province.

2dly, To expreſs the Love, Loyalty and hearty Affection of the People to their Majeſties King William and Queen Mary; and as far as in them lay, to recognize them their Sovereign Liege Lord and Lady. I doubt not but your Honours will ſee Cauſe to recommend the ſame to the Jury, in delivering the Charge: And that no ſtrain'd Conſtruction of this Act of Aſſembly can ever affect the Priſoner Col. Bayard, or in the leaſt blaſt his long-experienc'd Loyalty to the Crown of England, and in a ſpecial manner to his preſent Majeſty King William.

I had almoſt forgot to beg Leave of the Court to apply my ſelf to the Gentlemen of the Jury, to obviate ſome Objections, or rather a vulgar Error that uſually hath crept in amongſt them upon Tryals, and particularly upon Indictments; which is, they do believe,

That if the Matters of Fact alledged in the Indictment be but proved, they are to have no Regard to Mattter of Law: Which I take to be a very great and dangerous Error in them.

For tho' it be true, and muſt be granted, that Matters of Fact are the moſt common and proper Object of a Jury's Determination, and Matters of Law that of the Judges; yet as Law ariſeth out of, and is interwoven and complicated with Fact, it cannot but fall under the Jury's Conſideration. For, ſhould it

it be otherwiſe, if a Perſon ſhould be indicted for doing any common, innocent or lawful Act, if it be but cloathed and diſguized in the Indictment with the Name of Treaſon, or ſome other high Crime, and proved by Witneſſes to be done, then the Jury would lie under a Neceſſity of finding the Priſoner Guilty. No:

Do we not find in moſt general Iſſues, upon Not Guilty pleaded, as upon Indictments of Treſpaſſes, Breach of the Peace, Felony, and even in Caſes of High-Treaſon; yet the Jury do not find the Fact of the Caſe by it ſelf, leaving the Law to the Court, but find the Party Guilty, or Not Guilty.

And this will more evidently appear upon Indictments of Murder, that the Jury are Judges as well of Matter of Law as of Fact. For is it not every Day's Practice, where Perſons are indicted of Murder? The Jury doth not only find them Guilty or Not Guilty; but many Times upon hearing and weighing of Circumſtances, the Jury brings in the Priſoner not only Guilty or Not Guilty in general, but brings them in either Guilty of Murder, or Manſlaughter by Miſadventure, or Se Defendendo? &c.

So the Jury being well apprized of the true Matter of Fact, of which they are ſole Judges, can better apply the Matter of Law; for, ſays my Lord Cook, It is by fitly applying Matters of Fact and Law together, that the Jury brings forth their Verdict; which I hope you Gentlemen of the Jury will carefully do.

Priſoner. I deſire ſome of my Evidences may be called to give an Account of my Life and Converſation. Which was granted.

Mr. Veaſy, Miniſter of Trinity-Church, being ſworn, ſaid, I have been for ſix Years perſonally acquainted with Col. Bayard; during which Time his Life and Converſation recommended him in to World as an Exemplary Chriſtian. And the frequent Expreſſions of his Zeal and Affection to his Majeſty's Perſon and Government, convinced me that he was a good Subject.

Priſoner. Call Capt. John Kipp. Who being called, was abſent.

Call Capt. Tudor.

Tudor ſworn, ſaid, I have known Col. Bayard 26 Years, a moderate, civil, good Man, has been employed in almoſt all Offices of the greateſt Truſt in the Government, never diſaffected, but ſtood up for the Proteſtant Religion and King William.

Priſoner. To prove that I have upon ſundry Emergencies, during the late War, advanced of my private Fortune upon Loan without Intereſt, ſeveral conſiderable Sums of Money, for the Preſervation of his Majeſty's Intereſt and Government in New-York, of which upwards of 200 l. Money in Specie lent, is ſtill unpaid; I deſire Mr. Famiſon, who was then Clerk of the Council, may be ſworn.

Famiſon being called, appeared ——

Mr. Atwood. Mr. Famiſon has refuſed to purge himſelf of ſigning thoſe Addreſſes, and is Particeps Criminis, for which Reaſon he cannot be allowed to be an Evidence.

The Evidence being ſworn and examined, the Solicitor-General, without anſwering the Authorities offered by the Priſoner's Council, relating to the Treaſon, ſumm'd up the Evidence, as to Matter of Fact.

Mr. Atwood gave the Charge to the Jury, in a long Diſcourſe; and among other Things inſiſted, That the Indictment was not laid upon the Act of 25 E. 3. nor any Act of Parliament, but upon an Act of Aſſembly of this Province, confirmed by his Majeſty, which had Power to make Acts for High-Treaſon, as well as the Parliament of England; and that the ſaid Statute was confined to England, becauſe by the ſaid Statute it is enacted, That if any Doubt ſhould ariſe, the ſame be adjourned unto Parliament, which muſt be underſtood of the Parliament of England.

That it is High-Treaſon by the Act of Aſſembly, by any Manner of Ways, or upon any Pretence whatſoever, by Force of Arms, or otherwiſe, to diſturb the Peace, Good and Quiet of the Government, as it is now eſtabliſhed; which he ſaid was proved by Overt Acts laid in the Indictment; which were by ſigning of Libels againſt the Government, and thereby enticing the People to caſt off and diſown the ſame; and chiefly by the Soldiers ſigning Complaints againſt their chief Officers, which tended to Mutiny, and was Treaſon by the Common Law.

That by bringing the Papers to Hutchins's Houſe, the Priſoner had made himſelf guilty of all that was done there, by the Soldiers and others ſigning thoſe Papers.

That the Right of petitioning the King was not in Diſpute, but the Manner of doing it made it criminal.

That it was plain the Addreſs of the Priſoner and his Three Fellows, was a diſowning of the preſent Authority, and caſting off his Majeſty's Government as it was then eſtabliſhed; for Capt. Nanfan ſucceeded the Lord Bellamont (as by the Commiſſion appeared) and not my Lord Cornbury; which was a plain Overt Act of Treaſon, by the Meaning and Words of the Act of Aſſembly.

That it appeared undeniable, that the Priſoner and his Son were always by the Papers, and that it was done with a great Number of People to affront the Government.

That the drawing in Soldiers to ſign Petitions, is Mutiny and Sedition by the Law; and drawing of them in on falſe Pretences, in Hopes of Freedom in the City, and ſubſcribing their Names on Blank Liſts, is liſting of Soldiers, and may be applied to invite in any Foreign Power. And thereupon ſtrenuouſly inſiſted on the Validity of the Evidence, That the Facts laid in the Indictment were undeniably proved, and that thoſe Facts did amount to High-Treaſon, within the Words and Meaning of this Act of Aſſembly, and that therefore the Jury could not do otherwiſe than bring in the Priſoner Guilty.

The Conſtable being ſworn to keep the Jury, the Court adjourned till Nine a Clock at Night. And the Jury then not being agreed, the Court did adjourn till Monday nine a Clock, the 9th of March.

On Monday the 9th, the Priſoner was brought to the Bar, and the Jury ſent for. They were aſked if they were agreed in their Verdict? They anſwered, They were not agreed, but deſired ſome Direction of the Court. Jacob Goelet appeared as Foreman of the Jury, and read ſome Notes of what he ſaid the Witneſſes had ſworn. Which were denied to have been ſworn by the Council for the Priſoner, who prayed Mr. Atwood to ſatisfy the Jury of the Truth of the Evidence.

To this he anſwered, That he could not do it after the Charge given; but affirmed, it was no new Thing (as ſome pretended) after Charge given, to ſatisfy the Jury in ſome Matters of Law; and told, that he had received Letters from the Jury, and and answered them, which Answers were only his private Opinion. That if they were under any Difficulty, whether the Matters of Fact alledged in the Indictment, and which were proved to them, were Treason or no, they might find the Prisoner Guilty; who had his Advantage in moving in Arrest of Judgment, and might be relieved as to Matter of Law.

Mr. Emot. This is not fair to give the Jury a Handle to find the Prisoner guilty, in Expectation of Relief in Arrest of Judgment; for they are Judges both of Law and Fact, as the Case is now circumstanced: If they will enslave themselves and their Posterity, and debar themselves of all Access to their Prince, they will be worse than Negroes.

Mr. Atwood. This is not to be suffered, to offer these Things to the Jury after they have received their Charge; therefore be silent. Then proceeding, he renewed his Charge to the Jury, aggravating the supposed Crimes for the Space of about half an Hour.

Mr. Emot. I pray your Honour to be heard one Word (which he often repeated, and at last was granted him.) The Facts laid in the Indictment were not proved, as to the disowning and casting off the Government, encouraging of Mutiny in the Soldiers, or disquieting the Peace of the Government: Addressing the King is the undoubted Right of the Subject, both by Common Law and Acts of Parliament. If the Subject for Complaints of Grievances, set forth by Petition, shall be attainted for High-Treason, we are are in a worse Condition than Slaves.

Mr. Atwood check'd him, and commanded Silence.

Mr. Nicholl. The Act of Parliament to punish Governors in the Plantations for oppressing the Subject, is rendred useless and of no Effect, if the Subjects are deprived of this Liberty to complain, and set forth their Grievances, by Petition to their King.

Prisoner. I crave that Jacobus Goelet may read over his Paper concerning the Evidence given, and Liberty to controul the Mistakes. This was denied.

Prisoner. I crave that Col. D' Peyster and Capt. Walters, who are joined in the Commission, will declare their Opinions singly, if they have agreed That to be Treason which Mr. Atwood has declared to be so, either by the Common Law, or Act of Assembly, if the Facts laid in the Indictment should be admitted to be proved, as indeed they are not.

To this he received no Answer.

After this, the Jury were sent out, and the Court adjourned till Three a Clock in the Afternoon.

At which Time the Commissioners meeting, the Prisoner was brought to the Bar; the Jury were sent for. And being come, were asked, if they were agreed of their Verdict? Which they answered in the Affirmative, and that they found the Prisoner Guilty.

Council. We pray Time to offer Reasons in Arrest of Judgment.

Mr. Atwood. Let these Reasons be offered Tomorrow Morning.

Court adjourned till Eleven a Clock next Morning.

March 10*th.* The Commissioners met, and the Prisoner being brought to the Bar, he offered the following Reasons in Arrest of Judgment, in these Words, viz.

Bayard. That no Overt Act, alledged in the Indictment, is proved by the Oaths and Testimonies of Two lawful Witnesses, as by the Statute of 7 W. 3. is directed.

That if the Overt Act, as alledged in the Indictment, should be admitted to be so proved, yet neither by the Law of England, or by any legal genuine Construction of the Act of Assembly of this Country, on which the Indictment is grounded, any of the said Overt Acts can amount to High-Treason.

Mr. Atwood. Tho' the Reasons offer'd by the Prisoners Council, are properly and learnedly offered, I could off-hand answer and controul them all; yet I will not do it; let them be left with the Sollicitor General. And adjourn'd the Court until Ten a Clock the next Morning; which accordingly was done.

March 11. The Commissioners met, and the Prisoner brought to the Bar.

Mr. Nicholl. It does not appear that any one Overt Act, alledged in the Indictment, has been proved by the Oaths of Two lawful Witnesses, as by the Statute of 7 W. 3. ought to be done.

Mr. Atwood. The Jury are the sole Judges of the Evidence, and if there has been any Omission in that, it is now help'd by the Verdict.

Mr. Nicoll. 'Tho' 'tis very plain to me, and I suppose to the Court, that what I have affirmed in this Matter is Truth, ; yet I shall not much insist upon it, because if the Acts themselves should be admitted to be true, they do not fall under any of the Heads or Species of Treason so made by the English Laws, or by any natural and reasonable Construction of the Act of Assembly of this Government; which being wholly Matter of Law, I shall leave to your Honours Consideration.

Mr. Emot. I very well remember that the Court was pleased to tell the Jury, after they had been together some Days, and not being agreed upon the Verdict, That if they were under any Difficulty, whether the Overt Acts laid in the Indictment, if proved, were Treason; if they found the Prisoner guilty, he had his Remedy by moving the Matter of Law in Arrest of Judgment.

I therefore humbly offer, in Arrest of Judgment, That if the Overt Acts laid in the Indictment were admitted to be proved, yet in Point of Law they cannot amount to High-Treason, within the meaning of the Act of Assembly upon which the Indictment is laid.

For I take it, that all Acts of Parliament, and consequently Acts of Assembly, are to be understood and taken by reasonable Construction, to be gathered and collected out of the Words of the Act only, and that according to the natural, grammatical, plain and legal Sense thereof, without any forced Interpretation.

Then if so, this Act of Assembly, both by the Title, Preamble, and the enacting Part thereof, plainly demonstrates the Meaning of the Law-makers, and what was thereby designed for the future to prevent. The Title of this Act is in these Words: An Act for the quieting and settling the Disorders that have lately happened within this Province, and for establishing and securing their Majesties present Government against the like Disorders for the future. Now what these Disorders were, we have great cause to remember, and they are very well known to this Court to have been occasioned by some Persons setting up an Arbitrary Power over the King's Subjects without the Authority from the Crown of England, as appears from the Preamble of the said Act, part whereof is in these Words:

And

And whereas the late haſty and inconſiderate Violation of the Good and Quiet of this Province, by the ſetting up a Power over their Majeſties Subjects without Authority from the Crown of England, hath vitiated and debauched the Minds of many People, &c. For the Prevention whereof in Time to come, be it enacted, &c. That whatſoever Perſon or Perſons ſhall by any Manner of Ways, or upon any Pretence whatſoever, endeavour by Force of Arms, or otherwiſe, to diſturb the Peace, Good and Quiet of this their Majeſties Government, as it is now eſtabliſhed, ſhall be deemed and eſteemed as Rebels and Traytors, &c.

From hence it plainly appears, that the Intention of the Law-makers was only to declare ſuch Perſon or Perſons Rebels and Traytors, as ſhould for the future ſet up a Power over his Majeſty's Subjects in this Province, without Authority from the Crown of England; which undoubtedly is Treaſon within the Statute of 25 E. 3.

But it can never be underſtood (without the greateſt of Violence to the reaſonable Conſtruction of the ſaid Act of Aſſembly, and the plain Intention of the Makers thereof) to be conſtrued to extend to the ſigning the Addreſſes mentioned in the Indictment, which is the only Thing the Priſoner is poſitively charged withal; for all the reſt are only preſumptive, conſtructive and accumulative Crimes, drawn from thence.

But ſays Mr. Sollicitor, the Words of this Act of Aſſembly are in generals, That if any Perſons ſhall endeavour by Force of Arms, or otherwiſe, to diſturb the Peace, Good and Quiet of the Government, ſhall be deemed and eſteemed Rebels and Traitors.

Now from the Word [Otherwiſe] Mr. Solicitor would fain inſinuate that the Priſoner is within the Meaning of the Act of Aſſembly: A very fine Explanation! For by ſuch a Conſtruction as this, every Breach of the Peace, ſudden Quarrel, or ſmall Battery, ſhall be deemed Treaſon. I ſhall not further add upon this Head, but only offer my humble Opinion, That here in the Plantations we are not capable in our Aſſemblies to make and declare any new Species of Treaſon, but ſuch as are comprehended in the Statute of 25 E. 3. or ſome other ſubſequent Statute.

Tho' what already has been offered, I hope will be ſufficient to ſtay and arreſt Judgment, yet I have ſeveral other Things in behalf of the Priſoner (by your Honours Permiſſion) to move in Arreſt of Judgment, and which are not mentioned in the Reaſons which were aſſigned in Writing; and I pray Liberty to offer them Ore Tenus.

Mr. Atwood. Mr. Emot, you have Liberty granted you; go on.

Mr. Emot. I thank your Honour. And the Reaſons that I ſhall now further aſſign why Judgment ought not to paſs againſt the Priſoner, according to the Verdict of the Jury, are theſe Three.

1*ſt*. That Andries Marſhalk, one of the Petty-Jury, is an Alien, and of Foreign Birth, born in Zeland, and came over into this Province in the Year 1684.; and that Jacobus Goelet the Foreman of the Jury, is alſo an Alien, and hath lately ſent for England to procure a Denization.

2*dly*. That the Viſne or Venire in the Precept to ſummon the Petty-Jury, under the Hands of the Commiſſioners, is wrong awarded, or rather, not awarded at all.

3*dly*. That the ſaid Precept is not returned by the Sheriff, or any Endorſement thereupon, and ſigned by him; againſt the known Laws of England, and more particularly the Statute of 12 E. 2. Cap. 5. called, The Statute of York.

Mr. Atwood in a long Speech ſaid, What the Sollicitor has offer'd is ſufficient to over-rule the Reaſons exhibited in Arreſt of Judgment; for 'tis evidently proved that the Priſoner has diſturbed the Peace, Good and Quiet of the Government, as it is now eſtabliſhed, viz.

1*ſt*. By enticing the People to ſign ſcandalous Libels againſt the Government, at the Coffee-Houſe, and at his own Houſe, by the Oath of Peter Odyre, telling him, it was for the Good of the Country; and his bringing them to Alderman Hutchins's, makes him equally guilty to the Soldiers ſigning Complaints againſt their chief Officers, thereby enticing them for Mutiny; which Soldiers are part of the Seven Thouſand Men raiſed by Act of Parliament for the Defence of the Kingdom; which is High-Treaſon by the Common Law, as well as by Act of Aſſembly.

2*dly*. By the Priſoner's diſowning the Aſſembly to be lawful.

3*dly*. By charging the Lieut. Governor to be brib'd to paſs their Acts of Aſſembly.

4*thly*. By charging the Government to be in the Hands of hot and ignorant Men.

5*thly*. By the Addreſs to the Lieut. Governor, diſowning and caſting off the preſent Authority, declaring the Lord Cornbury to ſucceed the late Earl of Bellamont in the Government.

I hope the Priſoner by this Time is convinc'd of his Crime, as well as that Clergy-man who ſpoke ſo much in his Vindication; and that the Priſoner will now be duly penitent, and make a true Confeſſion of it.

Col. Bayard. May it pleaſe your Honour, I ever abhorr'd that heinous and abominable Crime of High-Treaſon, as much as Death it ſelf: I call God and my own Conſcience to witneſs, That I am as innocent of it as the Child unborn: I never ſpoke to any of the Soldiers to make any Complaint, or ſign any Addreſſes, or other Paper whatſoever. I own I was preſent at the Coffee-Houſe, at the ſigning of an Addreſs to the King, another to the Parliament, and another to the Lord Cornbury; and I own the Two firſt contained ſome Complaints of Grievances we ſuppoſed to lie under, and the latter a Congratulation.

I had the beſt Council I could get for ſo doing, and that it was the Subjects Right to Petition the King, by the Act of the Firſt of W. & M. and I think the Subjects ſhould be worſe than Slaves, if they ſhall be arraigned for High-Treaſon for complaining to their Prince.

I muſt further beg leave to ſay, Your Honour was much miſtaken in ſumming up juſt now what the Witneſſes had ſworn; and the Jury (by that Paper the Foreman read in Court) had likewiſe a wrong Notion of it; which I deſired then I might controul, but your Honour over-ruled it, as not to be allowed after the Charge was given. It was not proved by any of the Witneſſes, that the Peace of the Government had been diſturbed: None of 'em ſaid I had enticed any Perſon whatſoever to ſign the Addreſſes; nor that I was preſent at the Soldiers ſigning at Hutchins's, much leſs that I enticed them to Mutiny. I knew nothing of their ſigning, I was not at the Houſe all that Time. Mr. Solicitor had Mrs. Hutchins ſworn, who ſaid the ſame. None of 'em ſay, that in the ſaid Addreſs the Aſſembly was called Unlawful, but only that the Speaker was an Alien; nor that the Lieut. Governor was bribed, but tempted: Nor that the Government was in the Hands of hot and ignorant Men, but that hot and ignorant Men were put in Offices, and that there-thereby the Government was like to be rendred Cheap and Vile. And as for the Addreſs to the Lieut. Governor, it was only ſaid, We had received Advice from England that the Lord Cornbury was to ſucceed the Earl of Bellamont as our Governor; which by no Colour can be conſtrued to be a caſting off, or diſowning of the preſent Authority. And tho' all had been proved, as it is not, what your Honour, as above, has been pleaſed to ſay, I humbly conceive it cannot amount to a Miſdemeanor, and much leſs to that heinous Crime of High-Treaſon.

Mr. Atwood. The Right of Petitioning the King is not in Diſpute, but the Manner of doing it makes it Criminal; neither does that Liberty extend to the Parliament.

Mr. Emot. I humbly move, that we may have Liberty to offer other Reaſons Ore Tenus. Which the Court granted.

Mr. Atwood. Adjourn the Court till Friday Morning the 13th Inſtant. Adjourn'd accordingly.

On the 12th in the Morning, the Priſoner wrote a Letter to Col. De Peyſter; ſome of the Contents whereof were by Mr. Atwood retorted upon the Priſoner in open Court, at the Time he paſſed Sentence againſt him; for which Reaſon the Priſoner has permitted it to be publiſhed, and it is as followeth:

Col. D' Peyſter; Sir,

"I Take leave to acquaint you, That tho' it "has pleaſed God to ſuffer your ſelf, and "ſome of your Relations to be the likely chief In- "ſtruments of the total Deſtruction both of my "ſelf and all my Family and Poſterity; that yet "notwithſtanding I have that Peace with my ſelf "(and I can but only thank God for his all-ſufficient "Grace of ſtrengthning me in it) that I am re- "conciled to all Mankind whatſoever, and that I "hope one of my laſt Prayers will be, That God "out of his infinite Mercy will graciouſly pardon "all thoſe that have had a Hand to cut me off. "Sir, Believe me, as you may give Credit to the "Words of a dying Man (ſince I find the Job is "to be done, and that it is now paſt your Power "to ſtop the Current) that I ſhall alſo die with "a clear and good Conſcience, and as free of that "horrid Crime laid to my Charge, as the Child "yet unborn. And therefore I hope God's merci- "ful Hand, who has never left nor forſaken me, "will continue to ſupport me to the very laſt, "and that I may look Death in the Face, as a "good Chriſtian ought to do; humbly ſubmitting "my All to his moſt Wiſe, moſt Juſt, and moſt "Merciful Diſpenſations: For I am ſenſible there "is no more than one Death for me, and that in "all Probability, conſidering my Age, it might "have been very ſoon, tho' this Tribulation had "not befallen me. I ſhall only add, That I hope "in God's Mercy for the Pardon of all my mani- "fold Sins and Tranſgreſſions, thro' the only Merits "of my Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; and that when I "ſhall be no more, he will continue his Grace to "my dear Wife, and my Poſterity. And laſtly, "That my Blood, which is ſtruck at (by your "Brother's own Expreſſions to my ſelf, and your "Brother-in-Law's to others, both not long ſince) "may be the laſt to be ſpilt on Account of our "diſmal and unhappy Diviſions; tho' I fear out "of my Aſhes ſuch farther Calamities may ariſe "to this poor bleeding Province, that Poſterity will "have Cauſe long to lament: For it is not to be "expected, that all the Plots, Contrivances and In- "triegues uſed in this Matter, (many of which I "aſſure you are already diſcovered) will have their "Exit with my ſelf. It had been more pardon- "able to have ſtabb'd me in my Sleep, or with "Joab's Hand, under a Pretence of Friendſhip, "than to do it with Ahab under a Colour and "Cloak of Juſtice; and of the Two, I leave others "to conſider if this latter exceeds not the former; "ſince it's not to be ſuppos'd, that Ahab's was ſo "much out of Malice; but the Vineyard being de- "nied him on his offering the Worth of it in "Money, occaſioned the Innocent to be arraigned "and ſlain for a pretended Crime of Blaſphemy "and High Treaſon.

"Sir, Theſe above Lines are the Sincerity of "my Thoughts this Morning; aſſuring you, that "I never had a Thought before late laſt Night "to write to your ſelf one Word about this Sub- "ject; ſo altogether unknown to all Mankind what- "ſoever, nor don't intend them any further; where- "fore I deſire you'll make ſuch Uſe of them, for "your own Conſideration, as God may direct "you. I am, Sir,

Your humble Servant,
N. Bayard.

March 13. The Court being met according to Adjournment, the Priſoner being brought up, moved, That foraſmuch as Mr. Nicoll was out of Town, by reaſon of the Indiſpoſition of his Family, another Council might be aſſigned in his Stead. Which was granted, and the Court adjourned till Monday the 16th Inſtant, at Nine a Clock.

March 16. Before the ſitting of the Court, the Priſoner ſent a Petition to Mr. Atwood, and the reſt of the Commiſſioners, viz.

To the Honourable William Atwood, Eſq; Abraham D' Peyſter, Eſq; and Robert Walters, Eſq; Judges of this Special Court.

The Humble Petition of Nicholas Bayard, Sheweth,

"THAT your Petitioner being altogether "unacquainted what is practicable and al- "lowable in Law to be offered in Arreſt of Judg- "ment; yet ſince your Petitioner's Life, and all "what is near and dear unto him is concerned, "he humbly craves Leave (beſides the Reaſons al- "ready offer'd by your Petitioner's Council in Ar- "reſt of Judgment) to lay before your Honours, "and to pray your Honours favourable Conſidera- "tion thereupon.

"Firſt, That the Verdict of the Grand Inqueſt "was not ſufficiently found by any Twelve of "that Inqueſt, as in his former Petition is ſet "forth.

"Secondly, That the Petty Jury (in a Manner) "forc'd upon your Petitioner, were all of them "Parties concerned againſt your Petitioner in the "very Matter he was tried for, on Account of "the unhappy Diviſions within this Province; all "of 'em extream ignorant of the Engliſh Language, "to that Degree that ſcarcely one of them is able to "ſay the Lord's Prayer in the Engliſh Tongue, and "much leſs to comprehend the Matters of Law, and "what has been offered in behalf of your Peti- "tioner at his Trial.

"Thirdly, That all what has been ſworn againſt "your Petitioner, was, Firſt, That the Petitioner's "Name was ſeen to the Addreſs to the Lord "Cornbury, but that they knew not whether it was "his Hand-Writing. Secondly, That the Peti- "tioner had been preſent at the Coffee-Houſe, and

" at his own Houſe, when the Addreſſes to the " King, another to the Parliament, and another to " the Lord Cornbury, were ſigned by ſeveral of the " Freeholders, Freemen, and Inhabitants of this " City; but that he had deſired none of them to " ſign the ſame. 3*dly*, That the Petitioner had " brought ſome Papers, ſuppoſed to be the ſaid Ad- " dreſſes, to the Houſe of Alderman Hutchins. " 4*thly*, That the Addreſs to the Lord Cornbury con- " tain'd only a Congratulation at his ſafe Arrival, " and a hearty Deſire, that with it all our Diviſions " might be healed, and that the very Name of " Party and Faction might vaniſh, and be extin- " guiſh'd; and that in the Two former, or in one " of them, either to the King or Parliament, ſome " Complaints were made of Grievances, without " remembring the Particulars: Only Mr. Clows " ſwore, That to his beſt Remembrance, in both, or " in one of the Addreſſes to the King or the Parlia- " ment, mention was made, That ſome of the hot- " teſt and ignoranteſt of the People were put in Of- " fices; That the Speaker of the Aſſembly was " challenged to be an Alien; That the ſaid Aſſem- " bly had given a Gift to the Lieutenant-Governor, " to tempt him to paſs their Acts, and another to " the Judge; and that thereby his Majeſty's Go- " vernment was like to be render'd Vile and Cheap " in the Eyes of the People. And ſwore further, " That in none of them any Reflections were made " (as he conceived) to the Prejudice of the Lieut. " Governor; and that in none of them, the Words " Unlawful or Oppreſſion were mentioned.

" Fourthly, That all the reſt of the Evidences " ſwore nothing (againſt your Petitioner,) but that " they had ſigned the Addreſſes at Alderman " Hutchins's; that two or three of the Soldiers had " a Glaſs of Wine given them, but not for ſigning, " it being Chriſtmas-Time; and that ſome of them " expected to be made Free of the City, but not of " the Gariſon.

" May it pleaſe your Honours; Your Petitioner " finds, by the Notes himſelf has taken at his " Tryal, that nothing more has been ſworn againſt " him: Whereupon the Jury, being ignorant Peo- " ple, found him guilty; becauſe ſome Part of the " Indictment was proved, as to the ſigning of the " ſaid Addreſſes, and what the Contents of them " were, only by the Oath of one Witneſs.

Your Petitioner therefore humbly prays, That your Honours will be pleaſed to take the Premiſes into your ſerious Conſideration, Whether by the Laws of England, or this Province, it can amount to the Crime of High-Treaſon, what has been ſworn againſt him, as above expreſs'd? And if not, that your Honours will favourably order an Arreſt of Judgment for the Reaſons above-mentioned, &c. what has been already offered to your Honour by the Petitioner's Council. And as in Duty bound, &c.

N. BAYARD.

The Court being met, the Priſoner was brought to the Bar, and the Petition laſt mentioned read.

Mr. Atwood. Mr. Emot, we are ready to hear the Arguments you have to offer, for the laſt Three Reaſons you have aſſigned in Arreſt of Judgment.

Mr. Emot. I am ready: 1ſt, Andries Marſhalk, one of the Petty Jury, is an Alien; we have Two Evidences to prove the ſame. And----

Mr. Atwood. We cannot admit you any ſuch Proof; for tho' this might have been a good Exception for Cauſe before he or they had been ſworn; but now it's too late: therefore go on to the next.

Mr. Emot. This ſeems very hard; for we ought to have been tried by the King's lawful Liege People, and we apprehend theſe are not ſuch; but we came not to the Knowledge of this till after the Tryal.

Mr. Atwood. Pray, Mr. Emot, delay the Court no longer; but proceed to the ſecond Reaſon aſſigned.

Mr. Emot. The 2d Reaſon is, that the Viſne or Venue in the Precept to ſummon the Petty Jury, is wrong awarded, or rather not awarded at all. Our happy Conſtitution of Government is, That all Tryals of this Nature muſt be by the Verdict of Twelve Men, and that as near as may be of the Neighbourhood where the Fact ariſeth, or is alledged to ariſe in the Indictment. Yet nevertheleſs, the Precept to ſummon the Jury, we find is directed to the Sheriff, to return Eighty Men of his Bailiwick; whereas he is Sheriff as well of the County of New-York, as of the City; and at the ſame time, the Matters of Fact alledged in the Indictment are ſaid to be committed in the Dock and Eaſtward of this City. So that this is a Miſ-Trial, upon which no Judgment can be given. And of this we have a Multitude of Authorities in our Books: And firſt, in Arundel's Caſe, Coke's Rep. part 6. fol. 14. b. It was for the Murder of one Parker; and the Caſe was thus: The Murder was alledged to be done at the City of Weſtminſter, in a certain Street there, called King-ſtreet, in the Pariſh of St. Margaret's: For the Tryal of the Iſſue a Jury was return'd, De vicinitate Civitatis Weſtm. Arundel being found guilty, moves in Arreſt of Judgment; aſſigning for Cauſe, that the Jury ought to have been out of the Pariſh of St. Margaret's, and not in general out of the Neighbourhood of the City of Weſtminſter; and it was adjudged a Miſ-Tryal, and the Verdict was ſet aſide: And this I find was done upon a Special Conſult of the Judges at Serjeants-Inn.

So that we ſee how cautious the Laws of England are, and the Judges thereof, that all Tryals of this Nature ſhall follow the Venue, and that the Jury ſhall be ſummoned from the Neighbourhood where the Fact ariſeth. And the Reaſon thereof is grounded upon this Suppoſition and Preſumption, That the Neighbourhood are the beſt and moſt proper Judges of Matters of Fact; for indeed it's the Rule in the Law, That Vicinus facta vicini preſumitur ſcire.

But let me obſerve to your Honours, That our Caſe at the Bar is much more uncertain, as to the awarding of the Venire facias, or Precept to ſummon the Jury; for the Fact is alledged to be done at the Dock and Eaſtward of this City, and Iſſue joined thereupon. Yet the Precept is directed to the Sheriff, to ſummon the Jury of his Bailiwick, which, as I ſaid before, contains both the City and County of New-York, and without mentioning any Neighbourhood, and therefore may come out of the County, as well as from the City; and therefore of Neceſſity muſt be eſteemed a Miſ-Tryal.

To this it may be objected by ſuch as are ignorant of our Laws, That notwithſtanding the Jury was ſummoned from the Neighbourhood of the City of New-York, and not from the County; for that they know the Perſons to be ſuch. But this not appearing to be ſo upon Record, avails nothing; for the Rule of the Law is, What appears not, is not: Exiſtentibus & non apparentibus eadem eſt ratio.

Crook's Rep. In London, the Pariſh and Ward is mentioned; and therefore it was adjudged, That it was not good to alledge any thing done generally in London; but it muſt be laid to be done in ſome Pariſh, from which a Venue may be awarded.

In Crook's Jac. p. 399. Tycos againſt Weſtcome. In this Caſe, a Venire fac' was awarded from T. and not de Viceneto de T. Reſolved to be ill, and not amendable: Yet in this Precept the Viſne is not ſo much as of a Ward of the City of New-York, nor of any other Neighbourhood whatſoever, but in general from his Bailiwick. So that I humbly pray, that for this Reaſon the Jury's Verdict may be ſet aſide, this being a Miſ-Tryal, upon which no Judgment can be entred: And ſhall proceed to the Third Reaſon aſſigned.

3. That the Precept to ſummon the Jury is not returned by the Sheriff, or any Endorſement thereupon, and ſigned by him, againſt the known Laws of England, and more particularly the Stat. of 12 Edw. 2. c. 5. This Statute enjoins, that the Sheriff ſhall put his Name to every Return made by him; ſo that the Court may know of whom they took ſuch Return, if need be. And I ſhall endeavour to prove, from ſundry adjudged Caſes ſince the making of this Statute, that this Precept to ſummon the Jury not being endorſed by the Sheriff, the Tryal is ill, and not amendable.

The Caſe of Holdſworth againſt Sir Stephen Proctor, in Crook's Rep. Part 2. p. 188. Sir Stephen Proctor moved in Arreſt of Judgment, for that the Name of the Sheriff was not endorſed upon the Writ of Diſtringas with Niſi prius; and it was ruled, That the Tryal was ill, and not amendable by any the Statutes of Jeofals: For, ſay the Judges, it's all one with the Caſe of a Venire facias, where the Name of the Sheriff is not thereto; which hath been frequently over-ruled, as being no Return, nor helped by any Statute of Jeofals. For the Statute of 18 Eliz. as I ſhall ſhew hereafter, from adjudged Caſes, and from the beſt Authorities in Law, doth only help imperfect and inſufficient Returns, and that only in Caſes Civil between Party and Party; but here is no Return at all.

In Rowland's Caſe, in Lord Coke's Rep. Book 5. p. 41. in Ejectment upon a Verdict for the Plantiff, the Defendant moved in Arreſt of Judgment; for the Venire facias was not returned or endorſed by the Sheriff, tho' the Poſtea made mention that the Jury was returned per Mandatum Juſticiorum: Yet in this Caſe it was ruled, That that would not help it; for the Judges ſaid, That where there is no Return, it cannot be help'd by the Statute of 18 Eliz. or any other of the Statutes of Jeofals; for that Statute only helps imperfect and inſufficient Returns, and ſuch as want Form, and not ſuch as are not return'd at all.

Again, in Sir Arthur Blackmore's Caſe, in Coke's 8th Rep. fol. 156. in this Caſe it was adjudged, that the Statute of 18 Eliz. doth not help a Tryal, where no Return is made upon the Writ of Venire fac'; as was formerly, ſay they, adjudged in Rowland's Caſe before-cited. And our Books are full of Authorities of this Nature; but I ſhall not give you the Trouble to mention any more.

Mr. Sollicitor. Mr. Emot, theſe Authorities which you have here cited, it's true, are grounded upon the Statute which you have mentioned of 12 Ed. 2. but this Statute has only relation to Writs; and in this Caſe the Sheriff ſummoned the Jury, not by Virtue of a Writ, but a Precept under the Hands of the Commiſſioners; which differs the Caſe.

Mr. Emot. Mr. Sollicitor, then you ſay that the Caſe at the Bar is not within the Words of this Statute of 12 Edw. 2. for that this is a Precept to ſummon the Jury, and not a Writ, and ſo conſequently the Sheriff not obliged to ſign and return the ſame. A very wiſe Diſtinction!

However, I ſhall endeavour to ſhew, that this Precept is within the Reaſon and Equity of the Statute, and that the ſame ought to be returned and ſigned by the Sheriff. In order thereto, I ſhall put this Court in mind, how Statutes have from Time to Time been taken by Equity in divers Manners; that thoſe Things which are alike in Reaſon, are alike in Law; and that where an Act of Parliament hath been made to remedy ſome Miſchiefs, that the ſame hath been extended to other Things, in like Degree, and that even in Penal Laws. As for Example:

Stat. of Glouceſt. c. 5. By this Statute, an Action of Waſte is given againſt one who holds for Years; yet by the Equity of this Statute, a Man ſhall have an Action againſt him who holds but for half an Year, notwithſtanding the Act be Penal.

Weſtm. 2. c. 3. This Statute gives an Action of cui in Vita, after the Coverture diſſolved by Death: Yet if the Coverture be diſſolved by Divorce, the Wife ſhall have, by the Equity of this Statute, a Writ of cui ante Divortium.

And laſtly, the Stat. 25 Edw. 3. de proditionibus. This Statute expreſly ſays, That no Caſe ſhall be taken by Equity, unleſs it be adjudged in Parliament; and yet by the Equity of the Words of that Statute, which are, If the Servant kill the Maſter, it is taken, If the Maid kill the Miſtreſs; that this is Petty-Treaſon.

So that from hence I am humbly of Opinion, That we are fairly within the Equity of the Stat. 12 Edw. 2. Beſides, a Writ and Precept in this Caſe are only Synonimous Terms, and ſignify one and the ſame Thing.

Theſe Reaſons were over-ruled.

And the Court ordered the Sheriff to make a Return upon the Precept to ſummon the Jury, conform to the above Stat. 12 Edw. 2. which the Court ſaid they had Power to do, and to help that Defect.

Mr. Emot. I find your Honour has over-ruled all the Reaſons that we have offered in Arreſt of Judgment, in Behalf of the Priſoner Col. Bayard, why Judgment ought not to paſs againſt him, according to the Verdict of the Jury; but have not as yet obſerved, that either Col. D' Peyſter or Captain Walters have given their Opinion to all, or any of the Reaſons we have offered. I humbly therefore pray, that we may have their Opinion, ſo that we may know by what Hands we fall.

Mr. Atwood. Mr. Emot; You which have been aſſigned Council for the Priſoner, have hitherto, in all the Courſe of the Tryal, carried your ſelves like Men of your own Profeſſion, you muſt not now therefore begin to menace the Court. You ſhall have the Opinion of the reſt of the Commiſſioners.

Whereupon Mr. Atwood turning himſelf to them, and whiſpering them, they ſeverally did declare, That they were of Opinion with Juſtice Atwood, in that the Reaſons offered were not ſufficient to arreſt the Judgment.

Mr. Atwood. Col. Bayard, have you any thing to ſay, why Sentence ſhould not paſs againſt you?

Priſoner. I have nothing more to offer, than what my Council have offered, and what is contained in my laſt Petition.

Mr. Atwood. I am ſorry to find you ſo impenitent of your Crime, which is ſo heinous and abominable in the Sight of God and Man. You have lately lately made Reflections upon the Proceedings of this Court againſt you, as if it had been a Deſign to do the Job; comparing your Caſe to that of Naboth's Vineyard: But I hope God will open your Eyes, that you may be convinced, and repent of the Crime.

Then he pronounced Sentence in theſe Words:

It is conſidered by the Court here, that you be carried to the Place from whence you came; that from thence you be drawn upon a Hurdle to the Place of Execution; that there you be hanged by the Neck; and being alive you be cut down upon the Earth, and that your Bowels be taken out of your Belly, and your Privy-Members be cut off, and you being alive they be burnt before your Face; and that your Head be cut off, and that your Body be divided into Four Quarters; and that your Head and Quarters be placed where our Lord the King ſhall aſſign. And the Lord have Mercy upon your Soul.

Priſoner. I deſire to know whether I may have leave to anſwer to your Honour's Speech made before Sentence.

Mr. Atwood. No.

Priſoner. Then God's Will be done.

The Priſoner was remanded.

Alderman Hutchins of New-York was Tried, Convicted and Condemned of High-Treaſon, for the ſame Facts with which Col. Bayard was charg'd, and had the ſame Uſage both before, in and after his Tryal.

The TRYAL of WILLIAM FULLER, on Wedneſday, May the 20*th*, 1702.

Proclamation was made for all Perſons concerned to attend.

THEN the Gentlemen that were of the Jury were Sworn.

The Queen againſt William Fuller, upon an Information for Libels.

Mr. Montague. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, The Information ſets forth —— "That the Defendant being an Impoſtor, and a common Lyar, and a Perſon of an "ill Name and Reputation, falſly, maliciouſly, "wickedly and ſeditiouſly contriving, practiſing, "and intending the late King William and his Subjects, falſly and unlawfully to delude and deceive, "and Diſcords between the ſaid late King and "the Peers, and the Noblemen of this Kingdom, "and the great Officers and Miniſters intruſted by "the ſaid late King, in Buſineſs relating to the Government of this Kingdom of England, and other "Subjects of the ſaid Kingdom, to move, excite, "and ſtir up; and alſo to bring the Noblemen and "Peers, and the great Officers and Miniſters aforeſaid, and other faithful Subjects, into Hatred and "Contempt with the ſaid late King; and to get "and obtain ſeveral great Sums of Money fraudulently and deceitfully from the ſaid late King: "He, the ſaid William Fuller, the firſt Day of January laſt at London, &c. Thomas Jones*, Eſq; depoſeth, That he being at St. Germains, the Court of the late King James in France, in January, 1692, the ſaid late King being in his Cloſet, ſent for this Deponent, and there commanded the ſaid Deponent to begin his Journey for England, in Company with Colonel Tho. Dallaval, and Mr. George Hayes; and the ſaid late King did then, and there, deliver to this Deponent ſeveral Letters and Papers, to divers Noblemen and others in England, to whom this Deponent had ſeveral times before and ſince brought Letters from the late King and his Queen, and pretended Secretaries of State, delivered according to Order. This Deponent further ſaith, by the Oath he hath taken, That the late King James, at the time aforeſaid, in his Cloſet at St. Germains, did deliver to this Deponent a Paper, being an Order for this Deponent to receive Six Thouſand Pounds; which Sum this Deponent was to pay to ſeveral Perſons in Places in Truſt then in England, to engage them more firmly to endeavour the invalidating the Evidence of William Fuller, (who, as the ſaid late King expreſſed, had been by him, his Queen, and chief Servants, intruſted and employed in their moſt ſecret and weighty Concerns, for a conſiderable time after the late King

King and Queen's coming to France). (P. 7.) And this Deponent ſaith, He informed Mr. Fuller, that Dallaval and Hayes were come to Town, and lodged at an Apothecary's in Holborn, which Houſe Hayes formerly lodged at; but that Dallaval not being well, they could not come to him; therefore this Deponent ſaid to Fuller, that they deſired him to come to them; but he urged his Condition rendred him unfit, begging of the Deponent, to intreat them not to fail to attend the Houſe of Commons at the time appointed. All which this Deponent imparted the ſame Day to Coll. Dallaval and Mr. Hayes, and with them went the ſame Evening to three Gentlemen that were then Members of Parliament; and this Deponent had a Letter from one of thoſe three Gentlemen, (that was a Member of Parliament) directed to one of the Secretaries to the then Secretary of State, which this Deponent was to carry to him the next Morning; which accordingly he did by Seven of the Clock. And this Deponent ſaith, He paid the ſaid Under-Secretary 500 Guineas. And this Deponent ſaith, That when he left the Secretary, he went directly to the Sun-Tavern in King-ſtreet Weſtminſter, where he found the three Members with Dallaval and Hayes, and an eminent Banker of the City of London: Then this Deponent deſired the Banker to give his Bill to pay each of thoſe three Gentlemen that had been Members 1000 Pounds, payable on ſight; which being done, the ſaid Banker delivered alſo to one of them his Bill for 1500 l. to be paid on Demand, for the uſe of a conſiderable Perſon, whoſe Station would not permit him to be preſent. And this Deponent ſaith, by the Oath he has taken, That the ſeveral Sums of Money before-mentioned, with ſeveral leſſer Parcels, were ſo diſpoſed of by him, according to the late King's eſpecial Directions. And this Deponent ſaith, He has now by him the Receipts of each Perſon for the reſpective Bills and Moneys he diſpoſed of, with the true Copies of his Original Bills, delivered to him by the late King's own Hand. This Deponent ſaith, He delivered to the late King a Letter he had for him, from the three Gentlemen that were Members, and alſo ſeveral others he brought from England. And foraſmuch as this Deponent ſaith, As he hath formerly been employed to bring Letters, and Bills, and Orders, from the late King James and the French K. and their Miniſters; this Deponent ſaith, That he has kept a Journal of the ſame, and is ready to lay it before either or both Houſes of Parliament when required And this Deponent ſaith alſo, by the Oath he hath taken, That he can produce his Original Orders, that he receiv'd from the late King's, and the French King's own Hands, for the diſtributing more than One Hundred Fourſcore Thouſand Pounds Sterling for their Uſe to Perſons that were in Places of Truſt. And this Deponent ſaith, He can produce the Receipt of each Perſon to whom the Money was paid, and alſo the Perſons from whom this Deponent received the ſaid Sum or Sums by the Order aforeſaid.

Tho. Jones.

(2*d Book*) "The Information further ſets forth, "That the Defendant, the Day and Year aforeſaid, "(to perfect and bring to effect his further moſt "wicked Practices and Intentions againſt divers "Officers, and other Subjects of the late King "William, upon a feigned and pretended Corre- "ſpondence between them and the late King James, "whilſt he reſided in France, and of ſeveral Sums "of Money ſent by the ſaid King James out of "France into England, to be diſtributed amongſt "the Subjects of the late King William) another "moſt falſe and ſcandalous Libel, [Title Page] "(entitled, Twenty Six Depoſitions of Perſons of "Quality and Worth) falſely, wickedly, and moſt "deceitfully, did write, print, and cauſe to be "printed; in which ſaid falſe and ſcandalous Libel, "amongſt other Things, are contained, viz. [5th "Page.]" Mr. Jones has alſo made Oath, That he paid 5000 l. more, by the late King's Order, to ſeveral Perſons in Places of Truſt, that they might compleat my Ruin, and invalidate me for ever. Nor is this all; for the ſame Mr. Jones will prove by undeniable Witneſs and Demonſtration, that he has diſtributed more than One hundred fourſcore Thouſand Pounds in Eight Years laſt paſt, by the French King's Order, to Perſons in publick Truſt in this Kingdom.

W. Fuller.

"And the ſaid Defendant Fuller afterwards, the "ſaid Day, &c. falſely, unlawfully, and wickedly "did publiſh, utter, and for Truth affirm, the "ſaid ſeveral falſe and ſcandalous Libels, without "any lawful Authority. Whereas, in Truth, the "ſaid Thomas Jones did not depoſe upon his Oath, "as is contain'd in the ſaid falſe and ſcandalous Li- "bel; but that the ſaid ſcandalous Libels were and "are falſe and feigned, and altogether contrary to "Truth, to the great Scandal and Abuſe of the "late King William, and his great Officers and "Miniſters, and other the faithful Subjects of the "ſaid late King, to the evil Example of others, "and againſt the Peace of the ſaid late King, his "Crown and Dignity.

He pleaded not Guilty, and Iſſue joined thereupon.

The Caſe. "The Defendant Fuller is ſo noto- "rious a Cheat, and his Practices ſo publickly "known to all Men, that there need not much to "be ſaid here to aggravate his Offences; for in the "Year 1691, he was cenſur'd by the Houſe of "Commons, proſecuted, convicted, and puniſhed "for thoſe very Crimes he now ſtands to be tried; "and notwithſtanding that Sentence and Puniſh- "ment, he ſtill perſiſts in his villainous Practices "and Deſigns.

"About two Years ſince, he applied himſelf to "the chief Miniſters at Court, and inſinuated what "Diſcoveries he could make relating to the Cheat "of the Birth of the pretended Prince of Wales, "and of great Sums of Money received by ſeveral "Perſons of Quality here, from the late King "James and the French King, and of ſeveral Cor- "reſpondencies had between them, and the great "Officers of State here in England; but not meet- "ing with that Encouragement he expected, he "then undertakes to write and publiſh the two "ſcandalous Libels mentioned in the Information, "and cauſed great Numbers of them to be printed "and ſold about the Town; and then petitions "the Houſe of Peers to be heard, to make out the "Truth of what he wrote and publiſh'd. The "Houſe of Peers, by his Importunity, appointed "a Day for him to produce thoſe Perſons he men- "tion'd, to make good his Accuſations and Charge, "which he undertook to do; but failing from "time to time, their Lordſhips ordered him to be "committed, and proſecuted for an Impoſtor; but "the Defendant being an harden'd Rogue, was no "way humbled atthis Order, but immediately

"thereon

" thereon applies himſelf by Letters to the Speaker " of the Houſe of Commons, alledging the ſame " Matters, as he had done before to the Houſe of " Lords. The Houſe of Commons ordered him " to be brought to their Bar, where he only de- " ſired Ten Days Time to produce thoſe Perſons " mention'd in his Libels; and that Houſe, (to " leave him no Excuſe) granted him a Fortnight; " but having trifled with the Houſe of Commons, " as he had done before with the Houſe of Lords, " they voted him an incorrigible Rogue, and or- " dered him to be proſecuted. What the Reaſons " were for this unparallel'd Impudence, whether " for the ſake of Gain, or Malice to thoſe Gentle- " men he hints at in his Libels, are yet Secrets.

Sir Edward Northey.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, the Charge has been very fully opened, and I need not ſay much. His Crime is his publiſhing theſe two Books, (mention'd in the Information.) He has been ſome Time ſetting up for an Evidence, pretending to diſcover a ſecret Correſpondence between the late King James, and ſeveral Perſons here in England. He made an Offer of ſome ſuch Diſcovery about Ten Years ago, and he then applied himſelf to the Houſe of Commons, and they gave him Time to produce his Witneſſes; but after all, he could produce none, and the Houſe ordered him to be proſecuted as a Cheat and Impoſtor; and he was proſecuted accordingly, convicted----, and ſet in the Pillory. Now ſome Time laſt Winter, he did apply himſelf to ſome of the late King's Miniſters, and pretended he would produce Thomas Jones, and Tho. Witherington, to make conſiderable Diſcoveries. They heard him, but he could never produce theſe Men before them. And afterwards having no Encouragement from them, he took on him to publiſh theſe two Books, mention'd in the Information, whereof he ſtands now accuſed. And after he was before the Parliament, he firſt applied himſelf to the Houſe of Lords, and they heard what he had to ſay, and gave him Time to produce his Witneſſes; but he could not do it, and thereupon the Lords were pleaſed to direct this Proſecution. Then he applied himſelf to the Houſe of Commons, and they gave him Time likewiſe to produce his Witneſſes; but he could produce none; whereupon they Voted him a Cheat, a falſe Accuſer, and an incorrigible Rogue. My Lord, theſe Books were publiſhed with a very malicious Deſign, and no doubt, he had other People, who do not now appear, to ſupport him in it; and I doubt not but he would have ſet up Witneſſes to have ſworn whatever he would have them, if he had met with any Encouragement. He has the Impudence to put in the Frontiſpiece of his Books, Publiſhed by Command; but being ask'd in the Houſe of Peers, by whoſe Command? He ſaid it was by his own Command. And he has publiſhed in the Books, that he would produce Witneſſes to prove the diſtributing of an Hundred and eighty thouſand Pounds to Perſons in Places of Truſt, and to produce Receipts for the ſame, and he hath an Opportunity now of doing it. We will prove the Charge upon him.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, the Matter of the Information has been fully opened; but we are to conſider the ill Conſequences of it. This is a new Practice for a Man to publiſh Things of this Nature, and not be able to prove any thing: But he pretends to ſet up a ſecond Witneſs to make out what he has ſaid; that is, Jones, as if Jones were to relieve him. Now if that were true, it would be a great Thing to corroborate what he did ſay; but he has never produced this Jones, but only has printed ſomething that he calls Jones's. If it were only what depended on his private Knowledge, the Caſe were otherwiſe; but when he pretends to bring Jones to prove it, and does not produce him, he makes himſelf guilty of the Scandal; and it is very neceſſary that this Man ſhould be brought to Puniſhment. I will not trouble your Lordſhip further, but call our Witneſſes.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. The Matter has been opened ſo fully, that there is no need for me to ſay any thing; we will now call our Witneſſes.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we will prove that Fuller carried this Book to the Preſs, and not Mr. Jones, therefore we may well preſume it was his own.

Mr. Coniers. He could never produce Jones, but he could frame Depoſitions for him.

Then Fuller's Book was produced.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Call Mr. Buck, [who appeared, and was ſworn.] Mr. Buck, Who cauſed that Book to be publiſh'd?

Mr. Buck. Mr. Fuller.

Mr. Serj. Darnel, How do you know that?

Mr. Buck. He brought it to me in Manuſcipt, and he ſaid he took theſe Depoſitions out of the Secretaries-Office.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. But what did he deſire you to do?

Mr. Buck. He deſired me to print it: And he ſaid, Becauſe it was not done ſooner, it had done the King Ten thouſand Pound Damage.

Mr. Coniers. Did he make any Alteration in them afterwards?

Mr. Buck. No, only alter'd the Miſtakes of the Preſs?

Mr. Att. Gen. Was that Book printed by his Order?

Mr. Buck. Yes.

W. Fuller. My Lord, I will not give theſe Gentlemen the Trouble to prove it; I own it was writ by me.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you own the other Book too? Mr. Buck, look on that Book, [then the other Book was ſhewn him] By whoſe Order was that Printed?

Mr. Buck. By Mr. Fuller's Order.

Mr. Fuller. My Lord, if it be the Book I publiſh'd, I will own it. [Then it was ſhewn him.] Yes, my Lord, it was printed by my Order.

L. C. J. Holt. Read the Title.

Clerk. Original Letters from the late King James, &c. Publiſhed by Command.

L. C. J. Holt. By whoſe Command was it publiſh'd?

Mr. Att. Gen. By Fuller's.

L. C. J. Holt. His Order is a Command, it ſeems.

Then ſome Paragraphs were read.

Mr. Att. Gen. If Mr. Fuller will produce this Jones, to make good what he ſays, he will do a great Piece of Service; otherwiſe, he deſerves to be ſeverely cenſur'd.

L. C. J. Holt. Read the other Part.

Then the Clerk read the Title.

W. Fuller.

W. Fuller. Pray read the whole Title.

L. C. J. Holt. He is in Love with it.

Clerk. [Reads the Title] Twenty ſix Depoſitions of Perſons of Quality and Worth, with Letters of the late Queen, Father Corker, and Mrs. Mary Grey, &c. Publiſh'd by Command.

Mr. Att. Gen. Read the reſt.

Clerk. Mr. Fuller*'s Anſwer to the chief Objections made againſt him*, &c----. Mr. Jones made Oath, that he had paid 5000 l. more to ſeveral Perſons by the late King's Order, that he might compleat my Ruin, and invalidate my Evidence for ever, &c.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we have proved his publiſhing of theſe Books. We will now hear what he can ſay for himſelf.

W. Fuller. My Lord, I humbly beg you will hear what I have to ſay?

L. C. J. Holt. Yes, yes. Have you any Council?

W. Fuller. No, my Lord, I have none; I have no Money to procure Council. I have put my Thoughts in Writing, and I beg Leave to read it.

L. C. J. Holt. But you muſt ſpeak to the purpoſe. What do you ſay concerning the publiſhing theſe Books?

W. Fuller. That is what I have to offer.

L. C. J. Holt. But can you make it appear that they are true?

W. Fuller. My Lord, I hope I ſhall.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any Witneſſes?

W. Fuller. I have none here at preſent. But if your Lordſhip will pleaſe to hear the Terms upon which the Witneſſes would have come in, I can produce them: If your Lordſhip will grant your Warrant for Jones, I will forfeit my Life if he appear not.

L. C. J. Holt. You might have had Subpæna's for your Witneſſes againſt this Day.

W. Fuller. My Lord, I did endeavour it; but I had not Money to bear their Charges.

L. C. J. Holt. You made the ſame Excuſe before the Houſe of Lords and Commons.

W. Fuller. If it can be made appear that I had any Aſſiſtance from the Houſe of Lords, or the Houſe of Commons, I own I am in the wrong.

L. C. J. Holt. What Aſſiſtance would you have had from them? Or what would you have from me?

W. Fuller. The Houſe of Lords ſummoned me before them; and I deſired-----

L. C. J. Holt. If you take on you to write ſuch Things as you are charged with, it lies upon you to prove it at your Peril.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, he did appeal to the Lords; and they gave him from Time to Time to produce his Witneſſes, and he could not do it.

L. C. J. Holt. If you have any Witneſſes, I will hear them; but to hear you make a Speech, it is to no purpoſe.

W. Fuller. My Lord, I hope you will believe it to be to the purpoſe, if you pleaſe to hear me.

Mr. Coniers. What ſignifies your Belief?

W. Fuller. Why am I not to be believ'd?

L. C. J. Holt. What? Becauſe you have ſtood in the Pillory for an Impoſtor heretofore.

Mr. S. Darnel. The whole Nation do not believe you; for the Lords and Commons did not, who repreſent the whole Nation.

W. Fuller. The Lords did not think fit to put it to the Tryal. Theſe Gentlemen charge me to have abuſed ſeveral Perſons: I would be glad to know who theſe Perſons are.

Mr. Att. Gen. I cannot tell who they are; your Book promiſes to make that appear.

W. Fuller. If a Man of an ill Character abuſe the Nation, I hope I ſhall not ſuffer for that.

L. C. J. Holt. How came you to write theſe Books, that are not true?

W. Fuller. My Lord, I believe they are all true.

M. Att. Gen. Produce the Original Affidavits made by Jones, which you cauſed to be printed.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Produce the Receipts in for the Money, which you ſay you have; and then you will do ſomething.

W. Fuller. Do I ſay it?

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Yes, if that Print be yours.

W. Fuller. I wonder a Man of your Gravity ſhould aſſert ſuch an Untruth in the Court.

L. C. J. Holt. If you have any Witneſſes, produce them.

W. Fuller. My Lord, I preſume you cannot but remember, that in Crone's Caſe I behaved my ſelf honourably, and was owned to have done the Nation good Service.

L. C. J. Holt. That was formerly, and ſignifies nothing to what you do now.

W. Fuller. I ventur'd ſeveral times into France, and back again: Shew me a Man that ever did ſo beſides?

Mr. Att. Gen. If you had made out the Diſcovery you pretended to make, I ſhould have commended you.

W. Fuller. After I had made that Diſcovery, the Court at St. Germains did what they could to ruine me. There have been a great many Books lately printed, to prove the Legitimacy of the Prince of Wales, and none of them taken notice of.

L. C. J. Holt. You charge a great many Perſons with correſponding with France, and cannot prove it.

W. Fuller. I charge none, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. You charge all that are intimated in the Books. The ſame Mr. Jones will prove by undeniable Demonſtration, that he diſtributed more than 180000 l. by the French King's Order, to ſeveral Perſons employed under the Government. Now theſe Perſons are ſcandalized; for you produce no Proof of what you charge them with: And you ſay, I had the Original of this from Mr. Jones, &c. Where are they?

W. Fuller. If your Lordſhip will pleaſe to grant me your Warrant, I will produce them.

L. C. J. Holt. If you take on you to make good theſe Things, you cannot in Juſtice require my Warrant to fetch in others to prove what you ſay; you muſt prove it.

W. Fuller. By his own Confeſſion, he has been guilty of High-Treaſon; and therefore will not appear without a Warrant.

L. C. J. Holt. You cannot pretend to have a Right to any Warrant.

W. Fuller. If your Lordſhip pleaſe to give me Leave to ſay ſomething in my Defence-----

L. C. J. Holt. Yes, if it be to any Purpoſe.

W. Fuller. I am unacquainted with the Laws, and have not-----

L. C. J. Holt. What is that to the Purpoſe? You are not to make Libels, nor traduce Miniſters of State. What have you to ſay to that?

W. Fuller. When I had printed this Book, I was ſummoned before the Lords; and after that was committed to the Fleet. My Friends were all called before the Lords; and by my Lord Jeffreys and other Lords, there were ſuch Queſtions aſked, as I believe were never aſk'd before----

L. C. J. Holt.

L. C. J. Holt. This is not to be endured; you do but aggravate your Crime.

W. Fuller. This is not what I would offer.

L. C. J. Holt. If you can offer any Matter to prove what you have writ, let us hear it.

W. Fuller. Mr. Jones has confeſs'd himſelf guilty of High-Treaſon, and therefore cannot appear.

L. C. J. Holt. Where is he? Where did he make this Confeſſion?

W. Fuller. In the Country.

L. C. J. Holt. Before whom?

W. Fuller. I do not know that; I was not with him when he did it.

L. C. J. Holt. Where is the Man?

W. Fuller. If your Lordſhip will pleaſe to give me your Warrant, I will produce him.

L. C. J. Holt. Shall I make a Bargain with you? Why have you not produced him all this while, before the Houſe of Lords, and the Houſe of Commons?

W. Fuller. Mr. Attorney did ſay I appealed to the Lords. I was called before them; I made no Application to them, but was called by the Order of the Houſe.

Mr. At. Gen. But you was there.

W. Fuller. I was there; and there were Three Letters read of mine in the Houſe, and I deſire they may be read here.

L. C. J. Holt. What is that to the purpoſe? Can you produce your Witneſſes?

W. Fuller. Mr. Jones is now in Hampſhire.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you not had Time enough to procure him?

W. Fuller. My Lord, I cannot force him. I was with the Secretary of State, and told him, Jones will not come in voluntarily; if the Lords will grant a Warrant, he may be brought. I offer'd this to the Houſe of Commons too, but it was not granted. I could not force him.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. The Secretary of State ſent one or two for him.

W. Fuller. He ſent no body.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen of the Jury, you hear what the Purpoſe of this Information is, and you hear how it is proved; and you hear the Witneſs ſay, He brought theſe two ſcandalous Books to the Preſs, and that he corrected them; and he owns, he was the Publiſher of them: And if you believe he did do ſo, you are to find him Guilty.

The Jury brought him in Guilty, without going from the Bar.

It was proved alſo, That he had Two Keys to the Powder-Room; and that having loſt or miſlaid his own, he, without making any Application to the Commanding Officer then on Board, who kept the other Key, prevailed with William Baker, Carpenter of the ſaid Ship, to break open the Door.

In Mitigation of his Offence, he alledged, That examining into the Powder-Room, he found Three Barrels that had received wet, which cauſed his Removal of the Forty Three Barrels; but had little to ſay for his concealing them from the Surveyors. Whereupon the Court adjudged, That the ſaid Offence falling under the 33d Article of War, the ſaid John Arthur ſhould be carried from Ship to Ship in a Boat, with a Halter about his Neck, the Provoſt-Marſhal declaring his Crimes; and all his Pay, as Gunner, to be mulct'd and forfeited to the Cheſt at Chatham; and be render'd uncapable of ſerving her Majeſty in any other Employment.

Who depoſed, That the ſaid Colonel Richard Kirkby, the Van in the Line of Battel, the 19th of Auguſt, about Three in the Afternoon, the Signal of Battel being out, the Admiral was forc'd to ſend his Boat on Board of Kirkby, and command his making more Sail, and get a-breaſt of the Enemy's Van, for that he was reſolved to fight them. About Four the Fight began; but the ſaid Kirkby did not fire above Three Broadſides, then luffed up out of the Line, and out of Gun-ſhot, leaving the Admiral engaged with Two French Ships till dark, and the ſaid Kirkby receiving no Damage: That his Behaviour cauſed great Fear of his Deſertion. At Night the ſaid Kirkby fell a-ſtern, leaving the Admiral to purſue the Enemy.

That the 20th, at Day-light, the Admiral and Ruby were within Shot of all the Enemy's Ships; but Colonel Kirkby was near Three or Four Miles a-ſtern. The Admiral then made a new Line of Battel, and took the Van himſelf, and ſent to each Ship, with a Command to the ſaid Kirkby to keep his Line and Station; which he promiſed to do, but did not; keeping Two or Three Miles a-ſtern, tho' the Signal for Battel was out all Night. The French making a Running Fight, the Admiral and Ruby plied the Enemy with their Chaſe-Guns till Night. That the 21ſt Day, at Light, the Admiral was on the Quarter of the Second Ship of the Enemies Rear, and the Ruby on the Board-ſide, very near, who plied him warmly, and met the ſame Return; by which he was ſo much diſabled, though the Admiral came in to his Aſſiſtance, that he was forc'd to be towed off: And this prevented the Admiral's Deſign of cutting off the Enemy's ſternmoſt Ship. This Action laſted Two Hours; during which Time, the ſaid Kirkby lay a Broad-ſide of the Sternmoſt Ship; as did alſo the Windſor, John Conſtable Commander. The Admiral then commanded the ſaid Kirkby to ply his Broadſides on him. But this having no Effect, the ſecond Time he commanded the ſame; but he fired not one Gun: Nay, his own Boatſwain and Seamen repeated the Admiral's Command to him; but were ſeverely us'd, and threatned that he would run his Sword through the Boatſwain. And had the ſaid Kirkby done his Duty, and Captain Conſtable his, they muſt have taken or deſtroyed the ſaid French Ships. The Admiral, tho' he received much Damage in his Sails, Rigging, Yards, &c. yet continued the Race all Night. That the 22d, in the Morning at Day-light, the Greenwich was Three Leagues a-ſtern; and the Defiance, Colonel Kirkby, with the reſt of the Ships, Three or Four Miles, the Falmouth excepted, whoſe Station was in the Rear: That the ſaid Captain Samuel Vincent, ſeeing the Behaviour of the ſaid Kirkby, and the reſt, came up with the Admiral, and ſent his Lieutenant on Board, deſiring Leave to aſſiſt him; which was accepted: The ſaid Kirkby never coming up; and by his Example the reſt did the ſame, as if they had a Deſign to ſacrifice the Admiral and Falmouth to the Enemy, or deſert. The Enemy were now about a Mile and an half a-head, ſtanding in to the Shore with a ſmall Breeze at W. fetched within Sambey, the Admiral firing at the Sternmoſt till Night, and continued the Purſuit; and a Flemiſh Ship that was in Monſieur Du Caſſe's Company, on Board of which was all the French and Spaniſh new Governors and other Officers, made her Eſcape. That the 23d, in the Morning, at Day-light, the Enemy bore North-Weſt, diſtant about Four or Five Miles, the Admiral and Falmouth purſuing; but the ſaid Colonel Kirkby, with the reſt of the Ships, being Three or Four Miles a-ſtern; (tho' there was not a Ship but, before and after the Battel, ſailed better than the Admiral.) About Seven in the Evening, it having been ſome time calm, a Gale of Wind ſprung up, the Admiral and Falmouth were about Two Miles from the Enemy; and at Eight, the ſaid Kirkby and his ſeparate Squadron was fair up with the Admiral: And this Day the Admiral ſent away the diſabled Ruby, George Walton Commander, to Port-Royal; and under his Convoy the Anna Galley, retaken from the French.

That the 24th, in the Morning, about Two of the Clock, the Admiral came up with the Sternmoſt of the Enemy within Call, and the Falmouth pretty near; but the ſaid Colonel Kirkby, with the reſt of the Ships, according to Cuſtom, were Three or Four Miles a-ſtern. The Admiral and Falmouth engaged the ſaid Ship; and at Three the Admiral was wounded, his Right Leg being broke, but commanded the Fight to be vigorouſly maintained; and at Day-light the Enemy's Ship appeared like a Wreck, her Mizon Maſt ſhot by the Board, her Main Yard in Three or Four Pieces, her Foretopſail Yard the ſame, her Stays and Rigging all ſhot to pieces. Soon after Day, the ſaid Kirkby, with the reſt of the Ships, being to windward of the ſaid diſabled Ship, he the ſaid Kirkby, with the reſt of his ſeparate Squadron, fired about Twelve Guns at the ſaid Ship; and fearing a ſmart Return from her, he lower'd his Mizon Yard, his Topſails on the Caps, ſet his Spritſail, Spritſail Topſail, and Foretopſail Stayſail, and having waired his Ship, ſet his Sail, and run away before the Wind from the poor diſabled Ship, the reſt following his ſaid Example; though they had but Eight Men kill'd on Board them all (except the Admiral.) The other Three French Men of War were at this Time of Action about Four Miles diſtant from their maimed Ship; whereupon the Enemy ſeeing the Cowardice of the ſaid Colonel Kirkby, and the reſt of the Engliſh Ships, in a Squale bore down upon the Admiral, who lay cloſe by the diſabled Ship; and having got in their Spritſail Yard, gave him all their Fire; and running between him and the diſabled Ship, remann'd her, and took her in. The Admiral's Rigging being very much ſhatter'd, was oblig'd to lie and refit till Ten a-Clock, a-Clock, and then continued the Purſuit; and the reſt of the Fleet following in the greateſt Diſorder imaginable, the Admiral commanded Captain Fogg to ſtand a-breaſt of the Enemies Van, and then to attack him, and having then a fine ſteady Gale, the like not happening during the whole Engagement; and further ordered that he ſhould ſend to all the Captains to keep the Line of Battel, and behave themſelves like Engliſhmen; and this Meſſage was ſent by Captain Wade then on Board the Bredah. That the ſaid Colonel Kirkby on the Receipt of this Meſſage, and ſeeing the Admiral's Reſolution to engage, came on Board him, who then lay wounded in a Cradle; and without common Reſpect of enquiring after his Health, he the ſaid Kirkby expreſſed theſe Words following, viz. That he wonder'd that the Admiral ſhould offer to engage the French again, it being not neceſſary, ſafe, nor convenient, having had Six Days Trial of their Strength; and then magnified that of the French, and leſſened that of the Engliſh. But the Admiral being ſurprized at his Speech, ſaid it was but one Man's Opinion, and that he would have the reſt of the Captains; and accordingly ordered the Signal to be made for all the Captains to come on Board; and at this Time the Admiral and the reſt of the Ships were to Windward, and within Shot of the Enemy, and had the faireſt Opportunity that in ſix Days preſented, to chaſe, engage, and deſtroy the Enemy.

That the ſaid Colonel Kirkby had endeavoured to poiſon the reſt of the Captains; forming a Writing under his own Hand, which was cowardly and erroneous: The Subſtance of which was, Not to engage the Enemy any more. He the ſaid Colonel Kirkby brought it to the Admiral, who reproved him for it, ſaying it would be the Ruin of all: Upon which he the ſaid Colonel Kirkby went away, but writ another in the following Words.

At a Conſultation held on board her Majeſty's Ship Bredah, the 24th of Auguſt, 1702. off of Carthagena, on the main Continent of America.

It is the Opinion of us whoſe Names are underwritten,

1. Of the great Want of Men in Number, Quality, and the Weakneſs of thoſe they have.

2. The general Want of Ammunition of moſt Sorts.

3. Each Ship Maſts, Yards, Sails and Rigging, being all in a great Meaſure diſabled.

4. The Winds are ſo ſmall and variable, that the Ships can't be govern'd by any Strength: Each Ship,

5. Having experienced the Enemy in Six Days Battel, following the Sqnadron conſiſting of Five Men of War and a Fireſhip, under the Command of Monſieur Du Caſſe; their Equipage conſiſting in Guns from 60 to 80, and having a great Number of Seamen and Soldiers on Board for the Service of Spain.

For which Reaſons above-mentioned, we think it not fit to engage the Enemy at this Time, but to keep them Company this Night, and obſerve their Motion; and if a fair Opportunity ſhall happen of Wind and Weather, once more to try our Strength with them.

Richard Kirkby, Samuel Vincent, John Conſtable, Chriſtopher Fogg, Cooper Wade, and Thomas Hudſon.

That during the Six Days Engagement, he never encouraged his Men; but by his own Example of dodging behind the Mizon Maſt, and falling down upon the Deck on the Noiſe of Shot, and denying them the Proviſions of the Ship, the ſaid Men were under great Diſcouragement. That he amended the Maſter of the Ship's Journal of the Tranſactions of the Fight, according to his own Inclination.

All which being proved aforeſaid:

The ſaid Colonel Richard Kirkby denied the whole excepting the pretended written Conſultation: Which being ſhown to him, he own'd his own Hand and Name too. He brought ſeveral of his Men to give an Account of his Behaviour during the Fight; but their Teſtimonies were inſignificant; and his Behaviour to the Court and Witneſſes moſt unbecoming a Gentleman. And being particularly ask'd by the Court, why he did not fire at the Enemies Sternmoſt Ship, which lay point-blank with him the 21ſt of Auguſt? He replied, Becauſe they did not fire at him, for that they had a Reſpect for him: Which Words upon ſeveral Occaſions, during the Trial, he repeated Three ſeveral Times.

Where upon due Conſideration of the Premiſes, of great Advantages the Engliſh had in Number, being Seven to Four, of Guns 122 more than the other; with his Acts and Behaviour as aforeſaid, and more particularly his ill-timed Paper or Conſultation as afore-recited, which obliged the Admiral for the Preſervation of her Majeſty's Fleet, to give over the Chaſe and Fight, to the irreparable Diſhonour of the Queen, her Crown and Dignity, and came to Port-Royal, Jamaica: For which Reaſons the Court was of Opinion, That he fell under the 11th, 12th, 14th and 20th Articles of War; and adjudged accordingly, That he be ſhot to Death: But further decreed, That the Execution of Col. Kirkby be deferred till her Majeſty's Pleaſure be known therein; but he continued a cloſe Priſoner till that Time.

CAptain John Conſtable, Commander of the Windſor, was Tryed before the aforeſaid Court, on a Complaint exhibited by the Judge Advocate on the Behalf of the Queen, for Breach of Orders, Neglect of Duty, and other ill Practices committed during a Fight commenced the 19th of Auguſt, 1702. as aforeſaid. (Refer to Colonel Kirkby's Tryal.)

The Witneſſes ſworn on the behalf of the Queen, were,

2 Captains,
7 Lieutenants,
5 Maſters,
2 Other Officers,
The Honourable John Benbow, Eſq; Admiral.

17 Witneſſes.

Who depoſed, That Captain John Conſtable never kept his firſt nor ſecond Line of Battel, but acted in all Things as Colonel Kirkby had done. That the Admiral had fired Two Guns to command him into the ſecond Line of Battel. That he did ſet more ſail in order to come into the Line, and his Station; but upon Colonel Kirkby's calling to him to keep his Line, he accordingly did. That the Admiral ſent his Lieutenant Landgridge to command him the ſaid Conſtable to keep his Line of Battel within half a Cables Length of the Ship before him, which was twice verbally delivered. And that he ſigned the Paper, Conſultation, as is in Colonel Kirkby's Tryal aforeſaid; tending to the Hindrance and Diſſervice of her Majeſty, &c. and was drunk during the Fight, &c.

All which being fully proved as aforeſaid; the ſaid Captain John Conſtable, denied his Breach of Orders, or Neglect of Duty; but owned the ſigning the Paper, or Conſultation prepared by Colonel Kirkby, and did it at his Requeſt, and for that he had received Damage in his Maſts and Rigging; and own'd no other Article to be true, but that he had ſigned to. He called ſeveral Witneſſes to his Behaviour during the Fight; who all declared he kept the Quarter-Deck during the Engagement, and encouraged his Men to fight; and that ſometimes he gave them Drams of Rum; and that Verbal Meſſage delivered by Lieutenant Landgridge, was delivered him in ſome Heat and Paſſion, and was underſtood to be, to keep the Line within half a Cable's Length, and to follow Kirkby, which he did. That he ſo underſtood it himſelf, and ſeveral of his Men: He prayed the Mercy of the Court, and ſo concluded, &c.

Where upon due Conſideration of the Premiſes, the Court were of Opinion, that the ſaid John Conſtable, Captain, fell under the 12th, 14th, and 20th Articles of War; and adjudged the ſaid Captain John Conſtable to be immediately caſhier'd, and render'd incapable of ſerving Her Majeſty, and be impriſoned during her Majeſty's Pleaſure, and ſent home to England a Priſoner in the firſt Ship the Admiral ſhall think fit; and be confined a Priſoner till then.

Oct. 10, 12. CAptain Cooper Wade, Commander of the Greenwich, was Tryed before the aforeſaid Court; on a Complaint exhibited by the Judge Advocate, on the Behalf of the Queen, of high Crimes and Miſdemeanors, of Cowardiſe, Breach of Orders, and Neglect of Duty, and other ill Practices, committed during a Fight, commenc'd the 19th of Auguſt, 1702. as aforeſaid. Refer to that Part of Colonel Kirkby's Tryal.

The Witneſſes ſworn on behalf of the Queen.
The Honourable John Benbow, Eſq; Admiral,
9 Lieutenants,
3 Maſters,
3 Inferior Officers.

16 Witneſſes.

Who depoſed, That during the Six Days Engagement, he never kept the Line of Battel, fired all his Shot in vain, not reaching half way to the Enemy; That he was often told the ſame by his Lieutenants and other Officers; but notwithſtanding, he commanded them to fire, ſaying they muſt do ſo, or the Admiral would not believe they fought if they did not continue the Fire. That during the whole Fight the Admiral was engaged in, the ſaid Captain Wade received but one Shot from the Enemy; That he was in Drink the greateſt Part of the Time of Action; And that he ſigned the Paper or Conſultation drawn up by Colonel Kirkby, as aforeſaid; and in the Time of Fight arraigned the honourable Courage and Conduct of the Admiral.

All which being fully proved as aforeſaid:

That the ſaid Captain Cooper Wade denied the Arraignment of the honourable Courage and Conduct of the Admiral, during the whole Six Days Engagement; declaring the Bravery and good Management of the Admiral in this Time of Action, and that no Man living could do more or better, for the Honour of the Queen and Nation. He called ſome Perſons to juſtify his Behaviour, who ſaid little in his Favour. He begged the Mercy of the Court, and ſo concluded. Whereupon the Court was of Opinion, That the ſaid Cooper Wade fell under the 11th, 12th, 14th and 20th Articles of War; and accordingly adjudged the ſaid Cooper Wade to be ſhot to Death: But it is farther declared by the Court, That the Execution of the ſaid Cooper Wade be deferred till her Majeſty's Pleaſure be known therein; but be continued a cloſe Priſoner till that Time.

October 12. CAptain Samuel Vincent, Commander of the Falmouth, and Captain Chriſtopher Fogg, Commander of the Bredah, were tryed before the aforeſaid Court, on a Complaint exhibited by the Judge Advocate, for high Crimes and Miſdemeanors, and ill Practices in Time of Admiral Benbow's Fight with Monſieur Du Caſſe as aforeſaid, in ſigning a Paper called a Conſultation and Opinion held on Board the Bredah, the 24th of Auguſt, 1702. (Which is Verbatim recited in Colonel Kirkby's Tryal, to which refer.) It tending to the great Hindrance and Diſſervice of her Majeſty's Fleet then in Fight: And the ſaid Paper ſo written, being ſhowed to each of them, they ſeverally owned their Hands to the ſame. But the ſaid Captain Vincent and Captain Fogg, for reaſon of ſigning the ſame, alledged, That being deſerted during each Days Engagement by Colonel Richard Kirkby in the Defiance, Captain John Conſtable in the Windſor, Captain Cooper Wade in the Greenwich, and Captain Thomas Hudſon in the Pendennis, and left as a Prey to Monſieur Du Caſſe, they had great reaſon to believe they ſhould be Captives to the Enemy. And the Honourable John Benbow, Eſq; Admiral, &c. coming into Court, declared, That during the Six Days Fight the ſaid Captain Fogg behaved himſelf with great Courage, Bravery, and Conduct, like a true Engliſhman, and Lover of his Queen and Country: And that the ſaid Captain Samuel Vincent valiantly and couragiouſly behaved himſelf during the ſaid Action, and deſired Leave to come into his the ſaid Admiral's Aſſiſtance, then engaged with the Enemy, and deſerted by all the reſt of the aboveſaid Ships; which he did, to the Relief of the ſaid Admiral, who otherwiſe had fallen into the Hands of Monſieur Du Caſſe.

Whereupon the Court being of Opinion, That the ſigning of the aforeſaid Paper brought them under the Cenſure of the 20th Article of War, accordingly adjudged Captain Samuel Vincent, and Captain Chriſtopher Fogg, to be ſuſpended: But the Execution thereof is hereby reſpited, till his Royal Highneſs Prince George of Denmark, Lord High Admiral of England, &c. his further Pleaſure be known therein.

Captain Thomas Hudſon, Commander of the Pendennis, died on Board his ſaid Ship, in the Harbour of Port-Royal, at Jamaica, the

At Five-a-Clock the 12th Day of October, 1702. the Preſident, &c. having finiſhed all the Buſineſs before the Court, diſſolved the ſame.

THE

The Tryals of Haagen Swendsen, Sarah Baynton, John Hartwell, and John Spurr, at the Queen's-Bench Bar, November the 25th, 1702. Published by Authority.

ON Wedneſday the 18th of November, the Grand-Jury of Weſtminſter found the Bill of Indictment againſt the Defendants. On that Day an Habeas Corpus was moved for, and left at Newgate, and the Keeper refuſed to bring up the Priſoners on Thurſday, but brought them on Friday Morning; and then they were Arraigned, and ſeverally pleaded not Guilty; and the Court then appointed the Tryal to be on Wedneſday the 25th, that being the laſt Day that they could be tried, to have Sentence given againſt Convicted Perſons in that Term.

Mr. Swendſen moved for a longer Time, alledging, That a German, a material Witneſs for him, was gone into Yorkſhire. The Court then told him, that if any Perſon would Swear that any of his Witneſſes could not be at the Tryal on Wedneſday, the Court would put off the Tryal; but no Oath thereof being made, the Tryal came on upon the Day appointed.

The Court being ſat, at which were preſent the Right Honourable the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, Sir John Powell, Sir Littleton Powis, and Sir Henry Gould:

Haagen Swendſen being brought to the Bar, Proclamation was made for Silence; and he being a Foreigner, claimed as his Right, the Benefit of a Party Jury; which was allowed him, and leave to Challenge whom he would. He Challenged ſome; and the Gentlemen ſworn were, viz.

Cler. of Arr. Haagen Swendſen hold up thy Hand. Which he did.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen of the Jury look upon the Priſoner at the Bar. He ſtands Indicted by the Name of Haagen Swendſen, late of the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, Yeoman; for that on the Sixth of November, 1702, one Pleaſant Rawlins, Gentlewoman, and a Virgin, and Unmarried, Grand-daughter and Heir of William Rawlins, Sen. then deceaſed, and Daughter and Heir of William Rawlins, Jun. before then alſo deceaſed, was above the Age of Sixteen, and under the Age of Eighteen, and then had Subſtance and Eſtate in Moveables and in Lands and Tenements, viz. in Money, Goods and Chattels, to the Value of 2000 l. and in Lands and Tenements to the Value of 20 l. per Annum, to Her and the Heirs of her Body.

And that the ſeveral Perſons, Swendſen, Baynton, Hartwell, Spurr and Tho. Holt, the ſaid 6th Day of November, with Force and Arms, the ſaid Pleaſant Rawlins, as aforeſaid, being Unmarried, and Heir, and having Subſtance and Eſtate at the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in this County, for the Lucre of ſuch Eſtate and Subſtance of the ſaid Pleaſant Rawlins, did unlawfully, feloniouſly, violently, and againſt the Will of the ſaid Pleaſant Rawlins, take, carry, and lead away, with intent to cauſe and procure the ſaid Pleaſant Rawlins, againſt her Will, in Matrimony to the ſaid Haagen Swendſen to be joined, and to him to be Wedded and Married; and that the ſaid Haagen Swendſen being a Man of a diſhoneſt Converſation, and of none, or very little Eſtate or Subſtance, then, and there, by the Help and Procurement of the other Defendants, did feloniouſly marry the ſaid Pleaſant Rawlins, and was joined to her in Matrimony; and then, and there, her did carnally know; to the great Diſpleaſure of God, againſt the Laws of the Queen, to the Diſgrace and Diſparagement of the ſaid Pleaſant Rawlins, and to the great Grief and Diſconſolation of all her Friends, to the evil Example of all others, againſt the Form of the Statute, and againſt the Queen's Peace, her Crown and Dignity. And that the ſaid Tho. Holt, after the ſaid Pleaſant Rawlins had been ſo unlawfully, violently, and feloniouſly taken, carried, and led away, and to the ſaid Haagen Swendſen Married and Wedded as aforeſaid; well knowing the ſaid Pleaſant Rawlins to have been ſo taken and led away againſt her Will, and to the ſaid Haagen Swendſen to be Wedded and Married, afterwards, viz. the ſaid Sixth Day of November, in the ſaid firſt Year of the Reign of this Queen, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, the ſame Pleaſant Rawlins, and alſo the ſaid Haagen Swendſen, did wilfully, knowingly and feloniouſly receive, abet, comfort, conceal and aſſiſt, the ſaid Haagen Swendſen, with the ſaid Pleaſant Rawlins to lye, and her carnally to know, then and there did feloniouſly incite, abet, help, cauſe and procure, againſt the Form of the ſaid Statute, and againſt the Queen's Peace, her Crown and Dignity.

Cler. of Arr. Upon which Indictment he hath been arraign'd, and pleaded not Guilty, put himſelf upon God and you the Jury at the Bar, being half Foreigners and half Natives.

Cryer. O yes! If any one will give Evidence on behalf of our Sovereign Lady the Queen, againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, let them come forth, and they ſhall be heard; the Priſoner ſtands at the Bar for his Deliverance.

Mr. Swendſ. Pray, my Lord, let me have Pen and Ink, I am not allowed Council; (which his Lordſhip granted.) My Lord, I would beg the Favour of your Lordſhip, that the Evidence may be examined apart.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is it not your Lordſhip's Pleaſure to call the other Jury, the Facts are ſo twiſted together, and have ſuch a Dependance one upon another, that there will be an Inconvenience to us, if it be otherwiſe?

Mr. Serj. Darnel. They may ſtand at the Bar by themſelves.

Mr. Montague. Or elſe it will break our Evidence; they may ſtand on the other ſide.

L. C. J. Holt. He muſt be tried ſingle.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Council for the Queen: It was formerly reckon'd a leſs Crime to ſteal a Fortune of 10000 l. than to ſteal 12 d. of her Money or Goods; but in the Third Year of the Reign of King Henry VII. to cure this Defect in the Law, an Act of Parliament was made, whereby the taking away a Woman, having Goods or Lands, or being an Heir apparent, contrary to her Will, and afterwards Marrying her, is made Felony, and upon this Law the preſent Indictment is grounded.

Pleaſant Rawlins was the Daughter of Mr. William Rawlins; he having left her a conſiderable Eſtate, appointed George Bright and William Buſby to be her Guardians. Mr. Bright being dead, the other Guardian Mr. Buſby, for the better Education of Mrs. Rawlins, placed her under the Care of his Siſter Sabina Buſby. Mrs. Buſby and Mrs. Rawlins have lodged about Three Years laſt at the Houſe of the Widow Nightingale. Haagen Swendſen, with Mrs. Baynton, lodged at Mrs. Blake's in Holborn, and there they firſt projected and contrived how they might make a Prey of this young Gentlewoman. The firſt Step they took towards executing this Deſign, was to get Lodgings at Mrs. Nightingale's Houſe for Mrs. Baynton; for which Purpoſe ſhe was to paſs for a Country Gentlewoman of a plentiful Fortune. One Mrs. St. John was ſent to Mrs. Nightingale to take Lodgings for Mrs. Baynton, commending her to be a very good Woman; and that having the Misfortune of a Law-Suit, and being obliged for that Reaſon to attend it in Town, 'twas her greateſt Care to lodge in ſo reputable a Houſe as Mrs. Nightingale's was. Under this Pretence, Lodgings were there taken for her. At her firſt coming, ſhe was forced to put on a Diſguiſe; ſhe ſeem'd to live a virtuous Life, that ſhe might ingratiate her ſelf into the Favour of the Family, as often as ſhe had an Opportunity of converſing with any of them: She pretended ſhe had a Brother of a good Eſtate, one of the beſt Men in the World; and ſhe hoped he would ſhortly come to Town, that ſhe might ſee him. In a little Time after came this Swendſen (being nothing related to her) and appeared as her Brother, and frequently viſited her under Pretence of that Relation. But Mrs. Baynton was too well known in Town to continue long undiſcover'd; Notice was ſoon given to Mrs. Buſby of the vicious Life Mrs. Baynton had led, and that ſhe was not fit to be in the ſame Houſe with her. Mrs. Baynton having diſcovered this, and finding ſhe had no Time to bring about her Deſigns by Frauds and Wiles, and that no other Way was left but open Force, the Priſoner at the Bar and ſhe took Meaſures accordingly; and in order thereto 'twas agreed, that a Writ ſhould be taken out againſt Mrs. Rawlins. Mrs. Baynton contrives to get Mrs. Rawlins and Mrs. Buſby into a Coach, and at a Place appointed a Signal was given, and the Writ executed; and Mrs. Buſby, Mrs. Rawlins, and Mrs. Baynton, were all carried in the Coach to the Star and Garter Tavern in Drury-Lane, where particular Care was taken to ſeparate Mrs. Buſby and Mrs. Rawlins, becauſe unleſs they did that, they could not hope to accompliſh their Deſigns. Mrs. Buſby was by Force kept at that Tavern, without any Proceſs againſt her till the Marriage was over; but Mrs. Rawlins was forcibly carried to Hartwell's the Bailiff's Houſe. Mrs. Baynton pretended to be much concern'd for Mrs. Rawlins, and went in all Haſte to call ſome of her Friends to be Bail for her. Some Time after Mrs. Rawlins was got to Hartwell's, in comes Mrs. Baynton, pretending that by mere Accident ſhe had diſcover'd her being there, hearing her Name as ſhe was paſſing by the Door; that ſhe had been in Search, but could find no Help; and that her laſt Hopes was her dear Brother Swendſen, and ſhe doubted not but he would Bail her: He by Agreement had been plac'd near the Bailiff's, and ſo was ſoon found, and brought thither, and was very ready to aſſiſt her. In order to her Diſcharge, the Priſoner, the Bailiff, and Mrs. Baynton, carry Mrs. Rawlins to another Tavern, where they had a Parſon ready for the Purpoſe, and there this young Gentlewoman, thro' divers Artifices, of which you ſhall have a full Account, was conſtrain'd to Marry. Theſe are the principal Circumſtances, and they ſhall be plainly proved to you.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. My Lord, I think it neceſſary to open a little the Manner of getting this young Lady away, and the Contrivance of getting her into the Coach; for your Lordſhip knows, that if any are taken away without their Conſent, tho' they do afterwards conſent to be Married to ſuch Taker, yet he is guilty within this Statute. They were reſolved to take this Woman by Force, when they found they could not otherwiſe accompliſh their End. And Mrs. Baynton knowing Mrs. Buſby and Mrs. Rawlins were uſed every Friday Morning to go to a Chapel called Oxendon Chapel, Mrs. Baynton ſaid, I am going to Golden-Square, and if you are going to the Chapel, I'll ſet you down if you pleaſe: They, glad of ſuch a Convenience, thought no Harm, but went in the Coach. They had gone no further than Dartmouth-Street, but theſe Bailiffs come. Hartwell opens the Coach, and goes into it; they cry out to the People for Help; Hartwell pluck'd up the Glaſſes, and thoſe Bayliffs about the Coach cryed, It is an Arreſt of a Cheat that owes Money to Tradeſmen. By this Means they carried her to the Star and Garter in Drury-Lane. When they had them there, the next Thing was to get her away from her Friend Busby, for unleſs that were done, they deſpair'd of getting her to marry Swendſen. Mrs. Baynton pretended to go find out Mrs. Rawlins's Friends to Bail her; but that was to meet with Swendſen: As ſoon as Mrs. Baynton was gone, the Bayliffs forced Mrs. Rawlins from Mrs. Busby, and Mrs. Busby was kept there by Force till Five a-Clock, till all was over. The Bayliffs as they carried Mrs. Rawlins away, called her Jade and Slut, and bid her pay her Debts; and ſaid, Put on your Mask you Jade, for we will have no Mob to reſcue you; ſhe put on her Maſk, and the reſt of the Bayliffs followed her, and ſaid, She was a Cheat and was arreſted. Then it was Time to open the Scene. Hartwell carried her to his Houſe, and Mrs. Baynton pretending to be coming by and hearing of her Name, open'd the Door, and by an extraordinary Manner burſt into the Houſe, and told her, Madam, I went to all your Friends, but could find none at home; but I have been with my dear Brother Swendſen, who will come with another to Bail you, and 'twill not be long before they come; for they were placed at the Five Bells very near Hartwell's Houſe: Upon this ſhe went out again, and brought in Swendſen, and one Holt who keeps the Mitre Tavern in King-ſtreet, Weſtminſter. And truly when they were there, and talked of being Bail, then they would all go in a Coach to the Vine Tavern, the Place where they deſigned the Marriage;

Marriage; and they had got Two proper Inſtruments ready there for the Buſineſs, the Chaplain and the Clerk of the Fleet. When they had her there, my Lord, the Bailiff ask'd if ſhe had any Bail? Mrs. Baynton ſaid, that Mr. Swendſen and Mr. Holt would be her Bail; the Bailiff ſaid, I will not take Swendſen's Bail, he is a Man I know not, but Mr. Holt I know, I will take his. The poor Woman begged upon her Knees, for Chriſt's Sake let me ſend for my Friends; and they pretended to ſend for abundance of them, but none came. Then ſhe was threatned with Newgate, for that often came out; If you cannot get Bail, to Newgate you muſt go, and there muſt lye. This was often ſaid by Hartwell. Then Mrs. Baynton cryed (as ſhe could do at command) O how I pity you Mrs. Rawlins, Is there no way in the Law to help you? I believe if you were married that would put an End to the Action. Then ſpeaking to the Bayliff ſaid, If this Gentlewoman were married, would it not put an End to it? The Bayliff ſaid, I can't tell but it might, if ſuch a Thing were. Well, now her rich Brother Swendſen is propoſed, ſhe muſt be married to him; the Bayliffs threatning her ſeverely, that to Newgate ſhe muſt go if ſhe did not. Immediately they brought in the Chaplain and Clerk of the Fleet, and read the Form of Marriage, and after carried her to ſeveral Places, leſt they might be followed and prevented, Beds being provided for the Purpoſe at thoſe Places, as your Lordſhip ſhall hear. And, my Lord, this taking of this Woman thus away againſt her Will, is an Offence againſt the Act of 3 Hen. VII. and my Lord, we deſire that the Statute may be read.

L. C. J. Holt. It ſhall be explain'd.

Mr. Broderick. My Lord, there was a whole Night compleated before the Priſoner was ſeized.

Then Mr. W. Busby is called for, and ſworn.

He is asked, Do you know Mrs. Pleaſant Rawlins?

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Give an Account of her.

Mr. Busby. She is the Daughter of William Rawlins Deceaſed, who left his Eſtate to Dr. Bright and my ſelf, to be ſold for Payment of his Debts and Legacies, and left the Surpluſage to his Daughter, which is about 2000 l.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. What Lands has ſhe?

Mr. Busby. She has 20 l. a Year.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. What Age is ſhe of?

Mr. Busby. She is near Eighteen.

Mr. Montague. Was ſhe ever married, or no?

Mr. Busby. She was unmarried.

Then Mrs. Sabina Busby was called and ſworn, as alſo Mrs. Nightingale.

Mr. Swendſen. My Lord, I beg the favour that only one Witneſs be heard at a Time.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mrs. Nightingale, Do you know Mrs. Pleaſant Rawlins, and Mrs. Busby?

Mrs. Nightingale. Yes, I do.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Have they lodged at your Houſe?

Mrs. Nightingale. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long?

Mrs. Nightingale. Above Three Years.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Have you any Knowlege of Mrs. Baynton?

Mrs. Nightingale. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How came you acquainted with her?

Mrs. Nightingale. One Mrs. St. John came to me to know whether I took Boarders? I ſaid, I had taken ſome, but would take no more, unleſs it were the ſame Ladies again.

L. C. J. Holt. Who was it came to you?

Nightingale. One Mrs. St. John.

Sol. Gen. Mrs Nightingale, ſpeak out, that my Lord may hear you.

L. C. J. Holt. Did Mrs Busby lodge with you?

Nightingale. Yes, my Lord, we were very intimate before; and ſince it pleaſed God to take away her Husband, I was pleaſed with her, and very willing to take her into my Houſe.

Sol. Gen. Acquaint his Lordſhip how Mrs. St. John came to you.

Nightingale. Yes, my Lord, as near as I can. She came to me, and ask'd me, If I took Boarders? I told her, No, I would take none, except it were thoſe Ladies I had before: She told me, ſhe had an Acquaintance that was a Widow Lady that came out of Wiltſhire, about a Suit of Law, and would be in a very ſober Family near a Church. But however, I denied her Lodgings, and did expect to hear no more of her. But about three Weeks or a Month after, ſhe came to me again, and asked me whether I had altered my Reſolution?

L. C. J. Holt. Go on.

Nightingale. My Lord, Mrs. St. John ſaid, that the Lady was come to Town on the Saturday Night before, very much indiſpos'd in her Journey. I asked her whether ſhe knew this Baynton or no? Mrs. St. John ſaid, Yes; ſhe was very intimate in the Family, and ſhe ſaid a great deal more of her, which I cannot remember. She ſaid alſo, that ſhe would have Boarded her her ſelf, and would have been glad of her Company, if ſhe had had Conveniences for her. Then ſhe asked me, whether ſhe ſhould come her ſelf and give her own Character? We thought no harm, ſhe being a Woman, and not a Man. She further ſaid, that Mrs. Baynton had ſeen a Maid whom I knew, and ſhe believed ſhe would take her. I enquired of another who lived in the Mews, if he knew Mrs. Baynton; he ſaid, Yes, and that ſhe came of a good Family. At length ſhe came, and made a very modeſt Appearance in her Behaviour and Garb. She ſaid to me, that I was very curious in taking in Boarders, and for that ſhe liked me the better. I conſented ſhe ſhould come. She asked me what I would have a Week? I told her Twelve Shillings for her ſelf, and Ten Shillings for her Maid. She concluded to come on the Wedneſday following; which ſhe did with her Maid, a modeſt Girl, and a Neighbour, which gave me the more Encouragement. She carried her ſelf very well till Michaelmas-Day at Night, when we heard of her new Brother; ſhe ſeem'd elevated at the News, and fell into Convulſion-Fits, which I believed were real Fits. She ſaid ſhe had a dear Brother, a good Chriſtian, and he would come on the Morrow. When he came, he brought two Gentlewomen with him, very modeſt, which I never ſaw before, nor ſince. Mrs. Baynton made a Pot of Coffee, and ſent for a Bottle of Wine, and ſhe told her Brother before me, what good Lodgings ſhe had, and ſaid ſhe wiſhed he would come and lodge near them, for ſhe knew he had but a puny Stomach, and believed he would like her Victuals. He ſaid it was not convenient for him, becauſe his Buſineſs called him every Day to the Change. She ſaid alſo, there was a Bowling-Green near them, where he might divert himſelf. But all would not do. She asked me what I would have a Meal if her Brother ſhould come at any Time; I ſaid, when I had other Ladies, if any of their Friends came, I had Twelve-Pence a Meal of them. On Friday he came; I went to Church,

Church, and left them together at Cribbage, as I found them at my Return.

L. C. J. Holt. What Day of the Week was this?

Mrs. Nightingale. The Friday before the Sacrament. Mrs. Baynton ſaid to Mr. Swendſen, before Mrs. Buſby, You have an extraordinary Hand at making Punch; ſo they agreed to make a Bowl the Monday following; but Mrs. Rawlins hardly drank any, ſhe not liking any ſtrong Liquors. After this, ſhe told me, her Brother was very ill of his Journey, being lately come out of the Country, tho' I don't underſtand he was in't. The Monday before Michaelmas-Day, we were at Dinner with two more than our Family, when Mrs. Baynton ſaid, ſhe had an Intereſt in a Norway Ship, and invited us all aboard; But he, viz. Mr. Swendſen, did not come to our Houſe till Four Days after; but on Friday we concluded to go on Saturday; there were Eight of us in Company in all, Mrs. Rawlins, Mrs. Busby, I and my Daughter, and Mr. Ball another Lodger, belonging to the Exchequer. We went, and had much Diſcourſe; after having drank a Glaſs of Wine, the Cloath was laid, and the Maſter offered a Bowl of Punch; ſays Mr. Swendſen, Ladies, I would pleaſe you all, and leave you all to your Liberties to drink what you pleaſe.

L. C. J. Holt. Is this Perſon Mrs. Baynton's Brother?

Mrs. Night. This is he that went for her Brother.

L. C. J. Holt. Whereabouts is your Houſe?

Night. Near Tuttle-fields.

Mr. Sol. Gen. This Mrs. Baynton came to you under the Character of a Country Lady on a Law-Suit; do you underſtand that ſhe was ſo?

Mrs. Night. My Lord, She ſaid ſhe came from the Bath.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You miſapprehend the Queſtion; Do you underſtand that her Pretence was true or not?

Night. I enquired of ſeveral Perſons, who acquainted me that the Bayntons lived in Wiltſhire; but it was not long before we began to ſuſpect her, for there ſeemed to be an extraordinary Love between her and Swendſen, more than is uſual between Brother and Siſter. I ſaid, Madam, I wonder you don't marry your Brother. She ſaid, ſhe thought that 'twas not lawful. I ſaid there was ſuch a Thing done in Weſtminſter, of a Man's marrying Two Siſters.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray call to mind what Time it was that you firſt gave Notice to her that ſhe ſhould not continue in your Lodgings.

Night. When I firſt miſtruſted her, I gave Notice of it in my Family. But we being all Women, and fearful of her, thought not fit to give her Warning till her Month was up. But before that, ſhe came to me, and told me, and ſaid, Mrs. Nightingale, I have received a Letter from my Siſter Baynton in the Country, which informs me, that the Truſtees will agree, and ſo I deſign to return when my Month is up, for this Town is very chargeable. Very well ſaid I, for I expect ſome Ladies very ſhortly. I went down to my Family and expreſs'd my Joy to them, and ſaid, I was very glad Mrs. Baynton had prevented me, for if ſhe had not given me Warning, I would have given her Warning, for I reſolved ſhe ſhould not ſtay.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mrs. Nightingale, it ſeems you had Notice of Mrs. Baynton's ill Carriage; did you take any Notice of it to her ſelf?

Night. No; I did not, but I gave the Maid Notice as ſoon as I ſuſpected any thing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know whether the Maid had told any Thing to her or not?

Night. The Maid ſaid to her, Madam, don't you ſee a Strangeneſs in the Family? Yes, ſaid ſhe, I can ſee and bear a great deal; but when I am rouzed, I'll be like a Lion.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long was this before Mrs. Rawlins was taken away?

Night. I can't prefix the Time, but it was before ſhe gave me Warning.

L. C. J. Holt. Was ſhe gone from your Houſe before this Thing happen'd.

Night. No, my Lord ſhe told me on Wedneſday that her Time was out; but ſaid, There is a Fellow in Town that I fear will cheat me, and I am taking out a Statute of Bankruptcy againſt him, which I think will cauſe me to ſtay in Town a Week longer; ſhe alſo told me, ſhe had taken a Place in the Coach to go on Thurſday, but muſt loſe her Earneſt, for this Buſineſs would detain her a Week longer.

Mr. Raymond. Did you ever obſerve they were together in private?

Night. No, my Lord, we never had any Suſpicion of Mr. Swendſen, but of the Woman; for ſhe could put on all Manner of Diſguiſes.

Mrs. Busby being called, ſhe is ſworn.

Mr. Sol Gen. Mrs. Busby, pray do you know Mrs. Rawlins?

Mrs. Busby. Yes, I do.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How came you firſt acquainted with her?

Mrs. Busby. My Brother Busby was one of her Guardians, and put her under the Care of my Husband, while he was living, which was four Years ago this Chriſtmas. She came to us by the Conſent of her Guardian.

Mr. Sol. Gen. At what Place did you lodge?

Mrs. Busby. We lived in Stretton-Grounds, but ſince my Husband died, which is Three Years laſt July, I left Houſe-keeping, and then we went and lodged at Mrs. Nightingale's.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long have you continued at Mrs. Nightingale's?

Mrs. Busby. We have continued there ever ſince.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know Mrs. Baynton?

Mrs. Busby. Yes, I do, ſhe lodg'd at Mrs. Nightingale's.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was there any body who uſed to come to her there?

Mrs. Busby. None except a Change-Woman.

Coun. Do you know any Thing of Mr. Swendſen?

Mrs. Busby. Sir, The firſt of his coming to Mrs. Nightingale's, was the Day after Michaelmas Day. Mrs. Baynton ſaid, that ſhe had a Brother that was to come to Town, which he did the Day after, with Two Gentlewomen, which I never ſaw, either before or ſince; but Mr. Swendſen after this came ſeveral Times to her as her Brother, her Siſter's Husband; and ſhe deſired that he might dine with her ſometimes; for which ſhe agreed with Mrs. Nightingale at 12 d. per Meal.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was this Mrs. Rawlins at any Time in private with Swendſen?

Mrs. Busby. Never that I know of in all my Life; we were always in Company together when he dined there, and the Times that he dined there we computed to be 9 or 10; he was there ſometimes when we were not at home.

Mr. Sol.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How did Mrs. Baynton behave her ſelf when ſhe was at Mrs. Nightingale's?

Buſby. We thought very well of her, till at laſt we diſcerned too much Freedom between Mr. Swendſen and her ſelf; we ſuſpected her Virtue, and thought ſhe would drink; and were informed ſhe would Swear: She ſaid ſhe muſt ſtay in Town about a Month or Six Weeks about a Suit of Law. Her Maid told her of the Strangeneſs of the Family; ſhe ſaid they had beſt be civil, or elſe ſhe would ſtay and plague them. She told Mrs. Nightingale at length, the Town was chargeable, and her Buſineſs done, and that ſhe would return into the Country.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What do you know concerning Mrs. Rawlins being taken away?

Mrs. Buſby. Mrs. Baynton knowing it was our Cuſtom to go to Oxendon Chapel every Friday Morning, ſhe came and told us ſhe had occaſion to go to Golden Square; and that being in the way, ſhe invited us to go with her in the Coach, and ſhe would ſet us down at or near the Chapel. When we came to Dartmouth-Street, ſomebody bid the Coachman ſtop: I expected ſhe ſhould ſet us down as ſhe promiſed. On that ſide where I ſat there were old Buildings, and as I was looking out, I heard Mrs. Baynton cry out to the Coachman, Drive on; and all of a ſudden I ſaw a Man in the Coach, which was Hartwell the Bayliff. Mrs. Rawlins and I were in a very great Fright, knowing nothing. I ſaid for God s ſake let's come out, we are not concerned. Hartwell ſaid we were the Perſons that he came for. I begg'd of him to let us come out: Hartwell had his Arms about Mrs. Rawlins's Side, and ſaid, 'tis this Lady and you that I am concerned about. I ask'd him what it was. Said he, let you and I have two or three Words together, and all will be well enough. I ſaid, you don't think I will ſay any thing to you, unleſs I have my Friends by me; Mrs. Baynton in the Coach, ſaid, No, Madam, be ſure you don't. I could not tell what he would do with us; at length he carried us all to the Star and Garter Tavern in Drury-Lane. I preſs'd him to let us go to Fleetſtreet, for I had Friends there. Hartwell was very angry, and would hear nothing of it. When we came to Drury-Lane, Mrs. Baynton would have had us put on our Masks; I ſaid I had done nothing amiſs, and I would not. When we were in the Room at the Tavern, Mrs. Baynton haſtned out of the Room as faſt as ſhe could, pretending to go for my Friends. Mrs. Rawlins and I were in a great Conſternation, wondring what they would do with us: I took hold of her Arm, and told her I would live and die with her. The Bailiffs came in, and ſaid ſhe was their Priſoner, and took her by Violence from me: They told me ſhe muſt go with them, for they ſaid ſhe was arreſted by a Writ out of one Court, and I by one out of another. When ſhe was going, I put my Head out of the Window, and cry'd, Murder, Murder, ſeveral times: When I pull'd in my Head again, Spur ſaid, What have you got by your Bawling? And ſaid they were better known there than I. They brought a Man to me, who ſaid he had Orders to keep me, and that he had only a Crown for his Pains; but he would not ſuffer me to ſend for any body. The Gentlewoman of the Houſe came up, and ſaid I had done a Diſkindneſs to her Houſe by crying out Murder: She ſaid to me, Look and ſee whether your Name be ſpelt right, for it may be a falſe Arreſt, &c. Wakeman that went away with Mrs. Rawlins, came back again, and ſaid, the young Woman was well, and that he left her eating Fowl and Bacon; I ſaid, I wiſh ſhe was well. The Gentlewoman of the Houſe bid the Bailiff ſhew me the Writ: He ſaid he could not read well; but there was the Name of Sabina Busby, at the Suit of one Jones: But when he heard my Complaints a conſiderable while, he ſaid he would go to my Friends, and would go as cheap as a Porter, and as ſoon. I ſent him to Mr. Thornton and Mr. Naſh: He pretended to go, but return'd no more till Night.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You ſay you cry'd out Murder, how did Mrs. Rawlins behave her ſelf then?

Mrs. Busby. It was her great Fright and Crying that made me endeavour her Reſcue; when we ſaid we wou'd dye together, then it was when they forc'd her from me; the Surprize was ſo great that made me cry out after that manner that I did: Upon which ſome Neighbours came in, but they told them it was an Arreſt, and therefore they wou'd not meddle in it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mrs. Busby, they kept you till Night, you ſay; did they take or require Bail for you before you was diſcharged?

Mrs. Busby. I'll tell you, Sir, if you pleaſe: I did not know what I was arreſted for, it might be Murder or Treaſon, for ought I knew. There was a little Boy by, ſaid, Madam, I know Mr. Unkle your Friend in Newmarket, and I'll go for him: He went, but when he return'd again, he ſaid he was not at home; which I thought was a Lye. There was a poor Man, a Labourer, working in the Chimney, he gave me a Wink, and ſaid, Madam, I'll go for him; but I ſaid to him, Pray don't leave me; I began to be afraid, for I did not know how my Life might be concern'd. Said the little Boy, I'll go any where for you. I ſent him for Two Gentlemen, who came: The Bailiffs ſaid they had an Action of 200 l. againſt me; the Gentlemen told the Bailiffs they were come to bail me: The Bailiffs were very impudent, but ſhuffl'd about awhile, and left me, and took no further notice.

L. C. J. Holt. Did they take any Bail for you?

Mrs. Busby. No, they left me with theſe Gentlemen.

Mr. Mountague. When you went out in the Morning, did you deſign to go any where elſe but to Chapel.

Mrs. Busby. No where elſe.

Mr. Mountague. Was it your Invitation to Mrs. Baynton, or her Invitation to you to go in the Coach?

Mrs. Busby. It was Mrs. Baynton's Invitation to me; I had not a very good Opinion of Mrs. Baynton, for we ſuſpected her Virtue in the Family, by reaſon of her too familiar Carriage to her Brother; but being to go ſhortly away, I apprehended no harm.

Mr. Mountague. Did Mrs. Rawlins go with you?

Mrs. Busby. She did.

Mr. Mountague. Mrs. Busby, do you know the Priſonner? Is this the Man that came to Mrs. Nightingale s Houſe?

Mrs. Busby. Yes, Sir.

Judge Powel. How long was it from the Time that you were parted after Arreſting, that you ſaw Mrs. Rawlins again.

Mrs. Busby. The firſt time after was on Saturday, when they were before the Recorder.

L. C. J. Holt. When did you find her?

Mrs. Busby. On Saturday in the Afternoon.

L. C. J. Holt. Was you at the finding?

Mrs. Busby. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. What Time was it?

Mrs. Busby. About Noon, I believe.

Mr. Mountague. When you ſaw her put into the Coach, did you hear her cry out?

Mrs. Buſby. No, Sir; it was I that cry'd out.

Mr. Mountague. Did Mr. Swendſen make any Entertainments, or no?

Mrs. Busby. But one, as I know of.

Priſoner ſpeaks to Mrs. Busby, and ſaid, Have you done?

Mrs. Busby. I think ſo.

Priſoner. If you have, I'll aſk you a Queſtion; Did you know of any Love between Mrs. Rawlins and me?

L. C. J. Holt. Did you know any thing of Love between Mrs. Rawlins and the Priſoner, or no?

Mrs. Busby. No, my Lord.

Mrs Baynton's Maid called and ſworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, did you know Mrs. Baynton?

Maid. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was you her Servant?

Maid. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who recommended you to her?

Maid. Mrs. St. John.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know one Mr. Swendſen?

Maid. Yes, my Lord; there he is; pointing to him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ever ſee him before you were hired to your Miſtreſs.

Maid. No, my Lord; I never ſaw him before?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ſee him when you was with your Miſtreſs?

Maid. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know whether there was any Relation between them?

Maid. Yes, my Lord; they went for Brother and Siſter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long was you with her?

Maid. About a Month.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How did ſhe behave her ſelf?

Maid. Till the laſt of her Time, very well; but the Family had a Miſtruſt of her long before ſhe went away.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know the Reaſon why they miſtruſted her?

Maid. I do not know, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know what was the Cauſe the Family miſtruſted her?

Maid. They thought her a looſe ſort of a Woman, and therefore they miſtruſted her.

L. C. J. Holt. Did they diſcern any Familiarity betwixt them?

Maid. No more than as Brother and Siſter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. After this Suſpicion, do you know whether the Family expreſs'd any Reſentment?

Maid. No, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you live with her when Mrs. Rawlins was taken away?

Maid. Yes, my Lord; but I went away the next Day.

Mrs. Berkley Sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mrs. Berkley, pray was you preſent when the Priſoner was taken up; and do you know whether he and Mrs. Baynton were Brother and Siſter?

Mrs. Berkley. I went to Mr. Swendſen himſelf, and ſaid, Is this wicked Woman your Siſter? Says he, I cannot ſay ſhe is; but I have made her my Tool, and ſhe has done my Buſineſs, and I would get rid of her To-morrow, but that being Sunday I will not; but on Monday I'll give her a Reward for what ſhe has done, and then I'll diſcharge her, and never ſee her more.

Mr. Mountague. Relate what Diſcourſe you had with him, to the Gentlemen of the Jury.

Mrs. Berkley. I aſk'd Mr. Swendſen, Whether Mrs. Baynton was his Siſter? He ſaid, No, ſhe is not my Siſter; but I have gained my End, in making her a Tool to my dear Wife: I'll gratify her for what ſhe has done, and put her away on Monday, and never ſee her more.

Council. I think you lodged in the Houſe with her?

Mrs. Berkley. No; but I was a Neighbour, and was very frequently there.

Council. Did you ſee any thing to cauſe you to miſtruſt that there was any thing more than ordinary betwixt them?

Mrs. Berkley. No Cauſe at all, that I know of?

Mr. Blake and his Wife Sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Blake, pray do you know Mrs. Baynton?

Mr. Blake. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long have you known her?

Mr. Blake. About Twelve Years.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray is ſhe a Country Lady that has got a good Jointure?

Mr. Blake. I know nothing but that ſhe works for her Living.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Hath ſhe any Eſtate in the Country?

Mr. Blake. None, as I know of.

Council. Do you know the Priſoner at the Bar?

Mr. Blake. Yes, Sir.

Council. Where did he lodge at any Time?

Mr. Blake. He lodged at my Houſe.

Council. How long?

Mr. Blake. About 6 or 7 Months.

L. C. J. Holt. Where is your Houſe?

Mr. Blake. In Red-Lion-ſtreet.

L. C. J. Holt. What other Lodgers had you at the ſame Time?

Mr. Blake. I had a Parliament-Man lodged with me at the ſame Time.

L. C. J. Holt. Where did Mrs. Baynton lodge?

Mr. Blake. In the oppoſite Room againſt the Gentleman.

L. C. J. Holt. How long time?

Mr. Blake. About Seven Months.

Council. How long was Mrs. Baynton gone from your Houſe before this Matter happened?

Mr. Blake. About Five or Six Weeks.

L. C. J. Holt. How long before Michaelmas?

Mr. Blake. I cannot certainly tell; but I believe much about that Time.

Council. When they were in your Houſe, what did you ſee betwixt them?

Mr. Blake. Nothing of any harm, as I know of.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Blake, did you never ſee any harm by Mrs. Baynton?

Mr. Blake. Not as I know of.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know whether ſhe lay in at your Houſe?

Mr. Blake. I know not; for ought I know ſhe might: I know nothing of Womens lying in.

Mr. Wakeman called and Sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were you one of the Bayliffs that Arreſted Mrs. Busby and Mrs. Rawlins?

Wakeman. I was the Man that executed the Marſhal's-Court Writ, and Arreſted them.

L. C. J. Holt. Who employed you?

Wakeman. Mr. Hartwell.

L. C. J. Holt. Were you at Mr. Hartwell's Houſe?

Wakeman. My Lord, I'll tell you the Truth of the Matter: On Wedneſday before they were Arreſted, reſted, Mr. Hartwell was at my Houſe to ſee for me; but being not at home, but in the Country, I came home about 11 at Night: My Daughter ſaid to me, there was a Writ left by Mr. Hartwell for me to be ſerved, and it muſt be done To-morrow Morning. On the Morning he came to me, and ſaid, Mr. Wakeman, will you execute a Writ? He carried me to the Mitre-Tavern, and called for a Pot of Ale and a Bottle of White-Wine, and we had a Toaſt and ſome Cheeſe. While I was there, one Mr. Holt came in, a Man that I never ſaw in all my Life, and ſaid, The Buſineſs cannot be done this Day.

L. C. J. Holt. What Day of the Week was this?

Wakeman. Thurſday; he appointed me to call upon him at Nine next Morning. He ſaid, if I came firſt we ſhou'd get what we had before: He came in before we had done, and the Man of the Houſe was dreſſing himſelf in the Kitchin: We eat a Toaſt, and drank the Wine, and after that, we had another. Mr. Holt call'd Mr. Hartwell out, and ſaid, It cannot be done; by and by he ſaid it might be done: I don't know what it was, but they took me to Stretton-ſtreet; Mr. Hartwell and Mr. Spurr was with me: I was aſham'd to ſtand in the Street, ſo I went into an Alehouſe, and drank a ſingle Pot of Drink.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had you ſeen Mr. Swendſen before that Morning?

Wakeman. No: I never ſaw him before in all my Life. At that, if it pleaſe your Honour, Mr. Hartwell and Mr. Spurr went before, and bid me follow the Coach. I did ſo as near as I could, but could not keep pace with the Coach, being lame; but at Dartmouth Ground Mr. Spurr ſtopp'd the Horſes, and then I came up to the Coach; and Mr. Hartwell, I ſuppoſe, gave the Word of Arreſt, and into the Coach he went; but I did not go in becauſe there was no room, but rid behind it. The Coach was order'd to go to the Star and Garter Tavern in Drury-Lane. When we came there, we went into a Back-Room; and the Gentlewoman that had a Band-box ſaid to Mrs. Rawlins, I will go to ſome of your Friends.

L. C. J. Holt. What did they do in Stretton-Grounds?

Wakeman. They were Arreſted there: The Gentlewoman was carry'd by Mr. Hartwell to his Houſe, and I follow'd them; but meeting with a Gentlewoman of my Acquaintance, ſhe ſtopp'd me. When I came to Hartwell's Houſe, Where is ſhe, ſaid I? They told me ſhe was below Stairs. I ſaid, I had a little Buſineſs elſewhere, that will detain me about an Hour: He gave me Leave to go. When I went out, Mr. Holt call'd me over the way, and aſk'd me, If Mr. Hartwell was at home? I ſaid, Yes. And is the young Gentlewoman there too? I likewiſe ſaid, Yes. He led me to the Five Bells in Witch-ſtreet, into a Room where there were Three Boxes, and carry'd me to the middlemoſt Box, and there was a Gentleman.

Council. Was it the Priſoner at the Bar?

Wakeman. Yes, I think ſo. At that Mr. Holt fill'd me a full Glaſs, which I drank off; and I told him, I was going to do ſome Buſineſs in St. Martin's. And when I had done that, I went to Hartwell's Houſe again: I enquir'd for the Gentlewoman. Mrs. Hartwell ſaid, her Huſband was gone along with the Gentlewoman to Holborn to make an end of the Matter. I aſk'd her, Whereabout? She ſaid, At the Vine Tavern. I went thither, and aſk'd for Mr. Hartwell. There was he, and Mr. Butler, and a Tallow-Chandler going to eat Stakes: They invited me to eat ſome with them; which I did. Mr. Holt came into the room two or three times: Then Mr. Holt told me, I was diſcharged of my Priſoner; ſo away I went.

L. C. J. Holt. You were eating Stakes, you ſay, at the Vine Tavern; was ſhe there then?

Wakeman. There is a Court againſt the Tavern, and I ſaw the Gentlewoman looking out of the Vine Tavern, where there were new Saſh-Windows; as I came over the way, thro' the Court, this Gentlewoman look'd out of the Window.

L. C. J. Holt. What, before you went in?

Wakeman. Yes, my Lord; but I went in and ſaw him alone, but knew not whom he was.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you ſee Mrs. Rawlins there?

Wakeman. No, not at the Tavern.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When Hartwell took away this Gentlewoman, did ſhe go away quietly, or did Mrs. Busby and ſhe make an Outcry?

Wakeman. She was a little frighted.

L. C. J. Holt. Where was it you firſt ſaw Mr. Swendſen?

Wakeman. At the Five-Bell Tavern.

L. C. J. Holt. When was it you ſaw him there?

Wakeman. About Twelve a-Clock.

L. C. J. Holt. Where was it he gave you the Pot of Drink?

Wakeman. At the Five Bells; but it was Mr. Holt that gave it me.

L. C. J. Holt. How many were there in Company there?

Wakeman. Only Mr. Holt, and Mr. Swendſen.

Council. What was the Occaſion of your going?

Wakeman. Mr. Holt call'd me.

Council. When was it you ſaw him out of the Window?

Wakeman. About an Hour and a Quarter after.

Council. What Anſwer did you give, when they aſk'd you where the Gentlewoman was?

Wakeman. I ſaid, ſhe was at Mr. Hartwell's.

Council. You ſaid you ſerv'd a Writ on Mrs. Rawlins, had you no Proceſs againſt Mrs. Busby?

Wakeman. No, none at all.

L. C. J. Holt. On what Account did you keep Mrs. Busby?

Wakeman. I did not keep her; but one Spurr was employed to do it.

Council. You came back to Mrs. Busby's; did not you ſay that you had been with the young Gentlewoman, who was eating Fowls and Bacon?

Wakeman. Mr. Hartwell aſk'd me to eat ſome.

Coun. Did not you ſhew Mrs. Busby a Writ, and read it to her?

Wakeman. I cou'd never read a King's-Bench Writ.

L. C. J. Holt. Can you read a Marſhal's-Court Writ?

Wakeman. Yes, but not the Latin of it.

Coun. When you went to Hartwell at the Vine-Tavern, did you aſk for Mrs. Rawlins?

Wakeman. Yes, yes; I aſk'd where ſhe was? They told me they were making an end of it. My Lord, I had like to have forgot; I aſked where was the Priſoner? And Mr. Holt told me, they had juſt made an end of the Buſineſs.

Mrs. Pleaſant Rawlins Sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Give an Account to his Lordſhip, after what manner you were Arreſted, and carried from Tavern to Tavern.

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, I was Arreſted with Madam Busby, and carried to the Star and Garter Tavern in Drury-Lane.

L. C. J. Holt. How were you carried thither?

Mrs. Rawlins. I was in a Coach going to Oxendon Chapel, when Three Bailiffs were about the Coach.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did they carry you?

Mrs. Rawlins. They carried us to the Star and Garter in Drury-Lane.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who did they carry with you?

Mrs. Rawlins. There was Mrs. Busby, Mrs. Baynton and I, and Hartwell the Bailiff; when we came to the Star and Garter, they forced me up Stairs into a Back Room, but we got into a forward Room; but we had not been there long till they parted Mrs. Busby and I; Mrs. Baynton was gone, for our Friends as ſhe pretended. I was in a very great Fright, but Mrs. Busby ſaying we will dye together, they took me by Force from her; Hartwell ſwore a great Oath, and thruſt me down Stairs and forced me out of a Back-Door into an Alley. When he went to put me into a Coach, I cry'd out Murder; then he threaten'd to put me into Newgate. He carry'd me to his own Houſe, and no body came to help me a great while; but Mrs. Baynton ſaid, that as ſhe was going by the Door ſhe heard my Name, and came in in a mighty Fright; ſhe ſaid to me, Madam, I pity you, will no body Bail you? She told me I will ſend to my Brother who ſhall be Bail for you. She ſent for him, he came into the Room, and he ſaid what is the Matter with you, I ſaid, Enough is the Matter when I am arreſted for 200 l. and owe no Man a Penny. Said he in a Jocoſe way, what makes you affrighted at that, I have a good mind to arreſt you my ſelf. Then they took me thence to the Vine Tavern in Holborn, where I was an Hour or Two before I heard any Thing of Marrying or any ſuch Thing.

Coun. What did they do with you all that Time?

Mrs. Rawlins. They got a Dinner ready, and after we had dined, ſhe begged of me to have her Brother, and ſaid, that if I did not marry him, I ſhould be ruined. I told her I would do nothing without the Advice of my Friends. I deſired my Friends to be ſent for, but they would not admit it. She looked on my Ring on my Finger, and ſaid let me ſee your Ring from your Finger. I ſaid, No, you ſhall not. She ſaid I will force it off. I ſaid I'll try that: But ſhe forced it from me.

Priſoner. Remember you are upon your Oath.

Mrs. Rawlins. I know I am. When ſhe took my Ring away, I aſked her what ſhe would do with it; ſhe ſaid ſhe would go and get a Wedding Ring made by it. I told her I would not marry without the Advice of my Friends. Away ſhe went and bought a Ring, and came up again, and ſaid to her Brother, ſhe had a Ring; well ſaid I, give me my Ring and do what you will with the other; ſhe ſaid, If I did not marry her Brother I ſhould be ruined for ever.

There was a Miniſter in the Houſe, whom they ſaid had been there about a Quarter of an Hour, but I ſuppoſed longer; they brought him with the Clerk up Stairs; the Parſon ſaying I hear there is a Couple to be married, he aſked no Queſtions, but told me if I did not marry this Gentleman, I ſhould be ſent to Newgate and ruined for ever.

Coun. Give an Account of what was after the buying the Ring.

Mrs. Rawlins. When they brought the Ring, they ſaid to me, will you be married or no? I anſwered, I will not, there are none of my Friends here, and I will not marry without the Conſent of my Friends; They ſaid, If I did not I ſhould be ruined for ever. So with many Threats and Perſuaſions, they at laſt prevail'd with me to marry. I was forced to marry him out of Fear, not of going to Newgate, but of being murthered.

Coun. Where did they carry you?

Mrs. Rawlins. To Blake's Houſe in Red-Lyon-ſtreet, Holborn.

L. C. J. Holt. What Time of the Day was it?

Mrs. Rawlins. I cannot give an exact Account; but I think it was Candle-light.

Priſoner. It was about Twelve a-Clock at Noon.

L. C. J. Holt. What Time was it that you were marry'd?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, it was about Three a-Clock.

L. C. J. Holt. When you went to Blake's Houſe, who was with you there?

Mrs. Rawlins. None but Mr. Swendſen, Mrs. Baynton and I.

L. C. J. Holt. Was there any Force or Threats us'd when you were at Blake's Houſe?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, there was my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Give an Account of it.

Mrs. Rawlins. They thruſt me up Stairs, and ordered to have a Bed ſheeted. Mrs. Baynton ſaid to me, Undreſs and go to Bed. I ſaid I wou'd not. She ſaid ſhe wou'd pluck my Cloaths off my Back. I ſaid ſhe ſhould not. She ſaid ſhe would pluck off my Cloaths and make me go to Bed.

Coun. What did ſhe do with you?

Mrs. Rawlins. She put me to Bed.

Coun. Did ſhe uſe any Violence with you?

Mrs. Rawlins. Such Violence that made me go to Bed.

L. C. J. Holt. How came you to be releaſed?

Mrs. Rawlins. It was Saturday Morning before I was releaſed; there was ſome of my Friends came to the Place where I was.

L. C. J. Holt. Then you were with him all Night?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Swendſen, will you aſk her any Queſtions?

Priſoner. She muſt be my chiefeſt Evidence my Lord, when the Witneſſes come; ſhe muſt be the chiefeſt of them.

L. C. J. Holt. You will not aſk her any Queſtions now, but when the Witneſſes are call'd.

Priſoner. My Lord, I preſume ſhe does not go out of the Court. Orders given for her to ſit down.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have done with our Evidence at preſent.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Swendſen, What do you anſwer to the Evidence?

Priſoner. My Lord I am very much unprepar'd for a Tryal at preſent.

L. C. J. Holt. Why ſo?

Priſoner. Becauſe I had but little Time for Preparation, and I am not prepar'd, I deſire that I may be allow'd Council.

L. C. J. Holt. No, no, it cannot be allow'd you; and as for the Time of your Tryal you were told, if you would ſhew good Cauſe to have it put off yet, the Court would have done it.

Priſoner. Then I hope if I ſpeak any Thing that may be prejudicial to my Cauſe, that the Court will not take Advantage from it.

The firſt Time I was at Mrs. Nightingale's, I was deſired by Mrs. Buſby and Mrs. Baynton to make a Bowl of Punch, which I did, and we were very merry over it; then I invited them to go on Board a Ship

Ship, which they all did, and we in a ſhort Time came very well acquainted. My Lord, I deſire my Wife might ſtand by her ſelf, and none of them near her.

L. C. J. Holt. There is none near her that will hurt her.

Priſoner. My Lord, I beg ſhe may ſtand by her ſelf, that I may have a fair Tryal; I pray your Lordſhip to grant me this Favour. My Lord, will you pleaſe to grant it?

L. C. J. Holt. Muſt I grant it only for your Humour?

Priſoner. 'Tis not a Humour, my Lord, but of a great Conſequence to me: Will your Lordſhip grant me it? I beg it, my Lord, for 'tis the moſt material Thing I have to aſk; I beg all thoſe People may be removed from her, 'tis the greateſt and moſt material Thing I have to ſay.

L. C. J. Holt. I m ſorry for it?

Priſoner. It is ſo, good my Lord grant me that.

L. C. J. Holt. There's no body near her that concerns you at all.

Priſoner. There are thoſe by her that will do me no Kindneſs. Then ſhe is ordered to be removed.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, her ſtanding there is enough to diſorder her.

Priſoner. My Lord, ſhe is very well.

L. C. J. Holt. Remove her a little further.

Coun. My Lord, he does it on purpoſe to fright her.

Priſoner. We went (as I was telling your Lordſhip) aboard a Ship, and they invited me to come the Week following to partake of a Treat; accordingly I went, and there was one Mr. Pugh, and he and I made a Bowl of Punch. Mr. Pugh at that Time courted Mrs. Rawlins, and that little Time I was acquainted with her, I diſcerned ſhe had a Kindneſs for me, as I had for her; and I told her I could not be eaſy while ſhe ſuffered Mr. Pugh to kiſs her; ſhe deſired me to be eaſy, and it ſhould be remedied.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Rawlins, do you remember any ſuch Thing?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, I do not remember any ſuch Thing, or that any ſuch Words ever came out of my Mouth.

Priſoner. Did not you ſay this, Mrs. Rawlins, Mrs. Swendſen I ſhould ſay, did not you ſay, if I would not ſit by you you would not eat a Bit or a Crumb; when I ſat by you and profered my Place to another, can you ſay you were not offended?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, I was not.

Priſoner. Are not you upon your Oath, did not you give me ſome Encouragement?

Mrs. Rawlins. I do not know how I could ſhew it you, I know not of any ſuch Thing.

L. C. J. Holt. You ought to ſpeak the Truth, becauſe his Life depends upon it. Did you in the firſt Place ever admit of his Courtſhip, in order to marry you?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, my Lord, I don't remember any ſuch Thing.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you ever ſhew any Kindneſs to him upon any ſuch Account?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, I don't know I ſhew'd him any more Kindneſs than all the reſt of the Family ſhewed him.

L. C. J. Holt. Was you ever in his Company alone?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, my Lord.

Priſoner. To give me more Eaſe and Satisfaction after Dinner we had our Bowl and Walnuts; Mrs. Swendſen pilled the Kernels and gave them to me; ſhe gave them faſter than I could eat; ſhe heaped my Plate with them, every one at the Table took notice of it, and ſhe jogged me with her Knee, that I ſhould take them, and gave ſome to Mrs. Baynton, and bid her take them and give to me.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Buſby, Were you there?

Mrs. Buſby. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you ſee any Thing of this kind?

Mrs. Buſby. No, my Lord.

Priſoner. Will your Lordſhip be pleaſed to aſk her your ſelf?

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Rawlins, did you e'er give pilled Walnuts to him, or ſend them to him in particular?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, my Lord, I do not know that I was more kind to him than the reſt of the Company.

Priſoner. Every Body took notice of it, and Mr. Pugh in particular.

L. C. J. Holt. What do you ſay, Mr. Swendſen?

Priſoner. My Lord, Mr. Pugh, if he were here, would ſay the ſame as I do. He was afraid I ſhould get away his Lady.

L. C. J. Holt. Where is he?

Court. He is in the Court.

L. C. J. Holt. You may have him for a Witneſs if you will.

Priſoner. More than this, before he went away ſhe told him ſhe did not care for him; this ſhe ſpoke to make me more eaſy ſtill. This I believe Mr. Pugh can witneſs, in as much as Madam Buſby complain'd to her about it, at Mr. Scoreman's the Picture-Drawers, who is one of my Evidences; I deſire he may be called.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, let him be called.

So he was call'd and came.

L. C. J. Holt. Hear ye, he calls you to be a Witneſs, you are not to be upon your Oath, but are under the higheſt Obligation to tell the Truth.

Mr. Scoreman. While I was drawing a Gentlewoman's Picture, Mrs. Baynton's, there was a Fire, it began to be Cold, they fell into Diſcourſe about Mr. Swendſen and Mrs. Rawlins, Mrs. Buſby was there at the ſame Time, they fell into Diſcourſe about Mr. Swendſen and the young Lady.

L. C. J. Holt. Was ſhe there?

Mr. Scoreman. Yes.

L. C. J. Holt. Where was it?

Mr. Scoreman. At my Lodgings; there were Mrs. Busby, the young Lady, and Mrs. Baynton.

L. C. J. Holt. Whoſe Picture were you drawing?

Mr. Scoreman. Mrs. Baynton's. They fell into Diſcourſe relating to a Matter of Love, between Mr. Swendſen and the young Lady. She ſaid the young Lady had a Love for Mr. Swendſen more than the other.

L. C. J. Holt. You heard her ſay ſo?

Mr. Scoreman. No, but I can ſay Mrs. Baynton ſaid ſo.

L. C. J. Holt. But tell us what you heard.

Mr. Scoreman. She ſhould have ſaid ſo, I did not hear her my ſelf, but afterwards upon a Diſcourſe ſhe ſaid afterwards, what ſhe had ſaid ſhe would ſtand to.

L. C. J. Holt. What did ſhe ſay?

Mr. Scoreman. I do not know that ſhe ſaid ſo or not.

Priſoner. My Lord, may I ſpeak it as well as I can, he cannot ſpeak Engliſh right, I'll ſpeak it to him, my Lord.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Holt. No, no. Did you hear Mrs. Busby ſay any Thing? What did ſhe ſay?

Mr. Scoreman. In way of Diſcourſe ſhe ſaid ſo.

L. C. J. Holt. What, in way of Diſcourſe, did ſhe ſay nothing?

Mr. Scoreman. I heard the Lady only ſay that Word, that all ſhe had ſaid ſhe would ſtand to.

L. C. J. Holt. What did you hear them talk about?

Mr. Scoreman. They were playing at Cards, and ſhe took up the Tricks of Mr. Swendſen, which diſcovered Love.

L. C. J. Holt. The Queſtion is, Whether you did hear them ſpeak any Thing of Love, or not?

Priſoner. My Lord, he would ſpeak better with an Interpreter,

L. C. J. Holt. Let an Interpreter be called for?

L. C. J. Holt. What Countryman are you?

Priſoner. My Lord, he is a Dane.

The Interpreter, a Jury-man, was ſworn, and beginning to talk with Mr. Scoreman; and then he ſaid, he's none of my Country, he is a Dutchman, I don't underſtand him.

L. C. J. Holt. He ſpeaks Engliſh well enough.

Priſoner. Very well; but he knows not where he begins: He would ſay what Mrs. Busby and Mrs. Baynton were ſpeaking, but knows not how to utter himſelf.

L. C. J. Holt. He cannot ſay any thing for you.

Scoreman. I heard but a few Words, and cannot ſay much of it.

L. C. J. Holt. You muſt have a better Witneſs, or you are in a dangerous Condition.

Priſoner. My Lord, Mr. Pugh complained to Madam Busby, that ſhe ſlighted him very much.

L. C. J. Holt. What, for Love of you?

Priſoner. Yes, my Lord; I could tell you of divers things that paſs between Lovers, that would be impertinent for me to relate to wiſe Men.

L. C. J. Holt. Let us hear ſome of them?

Priſoner. When we were by our ſelves, ſhe kiſſed me; and ſqueezed me by the Hand, when we walked privately in the Garden.

L. C. J. Holt. Did ſhe kiſs you?

Priſoner. Yes, my Lord, and ſqueez'd me often.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you not think her very coming?

Priſoner. Yes, I did; and when we talk'd of Marriage, ſhe ſeem'd to be very well pleaſed.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Rawlins, you hear what he ſays: Did you ſqueeze him by the Hand, and kiſs him? Is it true?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, my Lord, I did no ſuch Trick, not I; and as for walking in the Garden, I did not walk in the Garden alone with him.

Priſoner. I could mention a great many of theſe little Things; but if ſhe denies them I cannot help it.

My Lord, the laſt time I was at the Houſe we had a Barrel of Oyſters. I ſtood with my Hands behind me, and as ſhe paſſed by at any time, ſhe gave me Squeezes by the Hand.

L. C. J. Holt. What ſay you to this Mrs. Rawlins?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, I did not do ſo upon my Oath.

L. C. J. Holt. She ſays ſhe did not do it, upon her Oath.

Priſoner. Now for the Matter of Fact; as for the Arreſt, I never knew any Thing of it directly or indirectly, till I ſaw her at the Bayliff's Houſe.

L. C. J. Holt. If ſhe did know any Thing of, or was conſenting to the Arreſt, why did you force her to the Tavern, and Marry her with a Parſon you had provided for that Purpoſe?

Priſoner. She Married me with as much Freedom as could be in a Woman.

L. C. J. Holt. What ſay you to that Mrs.?

Priſoner. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to ask her, whether I offered any Violence to her either by Word or Deed.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Rawlins, give an Account how you were carried from the Bayliff's Houſe.

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, when I was at Hartwell's the Bayliff's Houſe, Mrs. Baynton pretended to come accidentally by, and that ſhe heard my Voice, and came in and ſaid, How do you do, Mrs. Rawlins? You know how I do, ſaid I. She pretended to help me, and propoſed to go to her Brother to Bail me; and he came, and I was carried from thence in a Coach to the Vine Tavern. ---- She was asked whether he came into the Coach to her?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, he did.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you cry out when they put you into the Coach?

Mrs. Rawl. No, my Lord, I did not cry out then, I made no Noiſe then.

L. C. J. Holt. What did he do then?

Mrs. Rawl. They carry'd me to the Vine-Tavern a Priſoner.

Sol. Gen. She went willingly enough from Hartwell's Houſe to the Vine-Tavern, becauſe ſhe thought that there ſhe ſhould be Bailed.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. What was the Pretence of your being carried from Hartwell's Houſe?

Mrs. Rawl. My Lord, they would not tell me before they carry'd me to the Place.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Swendſen, Will you ask any other Queſtions?

Priſoner. Not yet, my Lord. I deſire the Parſon may be called that Marry'd us. Which was done.

L. C. J. Holt. Come Dr. you are not upon your Oath; How come you to be concern'd in this Match?

Parſon. My Lord, it was at the Vine-Tavern where I ſaw them in Holborn.

L. C. J. Holt. Was it the Mitre, or the Vine?

Parſon. The Vine, I believe, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. How came you there?

Parſon. There was a Gentleman fetch'd me and the Clerk from the Fleet.

L. C. J. Holt. What to do?

Parſon. He ſaid there was a Gentleman there to ſpeak with us. When we came there, the Clerk and I went up one Pair of Stairs and Drank a Pint of Wine. Then we were led into another Room; I asked him what I was to do. He told me for to Marry him to that Young Gentlewoman.

L. C. J. Holt. Was there a Licenſe.

Parſon. Yes; When I ſaw the Licenſe I read it, and ſaw it a true Licenſe; Then I asked the Gentlewoman her Name, to know whether it was the ſame that was in the Licenſe; and found it was the ſame.

L. C. J. Holt. Was it written in the Licenſe, that the Marriage was to be performed at the Vine-Tavern?

Parſon. No my Lord. But a Blank was left.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you take the Queen's Duty?

Parſon. No, my Lord, but returned their Names to the Superviſor: My Lord, when I asked her Name, I alſo asked her whether ſhe was willing to be Married. She ſaid ſhe was willing. And another Gentlewoman was with her, that ſaid ſhe was her Siſter: I ſaid to her; Madam, if you conſent, and your Siſter is willing, here is a Licenſe, for I believe there is no Danger to Marry you.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you ask her any other Way than in your Form, Will you have this Man to your Wedded Husband.

Parſon. I ask'd her whether ſhe was willing to Marry, ſhe ſaid, Yes, ſhe was willing.

L. C. J. Holt. But did you ask her before you did the Office?

Parſon. Yes, my Lord, I did, and ſhe conſented to it.

Counſel. Pray who was the Perſon that came to the Fleet to you, to carry you to the Tavern; was it the Gentleman at the Bar?

Parſon. No, 'twas not him.

Mr. Mountague. How long was it before you went to him, after you went into the Tavern?

Parſon. My Clerk and I went in, and ſat the Drinking a Pint of Wine, about a Quarter of an Hour; then we went to the Gentleman.

L. C. J. Holt. Do you think that they ſhould grant Licenſes to Marry in a Tavern, and out of Canonical Hours?

Parſon. I never did it in all my Life before, and never will do it again.

Sol. Gen. What was the Reaſon why you were conducted into another Room, and not where they were?

Parſon. I know not the Reaſon.

Sol. Gen. How long were you in the Room where they were?

Parſon. I cannot well tell.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you Marry them as ſoon as you came in?

Parſon. Almoſt as ſoon.

Mr. Mountague. Did you ever Marry any at a Tavern before?

Parſon. No, my Lord.

Sol. Gen. Will your Lordſhip be pleaſed to hear the Licenſe read.

L. C. J. Holt. It may be read. You may ſee the Date and the Names. The Licenſe is Dated Oct. 14. 1702. The Names Haagen Swendſen in the Pariſh of St. Paul's Shadwell; and Pleaſant Rawlins in the Pariſh of St. Mary White-Chappel

Counſel. Is there any Blank left?

Parſon. Yes, there is a Blank left that the Marriage may be in the Pariſh Church of St. Mary White-Chappel, vel a Blank.

Mr. Mountague. Were you Entertained there?

Parſon. Before the Marriage, the Clerk and I drank a Pint of Wine in the firſt Room.

Mr. Mountague. Had you any Victuals then?

Parſon. Not before they Married; but after.

Sol. Gen. Pray Sir, did you beſpeak a Dinner before the Marriage?

Parſon. No, Sir, the Gentleman beſpoke a Fowl.

Mr. Dan. Cotchett, was called.

Priſoner. My Lord, I deſire he may be asked whether he heard any Noiſe, or whether any Violence was offered to the Young Woman?

L. C. J. Holt. Did you hear any Noiſe, or perceive any Violence offered to the Young Woman.

Mr. Cotchett. No, my Lord.

Priſoner. Ask Mrs. Cotchett, whether any Noiſe or Violence was offer'd to the Young Lady?

L. C. J. Holt, I'll ask her that Queſtion; Was there any Noiſe, or Violence uſed to the Young Lady?

Mrs. Cotchett. No, my Lord, there was no Noiſe; they came in and asked for a Room, and I ſhewed them a lower Room, but they would not have that, but went up. Soon after Mr. Holt the Vintner came down and went out, and Mr. Hartwell call'd for a Pint of Wine for the Coachman, but the Drawer grumbled at it, and ſaid he did not know who'd pay for't. Then Mr. Hartwell the Bayliff told me it was an Arreſt, and that the Parſon was to be Bail for the Lady, and at that I very much wondred; and afterwards they told me there was a Wedding above, which we admired at, that there ſhould be a Wedding, and Bayliffs; And after all was over, the Gentleman and the Lady went out at the Back-Door, and took Coach.

Priſoner. Did you ſee Mrs. Swendſen diſcontented when ſhe went out?

Mrs. Cotchett. No, my Lord, ſhe ſeemed not Diſcontented; what I know I'll ſpeak, and no more.

Sarah Walker called.

L. C. J. Holt. Do you live at the Vine-Tavern?

Walker. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. What Place?

Walker. Cook, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Was you in the Houſe when that Young Gentlewoman was carried Priſoner there? Where were you then?

Walker. In the Bar, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you keep the Bar?

Walker. No, my Lord; but I was waſhing the Bar at that time.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you hear any Noiſe?

Walker. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you hear of a Wedding?

Walker. Yes, my Lord.

Priſoner. My Lord, Will you be pleas'd to ask her, if ſhe was not had before the Recorder, and promis'd a Reward if ſhe would ſay any thing for their Service?

L. C. J. Holt. What do you ſay to this?

Walker. My Lord, only this, That if I knew any Thing, and diſcover'd it, I ſhould be ſatisfied for my Trouble.

L. C. J. Holt. Were you ſent up Stairs to the Gentlefolks to receive Directions for the Supper?

Walk. Yes.

Sol. Gen. When you came up into the Room, what Condition was the Young Gentlewoman in?

Walker. She ſat at one end of the Room, and ſeemed to be very Melancholly.

Walker. Not Melancholly then. When Orders were given about the Supper, I asked her what Sauce ſhe would have, ſhe ſaid ſhe would eat nothing at all.

Mr. Blake's Daughter being called.

Priſoner. Ask what ſhe knew of my Wife?

Blake. My Lord, She carried it very well; the Lady was pleaſed to ſay that I ſhould wait upon her, I offered to pluck off her Shoes and Stockings when ſhe went to Bed, ſhe held out her Legs, and I pull'd off her Shoes and Stockings.

Blake. No; I did not know what was betwixt them.

Blake. About 7 a Clock.

Mr. Mountague. Did they lie at your Houſe that Night?

Blake. No; they did not.

L. C. J. Holt. When did they go away?

Blake. They went away as ſoon as Supper was done.

Priſoner. My Lord, I deſire ſhe may be asked whether my Wife was Sorrowful or Diſcontented, or Unwilling to go to Bed.

L. C. J. Holt. What time was it they went to Bed?

Blake. About Four a Clock.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you know what the Deſign was?

Blake. No, my Lord, I did not know any otherwiſe, than as Mr. Swendſen told me the Young Lady was his Wife.

Blake. About two Hours, they roſe up and got to Supper.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long has he been dead?

Blake. I don't certainly remember; about 3 or 4 Years.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long is it ſince Mrs. Baynton lay in at your Houſe?

Blake. About 4 Months ago.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When ſhe was ſuch a Woman as this, and brought a Gentlewoman to your Houſe, and ordered a Bed to be made, how could you admit her into your Houſe again?

Blake. I did not know that it was any clandeſtine Thing.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any more Witneſſes, Mr. Swendſen?

Priſoner. Let the Conſtable be called for.

L. C. J. Holt. What Queſtions ſhall I ask him?

Priſoner. Ask him what it was my Wife ſaid to him?

Conſtable. My Lord, the Man was in one Room and the Woman in another; when I opened the Door, the Gentleman asked her how ſhe did.

L. C. J. Holt. What Gentleman was it?

Conſtable. It was the Gentleman that gave me the Warrant. He ſaid to her, Are you married? Yes; There is my Husband. She ſeemed very much ſatisfied: He ſaid to her, Madam, I wiſh you much Joy, and if you pleaſe to go to the Recorder's, there is your Guardian to approve of what you have done: But when ſhe was dreſs'd, ſhe would go to the next Juſtice of the Peace: They could not agree about going, but they drank each of them a Glaſs of Wine and went away. The Gentlemen that brought me the Warrant was alſo with me.

L. C. J. Holt. Are they here?

Conſtable. The Warrant was to take up the Bailiffs and all together.

L. C. J. Holt. Where do you live?

Conſtable. In Lincolns-Inn-Fields.

L. C. J. Holt. In what Houſe did you ſee them?

Conſtable. 'Twas in Red-Lyon-Street, over againſt the Red-Lyon Tavern.

L. C. J. Holt. About what Time of the Night was it?

Conſtable. About 7 a-Clock.

L. C. J. Holt. What Night was it?

Conſtable. Indeed my Lord I cannot tell.

Mr. Mountague. Whoſe Houſe was it? Was it Blake's Houſe?

Conſtable. Yes it was ſo.

L. C. J. Holt. Where is your Warrant?

Conſtable. They took it away from me.

L. C. J. Holt. But you ought not to have parted from your Warrant.

Conſtable. The Men were not there that the Warrant run for.

L. C. J. Holt. Was not the Warrant againſt Mr. Swendſen?

Conſtable. The Warrant was for ſuch Men as took the young Gentlewoman away. I cannot tell whether his Name was there or no.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Rawlins, what were thoſe Men who came along with the Conſtable; were they your Friends?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes my Lord, They were my Friends.

L. C. J. Holt. What is this Geary?

Mrs. Rawlins. He is an Acquaintance of Madam Busby's.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you ſay you conſented to the Marriage before them?

Mrs. Rawlins. If I did, I did not know what ſaid.

Priſoner. My Lord, I deſire ſhe may be aſked what ſhe ſaid to the Conſtable.

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, I did not know whether I ſaid ſuch a Thing; if I did, I was not in my Senſes, I did not know what I ſaid.

Priſoner. My Lord, I hope you will give me leave to ſpeak. She ſaid to the Conſtable, I am very well content with the Marriage, and this is the Ring that married us.

L. C. J. Holt. What ſay you to that Mrs. Rawlins?

Mrs. Rawlins. I don't know but I might; but I did not know what I ſaid.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Holt. Had you been in Bed then?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, we were in Bed about an Hour.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was there any Threats uſed by Mrs. Baynton?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, my Lord; ſhe ſaid that I muſt own him for my Husband, or elſe we were all ruined.

Juſtice Baber called.

Priſoner. My Lord, he is one of the chiefeſt Witneſſes that I have, I deſire it may be aſked him, what my Wife declared to him of her own Accord.

J. Baber. My Lord I think it was Friday Night, the 6th of this Month, the Priſoner here at the Bar, and I ſuppoſe that may be the Gentlewoman too, pointing to her, and another Gentlewoman and a Woman came to me to my Houſe in York-Buildings, and deſired me, but the Priſoner in particular, that I would adminiſter a voluntary Oath to the young Lady, which ſhe was willing to take, that ſhe was married to this Gentleman. I told him that I had nothing to do to confirm Marriages, and told them I was loth to meddle with it.

L. C. J. Holt. How came they to you? Had they any Officers?

J. Baber. No, my Lord, they came in a Coach without any Officer.

L. C. J. Holt. Was there any Oath taken?

J. Baber. No, my Lord.

Coun. What was the Reaſon that you did not tender the Oath?

J. Baber. Becauſe I thought I had nothing to do with it.

Coun. What Sort of Frame was the young Woman in?

J. Baber. In very great Diſorder; not like a Gentlewoman, but in a very confuſed Condition: She ſpoke what ſhe ſaid, by her own Conſent; but with much Diſorder.

Priſoner. My Lord, I deſire it may be aſked Juſtice Baber, whether I deſired him to tender the Oath to my Wife.

L. C. J. Holt. Did Mr. Swendſen deſire you to tender the Oath?

J. Baber. He did put me upon it at the firſt.

Priſoner. I ne'er did ſo in all my Life.

Mr. Bulkley called.

Priſoner. My Lord, I deſire this Man may be heard.

Mr. Bulkley. This Gentleman, on the 7th of November, in the Forenoon, ſtopped at the Porch of my Door, and gave me Order to wait upon him, upon the Buſineſs of my Calling.

L. C. J. Holt. What is your Calling?

Bulkley. A Barber. He told me that he was Married. I aſked him, What, are you Married? Yes, ſaid he, I am; and here's my Wife; and the Gentlewoman ſhe ſaid ſo too. At that, I wiſhed them much Joy and Happineſs. The Young Woman ſaid, She did not queſtion it, ſince what ſhe had done, was with her own voluntary Conſent.

Mr. Hudſon called.

Priſoner. What did you hear my Wife ſay?

Mr. Hudſon. When Mr. Swendſen, with his Wife, came to our Houſe, (my Lord,) he bid her take Mr. Blake by the Hand, and aſk him how he does. She ſaid, Yes, my Dear. She went into the Houſe and took my Maſter by the Hand, aſk'd him how he did. Mr. Swendſen ſaid, This is my dear Wife; and ſhe ſaid, This is my dear Husband, and took him about the Neck and kiſſed him.

L. C. J. Holt. What Trade are you?

Mr. Hudſon. An Upholſterer; Mr. Blake is my Maſter.

L. C. J. Holt. You ſay the young Woman took Mr. Blake by the Hand, and ſaid, How do you do: Did ſhe ever ſee Mr. Blake before?

Mr. Hudſon. Not that I know of. But Mr. Swendſen ſaid, This is my dear Wife.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When was this?

Mr. Hudſon. On Saturday Morning.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If they lay there over-night, what Neceſſity was there for Swendſen to tell Mr. Blake that was his dear Wife.

Mr. Hudſon. He did not ſay ſo to him, but to his Wife; and ſhe kiſſed him.

Mr. Mountague. What need he to tell Mr. Blake that was his Wife, when he knew it before?

Mr. Hudſon. Why may not I, if I had a Wife, come to her and ſay, My dear Wife?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Blake, Pray was Mrs. Rawlins at your Houſe before then.

Mr. Blake. Never as I know of.

Mr. Green called.

Priſoner. I deſire that this Man be aſked what he heard my Wife ſay before the Recorder.

L. C. J. Holt. What did you hear the young Woman ſay before the Recorder?

Mr. Green. She owned that ſhe was married to the Gentleman, by her own Conſent, without any Force or Compulſion.

L. C. J. Holt. Did ſhe marry him willingly?

Mr. Green. Yes, my Lord, ſhe ſaid ſo.

Priſoner. My Lord, I deſire he may tell how ſhe behaved her ſelf there.

L. C. J. Holt. What ſaid ſhe?

Mr. Green. She ſaid ſhe was married to that Gentleman without Force or Compulſion.

Coun. Did ſhe ſay nothing elſe?

Mr. Green. This is all that I remember.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did the Gentlewoman continue in that Tone all the while ſhe was at the Recorder's?

Mr. Green. No, I believe ſhe did not.

L. C. J. Holt. Was the Recorder by then?

Mr. Green. Yes, the Recorder was by. Then he asked her whether ſhe was married by her own Conſent?

L. C. J. Holt. What did the Recorder ſay more?

Mr. Green. He ſaid, he was afraid ſhe was drawn in by this Man, who he feared was a Spark and Bully of the Town.

Coun. Pray, when ſhe ſaid ſhe was married by her own Conſent, had Mr. Swendſen her Hand in his?

Mr. Green. Yes.

L. C. J. Holt. Then I aſk you whether Swendſen was afterwards withdrawn?

Mr. Green. He was ſo.

L. C. J. Holt. And did you hear what ſhe ſaid after that?

Mr. Green. No, I did not, I was thruſt out.

L. C. J. Holt. Where do you live?

Mr. Green. I live in Carter Lane. I belong to the General Poſt-Office.

L. C. J. Holt. How came you to be acquainted with this Matter?

Mr. Green. My Lord, I came into Red-Lyon-ſtreet accidentally, Two Doors off Mr. Swendſen's: I went to Mr. Swendſen's Lodgings, and aſked how he did? I was told he was very well, that he had married a Fortune, and was in Bed with his Lady.

L. C. J. Holt. What was the Man's Name?

Mr. Green. His Name was Blake, my Lord; it was a pure accidental Thing to me.

L. C. J. Holt. How long have you known Mr. Swendſen?

Mr. Green. I have known him ſeveral Years.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you dealt with him?

Mr. Green. Yes, I have; and I believe here are many preſent, can give a better Account of him than I can.

Priſoner. My Lord, I deſire he may be aſked what my Wife ſaid to the Recorder?

Mr. Green. My Lord, upon Examination ſhe ſeemed to be much ſurprized upon that Occaſion, but what ſhe did, ſhe ſaid was voluntarily; and that as he was her Huſband, ſo ſhe would own him; and when ſhe was aſked whether ſhe was in Drink; ſhe ſaid ſhe was never given to drinking.

Priſoner. And as I have been repreſented by ſome as a Bully of the Town, I deſire I may have my Friends heard as to my Life and Converſation.

One of his Friends called.

L. C. J. Holt. Where do you live?

Anſw. At Ratcliff; my Education has been at Sea. I have been acquainted with Mr. Swendſen Two Years, and have found him to be a very honeſt and ingenious Man.

L. C. J. Holt. Had you any Dealings with him?

Anſw. Yes, my Lord, I have dealt with him for 3000 l. and better?

L. C. J. Holt. In what Manner did you deal with him?

Anſw. I conſigned my Effects to him.

L. C. J. Holt. From whence?

Anſw. From England to Norway.

L. C. J. Holt. How could they be conſigned to him when he was here?

Anſw. He was not here then, but at Norway. In May 1701. he came over, and had a Ship of mine, called the Swan, and ſold her for my Account.

Coun. Did you apprehend that he traded for himſelf, or as a Factor?

Anſw. He traded for himſelf; and I can ſhew you the Bills of Lading that will ſhew they were for his Account: And I believe all that knew him, will give him the Character of an honeſt Man.

Mr. Evans called.

L. C. J. Holt. What do you know of Mr. Swendſen?

Mr. Evans. I was in Norway, and found then that he lived in very good Repute and Credit there among all People, the beſt of Trading People; and I found he had a familiar Converſe with them: I was with him at the Generance and Admirance, which are the chief Offices in the Place: I was by his Letter of Recommendation credited by the moſt eminent Merchants of Norway. At that Time he had ſeveral Ships conſigned to him for Lading, at a Time when Goods were difficult to be gotten, and he did load them.

Another Witneſs called.

L. C. J. Holt. What do you know of Mr. Swendſen?

Anſw. My Lord, I was born in Norway, where this Gentleman lived for ſome Years, and was eſteemed worth 10000 Dollars. I have had no great Dealings with him, but when he wanted Money, when Money was ſhort with him, I lent him ſome, which he paid again very honeſtly.

Priſoner. Call John Shorey.

Shorey. The Knowledge I have had of him was cauſed by his buying ſeveral Parcels of Goods of me, and order'd them to be Shipp'd, and paid me honeſtly for them.

Another Witneſs called.

L. C. J. Holt. What ſay you?

Anſw. I have known this Gentleman about Two Years: The firſt of my Knowledge was, I had a Bill of Exchange of 50 l. drawn upon him, which he paid very honeſtly. I never heard any otherwiſe, but that he was a very honeſt, juſt Man.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I would obſerve to your Lordſhip, that the principal Part of our Evidence the Priſoner hath given no Anſwer to; that is, the Force: If the taking and detaining Mrs. Rawlins was by Force as ſeveral of our Witneſſes have teſtified. And if ſhe married while ſhe was under that Force, no ſubſequent Act or Conſent of hers can leſſen the Offence, if the Jury could give Credit to the Priſoner's Evidence, and believe her Conſent was real.

The Gentlewoman did herſelf confeſs, that after ſhe had been hurried from Tavern to Tavern, ſhe did declare he was her Husband, and that ſhe conſented to the Marriage; but what afterwards happen'd, plainly ſhews that it was through Fear and nothing elſe: Had ſhe really conſented to the Marriage, why was ſhe carried to the Juſtice of Peace to take an Oath, that ſhe was married by her own voluntary Conſent? Whilſt the Priſoner held her by the Hand before the Recorder, ſhe confeſſed that ſhe married with her free Conſent: As ſoon as the Priſoner was withdrawn, ſhe burſt out into a Flood of Tears, and confeſſed that ſhe was married by Conſtraint. My Lord, there is but one Thing more I would anſwer, and that is the Licenſe which was given in Evidence to give Colour to this Marriage; but this plainly ſhews, that this whole Management was the Priſoner's contriving. The Licenſe bears date Three Weeks before the Time of the Marriage, which ſhews how long they had waited for an Opportunity to accompliſh this Deſign. When the Priſoner took out this Licenſe, he ſwore her Age to be 25, and his to be 35.

My Lord, now we will examine ſome Witneſſes to theſe Facts, and ſo we'll have done. She was carried to Juſtice Baber to take a voluntary Oath. If your Lordſhip pleaſes he may again be called We will examine him upon Oath.

Juſtice Baber called.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray Sir, give an Account of the whole Matter.

J. Baber. They came to me about 8 or 9 a-Clock on Friday Night the 6th of this Month; and the Priſoner here told me the Purport of his coming, that it was a light and ſhort Buſineſs; and pointing to the Gentlewoman, ſaid, that ſhe came to take a voluntary Oath, that ſhe was married to him with her own Conſent; ſhe ſaid ſhe was married, and that with her Conſent. I told her, I had nothing to do with confirming Marriages. He told me, amongſt other Things, that he had a Certificate. You know that beſt I ſaid; a Marriage is a Marriage, and I have nothing to do with it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But when ſhe told you that ſhe was married, what Condition was ſhe in?

J. Baber. She was in a very great Diſorder.

Another Witneſs.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was you before the Recorder?

Witneſs. Yes, on Saturday the 7th of this November. While Mr. Swendſen held her by the Hand ſhe owned the Marriage; but when he was withdrawn ſhe threw her ſelf upon me, and deſired me to ſtand by her, or ſhe was undone.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Account did ſhe give when Mr. Swendſen was withdrawn?

Anſw. She ſpoke much to the ſame Purpoſe as ſhe ſhe has done here; and that what ſhe had done was all by Force, and out of Fear.

Mr. Taylor call'd and Sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know any Oath the Party took, in the taking of this Licenſe?

Mr. Taylor. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How old did he ſay the Gentlewoman was?

Mr. Taylor. He ſaid that ſhe was 25, and that he was 35 Years old.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Are you ſure he took the Oath?

Mr. Taylor. Yes, my Lord, there is the Surrogate's Hand, and the Priſoner's own Hand to it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were you preſent?

Mr. Taylor. No, I was not, but my Clerk was.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. My Lord, there's his Hand to it, and we can prove his Hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord it is an Act of the Court.

Coun. My Lord, I hope that may be of the ſame Force as a Depoſition in Chancery.

L. C. J. Holt. It cannot be read as Evidence. Mr. Taylor, did he ever take a Licenſe at any other Time?

Mr. Taylor. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Was the Licenſe dated that Day he took it?

Mr. Taylor. It is always dated the ſame Day it is taken.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, I deſire Mrs. Busby may be asked, whether ſhe talked at the Picture-Drawers about any Thing of Love, or no? Mrs. Busby, the Queſtion is, Whether or no you talked any Thing about Love at the Picture-Drawers?

Mrs. Busby. My Lord, Mrs. Baynton deſir'd me to go with her to the Picture-Drawers to ſee her Picture drawn; we were talking by the Fire-ſide that Mrs. Rawlins had ſpoke by way of Diſcouragement to Mr. Pugh; Mrs. Baynton ſaid that ſhe thought her Brother would make her a very good Huſband, and was able to make her a conſiderable Jointure here in England. My Lord, Mr. Pugh came, by the Conſent of Friends, on honourable Terms.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen of the Jury, This Priſoner is indicted for Felony, in taking away by Force Mrs. Pleaſant Rawlins, and marrying of her; this is Felony by the Statute of the Third of Henry VII. which enacts, "That if any Perſon "ſhall take any Woman that hath any Subſtance "in Goods or Land, againſt her Conſent, and "marry or defile her, he and his Procurers and Re- "ceivers, ſhall be adjudged to be Felons.

Now it hath been proved to you, that this young Woman had a Perſonal Eſtate left her by her Father, to the Value of 2000 l. and had another Eſtate in Land, to the Value of 20 l. per Annum. If any one ſhall take her away by Force, and marry her, he is Guilty of Felony by that Statute. You have heard that ſhe was placed by her Guardian, under the Tuition of Mrs. Busby, who took a Lodging about 3 Years laſt paſt, at one Mrs. Nightingale's, in Stretton-Grounds, Weſtminſter; and boarded with her, who took Boarders into her Houſe; and if any Friend of her Boarders came to Dinner there, ſhe received 12 d per Head: About 3 Weeks or a Month before Michaelmas laſt paſt, there came one Mrs. St. John, and recommended to her a Lodger of her Acquaintance, and deſired that ſhe might board with her as others did, and ſaid ſhe was a Widow that came out of the Country about a Suit of Law, and repreſented her to be a ſober Perſon. Mrs. Nightingale refuſed her at that Time, and heard no more of her till about 3 Weeks after; then ſhe, Mrs. St. John, returns and prevails with Mrs. Nightingale, to take her Acquaintance into her Houſe. Mrs. Baynton that is mentioned in the Indictment, was the Perſon deſigned by Mrs. St. John; and ſhe came to Mrs. Nightingale, and deſired to be with her as other Boarders were; ſhe pretended to be of very good Quality, ſo ſhe was taken into the Houſe; her Carriage and Demeanor there were very Civil, and ſhe pretended ſhe had a Brother, that would come to ſee her: The Priſoner at the Bar was the Perſon that came, and ſhe call'd him Brother, and owned him for ſuch; he dined there ſeveral Times with the reſt of the Boarders; he ſaid, He had an Intereſt in Shipping, and invited all the Family to go on Board a Ship. They accepted of his Invitation, and were very well entertained, but ſuſpected nothing; but at length it was obſerved there was too great a Familiarity between Mrs. Baynton and the Priſoner, more than was common betwixt ſo near Relations; they afterwards perceived that Mrs. Baynton was inclinable to drink, which cauſed ſome Jealouſy of her in the Family, and ſhe perceiving the Strangeneſs of the Family, gave Mrs. Nightingale notice that ſhe ſhould go in a ſhort Time, for that ſhe had finiſhed her Buſineſs at Law, and that the Town was chargeable, and ſhe intended to be gone at ſuch a Time. When that Time was expired, ſhe pretended to Mrs. Nightingale that there was another Thing had happen'd that would detain her a Week longer: She conſented that ſhe ſhou'd ſtay. Now you may obſerve by the Evidence, that it was uſual for Mrs. Busby and Mrs. Rawlins to go to Oxenden Chapel on Fridays; which Mrs. Baynton very well knew, and pretends that ſhe was to go in a Coach that way into Golden-Square, and invites them to go in her Coach, and promiſed to ſet them down by the Chapel: They accepting the Invitation, and being come near the Place, the Coach was ſtopped by ſeveral Men. Hartwell the Bayliff opened the Door, got into the Coach, ſaid it was an Arreſt. At which Mrs. Buſby was very much concerned, and thought this Arreſt was for Mrs. Baynton, and that ſhe and Mrs. Rawlins might go out, for they were not concerned in the Matter. At laſt they perceived it was of themſelves; and then Mrs. Baynton pretended to be concerned for them: And when the People in the Street aſked what was the Cauſe of the Diſorder; the Bayliffs ſaid, that they were Cheats and Trading-Women that owed People Money, and now they are Arreſted for it. Under this pretended Arreſt, they were carried to the Star and Garter Tavern in Drury-Lane, and put into a Back-Room. They were in a great Conſternation at their being Arreſted, being not conſcious to themſelves that they owed Money to any Perſon. One came to Mrs. Buſby, and ſaid, See that your Name be right, that you are rightly Arreſted. Another of the Bayliffs, by Force, carry'd away Mrs. Rawlins, ſaying, ſhe was his Priſoner; and it was pretended, that one Bayliff had a Proceſs to carry the one to Newgate, and another had another Proceſs to take the other to the Marſhalſea. Mrs. Rawlins was carried to Hartwell's Houſe. When ſhe was there, Mrs. Baynton pretended that coming by accidentally, ſhe heard her Voice, and came in, and ſeem'd to pity her, and ſaid, Madam, will none of your Friends help you? She propoſes her Brother to be Bail, and Holt he was to be the other. Under that Pretence of being Bailed, they carry her to the Vine Tavern in Holborn, where Hartwell pretended to be very willing to take his Bail, and ſaid he knew Holt, but queſtioned the Priſoner. It will appear to you from this Evidence, and that which follows, of this Force and Contrivance, that their Deſign was to bring about the Marriage; for when the Bail was pretended to be refuſed, Mrs. Baynton propoſes a Marriage between the Priſoner and Mrs. Rawlins, as the beſt way to make an end of this troubleſome Buſineſs: She would have the Ring from her Finger, to get a Wedding-Ring made by it. Says Mrs. Rawlins, I have no mind to be married: Says Mrs. Baynton, it's beſt for you to be marry'd; and threatned Mrs. Rawlins, that if ſhe did not marry, ſhe ſhould be committed to Newgate. There was a Parſon and Clerk ready, who were called to do the Office. The young Woman being under this Terror, the Office of Matrimony was performed; and ſhe was forthwith conveyed to one Blake's, and by Conſtraint there was put to Bed in the Day-time. You muſt go to Bed, ſays Mrs. Baynton: I will not go, ſays the young Woman: And ſome Violence was uſed to force her Cloaths off, and ſhe was put to Bed, where ſhe lay about an Hour or Two, and thereby the Marriage was ſuppoſed to be conſummated.

The Priſoner, on the next Day, being diſcourſed with about this Matter, and aſked, whether he was Mrs. Baynton's Brother? No indeed, ſays he; I made uſe of her as my Tool; ſhe hath done my Job for me; I'll make her Satisfaction for it, not To-morrow, being Sunday, but on Monday I will do it, and never ſee her Face more. After all this Evidence, the Priſoner doth inſiſt upon his Innocence, becauſe he was not preſent at the Arreſt; and hath produced ſeveral Witneſſes to prove, that this young Woman was very well ſatisfy'd with the Marriage; and that Reverend Divine the Parſon aſked her, whether ſhe was willing to be married to the Gentleman? And ſhe ſaid ſhe was willing. And then Mr. Blake's Maid and Daughter ſaid, that ſhe deſired them to pluck off her Shoes and Stockings, undreſs her, and put her to Bed. And that very Night the Priſoner and Mrs. Rawlins went to Mr. Baber's, a Juſtice of the Peace, at York-Buildings, to take a voluntary Oath before him, that ſhe married this Priſoner by her own free Conſent. Mr. Baber would not Adminiſter the Oath. And that afterward they Bedded together that Night, and the next Day they went abroad together in a Coach; and meeting his Barber, the Priſoner bids him come to him to ſhave him, and ſays to him, Here is my Wife; ſhe ſaid likewiſe, that he was her Huſband: he wiſhed her much Joy; ſhe reply'd, that ſhe did not queſtion it, ſeeing that what ſhe had done was by her free and full Conſent; and declared, ſhe was well ſatisfied with what was done. The next Proof is of their Return to Blake's Houſe, where they firſt lodged; the Priſoner Swendſen orders his Wife to take Mr. Blake by the Hand, and aſk him how he did? Which ſhe did, and expreſſed to him how well ſhe was pleaſed with the Marriage, ſaying, This is my dear Huſband, and kiſſed him. His Witneſs tells you, on Friday Night a Conſtable comes with the Recorder's Warrant, to apprehend the Perſons ſuppoſed to have committed this Force; and diſcourſing with her, ſhe expreſſed her ſelf very well ſatisfied with her Marriage, ſo that they deſiſted from ſerving the Warrant. Then he relies upon his Reputation, as being a Man of great Credit, and having had Goods conſigned to him, and paid Bills of Exchange; and produces Witneſſes to prove, that he was a Trader in Norway, where he lived, and in good Credit, remitted Money, drew and paid Bills of Exchange, freighted Ships, &c. and was in very good Eſteem by the chiefeſt in thoſe Parts. Then he called other Witneſſes, to let you know how the young Woman carried it at the Recorder's; that there ſhe ſaid, that ſhe was married by her own free Conſent, &c. Gentlemen, this is the Sum of the Evidence that he hath given. To which it is reply'd, That as to what was ſaid before the Recorder, that is true; ſo long as he had her Hand in his, ſhe declared her Conſent to, and Satisfaction in the Marriage; but when he was withdrawn, and ſhe was examined by her ſelf, ſhe declared her Marriage was by Violence and Force, that ſhe did it out of Fear, &c. Then they tell you again, of a Licenſe that was taken out by him, and produced by him, but bore Date almoſt Three Weeks before this Marriage was accompliſh'd: It was obſerved alſo upon the Licenſe, that this Licenſe was to marry Mrs. Rawlins of the Pariſh of St. Mary White-Chapel, when ſhe lived not there.

This is the Sum of the Evidence on both Sides, and theſe Obſervations are to be made from it:

I. You are to know, that if ſhe be taken away by Force, and afterwards married, tho' by her Conſent, yet is he guilty of Felony: For it is the taking away by Force that makes the Crime, if there be a Marriage, tho' by her Conſent.

II. In the next place it is to be obſerved, That ſhe was taken away by Force, and a Stratagem was uſed to give an Opportunity thereunto, and the Arreſt was but a Colour.

III. You may conſider upon the Evidence, how far the Priſoner was concerned in the firſt Force: It is true, he was not at the Arreſt, and did not appear until ſhe was brought to Hartwell's Houſe; and under that Pretence of Bailing her, ſhe was carried to the Vine Tavern, where there was a Parſon ready, and the Marriage was had in ſuch manner as you have heard. Now, conſidering theſe Matters, it is left to you to determine, whether the Marriage was not the End of the Arreſt? And if ſo, how it could be poſſible for ſuch a Force to be committed to effect the Priſoner's Deſign, and he not be privy to it?

IV. If it can be imagined, that he was not privy to the colourable Arreſt, yet ſhe was under a Force when he came to her at Hartwell's Houſe; and from thence ſhe was carried by Force unto the Vine Tavern, where ſhe was married. That is a forcible taking by him at Hartwell's Houſe; and tho' when ſhe was at the Vine Tavern ſhe did expreſs her Conſent to be married, yet it appears even then ſhe was under a Force, and had no Power to help her ſelf. Her Marriage was by Force, when ſhe was carried to Blake's, and put to Bed; all this was Force: Nay, when ſhe was carry'd to the Juſtice of Peace, even then ſhe was under a Force; and all that ſhe ſaid was not freely, but out of Fear: Such a Force would avoid any Bond, for ſhe was under Impriſonment. But however, if the firſt taking was by Force, and ſhe had conſented to the Marriage, the Offence is the ſame, it is Felony.

And as to his Reputation, it is poſſible he might have been an honeſt Man: A Man is not born a Knave, there muſt be Time to make him ſo, nor is he preſently diſcovered after he becomes one. A Man may be reputed an able Man this Year, and yet be a Beggar the next: It is a Misfortune that happens to many Men, and his former Reputation will ſignify ſy nothing to him upon this Occaſion. If you be ſatisfied upon the Evidence, that he is guilty of this Crime, you are to find him ſo; if not, you ought to acquit him.

Swendſen. I deſire, my Lord, that my Wife may be aſked, Whether ſhe did not, upon her Knees, ſwear, ſhe went away from me as good a Maid as ſhe came to me?

L. C. J. Holt. That is a Queſtion need not be aſk'd, ſince the Marriage is ſo plainly proved, which is ſufficient to bring you within the Statute.

The Jury deſire the Act may be read.

L. C. J. Holt. Let it be read. It was ſo.

The Jury aſk Mrs. Rawlins, how old ſhe is?

Mrs. Rawlins. Eighteen at Candlemas.

L. C. J. Holt. Would you aſk any Queſtions upon this Act?

Jury. No, my Lord.

Then the Jury went out, and after Three Hours Stay, brought him in Guilty.

The Tryal of SARAH BAYNTON, JOHN HARTWELL and JOHN SPUR, On Wedneſday, November the 25*th*, 1702. in the Afternoon.

A Motion was made by the Queen's Council, for putting off this Tryal to Friday Morning; but his Lordſhip would not grant it, but ordered it to begin preſently.

The Priſoners were call'd to the Bar, and a Proclamation made for all concern'd to attend.

The Jury were Sworn, whoſe Names are, viz.

Robert Lympany, Gent.	Giles Ridle, Gent.
John Outing, Gent.	Robert Legg, Gent.
Francis Parr, Gent.	Thomas Elton, Gent.
Richard Bealing, Gent.	Charles Longland, Gent.
Charles Murry, Gent.	Simon Smith, Gent.
John Cannon, Gent.	Henry Lobb, Gent.

Clerk of the Ar. SArah Baynton, John Hartwell, and John Spur, hold up your Hands. [Which they did.] Gentlemen of the Jury, look upon the Priſoners, and hear their Charge. Then the Indictment was read as in the firſt Tryal: Upon which they were Arraigned, and plead Not Guilty.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; The Priſoners at the Bar, together with one Swendſen, ſtand Indicted before you for a very great Offence; Swendſen (for whoſe Sake this Felony was committed, for which the Priſoners are now to anſwer) has already had his Tryal: The Three Priſoners at the Bar were his Accomplices. The Law, to ſhow how odious ſuch Offences are, and to deter all Perſons whatſoever from committing them, has made no Diſtinction between the Principal and Acceſſories: The Abettors, Procurers, or Contrivers, are declared and enacted to be, and to be judged as Principal Felons. The Gentlewoman mentioned in the Indictment, Mrs. Pleaſant Rawlins, was the Daughter of Mr. William Rawlins, who left her a good Fortune: Her Grandfather likewiſe left her an Eſtate of Inheritance. Her Father being dead, her Guardian, Mr. Buſby, placed her under the Care of his Siſter, who boarded with her at one Mrs. Nightingale's. Mrs. Baynton (one of the Priſoners at the Bar) and Mr. Swendſen lodged at Mr. Blake's, where they projected what was afterwards put in Practice. Lodgings were to be taken for Mrs. Baynton at Mrs. Nightingale's. In order thereunto, 'twas pretended, That ſhe was a Country Gentlewoman who came to Town about a Law-Suit, and being very tender of her Reputation, would board in a ſober Family. By theſe Inſinuations, Lodgings were taken for her at Mrs. Nightingale's, where in a little Time ſhe got acquainted with the Family; and in Converſation, as often as 'twas poſſible, would take ſome Opportunity to diſcourſe of her own Affairs, particularly of her Relations, of her dear Brother Swendſen, who was never mentioned without many Commendations. Mr. Swendſen, tho' no ways related to her, often viſited her under that Character: But Mrs. Baynton having lived a very ſcandalous lewd Life in Town, could not long continue under the Diſguize ſhe came in to Mrs. Nightingale's. Intimation was given to the Family of her true Character, and Notice thereof was ſoon given to her by her Maid. Whereupon ſhe reſolv'd to quit her Lodging; and being paſt all Hopes of betraying Mrs. Rawlins, and wheedling her into her Ruin with her Conſent, ſhe enters upon another Project, which was to bring about the Marriage by Force and Violence.

In this Contrivance, you will find every one of the Priſoners at the Bar had their ſeveral Parts to act; Hartwell was to get a Writ, Mrs. Baynton, who could not be concerned in the Execution of the Writ, was to contrive when and in what manner it might be executed: Hartwell ſues forth the Writ, and Mrs. Baynton appoints the Time. She knowing it to be the uſual Cuſtom for Mrs. Buſby and Mrs. Rawlins to go to Church on Friday Mornings, ſhe prepares a Coach, and proffers her Service to ſet them down at the Chapel, and prevail'd with them to come into the Coach. As they were going toward the Chapel, Hartwell the Bayliff ſtops the Coach, and gets into it; and Spur conducts the Coach to a Houſe that they had prepared for their Purpoſe. When Hartwell got into the Coach, Mrs. Rawlins and Mrs. Buſby, not imagining themſelves to be concerned, deſired him to let them go out; No, ſays Hartwell to Mrs. Buſby, it is you that I am concerned with; let you and I have a few Words together, and all Things will be ſet to rights. But Mrs. Buſby refuſing to have any Diſcourſe with him, away they were all carry'd (Mrs. Buſby, Mrs. Rawlins, and Mrs. Baynton) to the Star and Garter Tavern in Drury-Lane. While Mrs. Buſby and Mrs. Rawlins were kept together, they had no Hopes of making Mrs. Rawlins marry; and therefore Hartwell by Force takes away Mrs. Rawlins, and carries her to his own Houſe: Spur, who had no Proceſs whatſoever againſt Mrs. Busby, yet keeps her Priſoner at the Star and Garter. Mrs. Baynton ſeeing her Friends uſed in this manner, pretended a very great Concern, and out of Kindneſs went to find their Friends to Bail them. Mrs. Rawlins had not been long at Hartwell's before Mrs. Baynton came into the Houſe to her, in a great Surprize to find her there,

there, telling her ſhe fancied, as ſhe paſſed by Hartwell's Houſe, ſhe heard Mrs. Rawlins's Name mentioned: Immediately ſhe gave her a very melancholy Account, how ſhe had been in Search for her Friends; but none could be found, and to Goal ſhe muſt go, except Bail could be got. At laſt ſhe thought of her Brother, ſhe was ſure he would be her Bail; and having placed him hard by, ſhe brings him to Hartwell's. When he comes there, all Three of them (Hartwell, Mrs. Baynton and Mr. Swendſen) under Pretence of ſetting Mrs. Rawlins at Liberty, take her to another Tavern, where ſhe was plainly told, ſhe muſt marry Mr. Swendſen, or go to Newgate, and undergo the Miſeries of a Goal: If ſhe married, then all ſhould be well. The Circumſtances of the Taking, Detaining, and Marrying this Gentlewoman at that Tavern, and of the ſeveral Facts I have mentioned, our Witneſſes will prove to you.

Mr. Busby Sworn.

Serj. Darnel. I pray give his Lordſhip an Account of this young Gentlewoman, Mrs. Pleaſant Rawlins.

Mr. Busby. My Lord, her Father, Mr. William Rawlins, was a Man of a very good Eſtate: He ordered his Eſtate to be ſold to pay his Debts and Legacies, and the Overplus was given to his Daughter this young Gentlewoman, which was about 2000 l. Her Grandfather likewiſe by Will left her an Eſtate of 20 l. per Annum.

Mrs. Nightingale Sworn.

Serj. Darnel. Mrs. Nightingale, pray give an Account to his Lordſhip, how long this Gentlewoman lived in your Houſe.

Mrs. Nightingale. My Lord, ſhe hath lived with me about Three Years; and ſince Mrs. Buſby and Mrs. Rawlins came to live with me, my Huſband died: I am likewiſe a Widow too; we all lived together. Mrs. St. John, about Nine Weeks before this Fact, came to me, and aſked me whether I took Boarders? I ſaid, No, I would take none without it were thoſe Ladies that boarded with me before. She told me, this was a Country-Gentlewoman that was coming to Town about a Suit of Law; ſhe was a very good Woman, and would be near a Church. She told me, that ſhe was a-kin to the Lady Anne Baynton, and a great deal more that I cannot remember: But I told her, I did not deſign to take Boarders. She came about Three Weeks after, and aſked me, whether I was in the ſame mind? She told me the Gentlewoman was come to Town: She told me ſhe was an extraordinary good Woman, and that her Huſband was acquainted with the Family, and gave her an extraordinary Character. She ſaid ſhe would not have parted with her herſelf, but that ſhe did not take in Boarders, and therefore thought it not worth her while to take her in.

L. C. J. Holt. Did ſhe ſay, ſhe was her Huſband's Acquaintance?

Mrs. Nightingale. She told me, That her Huſband was very well acquainted with the Family. She told me, Mrs. Baynton came to Town on Saturday Night, and was very weary with her Journey. She ſaid to me, Madam, if you pleaſe ſhe ſhall come to you, and recommend her ſelf. At length ſhe came, and repeated the ſame Things, That ſhe was a Country-Gentlewoman, and came up about a Suit of Law, &c. She ſaid, Madam, I underſtand you are very nice in taking of Boarders, which makes me the willinger to come to board with you. I took her to be a very ſober Woman; and ſeeing it was but for a little while, I agreed with her. She ſaid ſhe would come on Wedneſday: The Reaſon ſhe told me, that ſhe came to Town no ſooner, was, becauſe her Maid was ſick of a Fever. Mrs. St. John recommended to her a Neighbour's Child, which was a pretty civil Girl; ſhe hired her, which made me ſtill like her the better. On Wedneſday, Mrs. Baynton and her Servant came: We were all Widows, and became very familiar in a ſhort Time; for ſhe is a Perſon of a great deal of Senſe, if pleaſed God to give her Grace. She invited us on Michaelmas-Day, to go on Board of a Norway Ship; ſhe had a Friend there. One of my Friends aſked, whether ſhe had any Intereſt in it? She ſaid, Yes, ſhe had. She likewiſe ſaid ſhe had a dear Brother come to Town, an extraordinary Chriſtian, that had married her Siſter: They ſtrived, ſhe ſaid, who ſhould outdo one another in Affections; and when her Siſter was upon her Death-bed, ſhe recommended Mrs. Baynton to be both his Wife and Siſter. Mrs. Baynton ſaid, My dear Brother will come To-morrow to ſee me. Accordingly he came, with Two Gentlewomen with him, that we never ſaw before nor ſince: Then ſhe ſent for a Bottle of Claret, and deſired us to drink, which we did, with them. Then ſhe took Occaſion to praiſe the Family ſhe was in: She invited her Brother to live in the ſame Street near to her, ſeeing he had but a pingling Stomach; and ſaid, ſhe believed he would like their Victuals. He declined that, ſaying, it was out of the way for his Buſineſs, being obliged to be every Day at 'Change. Then ſhe aſked me, what I would have a Meal, if he ſhould come at any Time to ſee her? I told her 12 d. for a Dinner; for ſo I had of the young Ladies Friends that came to ſee them.

Serj. Darn. Pray, how did the Country-Gentlewoman behave her ſelf?

Mrs. Nighting. She ſeem'd to be very modeſt, but ſhow'd abundance of Love to her Brother.

Serj. Darn. In her Behaviour?

Mrs. Nighting. Very well, below Stairs; but the Maid ſaid ſhe would ſwear above.

Council. How oft did he dine there?

Mrs. Nighting. Nine or Ten times.

Council. You ſay he dined Nine or Ten times at your Houſe, did you diſcern that there was any thing of Love betwixt him and Mrs. Rawlins?

Mrs. Nighting. No Body in the Houſe diſcerned that there was.

Serj. Darnel. Were they obſerved at any Time to be alone?

Mrs. Nighting. No, Sir, they were never alone that I know of.

Serj. Darnel. Had you any Miſtruſt of Mrs. Baynton?

Mrs. Nighting. Yes, Sir; ſhe came twice home elevated with Drink, and we began to ſuſpect there was ſomething between her and her Brother that was not uſual. My Lord, her Servant took notice, that we carried it with Strangeneſs towards her Miſtreſs; inſomuch that ſhe ſaid to her Miſtreſs, Do not you diſcern the Family to be ſtrange? Ay, Betty, (ſaid ſhe) but I do not care; if they rouſe me, they'll find me like a Lion: Or to that Effect.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did Mrs. Baynton diſcern that you knew that ſhe ſaid ſo?

Mrs. Nighting. No, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you expreſs any Diſlike of her?

Mrs. Nighting. No, Sir, not to her; tho' I diſcovered my Diſlike of her to ſeveral of the Family, telling them, I deſigned to give her Warning when her Month was up. But before that, ſhe came to me and paid me, as her Cuſtom was, for a Week. She told me ſhe had received a Letter from her Friends, That the Truſtees had made up the Buſineſs; and the City being chargeable, ſhe deſigned to return into the Country. I went to my Mother in another Room, and expreſſed to her, with a great deal of Joy, the Warning ſhe had given me. When her Time was expired, ſhe came to me again, and ſaid, There was a Fellow would cheat her in Town, and that ſhe muſt take out a Statute of Bankrupt againſt him, which would detain her a Week longer; and upon her Deſire, becauſe I would part friendly, I conſented to her ſtaying a Week longer.

and

L. C. J. Holt. Speaking to the Priſoner Baynton, ſaid, She might aſk Queſtions.

Mrs. Baynton. Yes, my Lord. Mrs. Nightingale, when I went into your Houſe there was no ſuch Character of me, as you ſpeak of; but you invited me; and I ſaid, That if I ſhould be troubleſome, I would not come.

L. C. J. Holt. She liked you well by the Character that was given you by Mrs. St. John, but afterwards ſhe had no ſuch good Thoughts of you.

Mrs. Baynton. If they did not like me, my Lord, they might have given me Warning; but inſtead of that, when I gave her Warning, ſhe ſeemed to be ſorry.

L. C. J. Holt. She was glad of the Opportunity of your giving her Warning.

Mrs. Baynton. You were pleas'd, Mrs. Nightingale, to ſpeak of going aboard of Ship, it was after Mr. Swendſen had been there a ſecond time: When he came to your Houſe, you ſaid you loved Punch entirely; and I ſaid, If you pleaſe, Madam, Mr. Swendſen ſhall make a Bowl; and this was before our going on Board.

L. C. J. Holt. Was Mr. Swendſen aboard the Ship?

Mrs. Nightingale. Yes, he was; but I knew not of his being there.

Mrs. Busby Sworn.

Serj Darn. Come Mrs. Busby, give an Account to my Lord and the Gentlemen of the Jury what you know of this Matter.

Busby. My Lord, I know Mrs. Nightingale told me that Mrs. St. John came to take Lodgings for Mrs. Baynton, according as Mrs. Nightingale expreſſed her ſelf; and I was a little curious in Enquiring what ſhe was, and begged her Pardon for asking ſo many Queſtions about her.

Serj. Darn. After ſhe had been there, how did ſhe carry her ſelf?

Mrs. Busby. At Michaelmas Day, at Night, ſhe came up very brisk, and ſaid ſhe had heard from her Dear Brother, and fell a praiſing him, and ſaid how happy ſhe was in him; and that her Siſter, upon her Death-bed, ſaid that ſhe ſhould be both Wife and Siſter to him: She ſaid likewiſe, that ſhe had been a Widow 4 Years, and that ſhe would never Marry for the Love ſhe had to her Brother.

Serj. Darn. Pray give an Account, Mrs. Busby, whether there was any Talk in the Family of this Woman's leaving the Family?

Mrs. Busby, Sir, as to her leaving the Houſe, we were informed that ſhe was not what we took her to be; and Mrs. Nightingale and I were very uneaſy; at which Mrs. Nightingale deſign'd to warn her away.

Coun. Mrs. Busby, Pray give an Account of your going in the Coach with her.

Mrs. Busby. On Friday Morning, the 6th of this Month, Mrs. Baynton ſaid ſhe was going to have her Lac'd-Head waſhed; ſhe ſent her Maid for a Coach, and ſaid ſhe would ſet us down near the Chapel. After ſhe had invited me, and I ſaw the Coach, I did not know how to evade it well, but accepted of her Civility. She bid the Coach ſtop at Hedge-Lane, and ſaid we ſhould be as near to the Chapel, as ſhe went to the Place whither ſhe was going. When we came to the Old Buildings, I was looking out at them, and on the contrary ſide I heard a Buſtle, Mrs. Baynton called to the Coach to go on, and preſently Hartwell was in the Coach, with his Arm about Mrs. Rawlins's Waſte. I did think Mrs. Baynton was Arreſted, I cry'd out for God's ſake let us alone, we are not concern'd. Hartwell pull'd up the Glaſs, and ſaid we were the Perſons concerned. She (pointing to Hartwell at the Bar) ſaid, This is the Man, and he himſelf own'd it before the Recorder, that he told me 'twas the Young Lady and I was concerned; ſays he, Let me have a few Words with you, and all will be well. I ſaid, To be ſure I will not ſay any thing to you except my Friends were near. This Lady, Mrs. Baynton ſaid, No Madam, be ſure do not; ſhe adviſed me not to be frightned, for ſuch a Caſe once happen'd to her with her Niece. I asked Hartwell what he would do with us? He ſaid he would carry us to a Place where we might ſend for our Friends, and make up the Buſineſs. Mrs. Baynton ſeemed to take my Part, and ſaid ſhe would go to my Friends; and ſuch Diſcourſe as this held till we came to the Star and Garter Tavern.

Coun. Mrs. She pretended to be your Friend?

Mrs. Busby. Yes, Sir, ſhe argued with the Bailiff and ſaid, May I not go where I will? And ſeemed to be very angry with him. Mr. Hartwell alſo ſeemed to be very angry with her, and call'd her Mrs. Pert, ſaying; if ſhe were Civil, ſhe ſhould have the more Reſpect.

Coun. Whom did he call Mrs. Pert?

Mrs. Busby. He called Mrs. Baynton ſo. Then they carry'd us to Drury-Lane, and ſhe adviſed us to put on our Masks upon our Faces: I thought to do it, but afterwards recalling my ſelf, and thinking I had done nothing amiſs, I would not. They conducted us to the Tavern and put us into a back Room, and Mrs. Baynton haſt'ned out of the Room as if ſhe would go for ſome of my Friends, as ſhe ſaid ſhe would: I directed her to Mr. Thornton and another; which ſhe ſaid ſhe went to. The Room where we were was very dark, ſo we preſſed into a forward one; we were in a very great Fright, inſomuch, that I ſaid to Mrs. Rawlins, We'll live and die together, and then ſhe took me hold by my Arm. Hartwell ſeeing that, took her from me by Force, and ſaid ſhe muſt go with him. I underſtood ſhe was Arreſted in one Court, and I in another; She muſt go to the Marſhalſea, and I to Newgate. Then they hurried her down Stairs out at a back Door into a Coach: I cry'd out Murder out of the Window, and ſaid, For God's ſake take care of the young Woman, for I know not where they are carrying her. After this, Mr. Spur ſaid to me, What have you got by Bawling? we are better known here than you. My Fright was very great, and I was very much ſurprized: There was a Man left with me, I made my Complaint for Friends to be ſent for. Says I to him: Is it Treaſon or Felony? He told me he did not know, he was only hired for a Crown to keep me: I deſired that the Gentlewoman of the Houſe might come up to me; it was about 12 a Clock, and at laſt ſhe did. And Mr. Wakeman came up, and ſaid, Madam, Why do you not Eat and Drink? He ſaid the young Gentlewoman was well, and did both. Said the Woman of the Houſe to me, Do not you owe Money? I ſaid, No. Nor the young Lady neither? I anſwered, None that we ſhould be Arreſted for. When this Mr. Wakeman was here, ſaid the Gentlewoman of the Houſe to me, Why do you not enquire into the Cauſe of Action? Wakeman told me, that there was a Writ againſt Sabina Busby, at the Suit of William Jones, and that William Jones Arreſted me. Says the Woman of the Houſe, it may be your Name is not right, and ſo you may be falſly Arreſted. I asked whether I might not ſend for Bail, it being an Action of Debt. It being an Action of Debt, ſays he, you may; and I will go for you as cheap, and as ſoon as a Porter. But I ſaw him no more till Night.

not

Coun. How long did they keep you?

Mrs. Busby. It was betwixt 10 and 11 when they carried me there firſt, and it was till not near Night that I ſaw him again.

Serj. Darn. Did he make you give Bail for your Diſcharge in the Afternoon?

Mrs. Busby. There was a Lad in the Room ſaid, Madam, I will go to ſome of your Friends for you. I directed him to ſome of them, and when he came again, he ſaid, they were not at home. There was a Poor Man, a Labourer, at work in the Chimney, he gave me a private Wink, and ſaid he would go for me, for he knew Mr. Uncles; he went, and Mr. Uncles came. I likewiſe ſent for Mr. Thornton and another; they all came, and met together. Mr. Thornton demanded on what Account they kept me there? They ſaid they had a Writ againſt me of 200 l. Then they ſaid they would Bail me. They asked them, Where the young Lady was? They told him ſhe was with her Friends. Then, my Lord, after this, the Bailiffs ſhifted off, and I knew nothing more of it, but went away to get a Warrant to take care of the young Lady.

Coun. Had you any manner of Dealings with Mr. Jones?

Mrs. Busby. No manner of Dealings with him in all my Life.

Mr. Mountague. When you came into the Fore-Room, was Hartwell then with you in the Room?

Mrs. Busby. She and I was in a great Fright; ſeveral was there, and Hartwell was one of them.

L. C. J. Holt. Was Mrs. Baynton there?

Mrs. Busby. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. How long did ſhe ſtay?

Mrs. Busby. She went out preſently; ſhe told me ſhe would go to ſome of my Friends; and away ſhe went.

L. C. J. Holt. Did ſhe come again?

Mrs. Busby. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you ſee Hartwell there?

Mrs. Busby. My Lord, he was there, and forced the young Lady from me; and Spur, when I put my Head out of the Window, and cried after her, ſaid to me, What have you got by your Bawling? We are better known here than you.

Mr. Juſtice Gould. Pray, when was the firſt time you took notice of Spur?

Mrs. Busby. Sir, the firſt time I took particular notice of him, was, when I put my Head out of the Window; but it ſeems he rid behind the Coach; he was left with me when Mrs. Rawlins was taken away, and was in the Room when my Friends came; and Mr. Wakeman was there too.

Mr. Juſtice Powell. I ask you, did your Friends offer Bail?

Mrs. Busby. Yes, Sir, they did.

Mr. Juſtice Powell. Did any of them require Bail?

Mrs. Busby. My Friend, Mr. Thornton, asked on what Account they kept me? And they ſaid they had an Action of 200 l. againſt me.

Hartwell. Was I there then? Did I ever come back after you were there?

Mrs. Busby. I believe you were, but I cannot be poſitive; but you were in the Coach, and you were the Man that carried away Mrs. Rawlins from me.

Mr. Wakeman Called.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Give an Account to my Lord and the Councel, of what you are concerned in this Matter.

Mr. Wakeman. If it ſhall pleaſe your Honour, my Lord, Mr. Hartwell came on Wedneſday, (before this thing happen'd) to my Houſe, and left Word there, that there was a Writ to be Executed, if I would Execute it: I was not then at Home, but when I came Home, which was late at Night, my Daughter told me of it. I went to him on Thurſday Morning. He ſaid to me, Mr. Wakeman, I have a Writ to be Executed, will you do it? I ſaid I would. Then he carried me to Weſtminſter to the Mitre-Tavern, and made no ſtop nor ſtay; then he called for a Quart of Ale, and a Quart of White-Wine, and a Toaſt and Cheeſe; and when we had Eat one Toaſt, we had another. The Man of the Tavern came in, whoſe Name was Holt. Mr. Hartwell ſaid to me, We muſt not do the Buſineſs this Morning; it cannot be done, ſaid he: But he appointed me to come on Friday Morning. He ordered me, if I came firſt, to call for Wine, and the ſame as we had before. I came firſt, and called for Wine, Ale, a Toaſt and Cheeſe; in the mean time Mr. Hartwell came in, and Eat ſome with me.

L. C. J. Holt, Who was the Writ againſt?

Mr. Wakeman. It was againſt Madam Rawlins. Mr. Holt went out, and called Mr. Hartwell, and ſaid, the Buſineſs would be done that Morning. Then we followed him to Stretton-Ground. Mr. Holt ſaid to Spur and my ſelf, we had beſt ſtand near the Place: He took Mr. Hartwell with him to the Top of the Street, the People gazed at us, and I was aſhamed, and went into an Ale-Houſe; a Man came back, and ſaid, The Coach is at the Door; and Mr. Hartwell came and ſaid, the Coach would come by preſently; Mr. Hartwell and Spur went before, and bid me follow the Coach; and coming near the Park, in Weſtminſter, I was behind; Mr. Spur ſtopped the Coach. Mr. Spur ſtopping the Coach I made up to it; but before I came to it Mr. Hartwell was in the Coach, and what he ſaid to them I do not know.

L. C. J. Holt. Who ſtopped the Coach?

Mr. Wakeman. Mr. Spur ſtopped the Coach, and ſerved the Writ; it was my Writ. Mr. Hartwell ordered the Coach to drive to the Star and Garter Tavern in Drury-Lane; we went all along with it; and when we came there, they led us to a little Room, and the Gentlewomen did not like it, but went into a forward Room, and this Gentlewoman (pointing to Mrs. Baynton) with her Band-box, was with them.

Coun. Who was it?

Mr. Wakeman. (pointing to Mrs. Baynton at the Bar, ſaid 'twas ſhe) I did not know but ſhe was this Lady's Friend; I never ſaw any of them before in all my Life. Mr. Hartwel went down, and Mrs. Baynton; and I thought ſhe went to fetch Madam Rawlins's Friends. Mr. Hartwell came to the young Lady,

Lady, and ſaid, You muſt go to my Houſe. The young Gentlewoman ſaid, O Lord, don't part us. But he did ſo, and put her into a Coach. I ſaw the Gentlewoman going, but did not go with her my ſelf, for I was ſtopped by a Gentleman of my Acquaintance; but when I came to Mr. Hartwell's Houſe, I ſaid, Mr. Hartwell, Where is the young Gentlewoman? He told me ſhe was below Stairs. I told him that I had ſomething of Buſineſs elſewhere. I asked him, and he gave me Leave to go. I went, and when I returned back to Mr. Hartwell's Houſe, I asked for him, but his Wife told me he was not within. I asked where the young Gentlewoman was? She anſwered, that ſhe was gone with her Husband to the Vine-Tavern in Holborn. I went and asked for Mr. Hartwell; they told me he was above Stairs. I went up, and found him with Mr. Spur, and a Tallow-Chandler. I ſhould have told you, that when I went from Mr. Hartwell's Houſe about my Errand, I ſaw Mr. Holt ſtanding near the Back-Door of the Five-Bell Tavern in Wich-ſtreet, and he asked me where Mr. Hartwell was? I told him he was at Home. Then Holt asked for the Woman, I ſaid ſhe was at Hartwell's---- Afterwards I ſaw Mr. Swendſen at the Five-Bells with Holt, and he gave me a full Glaſs of Claret; I drank it off, and away I went. When I went to the Vine Tavern, Mr. Hartwell, Mr. Spur, and a Tallow-Chandler were in a Room by themſelves. I ſaw that Gentleman (looking out of a Window) that was with Holt; he looked at me, and I at him. Mr. Hartwell asked me if I had dined? I told him, No. He ſaid there were ſome Stakes. I dined there; then the Gentlewoman, viz. Baynton, at laſt came out of Door and called Mr. Hartwell to her. When Mr. Hartwell came from her, he told me that the Matter was made up, and the Priſoner was diſcharged.

L. C. J. Holt. Who was the Writ againſt?

Mr. Wakeman. Mrs Rawlins.

L. C. J. Holt. When the Priſoner was diſcharged they gave you the Writ again?

Mr. Wakeman. Yes.

L. C. J. Holt. Had you a Writ againſt Mrs. Busby?

Mr. Wakeman. I had none againſt her.

Coun. How far is it from Hartwell's Houſe to the Star and Garter Tavern?

Mr. Wakeman. It is about a Furlong.

Coun. What was your Writ for?

Mr. Wakeman. But 20 l.

L. C. J. Holt. And you ſaid you had an Action of 200 l.

Mr. Wakeman. My Lord, Mr. Hartwell ſaid ſo. I do not know the Woman, but ſhe will be ſhewed us.

L. C. J. Holt. Look at the Priſoner at the Bar. Was ſhe in the Coach when Mrs. Rawlins was Arreſted?

Mr. Wakeman. Yes, Yes. I had no ill Deſign in what I did.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you go behind the Coach?

Mr. Wakeman. Yes, my Lord, I did.

The Writ produced and read in Court.

Mr. Juſtice Gould. Were you there at the Star and Garter when Mrs. Busby's Friends came to Bail her?

Mr. Wakeman. When I came to the Star and Garter Tavern, the Gentleman came and asked me, whether I knew where Mrs. Busby was? I told him I left her at the Vine Tavern, and believed that there they might find her.

L. C. J. Holt. Was Spur at the Vine Tavern any Time?

Mr. Wakeman. My Lord, I left Spur, Hartwell, and the Tallow-Chandler at the Vine Tavern.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Was it Mr. Hartwell or Spur that asked you to eat Stakes?

Mr. Wakeman. It was Spur.

Mrs. Baynton. Mr. Wakeman, Did you ever ſee me before the Arreſt?

Mr. Wakeman. No, I never ſaw you before then.

Mrs. Berkley Sworn.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Pray look upon this Priſoner Mrs. Baynton, Do you know her?

Mrs. Berkley. Yes, Sir, I do know her.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. How came you to know her?

Mrs. Berkley. By her Lodging in Mrs. Nightingale's Houſe, and no otherwiſe.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Did you ever hear her ſpeak of a Brother that ſhe had?

Mrs. Berkley. Yes, Sir, ſhe ſaid this Mr. Swendſen was her Brother.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Mrs. Rawlins, Are you Sworn?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Stand forward a little. Do you give my Lord an Account of the whole Matter.

Mrs. Baynton. Mrs. Rawlins, ſpeak the Truth, I deſire nothing but Juſtice.

L. C. J. Holt. You are upon your Oath remember, and therefore ſpeak nothing but the Truth.

Coun. Give an Account of your Proceedings in the whole Matter.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Do you know any of the Priſoners at the Bar?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, I know them all, Mrs. Baynton, Mr. Hartwell, and Mr. Spur.

L. C. J. Holt. Do you know them?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. How came you to be acquainted with Mrs. Baynton?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, I came to be acquainted with her by her taking Lodgings at our Houſe. She came and took Lodgings at Mrs. Nightingale's for a Month or Six Weeks. When her Month was out, ſhe ſaid her Buſineſs was done, and ſhe muſt go into the Country.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Give an Account of what happen'd to you on Friday the 6th of November.

Mrs. Rawlins. We were going to Oxenden Chappel, Mrs. Busby and I. Mrs. Baynton told us, ſhe was going that Way, and invited us into her Coach; ſhe ſaid ſhe would ſet us down near the Chapel; we accepted of her Invitation, and went with her. When we were at the Broad Way in Dartmouth-Ground, there was Hartwell, and Two more Bailiffs; they ſtopped the Coach, and Mr. Hartwell got in. Said Mrs. Busby to him, For Chriſt's Sake let us go out, we owe no Man any Thing. He ſaid the Matter concerned Mrs. Busby and me, and he ordered the Coach to be driven to the Star and Garter Tavern in Drury Lane.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Did any Body come into the Coach?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, Sir, Mr. Hartwell.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Did he do any Thing to the People in the Coach?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, Sir, but ordered the Coach to go to the Star and Garter Tavern. When we came there we went up Stairs, and did not ſtay above a Dozen Minutes in one of the Rooms, but removed from thence to a Room forward: Mrs. Baynton was gone, and Hartwell ſent up Spur.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Mrs. Pray look, Do you ſee the Man that came up to you?

Mrs. Rawlins. I ſuppoſe it was the Man that is next to Mrs. Baynton; if I be not miſtaken it is him; I cannot be poſitive.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Some of them came up to you and ſaid, they muſt have the young Lady down Stairs?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, Sir; and Mrs. Baynton ſaid, Nay. They after that forced me away.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Who was it that did that?

Mrs. Rawlins. It was Mr. Hartwell that did it.

Hartwell. Who is Mr. Hartwell?

Mrs. Rawlins. Your ſelf, Mr. Hartwell, took me about the Middle, and drove me down Stairs. I cried out Murder, and deſired ſome good Body to go with me; he ſaid, if I did not hold my Tongue he would ſend me to Newgate that Minute.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Where did he carry you?

Mrs. Rawlins. He carried me from the Star and Garter Tavern to his own Houſe.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Where is his Houſe?

Mrs. Rawlins. In Witch-Street.

Mr. Serj. Darn. How long did he keep you there?

Mrs. Rawlins. I do not know juſtly, but I think it was about an Hour.

Mr. Serj. Darn. What did they do with you there?

Mrs. Rawlins. They put me into a Back Room, there was no Body with me; but at laſt Mrs. Baynton came in and pretended ſhe was going by and heard my Name, and therefore came in. I was very much frighted. She ſaid ſhe had been at ſeveral of my Friends but could get no Body to come. She told me ſhe would ſend for her Brother, and he ſhould be Bail for me.

L. C. J. Holt. You ſay ſhe would ſend for her Brother to be your Bail?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, My Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. What followed then?

Mrs. Rawlins. She went for her Brother to come to be my Bail, and it was hardly half a Quarter of an Hour before ſhe came in again with her Brother.

Coun. What is her Brother's Name?

Mrs. Rawlins. Swendſen. Mr. Hartwell came into the Room where I was, and ſaid, Is Mrs. Rawlins's Friend come yet? Mrs. Baynton anſwered, Yes. They had a Coach prepared at the Door, and in that they carried me to the Tavern in Holborn; there was in the Coach, Mrs. Baynton, her Brother, Mr. Hartwell, and I.

Mr. Mountague. Where did they carry you?

Mrs. Rawlins. To the Vine Tavern in Holborn.

Mr. Mountague. What did they do with you then?

Mrs. Rawlins. They carried me up Stairs, put me into a Room, I cannot tell exactly how long I was there.

Mr. Mountague. What did they do then?

Mrs. Rawlins. Then Holt was there to be the other Bail; they were very willing to take his Bail, but were very ſcrupulous in taking Mr. Swendſen's Bail. They told me in ſhort that I muſt marry Mr. Swendſen, and that would put an End to it, or elſe I muſt go to Newgate.

L. C. J. Holt. Who ſaid ſo?

Mrs. Rawlins. Mrs. Baynton ſaid, If I did not marry her Brother, I muſt go to Newgate. I replied, that I would not marry without my Friends Advice; but I was not ſo much afraid of going to Newgate, as I was of being murdered, or ſent away ſomewhere into the Country, where I might never ſee or hear of my Friends.

Coun. How did they behave themſelves in the Room?

Mrs. Rawlins. They importun'd me to marry Mr. Swendſen, and for that End Mrs. Baynton would have my Ring from my Finger; I would not let her have it, but ſhe forced it away from me. I aſked her what ſhe would do with it? She told me, ſhe would go and get a Wedding Ring made by it. She went and bought a Wedding Ring, and gave me my own again: Then the Miniſter and Clerk was brought into the Room; the Miniſter and Clerk came in and married Mr. Swendſen and me.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. How long did you ſtay in the Room after you were married?

Mrs. Rawlins. Not a Quarter of an Hour.

L. C. J. Holt. Where was Hartwell?

Mrs. Rawlins. They were in the Room over-againſt us.

L. C. J. Holt. Who brought the Parſon into the Room?

Mrs. Rawlins. Holt brought them in.

L. C. J. Holt. Where did they carry you then?

Mrs. Rawlins. To Mr. Blake's Houſe in Holborn.

L. C. J. Holt. Who went with you?

Mrs. Rawlins. No body but Mr. Swendſen Mrs. Baynton, and my ſelf.

L. C. J. Holt. What did they do then?

Mrs. Rawlins. They order'd the ſheeting of a Bed, and put me to Bed.

Coun. Was there any Compulſion in going to Bed, or did you go voluntarily?

Mrs. Rawlins. I did not go freely, but was forced to Bed; Mrs. Baynton aſked me to go to Bed; after which ſhe aſked me the Reaſon why I would not go to Bed? Says I, my Reaſon is, becauſe I don't care to go to Bed ſo ſoon.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Who undreſſed you?

Mrs. Rawlins. Mrs. Baynton and Mr. Blake's Daughter.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. How long was you in Bed?

Mrs. Rawlins. About an Hour or Two.

Mr. Mountague. When you went out, had you any Expectation to go any where elſe but to Church?

Mrs. Rawlins. No where but to Church, upon my Word.

Mr. Mountague. Did you go voluntarily to the Tavern in Drury-Lane, or againſt your Will?

Mrs. Rawlins. To be ſure it was againſt my Will.

Hartwell. Did you ſee me, Madam, at the Vine Tavern the Time that you were confined there?

L. C. J. Holt. Did you ſee Hartwell at the Vine Tavern before you were married?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, Mr. Hartwel, you may remember that you were once in the Room where I was: I will give you an Inſtance of it; you were ſmoaking a Pipe of Tobacco; Mrs. Baynton ſaid to you, What would you have with her? You ſaid, I was the Priſoner.

L. C. J. Holt. Did they take the Bail that was offered?

Mrs. Rawlins. Mr. Hartwell ſaid, he would conſider it with Mrs. Baynton; and they all went out and left me alone by my ſelf. Mrs. Baynton, after they had conſulted together, came in and told me that they refuſed the Bail.

Mrs. Baynton. When you were left by your ſelf, Mrs. Rawlins, if you had not a mind to marry Mr. Swendſen, why did not you make your Eſcape.

L. C. J. Holt. Did ſhe come there by her Conſent?

Mrs. Baynton.

Mrs. Baynton. No, my Lord, but when ſhe was left to her ſelf, ſhe might have eaſily got away.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Rawlins, You were left alone in the Room, Was there any Propoſal of your Marriage to Mr. Swendſen made before that?

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, if I may have leave to ſpeak, they contracted Friendſhip almoſt a Month before.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. ſtay your Time. (To Mrs. Rawlins,) Conſider the Queſtion.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, the Ring was bought before ſhe was left alone, ſhe knows it very well, and was looking upon it when I came into the Room again.

L. C. J. Holt, To Mrs. Rawlins. Had you the Ring before that?

Mrs. Rawlins. Not as I know of, my Lord.

Mrs. Baynton. You had the Ring upon your Finger, and ſaid, it was a very handſome one; but I had bought it a little too wide for you.

Mrs. Rawlins. It is very ridiculous; I ſaid no ſuch Thing.

L. C. J. Holt. She was left in the Room alone, when you both went out; but it ſeems it was upon her Deſire to be Bailed, and therefore ſhe would not eſcape.

Mr. Serj. Darnel. Yes, yes, it was with the Intent to be Bailed that ſhe did this.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Baynton, it is now Time for you to make your Defence.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, I will. Mrs. Busby, when Mr. Swendſen came to her Houſe firſt, called him her dearly beloved Likeneſs; Did not ſhe ſay ſo Mrs. Rawlins?

L. C. J. Holt. Did you ever hear Mrs. Busby call Mr. Swendſen her dearly beloved Likeneſs?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, I deſire ſhe may anſwer for her ſelf.

Mrs. Baynton. Pray, My Lord, let her ſtand by her ſelf a little, that no body may ſpeak to her.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you ever hear her ſpeak of Mr. Swendſen, that he was her dearly beloved Likeneſs?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, my Lord; I do not know but ſhe might ſay ſo.

L. C. J. Holt. What, when Mr. Swendſen was by?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Do you remember that you ever heard Mrs. Busby call him ſo?

Mrs. Rawlins. Once, my Lord, to Mrs. Baynton.

L. C. J. Holt. What ſay you Mrs. Busby, did you call him ſo?

Mrs. Busby. My Lord, I thought him very much like my Husband in one Part of his Face, and Mrs. Baynton her ſelf called him my beloved Likeneſs.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, How could I call him hear beloved Likeneſs, and never ſaw her Huſband with my Eyes?

L. C. J. Holt. Well, what Queſtions will you ask?

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, I will ask Mrs. Rawlins ſeveral Queſtions. The Second Sunday when I was at their Houſe, Mrs. Rawlins, you know you ſtaid at home, and I did ſo too; Did not you ſay then, that you wiſhed Mr. Swendſen was there, when they were all at Church, did not you ſay ſo? Remember you are upon your Oath.

L. C. J. Holt. Upon your Oath, do you remember any ſuch Thing?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, my Lord; and I would not for all the World ſay any Thing but the Truth.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you, or did you not?

Mrs. Rawlins. Indeed, my Lord, I do not remember that ever I ſaid any ſuch Word.

Mrs. Baynton. Mrs. Rawlins, did you not come to my Bed-ſide often, and kiſs and hug me, and would be talking with Pleaſure of Mr. Swendſen?

L. C. J. Holt. Do you remember that you ſat at her Bed-ſide, and ſpake of Mr. Swendſen, and kiſſed and hugged her?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, indeed Mrs. Baynton did much talk of her Brother.

L. C. J. Holt. But did you talk of her Brother?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, if I did ſay any Thing, I did not ſpeak with a Deſign to have him; it may be I might do ſo.

Mrs. Baynton. Mrs. Rawlins, did not you bid me to tell him, that there was a good Lady, that had her Fortune in her own Hands, and at her own Diſpoſal, that would make him a very good Wife? Did not you tell me this?

Mrs. Rawlins. I did not ſay ſo; but ſaid there was a very good Lady that would make a very good Wife whenever ſhe married; but did not ſay, that ſhe would make him a good Wife.

Mrs. Baynton. Mrs. Rawlins, Have not you been the moſt uneaſy Woman in the Word, when he did not come to Dine at Mrs. Nightingale's?

L. C. J. Holt. Speak out.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, Mr. Swendſen had a Cold, and ſhe told me, ſhe could not be eaſy till he was cured of it.

Mrs. Rawlins. I never ſaid ſuch a Thing. Can you ſay ſo Mrs. Baynton?

Mrs. Baynton My Life is upon it, and I will not for my Life ſay any Thing but the Truth.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you expreſs any ſuch Thing to Mrs. Baynton, of your Uneaſineſs till Mr. Swendſen had got rid of his Cold?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, my Lord.

Mrs. Baynton. But, Madam, Did not you ſeek to tell me theſe Things by your ſelf? You told me, you had a great deal of ill Uſage; and told me, you lived more like a Servant than any Thing elſe: You ſaid, that when there was another Lodger there, becauſe you went to ſee her in her Room, you were chid ſeverely for it, and charged never to go near her.

Mrs. Rawlins. I do not know but that I might do it.

L. C. J. Holt. But why did you do it?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, I can give you no Account.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you bid her tell him, that you knew a Gentlewoman, at her own Diſpoſal, that would make him a very good Wife?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, I do not know but that I ſaid to Mrs. Baynton I wiſhed her Brother a very good Wife.

L. C. J. Holt. But did you ſay, that you knew a Gentlewoman, at her own Diſpoſal, and a Fortune, that would make him a very good Wife?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, I did not ſpeak with a deſign to marry her Brother, but was reſolved to take the Advice of my Friends.

Mrs. Baynton. Did not you ſay, that you wiſh'd your ſelf Mr. Swendſen's Wife, ſeveral Times?

L. C. J. Holt. Did you ever tell her, that you wiſhed your ſelf Swendſen's Wife?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, I don't know whether I did or no.

L. C. J. Holt. How came you to have ſuch a good Opinion of Mr. Swendſen?

Mrs. Rawlins. Mrs. Baynton told me he was a very good temper'd Gentleman, and never out of Humour.

L. C. J. Holt. Would you marry a Man for his good Humour only?

Mrs. Rawlins. I never had married, if there had not been a Force put upon me.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you tell Mrs. Baynton, that you would never marry, but by the Conſent of your Friends?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, I did.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, I never heard her ſay ſo in all my Life.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you tell her, notwithſtanding what you ſaid of Mr. Swendſen, that you would never marry without the Conſent of your Friends?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, I did often ſay, that I would never marry without their Conſent.

Mrs. Baynton. Mrs. Rawlins, did not you, when you were acquainted with Mr. Swendſen, ſlight Mr. Pugh?

L. C. J. Holt. Did you ſhew any diſlike of Mr. Pugh, upon Swendſen's Account?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, I cannot tell; if I did ſhew any Ill-will to Mr. Pugh, it was not with a Deſign to have Mr. Swendſen.

L. C. J. Holt. Hath there been any Courtſhip carry'd on betwixt Mr. Swendſen and you?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, no more Courtſhip to me than to all the Family; my Lord, I did not perceive that Mr. Swendſen ſhewed me more Favour than any in the reſt of the Family.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any more Queſtions, Mrs. Baynton?

Mrs. Baynton. When Mr. Swendſen was walking in the Garden, did not you ſay, that you would go and walk with him, but that they would take notice of it? But pray, ſaid I, do not, you may make them angry by it. Did not you ſay that you would go up, and look out of the Window, with Expectation to have been called down by me? Did not you walk with Mr. Swendſen, and diſcourſe with him about the Things of Love, and he ſaid, he would have no body but you, and you likewiſe ſaid, that you would have no body but him?

L. C. J. Holt. Were you alone with Mr. Swendſen, at that Time, in the Garden?

Mrs. Rawlins. I think I was with him in the Garden at that Time, but not alone.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, ſhe was alone with Mr. Swendſen in the Garden ſeveral Times.

Mrs. Rawlins. I can ſpeak it upon my Oath, that I was never in the Garden with Mr. Swendſen, but that Time.

Mrs Baynton. Did not you ſay that you would have no body but Mr. Swendſen?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, I never ſaid any ſuch Thing.

Mrs. Baynton. What made you go up Stairs, and cry for an Hour together; and ſaid to my Servant, that you would have your Belly full of crying, before you went away: Betty can teſtify this, ſhe is in the Court, but muſt not be heard.

L. C. J. Holt. She may be called, if you will.

Mrs. Baynton. Pray Mrs. Rawlins, did you not once come up to me, and ſaid you had been twice there, and wiſhed that you could ſee Mr. Swendſen, and that you could not be eaſy without his Company?

Mrs. Rawlins. As I am upon my Oath, I never ſaid ſuch a Thing.

Mrs. Baynton. Mrs. Rawlins, did not you ſay a Hundred Times, that you loved Mr. Swendſen, above any Man in the World?

Mrs. Rawlins. I never ſaid any ſuch Thing in my Life.

Mrs. Baynton. Did not you peel Walnuts for Mr. Swendſen, and deſire me to carry them to him?

Mrs. Rawlins. I never did ſo.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, I would have her asked, whether ſhe conſented to be taken away, directly, or indirectly?

L. C. J. Holt. What ſay you to that Mrs. Rawlins?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, It was all againſt my Knowledge and Will, I never conſented to it.

Mrs. Baynton. Mrs. Rawlins, is not this true, that you pulled your Ring from your Finger, and gave it me to have a Wedding Ring made by it, which diſcovered your free Conſent to the Marriage.

Mrs. Rawlins. No, Mrs. Baynton, do you think that I would have given any Manner of Conſent to be married to him, without the Advice of my Friends, if I had not been forced to it.

Mrs. Baynton. Did not you ſend all Mr. Pugh's Letters back again, and deſired him in your Letter to come no more at you; and that you would have nothing to ſay to him, and that if he came he would put you in ſuch a Fright, that you would not be capable of ſeeing him.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you tell her ſo?

Mrs. Rawlins. I do not remember that I told her any ſuch Thing.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you ſend back Mr. Pugh's Letters?

Mrs. Rawlins. I do not remember that I ſpake any Thing to Mrs. Baynton, tho' I did ſend back the Letters.

L. C. J. Holt. Why did you ſo?

Mrs. Rawlins. It was not upon Mr. Swendſen's Account that I did ſo.

L. C. J. Holt. Do you remember that you repeated to her any of the Contents of a Letter that you had written to Mr. Pugh, about ſending back his Letters.

Mrs. Rawlins. No, my Lord, I did not.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, I had it from her own Mouth, elſe how could I have known of it? I did not know it, till ſhe told me. Mrs. Rawlins, how can you ſay you told me not theſe Things?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, Mrs. Baynton, I did not.

Mrs. Baynton. Mrs. Rawlins, you do not ſay true. I never knew nothing but what I had from her own Mouth.

L. C. J. Holt. You ſent his Letters back again, pray upon what Account did you do ſo?

Mrs. Rawlins. It was upon Things that we heard of Mr. Pugh, that was not very handſome. Mrs. Busby can tell the ſame.

L. C. J. Holt. Did the Courtſhip break off?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, it was but the Day before this Thing happen'd.

Serj. Darnel. Mrs. Busby, did you know of the ſending back the Letters? And who was it that put Mrs. Rawlins upon ſending of them back?

Mrs. Buſby. Yes, Sir, it was by our Advice.

Serj. Darnel.

Serj. Darnel. Whoſe Hand was it that wrote the Letter?

Mrs. Busby. Mrs. Berkley.

Serj. Darnel. Was it by her Inclination and Conſultation of her Friends?

Mrs. Baynton. Had not you a Miſtruſt, that there was Love betwixt Mr. Swendſen and Mrs. Rawlins?

Mrs. Busby. I had no Miſtruſt of any ſuch Thing.

Mrs. Baynton. Why did you tax me with it then?

L. C. J. Holt. When was this?

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, it was at the Limner's; I heard ſomething as if Mrs. Rawlins ſhould ſpeak Words of Diſcouragement to Mr. Pugh. Mrs. Buſby, when I told her of it, ſhe denied it, and ſaid, Mrs. Baynton, I do not know this. But here is Mrs. Rawlins her ſelf, and ſhe ſhall anſwer for her ſelf, if ſuch a Thing is: She thought, if there was any Strangeneſs between Mrs. Rawlins and Mr. Pugh, it was occaſion'd by Mrs. Rawlins's Love to Mr. Swendſen. When they aſked my Advice of the Thing, Mrs. Rawlins and Mrs. Buſby told me, that Mr. Pugh had Three or Four Thouſand Pound Stock: I ſaid, if Mr. Mr. Pugh had ſuch a Love for Mrs. Rawlins as he pretended to, that he wou'd do well to have drawn out One Thouſand Pound, and given it to the young Woman.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Baynton, have you any thing to aſk?

Mrs. Baynton. Perhaps I may have more to ſay, but I am in Confuſion, my Lord: Mrs. Busby, as well as Mrs. Rawlins, was never eaſy, but when Mr. Swendſen was there.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Rawlins, upon the Oath that you have taken, did you conſent to your being taken away after the manner as you were, or gave any Encouragement to Mr. Swendſen?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, my Lord, I do not know that I gave him any manner of Encouragement.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, ſhe gave him all the Encouragement imaginable.

L. C. J. Holt. I pray, Mrs. Baynton, do not put your ſelf into a Paſſion: I ſpeak in Favour to you; you will not deliver your ſelf ſo well in Paſſion, as without.

Mrs. Baynton. She lay baiting of me Night and Day, and always ſpeaking to me of her Love to Mr. Swendſen; and to hear her ſpeak the quite contrary, really it moves me, my Lord.

Betty, Mrs. Baynton's Maid, called.

Mrs. Baynton. Betty, have not you told me, that Mrs. Rawlins ſaid ſhe would fill her Belly with Crying before ſhe went, and that ſhe would enquire for Mr. Swendſen?

Betty. No, I ſaid no ſuch thing.

L. C. J. Holt. Speak the Truth, without being biaſs'd by one ſide or other. Did you hear that ever Mrs. Rawlins went into the Chamber to cry, or enquire for Mr. Swendſen?

Betty. No, my Lord, I never heard it.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, I never was the Woman that aſked this Maid any Queſtion any way, but ſhe frankly told me all this; and ſhe often ſaid, that ſhe was ſure Mrs. Rawlins had a very great Kindneſs for Mr. Swendſen: And one Day ſhe hearing of ſuch a Noiſe of Laughing, and the Doors flinging, that ſhe went down Stairs to ſee what was the Matter; Mr. Swendſen was there then, and Mr. Pugh. Mr. Pugh was ſo offended at Mrs. Rawlins's Mirth, that he went away in a great Diſtaſte; and ſhe ſaid, that Mrs. Rawlins was never eaſy, but when ſhe was talking of Mr. Swendſen.

Mrs. Baynton. Betty, did not you ſay, that ſhe aſked you ſeveral times of Mr. Swendſen, and wiſhed he would come and dine with them?

Betty. I never heard her but once.

Mr. Swendſen's Jury return to give in their Verdict all Twelve.

Gentlemen, are you agreed in your Verdict?

Anſ. Yes.

Who ſhall ſay for you?

Anſ. The Foreman.

Eraſmus Johnſon, a Dane, and one of the Jury, ſaid, He was not ſatisfied.

Johnſon. If it ſhall pleaſe you, my Lord, I am not ſatisfied; I do not find, from any of the Evidence that hath been given, that he was privy to the Arreſt; my Conſcience will not let me comply with the reſt, that he is Guilty.

L. C. J. Holt. What Kind of a Conſcience have you? Do you not believe what the Witneſſes have ſaid? Have you any Evidence that Mrs. Rawlins went away with her own Conſent?

Johnſon. I do not find, my Lord, that it was done by him.

L. C. J. Holt. Did not he go to Hartwell's Houſe, and from thence, while ſhe was under the Force, went with her to the Vine Tavern, where he married her? Which was a forcible taking by him.

Johnſon. But, my Lord, it was with her Conſent; elſe how could he marry her?

L. C. J. Holt. Tho' ſhe did conſent to the Marriage; yet if ſhe was taken by Force, it is the ſame Offence.

Foreman. My Lord, he did agree that this was a Point of Law, and would leave it with your Lordſhip; he believes ſhe was forced, but he thinks he was not privy to the Woman's Actions that he employed.

Johnſon. My Lord, I do not ſee there were any Evidence againſt him.

L. C. J. Holt. When the Bayliffs were employed to take her, it appears by the Sequel, that it was with an Intent that he might marry her: What can be plainer? Govern your ſelf by Reaſon.

Johnſon. I believe that there was a Force by the Bayliffs.

L. C. J. Holt. Did not he take the Advantage of the Force? And was that to any other Purpoſe, but for him to marry her? There was no Cauſe of Action either againſt her or Mrs. Busby.

Johnſon. It proved ſo, my Lord.

Foreman. My Lord, he would know whether he were in that Statute, in Point of Law, if this Maid did conſent to it?

Judge Powel. He was guilty of the Thing; he was conſenting to it afterward.

Johnſon. They were in Streets and Houſes before they married; and ſo, if ſhe had not conſented, ſhe might have cried out.

Judge Powel. Did not he go to Hartwell's Houſe, and to the Vine Tavern?

Johnſon. I cannot believe him Guilty, as I would anſwer it before God and the World.

L. C. J. Holt. Pray conſider, do not give a Verdict contrary to plain Evidence.

Johnſon. By all the Circumſtances, ſhe was as willing as he: All that I can ſay to it, my Lord, is, that he had ſomething of Connivance with this Woman.

Foreman. He believed that all along.

Johnſon. I ſay, Mr. Foreman, at the Beginning there was ſuch a Thing, as was done by Mrs Baynton, without his Knowledge.

Foreman. He did conſent before to take your Lordſhip's Judgment; that if your Lordſhip be of Opinion that he was concern'd in the firſt Force, then that will carry it.

Johnſon. I do not know that ſhe complain'd to any body, my Lord: I do not ſpeak for any Favour or Affection, my Lord; but 'tis merely out of a tender Conſcience.

Foreman. He agreed, that if the firſt Force was within the Statute, then he would comply; and that we came away upon, to have your Lordſhip's Opinion. He believed, Mr. Swendſen did employ the Woman.

L. C. J. Holt. Do you agree?

Johnſon. I cannot, but I leave it to your Lordſhip's Pleaſure.

Mountague. The Fact he does agree to; he does agree that ſhe was taken away by Force.

L. C. J. Holt. Was ſhe taken away by Force?

Johnſon. She was by the Bayliffs.

L. C. J. Holt. Did not he take the Advantage of this?

Johnſon. She was under the Force before.

L. C. J. Holt. Beſides, Did not you perceive that ſhe conſented for fear ſhe ſhould go to Newgate? The Law of England ſays, that is a void Conſent, which is obtained out of Fear.

Mr. Johnſon. My Lord, I don't know there was any Violence us'd by him either in Word or Deed.

L. C. J. Holt. Was not he preſent when Violence was uſed?

Mr. Johnſon. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Then was Violence uſed by him.

Mr. Johnſon. But ſhe was very well ſatisfy'd both before and after ſhe was Married.

L. C. J. Holt. She was under Force, before ſhe was Married; and indeed, all that Night, and afterwards.

Mr. Johnſon. She was not hindred to ſend Letters.

Coun. Who would you have carried them, the Bayliffs, or Mrs. Baynton?

Mr. Johnſon. No, my Lord; but ſomebody for Half a Crown, or a Crown.

L. C. J. Holt. It appears very evident, if you will believe Witneſſes, that ſhe was under a Force, before ſhe was Married, when ſhe was Married, all Night after, and the next Day when ſhe was at the Recorder's. If you are not ſatisfy'd, I'll ſay no more, not one Word more.

Foreman. We muſt go my Lord, and have been Faſting all Day, He is prepared for Faſting, if it be for a Day, or two or three.

Judge Powel. The Queſtion is now, Whether you do not believe, upon all this Evidence you have heard, whether this Lady was not under an Arreſt, and taken by theſe Bayliffs?

Mr. Johnſon. Yes, I do believe that; but I do not believe Mr. Swendſen employed them; all that I ſpeak upon is this, that ſhe had her free Liberty.

Foreman. My Lord, he was reſolved to ſtand by what your Lordſhip ſhould ſay.

Judge Powel. If he did not ſet them to work, yet his Act afterwards made it as bad as if he had actually employ'd the Bayliffs.

Mr. Johnſon. I can ſay no more, I muſt agree with the reſt.

Gentlemen, Are you agreed?

Foreman. Yes, my Lord, we are all agreed now.

Then, Is he guilty, or not Guilty?

Foreman. He is guilty, -----And ſo you ſay all. Yes.

What Goods or Chattels, &c.?

Foreman. We know of none.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Baynton, Will you go on?

Mrs. Baynton. I hope your Lordſhip will take Notice that my Servant own'd it once.

L. C. J. Holt. What was it?

Mr. Mountague. Only whether he was to Dine there.

Mrs. Baynton. That which I ſaid, my Lord, ſhe ſaid to me.

Mrs. Baynton. Mrs. Rawlins, Will you be pleaſed to anſwer me to ſome Queſtions?

Mrs. Rawlins. I will.

Mrs. Baynton. Did not you ſit down in the great Chair in the Dining-Room, and you ſaid, now I muſt go to Bed? Did not you pluck off your Things, and gave them to me, and I gave them to Mr. Blake's Daughter?

Mrs. Rawlins. I conſider Mrs. Baynton, that you undreſſed me.

Mrs. Baynton. You ſat in the Chair, and undreſſed your ſelf, How can you deny it?

Mrs. Rawlins. Mrs. Baynton, I can deny it, for I did not.

Mrs. Baynton. Nay, more than that, when you were in Bed, Did not you call to Mr. Swendſen, My dear Huſband, Why do not you come to Bed?

Mrs. Rawlins. I ſaid no ſuch thing.

L. C. J. Holt. Where was this?

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, it was at Mr. Blake's.

Mrs. Baynton. Did not you ſay, Come to Bed my dear Huſband, you muſt love no Body in the World but me?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, Mrs. Baynton, I did not; I have taken an Oath this Day, and I ſaid no ſuch thing.

Mrs. Baynton. Did not you ſay, that you loved him above all the Men in the World?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, Mrs. Baynton, I did not tell you any ſuch thing.

Mrs. Baynton. Did not you ſay theſe Things?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, Mrs. Baynton.

Coun. Speaking to Mrs. Baynton, ſaid, Do you know that ever Mrs. Rawlins writ any Letters to Mr. Swendſen?

Mrs. Baynton. She wou'd; but I would not let her.

L. C. J. Holt. Why would you not let her?

Mrs. Baynton. I told her I would not carry any Letters to him, but if ſhe deſir'd me to tell him any thing by word of Mouth, I would do it; and, my Lord, when Mrs. Rawlins was Arreſted, I going down Witchſtreet, the Coach that ſhe was in coming along then, and I ſeeing her in it, that was the only Reaſon that I went into the Bailiff's Houſe. When I came there, ſhe hung about me, kiſſed me, and ſaid ſhe deſir'd me to ſtand by her; when your Lordſhip hears, you will believe me no other than a Friend to her. She begged me not to leave her. I offered Bail to Mr. Hartwell, but he would not take it; but ſaid I behav'd my ſelf ſawcily. And when Mr. Swendſen came in, ſhe ſaid, now ſhe was happy. Beſides, my Lord, when he was there, he did not deſire her to go out of the Houſe.

L. C. J. Holt. If you had no Deſign but for her Good, How came you to Mrs. Nightingale's upon on ſuch a Deſign, with Pretence that you had a Law-Suit, &c.? And why did you carry her out in the Coach, in order to be Arreſted?

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, it was not the firſt Time that they went with me in a Coach; they deſired me ſeveral Times to ſet them down, and I did ſo.

L. C. J. Holt. Why did you this? You pretended that you had a Law-Suit, and that you came to Town about it, and it appears not that you had any?

Mrs. Baynton. No, my Lord, I did not.

Nightingale. My Lord, it was Mrs St. John that recommended Mrs. Baynton to me.

L. C. J. Holt. We know that.

Mrs. Baynton. If I were ſuch a Woman as they repreſent me to be, Why did they not warn me out of their Houſe. Mrs. Rawlins, ſay the whole Truth, and remember that you are upon your Oath, I deſire not Favour or Affection. Did not you ſay to Mr. Swendſen, This is my own dear Huſband, and this is the Ring that Married us? Did not he begin to ſpeak, and you ſaid to him, hold your Tongue, and let me ſpeak?

Mrs. Rawlins. Mrs. Baynton, you know I was very much intoxicated, I hardly knew I had a Head.

Mrs. Baynton, Mrs. Rawlins, you can drink your Glaſs of Wine as well as any Body elſe. Mr. Swendſen was often there at Cards, and ſhe was the moſt uneaſieſt Creature in the World when he was not her Partner. Did you not deſire me to let you ſit by him in particular?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, I did not.

Mrs. Baynton. Mrs. Rawlins had ſaid this ſeveral Times to Mr. Swendſen to deſire him to ſit by her. We play'd at Cards, and ſav'd the Winnings till it ſhould come to 20*s.* and deſign'd it for a Treat. Did not you ſay you would treat Mr. Swendſen, and would ſend for Walnuts and Apples? But I ſaid, No, you ſhall not.

Mrs. Rawlins. I did ſend for Walnuts and Apples; but it was not with a Deſign to pleaſure Mr. Swendſen?

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Baynton, Why did you ſay Mr. Swendſen was your Brother?

Mrs. Baynton. I never ſaid he was my own Brother.

L. C. J. Holt. You ſaid it.

Mrs. Baynton. No, my Lord, I ſaid he was my Siſter-in-Law's Huſband.

L. C. J. Holt. How was ſhe your Siſter-in-Law.

Mrs. Baynton. By Adoption, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. By Adoption, What do you mean by that?

Mrs. Baynton. Mrs. Rawlins, if you had no Mind to him, Why did you give him ſuch Encouragement, as to kiſs him, and go betwixt his Legs and kiſs him?

Mrs. Rawlins. I take it upon my Oath, that I never did ſo in all my Life.

Mrs. Baynton. Did you not love him?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, not well enough for to make him my Huſband.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, it is very hard that all theſe Things that I have ſaid to her, are all true, and ſhe hath made a Reſolution to ſay nothing but No.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Rawlins, Did you deſign to have Mr. Swendſen for your Huſband?

Mrs. Rawlins. My Lord, I was threatned to be ſent to Newgate, if I did not Marry him. You know, Mrs. Baynton, that you ſaid, that if I did not Marry your Brother, they would carry me to Newgate.

Mrs. Baynton. I never in my Life ſaid any ſuch thing.

L. C. J. Holt. Pray Mrs. Baynton, give an Account how you have lived?

Mrs. Baynton. I never run in any Bodies Debt.

L. C. J. Holt. Had you a Huſband?

Mrs. Baynton. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. How long hath he been dead?

Mrs. Baynton. Eight Years To-morrow.

L. C. J. Holt. But you have had a Child lately, within this Four Months; Are you Married now?

Mrs. Baynton. Yes, my Lord, I am Married.

L. C. J. Holt. How do you prove that?

Mrs. Baynton. I could give your Lordſhip an Account; but it is not proper now, before the whole Court.

L. C. J. Holt. Is it not proper now?

Mrs. Baynton. No, my Lord, for ſome Reaſons.

L. C. J. Holt. I think it is very proper. Pray give an Account how you have liv'd?

Mrs. Baynton. I have a Siſter at Barbadoes, that hath been very kind to me.

L. C. J. Holt. Was you Married to Mr. Baynton?

Mrs. Baynton. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Hartwell, Who directed you to take out this Writ againſt Mrs. Rawlins, at the Suit of one Jones?

Mr. Hartwell. My Lord, I was ſent for to the Star and Garter Tavern in Drury-Lane, by Mr. Holt.

L. C. J. Holt. Where is he?

Mr. Hartwell. He is not yet taken. He ſent for me twice before I went. When I came to him, I received Money for a Writ againſt that Lady; on which I ſent my Aſſiſtant for a Writ.

L. C. J. Holt. Who was your Aſſiſtant?

Mr. Hartwell. (Pointing to Spur, ſaid he was his Aſſiſtant.) I ſent the Writ to Mr. Wakeman, to get him to ſerve it. He was not at home, and I went to him the next Morning. I aſked him whether he would ſerve the Writ, he told me he would; and I told him the ſame that Mr. Holt told me, that it could not be done till Friday Morning. On Friday Morning Mr. Holt went with me, and theſe Officers, Wakeman and Spur. He bid us be ready, and ſaid the Coach was coming. So we ſerved the Writ as we were order'd, and went to the Star and Garter Tavern in Drury-Lane; from thence I carried her to my Houſe. If I had had any Miſtruſt of any bad Deſign, I would have carry'd her back again. But I came forward with her to my Houſe. In a little Time after ſhe had been there, came Mrs. Baynton, and one that is gone now, (meaning Mr. Swendſen) was ſent for, by ſome Stratagem that I knew not of. They being together, told me, that every thing was agreed of and made eaſy.

L. C. J. Holt. What was made eaſy?

Mr. Hartwell. The Debt, as I thought, my Lord. When I carried the young Gentlewoman firſt to my Houſe, I left her with my Wife and a young Woman. When I came home again, I found Mr. Swendſen and this Gentlewoman there, who told me, that every thing was made eaſy. On which they deſired to go to any Tavern, I knew not where; but they agreed to go to the Vine Tavern in Holborn.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Holt. Why did you take her from her Friend Mrs. Buſby?

Mr. Hartwell. It is uſual for Officers to do with Priſoners as they pleaſe.

L. C. J. Holt. That is a barbarous Thing to ſeparate them one from another, when you could apprehend there was no Danger of being reſcued.

Mr. Hartwell. My Lord, I beg your Lordſhip's Pardon, I have no Counſel but my ſelf; I may ſpeak Things in Point of Law that may prejudice my Life; but as to the Purpoſe I'll ſpeak the Truth.

L. C. J. Holt. You made her put on her Maſk; you forc'd her to it.

Mr. Hartwell. Mrs. Rawlins, Did I force you to put on your Maſk?

Mrs. Rawlins. Yes, he forced me, but I would not at firſt; but he forced me. When I cry'd out Murder, he ſaid, Put on your Maſk, and hold your Tongue, or you ſhall go to Newgate.

L. C. J. Holt. What Writ had you againſt Mrs. Buſby?

Mr. Hartwell. There was no ſuch thing, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. You ſaid you had a Writ againſt Mrs. Buſby, and another againſt Mrs. Rawlins.

Mr. Hartwell. My Lord, as to the Writ againſt the young Lady, there was one; I know of no other poſitively.

L. C. J. Holt. Why did you refuſe Holt's and Swendſen's Bail.

Mr. Hartwell. It was no ſuch thing, my Lord; I cannot help what the People ſwear; I hope to prove to the contrary, both from the beginning to the end.

L. C. J. Holt. Why did you part with your Priſoner at the Vine Tavern without Bail?

Mr. Hartwell. My Lord, I no ſooner came into the Vine Tavern, but the Perſon that employ'd me, gave me the Money; which was this Woman, pointing to Mrs. Baynton.

Mrs. Baynton. You ſaid Holt employ'd you. I gave him no Money, my Lord; and he declared, that he never ſaw me before in his Life.

Mr. Parker called.

L. C. J. Holt. Where do you live?

Parker. I lived at the Star and Garter then, and Mr. Holt was there, who ſent me for Mr. Hartwell.

Mr. Hartwell. My Lord, when I came there, Mr. Holt was drinking, and it was all out but a Glaſs. He aſked me to drink; which I did. Then we went from the Star and Garter down to the Mitre in Weſtminſter, which was Holt's Houſe. Being there, and I ſmoaking a Pipe, in came this Lady, (pointing to Mrs. Baynton) and gave me Money for a Writ. I ſent my Aſſiſtant for the Writ, and the firſt Perſon I lit of, which was Mr. Wakeman, I made uſe of to aſſiſt me in it. When I ſerv'd it at the Star and Garter Tavern, this Gentlewoman (pointing to Mrs. Baynton) aſked me where I liv'd? I ſaid in Witchſtreet. Said ſhe, take care of her, (Mrs. Rawlins) and take her along with you to your Houſe, or you will loſe your Money. So I carried her to my Houſe, and having Buſineſs elſewhere, I left her with my Wife, and a young Woman to keep her Company. When I came again, I found Mr. Swendſen and this Gentlewoman there drinking a Pint of Sack. They told me if I would go to any Tavern, the Buſineſs ſhould be made up. We took Coach and went to the Vine Tavern, and there the Matter was made an end of. They told me, that they would ſatisfy me for my Trouble on Monday Night, if I would meet them at Mr. Holt's. Away I went, and was taken ill to that degree that I thought I ſhould have died.

L. C. J. Holt. How can you prove that ſhe employ'd you.

Mr. Hartwell. I believe I ſhall have ſomebody to prove that. But, my Lord, the main Witneſs of mine is not come in, and that is Mr. Holt.

L. C. J. Holt. He is fled.

Mr. Hartwell. But, my Lord, I ſuppoſe his Wife is here. My Lord, I hope you will allow Mr. Wakeman to come into the Court, that I may aſk him ſome Queſtions.

J. Powel. A Woman cannot be a Witneſs for or againſt her Huſband, Then for what Reaſon ſhould ſhe be called?

Mr. Hartwell. What can be more material than my going to Holt's? I have no other Perſons to appear for me?

L. C. J. Holt. Did Holt firſt employ you?

Mr. Hartwell. He firſt ſent for me, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any other Witneſſes?

Mr. Hartwell. My Lord, I thought they call'd for Mr. Wakeman.

Mr. Wakeman call'd.

L. C. J. Holt. Aſk him what Queſtions you will.

Mr. Hartwell. Mr. Wakeman, Who was it employ'd me?

Mr. Wakeman. He never told me who employ'd him till he came to the Recorder's, and then he told me that this Woman (pointing to Mrs. Baynton) employ'd him. The Recorder aſk'd me who it was employ'd me? Hartwell made Anſwer, and ſaid, I employ'd him; and ſaid likewiſe, that the Woman brought him Money for the Writ.

Mrs. Baynton. I never gave Hartwell Money, nor employ'd him, nor confeſſed to the Recorder.

Mr. Wakeman call'd a Witneſs, who ſaid for Hartwell, that 'twas Mrs. Baynton confeſſed before the Recorder upon her Examination, that ſhe gave Money to, and employ'd Hartwell to ſue out a Writ againſt Mrs. Rawlins, at the Suit of Wi. Jones for 20*l.* and gave for Reaſon on further Examination, that the ſaid Jones owed Mrs. Baynton 20*l.* And he wrote to Mrs. Baynton to get Arreſted Mrs. Rawlins for 20*l.* due from her to Jones; and that on ſuch Arreſt, Mrs. Rawlins would pay the Money to Mrs. Baynton.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any thing more to ſay?

Mr. Hartwell. My Lord, I never ſaw Mr. Swendſen before he came to my Houſe with Mrs. Baynton, when the young Gentlewoman was there. When I came in, they were drinking a Pint of Sack together. The young Lady was very free to go to the Vine Tavern. Madam, Were you not free to go?

Mrs. Rawlins. I do not deny but I was free to go.

Mr. Hartwell. Did we offer any Rudeneſs to you at that Place?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, not then.

L. C. J. Holt. That is the thing you are to Anſwer to, your taking her away by Force.

Mr. Hartwell. My Lord, I know nothing of it; I cannot help it, my Lord, there is nothing in it.

Mr. Hartwell. Mr. Wakeman, Did I know any thing of your being with Mr. Holt and Mr. Swendſen at the Five-Bell Tavern?

Mr. Wakeman. I don't know that you did.

Mr. Hartwell. No, my Lord, I knew nothing of it till laſt Thurſday he told me of it.

L. C. J. Holt. Who ſent for Mr. Swendſen?

Mrs. Rawlins. Mrs. Baynton.

Mr. Hartwell. Mrs. Rawlins, Was I in the Houſe at that Time?

Mrs. Rawlins. No, I did not ſee you there then.

Mr. Hartwell. My Lord, with Submiſſion to your Lordſhip, I underſtand by ſomething I have heard, ſince I have been in Cuſtody, that this Gentlewoman, Mrs. Baynton, ſaid to Mrs. Rawlins, Shall I ſend for my Brother?

L. C. J. Holt. Do you keep a Publick Houſe?

Mr. Hartwell. No, my Lord, only a Priſon-Room, but ſell no Drink: This Gentlewoman was in the Parlour all the while.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any thing more to ſay?

Mr. Hartwell. Nothing at all, my Lord; I was rul'd by the Perſon that employ'd me.

J. Powel. What did you apprehend by this?

Mr. Hartwell. She told me there was one gone for; and ſhe ſaid ſhe would bring a Gentleman to pay me the Money.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Spur, What ſay you?

Mr. Spur. I know nothing more of the matter, than Mr. Hartwell s giving me Money for taking out the Marſhal - Court Writ, and I was employ'd by him.

L. C. J. Holt. When Mrs. Busby cry'd out, did you not ſay, What have you got by your Bawling?

No Anſwer made.

Mr. Mountague. We have a few Words to reply, if the Priſoners have done. The Gentlewoman at the Bar inſiſts upon it, that Mrs. Rawlins was conſenting to the Matter, was in Love with Mr. Swendſen: We think, not only by the Evidence given, but by what they ſay themſelves, that ſhe was carry'd away by Force. Indeed when ſhe was taken into Hartwell's Houſe, there was no body by at that Time, but thoſe ſhe was not afraid of. To conclude; if there was any Conſent by Mrs. Rawlins, it was only to have her Bail'd; it was that only that ſhe deſign'd. Hartwell ſays, he was only employ'd as a Bayliff by Holt: He carry'd them from his Houſe to the Vine Tavern: Now, what Occaſion had he to carry them to the Tavern for Bail? We ſhall prove further, that when they came to the Vine, Hartwell himſelf was ſaid to be the Bail for the Action.

Anne Cotchet called, and Sworn.

Mr. Mountague. Miſtreſs, pray will you give an Account how Hartwell brought the Priſoner there?

Cotchet. Mr. Hartwell, when the Coach came, ordered a Pint of Wine for the Coachman. The Drawer ſaid, We draw, and draw, but don't know who will pay for it. Mr. Hartwell came to me, and ſaid, it was an Arreſt for 120*l.* that he would ſee us paid.

L. C. J. Holt. Was it the Woman in the White Gown that was Arreſted for 120*l.*

Cotchet. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Hartwell. Did you ſee me in Company with the Parſon?

Cotchet. You came down Stairs, and ordered a Pint of Wine for the Parſon, and half a Pint beſides; and told me the Parſon was the Bail.

Mr. Hartwell. I did not know that the Parſon was in the Houſe, till I had juſt done my Buſineſs, and was going away. Did you ſee me with the Parſon, Madam Rawlins?

Mrs. Rawlins. I do not tell you ſo.

Mr. Mountague. All that is to be prov'd in this Indictment is, that ſhe was taken away againſt her Will, and afterwards compell'd to marry.

Cotchet. I did not ſee Mr. Hartwell after that.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen of the Jury, theſe Three Priſoners are Indicted for Felony, upon the Statute made in the Third Year of King Henry the Seventh; That they with Haagen Swendſen now convicted, and Thomas Holt that is fled, did violently and feloniouſly aſſault one Pleaſant Rawlins, being ſeized of an Eſtate of Inheritance about 20*l. per Ann.* and poſſeſſed of a Perſonal Eſtate of the Value of 2000*l.* and took her away by Force againſt her Will; and that he, Swendſen, did marry her. Now the Queſtion is, Whether the Priſoners at the Bar are guilty of this Crime? Firſt, As to Mrs. Baynton, you have heard what an Account is given of her: She was a Perſon that came to lodge at Mrs. Nightingale's Houſe in Stretton Grounds in Weſtminſter: She went for a Widow, by the Name of Sarah Baynton. It ſeems, Mrs. Busby and Mrs. Rawlins did lodge about Three Years in Mrs Nightingale's Houſe. They being all ſingle, were very well ſatisfy'd one with another. Mrs. Rawlins was placed by her Guardian under the Care of Mrs. Busby; and has a Perſonal Eſtate of 2000*l.* and 20*l.* a Year. About three Weeks before Michaelmas laſt, you hear of one Mrs. St. John that was an Acquaintance of one Mrs. Nightingale's, came to her and told her of Mrs. Baynton, a well-diſpoſed Gentlewoman, that was come to Town about a Suit of Law, and thought ſhe ſhould ſtay about a Month, and thought that her Houſe was a proper Place for her Lodging, and gave her a very good Character, that ſhe was a Civil Religious Woman, of a good Converſation, and deſired to be near the Church. After ſome Time, Mrs. Baynton came her ſelf. She ſaid, as Mrs. St. John had done before, that ſhe came to Town about a Law Buſineſs, was a Widow in the Weſt. Mrs. Nightingale, by reaſon of the Character that was given her, received her into her Houſe. When ſhe was there, ſhe behaved her ſelf very civily for ſome time; ſo that Mrs. Nightingale and Mrs. Busby were well pleaſed with her, and thought her to be a Gentlewoman of very ingenious Converſation. She tells them ſhe had a Brother that had Intereſt in Shipping; and ſo there was an Invitation of Mrs. Busby, Mrs. Rawlins, and Mrs. Baynton, to go on Shipboard, where they were treated by Mr. Swendſen. Mr. Swendſen uſed to viſit Mrs. Baynton; and ſhe uſed to call him Brother: While ſhe was there, Swendſen dined 9 or 10 Times. She had not been there long, before they began to have different Apprehenſions of her from what they had at firſt, and were very uneaſy at her Continuance. Mrs. Baynton did apprehend there was ſome appearance of Uneaſineſs; and came to Mrs. Nightingale and told her, ſhe had made an end of her Suit of Law, and had no occaſion to ſtay in Town, but would return into the Country. It ſeems Mrs. Nightingale and Mrs. Busby were well pleaſed with Mrs. Baynton's Warning. Before ſhe went away, ſhe underſtood that Mrs. Busby and Mrs. Rawlins uſed to go to Oxendon Chapel; ſhe came to them and ſaid, ſhe had occaſion to go that way with a Band-Box to her Milliner's; told them ſhe went in a Coach, and if they pleaſed they might go with her, and ſhe would ſet them down at a Place near the Chapel. They accepted her Civility, thinking nothing of any Deſign; and as the Coach was driving along, it was ſtopped by Bailiffs, and all on a ſudden Hartwell opens the Coach, and thruſts himſelf into it. Mrs. Busby and Mrs. Rawlins were not conſcious of any Cauſe of an Arreſt, thought the Arreſt was upon Mrs. Baynton, they began to be concern'd for her; but it appeared that 'twas upon them; and then Mrs. Baynton ſeemed as much concern'd for them when they were both to be carry'd away; but asked Hartwell what it was for? He told them it was no great Matter; but if you and I talk together a little, all will be well.

Mrs. Baynton expreſs'd her ſelf to be much concern'd for Mrs. Busby; ſhe adviſed her not to talk any Thing with him, without her Friends were nigh. And when they were in the Coach, it was directed to be drove away. Mrs. Busby deſired to be carried to Fleetſtreet to her Friends; but Hartwell would carry her to the Star and Garter Tavern in Drury Lane. Mrs. Baynton continued in the Coach until they came thither, and then pretended to go for Mrs. Busby's Friends; and when they were at the Star and Garter Tavern they were carry'd into a Back-Room. Mrs. Busby forced her ſelf with the young Woman into a Fore-Room; then Hartwell laid Hands upon Mrs. Rawlins, and ſaid ſhe was his Priſoner, and carries her away by Violence, forces her down Stairs, and ſwears at her to put on her Mask, otherwiſe he would carry her to Newgate. Mrs. Busby, the Priſoner above Stairs, was to go to Newgate, as was pretended; but Mrs. Rawlins was to go to the Marſhalſea. Away ſhe was carried to the Houſe of Mr. Hartwell; but Mrs. Baynton who pretended, that as ſhe was going by chance that way heard Mrs. Rawlins named; thereupon ſhe goes in, and very luckily finds her there, and pretends to pity her Condition, and ſaid ſhe had been with ſeveral of her Friends to be her Bail, but could procure none of them to come. Then ſhe ſaid ſhe would go for her Brother Swendſen, who ſhe was ſure would be her Bail. Upon that Meſſage he came, and then Mrs. Rawlins was to be carry'd to the Vine Tavern. Mrs. Baynton went with her thither, as they pretended, to make up the Buſineſs. Then it was propoſed that Holt and Swendſen ſhould be Bail. Hartwell refuſed them as inſufficient: Upon which ſhe was told ſhe was in danger of going to Newgate, and Bail could not be taken; and the only way was, that ſhe muſt be marry'd to Swendſen; and if ſhe did not marry, ſhe ſhould go to Newgate. Mrs. Baynton took the Ring from off her Finger, in order to get a Wedding-Ring to be made by it; which being procured, there was a Parſon in the Houſe ready provided with a Clark to do the Office, who came into the Room where the Marriage was made, and ſo ended that Arreſt. From the Vine Tavern ſhe is carry'd with Mr. Swendſen and Mrs. Baynton to Blake's Houſe, and there ſhe was forc'd to Bed: Within an Hour and Half they ariſe again at Seven a Clock at Night; and thus the Marriage was Conſummated. As for Mrs. Baynton there is this further Proof upon her, that ſhe did pay Hartwell for this very Arreſt, which is prov'd upon her by her own Confeſſion, before the Recorder. Then, as to Hartwell, he is affected by theſe Circumſtances. Firſt, there was no Proceſs againſt Mrs. Busby, but yet ſhe was Arreſted and carry'd to the Garter Tavern, where ſhe was kept in Cuſtody until the Evening, and could not procure any Friends to be called to her; and during the time of her being there, Mrs. Rawlins was Married to Mr. Swendſen at the Vine Tavern. And it is further prov'd againſt him, that when the Parſon was come, he told the Mrs. at the Vine Tavern, that the Parſon was to be one of the Bail. It is alſo prov'd, that he inſiſted upon very good Bail; for he told the Woman of the Houſe the Arreſt was for 120 l. when as it appear'd it was but for 20 l. Now you are to conſider what hath been ſaid in their Defence. Mrs. Baynton ſays, that Mrs. Rawlins was in Love with Mr. Swendſen, and did complain of her Confinement and hard Uſage; and that ſhe told her ſhe could help Mr. Swendſen to a young Lady at her own Diſpoſal; and that there was one Mr. Pugh that made Application to Mrs. Rawlins; but ſhe return'd his Letters that ſhe had receiv'd from him: That Mrs. Rawlins did ſay, that ſhe could help Mr. Swendſen to a Lady that had a Fortune at her own Diſpoſal, which is own'd by Mrs. Rawlins; and that by that Lady ſhe did mean her ſelf; but that ſhe had any familiar Diſcourſe with him in the Garden, or that ſhe was Sick for him, and went up and Cried for him, that ſhe denies upon her Oath. And further ſays, that ſhe never intended to do any Thing againſt the Advice of her Friends, or that ſhe had ſet her Love upon him. Then Mrs. Baynton charges Mrs. Busby, that ſhe had a Kindneſs for her Brother Swendſen, becauſe ſhe ſaid he was her beloved Likeneſs. Mrs. Busby owns, that he was ſomething like her Husband, and on that Account might innocently call him ſo. As for Hartwell, he relies on his being a Baily, and in the Execution of his Office, being employ'd by Mr. Holt and Mrs. Baynton, and that ſhe paid him for the Writ. Mr. Holt ſent for him, and he knew nothing but of Arreſt, and was not privy to any other Deſign. It is prov'd indeed, that Mr. Holt did ſend for him. This is the Sum and Subſtance of his Defence. I muſt tell you, that if Hartwell was employ'd in this Deſign, in order to take her into Cuſtody to carry on this Marriage, and was privy to it, then he is equally Guilty; but if he did only act as a Baily, and did not know the Deſign, then he is not Guilty. But his Arreſting Mrs. Busby againſt whom he had no Proceſs, and taking Mrs. Rawlins from Mrs. Busby to his own Houſe, and from thence carrying her to the Vine Tavern; his pretending that the Warrant was for 120 l. when as in Truth it was but for 20 l. and his pretending that the Parſon was to be the Bail, though he was not preſent in the Room where the Marriage was, but hard by; yet he was in the ſame Houſe, which is all one, if he knew what Deſign was a-Foot: Theſe are the Things you are to conſider of. As for Mrs. Baynton, ſhe pretended ſhe was a Widow, and you hear how ſhe proves it; and when ſhe is taxed with having a Child, then ſhe ſays ſhe hath a Husband. And when ſhe is asked about him, ſhe will give no Account, nor how ſhe ſupports her ſelf. She ſaid indeed ſhe paid every Body their own, and that ſhe has no Difference with any Body whatſoever. She pretended ſhe was Mrs. Rawlins's Friend in what ſhe did; but it is plain by what ſhe owns her ſelf, that ſhe employ'd Hartwell, and paid him for the Writ. And her pretending to ſet them down at Oxenden Chapel, there it was her Deſign to bring them under that Force to effect this Marriage. I muſt leave it to you to conſider, whether from the beginning to the end ſhe was not an Actreſs and a Manager of this whole Buſineſs. She hath been asked how Mr. Swendſen came to be her Brother. Firſt ſhe ſays, he was her deceaſed Siſter's Husband. Then being asked who was that Siſter? She ſaid he was an Adopted Siſter's Husband. It was very extraordinary for her to go to Mr. Hartwell's Houſe to the young Gentlewoman, and pretend that ſhe came by chance, and heard her Name. I muſt leave it to you Gentlemen of the Jury to conſider of the whole Matter: And as for Spur, he was an Under-Officer, a Bailiff's Follower, and might be ignorant of the Buſineſs. You have not Evidence enough to make it appear that he was privy to this Deſign, and therefore you are to acquit him; but as to Mrs. Baynton and Hartwell, if they were privy to this Deſign of a Forceably taking away of Mrs. Rawlins, with an Intent to Marry her to Mr. Swendſen, as it is plain that he was an Actor, and ſhe an Abetter in the Force; then Gentlemen you are to find them Guilty: If you are not ſatisfied, you are to acquit them. The Jury went out for half an Hour, and brought in the following Verdicts.

Mrs. Baynton, Guilty.
Mr. Hartwell, Not Guilty.
Mr. Spur, Not Guilty.

L. C. J. Holt ſaid to Hartwell, You have had a very Merciful Jury, let it be a Warning to you for the Future.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, I am with Child.

L. C. J. Holt. That will be conſidered on Saturday.

Saturday, November the 28th.

The Priſoners were called to the Bar to receive Sentence of Death.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I pray your Lordſhip's Judgment againſt the Priſoners at the Bar.

Cl. of Arr. Haagen Swendſen hold up thy Hand. Thou haſt been convicted of Felony done by them, and committed on Mrs. Pleaſant Rawlins, and the Jury hath found thee Guilty; What have you to ſay for your ſelf, why you ſhould not receive Sentence of Death according to Law?

Mr. Swendſen. I could ſay a great deal, but I ſhall ſay but a very little. I do not doubt but the honourable Court obſerv'd how various ſhe was in her Evidence. What ſhe deny'd in my Tryal, ſhe confeſs'd in Mrs. Baynton's; and ſo I leave it to the Court, if there may be an Arreſt of Judgment till the next Term.

L. C. J. Holt. Unleſs you can ſhew us ſome Cauſe for it, it will not be granted.

Mr. Swendſen. My Lord, She ſaid thoſe Things in her Tryal which ſhe deny'd in mine.

L. C. J. Holt. Some Things ſhe mentioned in your Tryal, that ſhe had no occaſion for in hers.

Mr. Swendſen. The ſame Things that were in my Tryal were in hers.

L. C. J. Holt. There were ſome Things in her Tryal that was not in yours.

Cl. of Arr. Sarah Baynton hold up thy Hand. Thou haſt been Indicted for Felony, and found Guilty. What haſt thou to ſay for thy ſelf, why you ſhou'd not receive Sentence of Death according to Law?

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, I am with Child.

L. C. J. Holt. That is no Plea againſt Judgment.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, I deſire that it may be taken into Conſideration, how that ſhe contradicted her ſelf in her Evidence; that ſhe ſpoke thoſe Things in Mr. Swendſen's Tryal, that ſhe contradicted in mine. I think I have a great deal of Injuſtice; I am as innocent as any Perſon in the Court.

L. C. J. Holt. That you did this Thing is moſt apparent; that you deluded this young Perſon, and pretend your ſelf to be a Perſon of Quality, a Religious Woman, and one that come out of the Country about a Law-Suit; that you pretended that this Mr. Swendſen, the Priſoner at the Bar, was your Brother, your Siſter's Husband; and all this Falſe Dealing was to bring him in to delude this Woman. It is plain, you had no Suit of Law, as you pretended. It is plain, you took out this Proceſs againſt the young Gentlewoman. It is plain, that you pretended you would ſet them down at a Chapel.

Mrs. Baynton. It is not the firſt time, my Lord, that I ſet them down.

L. C. J. Holt. But you made uſe of this Stratagem to accompliſh the Arreſt. You have deluded the World by theſe Things; and indeed it is very hard againſt you.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, they deſired me to ſet them down.

L. C. J. Holt. The Licenſe was taken out before the 6th of November a conſiderable time.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, She cannot deny but ſhe ſpoke for it to me. She her ſelf ordered it to be done. My Lord, when I was upon my Tryal, abundance of People prompted her to ſpeak thoſe Things ſhe knew nothing of; Mrs. Busby in particular; though I do not queſtion but ſhe her ſelf would have Married Mr. Swendſen, for ſhe expreſſed Love for him in calling of him her Beloved Likeneſs.

L. C. J. Holt. She ſaid he was like her Husband, and therefore on that Account ſhe might ſay ſo.

Cryer, Make an O Yes.

Mr. Swendſen. My Lord, my Tryal has already made a great Noiſe in the World; and I do not know but that by this time it may be come to the Queen's Ear, therefore I deſire that your Lordſhip would be pleaſed to make a favourable Conſtruction of it to her.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, I do not queſtion but Her Majeſty hath heard of it.

Cryer, Make an O Yes, while Judgment is given.

Mr. Juſtice Powell. You that are the Priſoners at the Bar, Haagen Swendſen and Sarah Baynton, you have been both Tryed and Convicted of a very great Offence, for which you are brought to receive that Judgment that the Law requires. You have had a very ſolemn Tryal, and have both been Convicted upon very plain and full Evidence. Your Offence is of a very high Nature; and I am glad that you have had ſuch a ſolemn Tryal, that all People may know how great a Crime this of Fortune-ſtealing is (which is Death by the Law) and may take Warning by you; it may be a great many People do not know how penal this Offence may be, but I hope your Tryal may be a Means to deter others from making uſe of ſuch wicked Practices. Your Offence hath been in a Nation where Property is better preſerv'd than in any other Government in the World. Here it is Death for a Man to take away any Thing, though never ſo ſmall, by way of Robbery: How much worſe is it for you to take away the Child of a Man, and with her all that he hath gotten by his Induſtry all his Life-time, at once? This is moſt certainly a very great Offence againſt the Publick, being ſo great a Violation of Property; and the Injury you have done to this Woman is very great too, and cannot be repaired: All the Satisfaction that can be given, is by taking away the Lives of thoſe Perſons that were the Contrivers of it. You Haagen Swendſen have had the Privilege (the Law allows to Foreigners) of a Party-Jury; and I believe, had there been any room for a Jury to bring you in not Guilty, you had not been found Guilty; but the Fact was prov'd ſo plain upon you that they could not poſſibly avoid it. It is true, you inſiſted upon it that you were not preſent at her firſt taking, and that ſhe gave her Conſent to the Marriage. It is true, that you were not preſent when ſhe was firſt taken, but there were ſtrong Preſumptions to conclude that you were privy and conſenting to it, which will render you equally culpable as if you had been preſent. For when ſhe was taken in Cuſtody, ſhe was brought to an Houſe where Holt and you were ſeen together; Holt being the Man that ſet the Coach, and gave Directions to the Bailiffs when to ſeize her; and beſides, you had a Licenſe prepar'd for your Marriage to her. Theſe are very great Circumſtances of your being privy to the firſt taking. But admitting you were not privy to the firſt taking, you were privy to her being in Cuſtody under an Arreſt, when you was brought to Bail this Woman; and Word was brought in that they were contented to take your Bail, but excepted againſt Holt's; and when ſhe was told by Sarah Baynton ſhe muſt go to Newgate unleſs ſhe Marry'd you, you were preſent at all this; and this being done and acted whilſt the firſt Force was continued upon her, is in Law a forcible taking: ſo that you are plainly guilty of a forcible taking. And then alſo if that were neceſſary of marrying of her by conſtraint, ſhe being under Menaces, that if ſhe would not marry you ſhe muſt go to Newgate; You your ſelf were conſcious, this was no ſuch Conſent as Marriage requires, ſince that Evening you made Application to a Juſtice of Peace to take an Affidavit from her that ſhe had given her Conſent. When you brought Witneſſes to give an Account of your former Life and Converſation, that ſome Years ſince you were an able Merchant in your Country, one in great Credit, an ingenious Man, and of good Intereſt and Acquaintance there; I confeſs I had great Commiſeration for you, and thought that this Misfortune befel you upon the Account of your Acquaintance with this ill Woman; the Acquaintance with ſuch a Woman will make a rich Merchant quickly poor, will ſoon reduce a wealthy Man to a Morſel of Bread. I am afraid that ſhe hath been a very great Inſtrument in your Ruin.

And you Sarah Baynton, when you were ask'd to give an Account of what kind of Life you liv'd, it appear'd to be but a very ſorry one indeed, ſo that I could not but conclude you to be a very lewd Woman. You had Wit and Parts enough which might have been of great Service to you, if you had lived honeſtly; but you made uſe of them to another End, and it is not fitting that you ſhould live longer that cannot live better. You contrived and carried on all this wicked Deſign from firſt to laſt; and that you might the better perform it, you went to a civil Houſe under the Character of a Gentlewoman, that came out of the Country about a Suit of Law. There you pretend to be a very good Woman, and ſeem to be much pleaſed with the Family, becauſe they were ſober People; but your Deſign was to entice and delude this young Woman. Whether your Deſign at the beginning was to commit this Fact, I cannot tell; but being not uſed to this Courſe of Life, you could not wear your Diſguiſe long without Diſcovery; you began to be ſuſpected and to be ſeen through; the Family was very willing to be rid of your Company; which you perceiving, you reſolved you would Atchieve your Deſign before you went. For that End you invite them into a Coach, promiſing to ſet them down where they were going; but inſtead of that, you employ Bailiffs to Arreſt them: for you with your own Hand paid the Bailiff that was to do it; and after they were taken, you pretended to pity them. And when Mrs. Rawlins was at Mr. Hartwell's Houſe, you pretended that you accidently and providentially over-heard her Name mentioned in Mr. Hartwell's Houſe, as you paſſed in the Street. You go into the Houſe, and pity her Condition, and propoſe your Brother for her Bail; but inſtead of that, all your Deſign was to bring about this Marriage; and for that end you forced her Ring from her to get another made by it. It was you that told her ſhe muſt go to Newgate unleſs ſhe Married your Brother; and afterwards that forced her to Bed. From the Beginning to the End you carried on this wicked Deſign to the Ruin of this young Woman; you have a great deal to anſwer for. I have ſtated this Matter, that you may be ſatisfied that this Fact hath been proved againſt you both very fully, and therefore you can expect no other than an Award of the Puniſhment the Law requires, that is, Death. I hope you will reflect upon thoſe evil Courſes that have brought you to this End. You have but a ſhort Time to live, and therefore it would be well for you to conſider your Future State: You may have better Inſtructions for that than I can give you; therefore I will now proceed to the Sentence, which is,

That you ſhall go hence to the Place from whence you came, and from thence to the Place of Execution, and that there you ſeverally hang by your Necks until you are dead; and ſo the Lord have mercy upon your Souls.

Mr. Swendſen. My Lord, now I am bound to do this Woman Juſtice. She hath not been the Contriver of it. It was all done by my Direction; and for her ſake I deſire the Queen may know of it.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, that will clear up the Doubt to ſome of your Countrymen, who did think that you were not the Contriver of it.

Mr. Swendſen. I deſire, my Lord, that the Matter may be repreſented to the Queen as favourable as you can.

Cl. of Arr. Sarah Baynton, Hold up thy Hand.

Mrs. Baynton. My Lord, I am with Child.

L. C. J. Holt. Let a Jury of Matrons be ſent for.

They are ſent for. Upon the hearing of her Sentence ſhe fell into Fits.

Cl. of Arr. You the Matrons of the Jury, ſhall view and diligently enquire, and a true Verdict give according to your Evidence, whether Sarah Baynton be with Child, quick with Child, or not. So help you God.

The Names of the Jury of Matrons are as follow:

Mrs. Sarah Johnſon.	Mrs. Sarah Webb.
Mrs. Chriſtian Walker.	Mrs. Dorothy Mordit.
Mrs. Suſannah Goff.	Mrs. Eliz. Gurnella.
Mrs. Mary Herbert.	Mrs. Mary Rogers.
Mrs. Sarah Randol.	Mrs. Jane Smithſon.
Mrs. Mary Vere.	Mrs. Margaret Leach.

L. C. J. Holt. You the Matrons are to conſider well the Oath you have taken, which is diligently to enquire whether this Woman be quick with Child: If ſhe be with Child, but not quick, you are to give your Verdict ſo; and if ſhe be not quick with Child, then ſhe is to undergo the Execution of the Sentence in convenient Time.

About half an hour after the Jury of Matrons came in.

L. C. J. Holt. Are you agreed in your Verdict?

Anſw. Yes.

L. C. J. Holt. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Anſw. The Fore-Woman.

L. C. J. Holt. Do you find the Priſoner to be with Child, with Quick Child, or not?

Mrs. Johnſon. Yes, my Lord, ſhe is quick with Child.

L. C. J. Holt. Is this your Verdict?

Mrs. Johnſon. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. Holt. And ſo you ſay all?

Anſw. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Hark ye, Mrs. Baynton! Theſe Women by their Verdict give you longer Time to prepare you for Death, and therefore I hope you will improve your Time, for the Judgment is paſt, and will be executed ſoon after your Delivery.

The King againſt Richard Hathaway, for an Impoſtor.

Surry ſſ. The King's Attorney-General has exhibited an Indictment againſt the Defendant, by the Name of Richard Hathaway, of Southwark, in the County of Surry, Labourer; and the Information ſets forth, That the ſaid Richard Hathaway being a Perſon of an evil Name and Fame, and an Impoſtor, and contriving and maliciouſly intending, one Sarah Morduck, the Wife of one Edward Morduck of Southwark, in the ſaid County, Waterman, who for the whole Courſe of her Life was an honeſt and pious Woman, and not a Witch, nor uſing Witchcraft, Inchantment, Charm or Sorcery, to bring into the Danger of loſing her Life, the 11*th Day of* February, in the 12*th Year of the Reign of the King, at* Southwark, in the ſaid County, in the Preſence and Hearing of divers Perſons, falſly, maliciouſly, deviliſhly, and knowingly, and as a falſe Impoſtor, did pretend and affirm himſelf, by the ſaid Sarah, to be bewitched, and by the Occaſion of that pretended Witchcraft, he could not eat, and by the Space of Ten Weeks to faſt, and was affected with divers Diſeaſes; and that he by drawing Blood from the ſaid Sarah, by ſcratching, ſhould be freed from the ſaid pretended Witchcraft that the ſaid Richard Hathaway did then, and there, with Force and Arms, ſcratch the ſaid Sarah, and did draw the Blood of her, the ſaid Sarah, by ſcratching; and thereupon, he, the ſaid Richard Hathaway, did then, and there, falſly, maliciouſly, and knowingly, by affirming himſelf to be freed from the ſaid Diſeaſes, by drawing the ſaid Blood, whereas in Fact and in Truth, the ſaid Richard Hathaway was never Bewitched, and had not faſted for the Time aforeſaid, nor for any great Time; and whereas in Truth and in Fact, the ſaid Richard, then, and there, well knew himſelf not to be bewitched by the ſaid Sarah, to the great Contempt of our Lord the King and his Laws, to the evil and wicked Example of all others in the like Caſe offending, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, &c.

Mr. Raymond. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Information ſets forth, That the Defendant being a Perſon of an evil Fame, and an Impoſtor, and maliciouſly contriving to take away the Life of one Sarah Morduck, the Wife of Edward Morduck, who always was a good Woman, and not a Witch, nor uſing Witchcraft, the 11th Day of February, in the 12th Year of the Reign of the late King, at Southwark, in the Preſence and Hearing of divers Perſons, did falſly, deviliſhly, and knowingly, and as a falſe Impoſtor, pretend and affirm himſelf to be bewitched by the ſaid Sarah, and that by reaſon thereof he could not Eat, but had faſted for Ten Weeks, and was alſo affected with divers Diſeaſes and that by his drawing Blood from the ſaid Sarah, by ſcratching, he ſhould be freed from his ſaid pretended Bewitching: That the Defendant did thereupon ſcratch the ſaid Sarah, and did draw the Blood of the ſaid Sarah by ſuch his ſcratching, and thereupon he falſly affirmed, that by drawing the ſaid Blood he was freed from the ſaid Diſeaſes; whereas in Truth and Fact he was never bewitched, nor had he faſted as aforeſaid, and he knew himſelf not to be bewitched by the ſaid Sarah, in Contempt of the ſaid late King, and his Laws, and againſt the Peace of his Crown and Dignity.

Mr. Conyers. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury: This is an Information againſt Richard Hathaway, for a Cheat, for endeavouring to impoſe upon the People a Belief, that he had been bewitched by one Sarah Morduck, and that as an Effect of her pretended Witchery, he vomited up Nails and Pins, and that he could not ſpeak, nor open his Eyes, and that great Noiſes were heard in the Houſe where he lay, and there could be no Remedy for him, but by his ſcratching and fetching Blood of this Sarah Morduck; and by this Means the poor Woman has been very much abuſed by her Neighbours, reputed a Witch, and brought to a Tryal for her Life as ſuch; but that there was nothing but a malicious Deſign in it, will appear by the Evidence that will be produced. This Richard Hathaway was for ſome time an Apprentice with one Welling, a Blackſmith, in Southwark. About September laſt was Twelve-month, he gave out that he was bewitched, and he went to this Woman's Houſe and ſcratched her; and the Pretence was, that ſcratching and fetching Blood of her recovered him. The Miniſter of the Pariſh, Dr. Martin, hearing that it was noiſed about, that the Defendant had been relieved by ſcratching Morduck, came and viſited him. He could neither ſpeak nor ſee, as he pretended; but underſtood what was ſaid to him, and gave Aſſent to what was propoſed to him, by holding up of his Hands. Dr. Martin tells him, he heard this Woman had bewitched him, and that his ſcratching of her was the Means by which he was relieved; and that he desired to see the Experiment himself, and therefore had brought Sarah Morduck there, and desired him to hold up his Hand, if he understood what he said; which he did. Dr. Martin had another Woman there at that Time (tho' that was concealed from Hathaway) and Sarah Morduck, by the Doctor's Direction, spoke to him, and came to his Bed-side, and the Defendant was by the Doctor bid to scratch her. When he came to scrath, the Doctor took the Hand of the other Person, and put it into the Defendant's Hand, and as soon as he had scratched the other Person his Eyes began to open, and he could speak; and immediately it was made known to himself and the Company, that the Person he had scratched was another Person, and not Sarah Morduck. But notwithstanding this, he was not satisfied, but still there was a Prosecution of Sarah Morduck for a Witch, and she was forc'd for some time to go and reside in London: And there the Rabble got about her and abused her; of which Complaint was made to a Magistrate in the City, and Sarah Morduck was had before him, and then Hathaway was sent for, and there again scratch'd her; and it was so far credited there, notwithstanding the Account given by Dr. Martin of the Experiment he made, that the poor Woman is committed for a Witch, and afterwards brought to a Tryal for her Life; and upon the Tryal it appeared plainly, that all this was a Contrivance, and there was no Evidence to charge her with the bewitching this Man; and after a long hearing, upon a full Evidence, the Jury acquitted her, and the Man was committed for a Cheat. But notwithstanding this Acquittal, he still goes on to persuade People, that he was bewitched; that he had fasted several Days together, and could not eat; and then for a further Conviction that he was an Impostor, and only endeavoured maliciously and falsly to impose this Belief on People, he is about the Beginning of last November committed to the Care of a Chyrurgeon, one Mr. Kensey, where for Two Days he did not eat; but afterwards his Stomach began to come to him, and when he could get any Victuals privately, he had a very good Stomach, and could Eat and Drink till he was drunk. And it was contrived, that Holes were made into the Room where he was, and the Maid that look'd after him was directed to give him Notice, that she would help him privately to Victuals; and from the second Day after he was there, till the Eleventh Day, he did constantly eat every Day, tho' he pretended he fasted all that Time, and had done so for Fourteen Weeks, and he was seen to eat through those Holes. All this, and much more, will be fully proved by the Witnesses. So that there has been a great Affront to the publick Justice of the Nation by this Proceeding, many having abetted it, and they have put up Bills in several Churches to pray for him against the Tryal, and gathered Money to support him in this false and malicious Pretence.

Mr. Brodrick. My Lord, the discovering and punishing such a Cheat as this, is highly necessary; and not only for the Vindicating the publick Justice of the Nation, but for the Sake of Religion it self, which suffers by nothing more, than by the countenancing of indirect Practices, made use of upon a Pretence of maintaining and supporting its Credit. Religion has in it self such Genuine and Native Truth, as must work Conviction upon the Understandings of all Persons, who allow themselves Leisure to consider it without Prejudice: But when Tricks and little Arts are carried on for a Time, and attain a general Credit, and appear afterwards to be what are called Pious Frauds, they do far more Mischief than all the Good proposed by such Practices can make amends for. For when Men who are Sceptically inclined, find that the Generality of Mankind run away with Stories of this Nature, and those Facts afterwards prove undeniably false; they carry their Doubts on much too far, and are apt to conclude, that they cannot securely rely upon the Relation of others, and general Consent of Mankind, for the Certainty of any Fact whatsoever. It is therefore the Duty of all Persons, that are concerned for Religion in general, to endeavour to detect such Practices which weaken one of its most solid Foundations.

And, my Lord, we conceive this Prosecution very necessary, in order to the vindicating the Justice of the Nation. Here was a Woman that underwent a solemn Tryal, and upon a full Hearing was acquitted; yet afterwards, notwithstanding the thorough Examination of the Fact, and such an Evidence given as convinced every unprejudiced Hearer of the Innocence of the Defendant, and the Malice and Hypocrisy of the Accuser, such a Spirit did reign, that it was represented that the Defendant had hird Measure; and not only the Jury, but the Court too, were reflected on: Nay, it went so far, that after the Innocence of the Woman appeared by her Acquittal, a Magistrate (whose Name the Witnesses will disclose in their Evidence) gave publick Countenance to this Impostor (for by that Name I will venture to call him) and so far gave Credit to him, that when the poor Woman was abused by the Rabble, and her Life being in Danger, she made Application to that Magistrate for Protection; who, instead of affording it to her, encouraged her Prosecutors, as if she had really been guilty of the Witchcraft laid to her Charge; and considerable Collections were made for this Man, to support his Spirits under the Disappointment he met with in her being acquitted.

This Prosecution was necessary too, upon the Account of the poor Woman, who, unless some Check be put to the unruly Proceedings of unthinking People, is not yet safe in her House, but in Danger to be torn in Pieces: And it was thought most proper, that this Matter should be throughly examined in this Place, where the Scene of his counterfeiting, for the most part, did lie; that prepossessed People might be Ear Witnesses of the Fairness of the Proceeding, and that all Persons might have an Opportunity, if they thought fit, of offering any thing fit to be offered in his Defence.

My Lord, we need not trouble the Court with Evidence tending to prove, that the accused Person is not guilty of Witchcraft: She is acquitted of that, and it ought not to be suffered to be made a Dispute. But our Evidence will go beyond that, not only that there was no Colour or Foundation for the Charge on her of being a Witch; but that the Defendant did maliciously, without any Ground, and contrary to his own Knowledge, charge her with the having bewitched him. And I think our Evidence, all through, will prove this Matter fully upon him, that he was not Bewitched, nay, that he did not believe himself to be so, yet charged and prosecuted her.

The first Part of his pretended Witchcraft shewed it self, by his vomiting Pins: How that Business was managed, and how he was detected in it, the Wit-

neſſes will declare. And though we are not obliged to endeavour the giving an Account of what it was that induced him firſt to undertake this Impoſture, I think it will appear by the Evidence, that he had ſome Aim and Proſpect of Gain to himſelf. For, upon his firſt pretending to vomit Pins, we ſhall prove he had prepared a Narrative of his own being Bewitched; and he himſelf carried it to a Printer, that ſo he might bring a Concourſe of People to him: But the Printer being a Man of ſome Underſtanding, look'd on him to be a Cheat, and would not meddle with the Copy. He practiſed his Trick of Vomiting Pins ſeveral times; but pretending to it once, before one who did not take every thing upon Truſt, but was curious enough to obſerve nicely, and ſearch him; after ſome Reſiſtance, ſeveral Rows of Pins were found in his Pocket.

The next Diſcovery of his Impoſture, was the Affair wherein Dr. Martin was concerned; who brought Two Women to him: The Particulars of which having been already opened, I'll not repeat them. The Doctor put an innocent Deceit upon him, but it was in order to diſcloſe a vile Impoſtor. When the Woman was brought to him to be ſcratch'd, being conſcious to himſelf, how little real Effect the barbarous Experiment would have upon him, the whole Company obſerved, that he felt three or four times from her Hand to her Elbow, before he ſcratch'd, that he might be ſure it was a Woman's Hand: And when he had ſcratch'd, and felt Blood, his Eyes were opened, tho' it was the wrong Woman.

Another Inſtance of his acting a Part, with Deſign to impoſe upon the World, was, when he was carried from the King's-Bench to Mr. Kenſey's. It was neceſſarily to be imagined, that if he eat or drank nothing, nothing would come from him, either by Stool or Urine. He conſidered this, and for fear it ſhould be taken notice of, that he diſcharged himſelf after ſo long a Faſt as he pretended; having Occaſion to make Water, he found the Lid of a Box, and making Water in it, put it out of Sight, on the Bed's-Teſter; and the firſt Diſcovery of his Counterfeiting at Mr. Kenſey's, was by the dropping of that Water on the Cloaths of the Bed. After he had been Two Days there, (during which Time he really did not eat) Mr. Kenſey not knowing but that his Complexion might incline him to ſuch a Sullenneſs, as to ſtarve himſelf, rather than directly confeſs his Cheat, having firſt examined his Mouth and Throat, and finding nothing there but as it was in all other Men, and that he had not only all other Organs, but that of Swallowing, without any Obſtruction, as other People had, thereupon he framed this Deſign: He took Occaſion to pretend a Quarrel with the Maid-ſervant who lived in his Houſe, within the hearing of the Defendant, and told her, ſhe was as very a Hypocrite as this Fellow; and after warm Words on both ſides, and a ſeeming Reſolution by her that ſhe would quit her Service, the Maſter went away, leaving the Maid and the Defendant together. She, to inſinuate her ſelf into the Defendant, ſaid, Her Maſter was an odd Kind of a Man, a dangerous Man, therefore ſhe would not have the Defendant take any thing from him; and ſaid, ſhe would take care to ſupply him whilſt he ſtaid in the Houſe. Then his Stomach came to him very readily, and he was ſo far from being unable to drink, that he drank Brandy and other Liquors to Exceſs, and this for ſeveral Days. But ſtill thoſe in the Houſe being wary, thought it might be pretended by People who were very willing to believe him, that this happened by the Charm's being diſſolved, and that he was unable to eat before; and therefore it was thought adviſeable to bring in ſeveral Perſons of Reputation, who ſhould obſerve him through a Hole fit for the Purpoſe: Who, after they had ſeen him eat, examined him how long he had been a Faſter? And he made Signs, that he had faſted Twelve Weeks, and clung up his Belly as a Proof of his Emptineſs, according to his common Practice, though he had in their Sight, juſt before, eaten a plentiful Meal. So that, Gentlemen, it is evident, that what he did was done maliciouſly, and with a Deſign to deceive and impoſe upon the World. After this, there being ſufficient Proof of the Impoſture, it was thought fit to bring him before a Court of Juſtice; thereupon this Information was exhibited againſt him: And if we prove it, I doubt not but that you, Gentlemen of the Jury, will do that Right to the Government, and to Religion, as to find him guilty of it, that he may be brought to the Puniſhment that ſuch a Crime deſerves.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, I humbly pray your Lordſhip's Indulgence of the ſame Side; and beg Leave to obſerve, this Man was formerly troubled with Fits, and there was a Deſign laid by him and his Friends to create a Belief in People, that thoſe Fits were the Effect of Sorcery and Witchcraft; but whether to get Money, or take away the Life of the Woman, or both, I ſubmit to your Lordſhip's Judgment upon the Evidence. 'Tis certain, they proceeded ſo far as to bring her to a Tryal, and did what they could to take away her Life. And the better to carry on their Deſigns, and to prepare the World to believe the Impoſtor, we ſhall ſhew, that when he had theſe Fits, it was induſtriouſly publiſhed, that he was bewitch'd, and that it was by this Woman; and if he could but ſcratch her, he would be well. Dr. Martin, the Miniſter of the Pariſh, hearing of it, came to him; and to make an Experiment to diſcover the Impoſture, brought another Woman with the pretended Witch, and ſaid to Hathaway, If you think the ſcratching this Woman, meaning Morduck the pretended Witch, will do you any good, hold up your Hand: Which he did. Then the Doctor put the other Woman's Hand into his; and although at that Time he pretended to be Blind and Dumb, and he and his Friends would have had it thought, that he lay under the ſtrongeſt of the Old Woman's Charms; yet he was apprehenſive of what he did, and ſo jealous leſt he ſhould be impoſed upon, and thereby his Impoſture diſcovered, that he felt ſeveral times from the Wriſt to the Elbow, to diſcover whether it was the Arm of the pretended Witch or no, before he would begin ſcratching; and then believing it to be hers, (it being much about the ſame Size) fell to ſcratching, and being told he had fetched Blood, his Eyes were immediately opened, and his Speech reſtored.

The Doctor thinking every body was convinced of this Impoſtor, and believing the poor Woman would be quiet for the future, went away.

But notwithſtanding this Detection, the People were diſſatisfied; and Welling, the Maſter of Hathaway, and others, being angry at the Diſcovery, purſued the Woman with more Malice than before: Where-ever they found her, they cried out, A Witch, and uſed her ſo barbarouſly, ſhe was forced to leave Southwark, where ſhe had lived many Years, and alſo her Employment, which had been profitable to her, and to go live in London.

Their Malice purſued her thither; and there Hathaway, with Soldiers and others, in a riotous manner, ner, got into the Houſe where ſhe lodged, and would have broke open the Door where ſhe was; but a Conſtable being called in, the Soldiers went off, and Hathaway was carried before an Alderman of the City; and the poor Woman and her Friends acquainted the Alderman of the riotous and illegal Proceedings, and prayed that Juſtice might be done upon them. But inſtead of puniſhing them, he was pleaſed to ſay, there was too great Provocation for what they had done; and giving Credit to the Accuſation of Hathaway againſt the Woman, ordered her to be carried up Stairs to be ſearched, to ſee if ſhe had any Teats, or other Signs of a Witch, and permitted her to be ſcratched by Hathaway, and then committed her for a Witch; refuſing 500*l.* Bail, and diſmiſſed Hathaway.

The Woman afterwards was brought to a Tryal at Guilford Aſſizes, and was acquitted, and he was committed for a Cheat. And to make more ample Diſcovery of the Impoſture, he was taken to the Houſe of Mr. Kenſey a Chyrurgeon, and there he was obſtinate, and would not eat for the firſt two Days; and a Quarrel was feign'd between Mr. Kenſey and his Maid, he ſaying ſhe was as bad an Hypocrite as Rich. Hathaway, and gave her Warning to be gone. The Maid ſeemed very angry with her Maſter, and ſaid to Hathaway, Whatever you do, do not eat any thing that is given you by my Maſter or his Brother, for they are your Enemies; and promiſed ſhe would help him privately to what he wanted. Whereupon he thinking ſhe had been his Friend, and that he was ſafe in her Hands, took Meat and Drink from her from Day to Day, and eat heartily, and drank ſo very plentifully of Strong Beer and Brandy, and was ſo merry, that he play'd on the Tongs, and Danced, and ſhew'd Tricks before the Maid; but when any body elſe offered him Meat or Drink, he refuſed it, making Signs that he could not ſwallow, and ſignify'd to them, that he had faſted all the Fourteen Days that he had been at Kenſey's, and that he had faſted many Weeks before. And as to his vomiting Pins, it will appear to you, that he carried Papers of Pins in his Pocket, to make uſe of on Occaſion. But when he vomited in a Baſon, and his Hands were kept down, and he not permitted to carry them up to the Baſon, there was not one Pin in the Baſon.

I will not trouble your Lordſhip with a Detail of all the particular Inſtances of this Cheat, but will call our Witneſſes; and when we have proved the ſeveral Matters that have been opened, there will be no room to doubt but that the Defendant is an Impoſtor, and the greateſt this Age hath produced.

Mr. Coniers. We will firſt call Dr. Martin, (who was ſworn,) we will go on with our Evidence in the Courſe of Time. The firſt Time that Notice was taken in the Pariſh of this Buſineſs, was in September was Twelve-Month. Dr. Martin, pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account, Whether you know Richard Hathaway, and when was the firſt Diſcourſe of this Witchery.

Dr. Martin. February laſt was Twelve-Month, (the Ninth Day, to the beſt of my Remembrance) I came to Church in the Afternoon, and after the Curate was gone into the Deſk to read Prayers, I was going into the Pew; but hearing a great Hurly-burly in the Church, I ſent the Sexton to know what was the Occaſion of it. He brought Word that there was a Witch in the Church; ſo the Curate could not go on in reading Prayers; and the Sexton went and brought in one Sarah Morduck to me, and after her came a great many of the People into the Veſtry; ſo that tho' it be pretty large, it was preſently filled. And this Sarah Morduck came up to me, and told me what was the Occaſion of her being brought there. I aſk'd her how ſhe had behav'd her ſelf amongſt her Neighbours, that ſhould give ſuch Occaſion to deal thus with her. She began to cry, and ſaid, ſhe had given no Occaſion for it. I told her, I had nothing to do to enquire into the Buſineſs, but bid her continue in the Veſtry, the whole Congregation being ſo much diſturb'd, that they would go out of the Church if ſhe ſtaid in it. So I turned every body out of the Veſtry, and locked her in. And Sermon being ended, I came into the Veſtry, but found ſhe was gone; and upon Enquiry, I underſtood the Reaſon was this, The Sexton told me, that ſhe ſaid, if ſhe ſtaid till all the People went out, ſhe ſhould be torn in Pieces, and begg'd of him to let her out while the Pſalm was ſinging after Sermon, that ſhe might go away undiſcern'd, and accordingly ſhe went. Afterwards many of my Pariſhioners made Application to me to go to Richard Hathaway, who was ſuppoſed to be bewitched; and told me, that it was taken very ill that I had deferr'd it ſo long. Upon this I went to him the next Day; and meeting his Maſter below Stairs, I aſk'd him what Condition his Servant was in. He ſaid, he was Blind and Speechleſs, and was a very diſmal Object. I ſaid, I deſire to be excuſed, for I did not love to ſee any diſmal Sights. But he ſaid, he was very ſenſible, and knew every one by their Voice. And with that, I went into the Room, and his Maſter (ſpeaking to Richard Hathaway) ſaid, Mr. Martin is come to ſee you. Says I, Richard, I am come to ſee you, and if you know me, hold up your Hand: He did ſo, and took me by the Hand and kiſs'd it. I aſk'd him whether I ſhould pray with him in the Prayers of the Church, and if he deſir'd it, I bid him hold up his Hand: He did ſo, and I prayed with him, and he did ſeem to be affected with it, and lifted up his Hands ſeveral Times. Afterwards I took my Leave of him, and went down; and I diſcourſing with his Maſter for ſome Time, I aſk'd him what he thought was the Reaſon of it; he ſaid, an evil Tongue; and a bad Woman, Sarah Morduck, had bewitched him. But how do you know that? His Maſter then told me he had ſcratch'd her, and found Good by it; and ſaid, he was utterly undone by it, and if he did not ſpeak to the Church-wardens to take him off his Hands, he ſhould be ruin'd. And hearing of this Scratching, it came into my Head to try an Experiment too; ſo I went away, but without diſcovering my Intentions. And about Ten-a Clock at Night, to prevent Jealouſies, I went to the Houſe where Sarah Morduck lodged, and found ſhe was gone to Bed. I left Word that I deſired to ſpeak with her the next Day: But inſtead of her coming to me, her Brother, Mr. Herne, came to me, and thanked me for preſerving his Siſter from the Mob. I gave him the Reaſon why I did that, and I told him then what I intended to do. He anſwer'd me, I am afraid my Siſter will be ſo ſilly that it will fail in the Execution. I bid him leave that to me, I would give ſuch Directions in the Matter, that it was impoſſible for it to miſcarry: So he left me to my Liberty to do what I thought fit. Then, ſays I, when I ſend for her, do you come with her. I went to the Houſe where Hathaway lay, and went into the Room, where he lay with his Eyes faſt ſhut, and ſeemingly Speechleſs. I ſpoke to him, I am informed you have received Benefit by ſcratching Sarah Morduck formerly, now if I can get this Woman for you to ſcratch her, her, Do you believe by ſcratching her you ſhall receive any Benefit? If you do, hold up your Hand: So he did; and by and by there came a Meſſage that Mr. Hearne and the Witch were come. I then deſired Mr. Bateman, whom I brought with me for that Purpoſe, to ſit by the Bed-ſide while I went down, leſt any might inform him what was ſaid, or he might over-hear any thing ſpoken below. So he ſate there, and I went down, and I bid them let in as many as would come in; and when the Room was full, the Door was lock'd. I had before met with a poor Woman, whom I order'd to follow me, who received Alms of the Pariſh, deſigning ſhe ſhou'd be the Perſon the Experiment ſhould be try'd on. I told them I deſign'd to try another Woman, and I will make him believe he ſcratches the Witch. The Anſwer was, This will ſignify nothing. Wellings's Wife ſaid, he had ſcratch'd another Woman, and it ſignify'd nothing. Now this was, to the beſt of my Remembrance, one Willoughby, who is a very big Woman, and very much unlike Sarah Morduck: But I deſired the Satisfaction to ſee it done my ſelf; upon which it was conſented to. Then I aſk'd the Woman I brought about it; I told her I would give her a Shilling if ſhe would let this Man ſcratch her: She flew off, and ſaid ſhe would not ſuffer it for all the World. At laſt ſomebody ſaid, here is a Woman will ſuffer her ſelf to be ſcratch'd; and this was one Johnſon. I aſk'd her if ſhe would ſuffer her ſelf to be ſcratch'd; ſhe ſaid ſhe would, if there would come no Damage by it. Says I, whatever Damage you ſuſtain, I will make it good to you; and you being about the Size of Sarah Morduck, are a very fit Perſon. She did decline it for ſome time, but at laſt ſhe conſented; and after ſome Inſtructions given to her and Morduck, we went up together with many of the Neighbours. Tho' you cannot ſee, ſays I, to Richard Hathaway, you can hear that there are many People in the Room; now, before all theſe People, Do you believe that Sarah Morduck has done you this Miſchief? If you do, hold up your Hand. He did ſo. Do you believe you ſhall be relieved by ſcratching her? If you do hold up your Hand. He did hold up his Hand. Sarah Morduck, do you ſpeak to him, that he may know you are the Perſon. Says ſhe, What is the matter with you? Do you believe this Woman, ſaid I, to be the Perſon that has bewitched you? If you do, hold up your Hand. He held up his Hand. Then I aſk'd Sarah Morduck, Are you willing this Man ſhould ſcratch you? Yes, with all my Heart, he ſhall have my Hearts Blood, if it will do him any good. Then, ſays I, Pray give me your Hand. Here it is. And inſtead of taking her Hand, I took Johnſon's, and clapt it into his; and I did obſerve, that two or three times he felt from her Wriſt to her Elbow; and I ſaid, I have ſomething elſe to do than to wait on you, (and I ſpoke to him ſomewhat eagerly) if you will not ſcratch, I will be gone. Then he ſcratch'd her, and ſhe whiſper'd me in the Ear, ſhe believ'd ſhe ſhould faint. I ſaw he had razed her Skin, and I ſaid, you have drawn Blood, and you may be ſatisfy'd. With that he left off, and turned on his Back in his Bed. I turn'd out Johnſon immediately, and I and Morduck ſtood together, and he lay ſtill for ſome time; but I ſaw nothing would do, if I did not work him up. Now, ſays I, I would fain ſee how his Eyes are now; come ſome of you, look, do not his Eyes twinkle? With that both his Eyes were as open as mine are now, and he caught hold of the Apron of Sarah Morduck, and look'd her in the Face. Then I told him his Miſtake; and Johnſon came in with her Arm bleeding. Says I this is the Woman you ſcratcht, you have not touch'd Sarah Morduck's Arm, nor fetch'd one Drop of Blood from her. The Fellow upon this ſeem'd very much caſt down. Now, ſays I, give way to no Humours, and go about your Buſineſs, and ſerve God and your Maſter. Then I went down, and ſeveral People were ſatisfy'd. Well, ſays I to Welling, your Man's Eyes are open now. It's well, ſays he, if his Eyes continue open. He can ſpeak and ſee too now. I do not know, ſays he, it is ſtrange if he ſhould do well after this. Farewel, ſaid I; and I went into London. Upon my Return, about Five a-Clock, I enquired about him, and found there was a greater Mob in the Houſe than before; and I was accoſted at my firſt coming in by the Maſter and Miſtreſs of that Fellow: What have you done, you have ruined both me and my Family----

L. C. J. Holt. Who ſaid ſo?

Mr. Martin. The Maſter and Miſtreſs of this Fellow. Why, what Hurt have I done you? You have given it out to be a Cheat. Did you get any Money by it? No, I never did expect it. But pray go and look on him now, he is in a worſe Condition than he was before. Here have been two Doctors, and they will take their Oath that he is bewitched. So I went away; but as I went out, I was ſtopt by Johnſon. She cries out, What have you done? What is the matter, ſaid I, Does your Arm feſter? No; but this wicked Woman has ſpread abroad, that by ſcratching me he was relieved, and ſhe is not the Witch, but I am the Witch; and it had reach'd her Husband's Ear, and he was become ſo jealous of her, that he would not have any thing to do with her. I went away after this; and going home, met her Huſband, and gave him all the Satisfaction I could, that his Wife was no Witch. And I was informed the next Day, that Sarah Morduck had been dragg'd again to the Houſe, ſome time after I went away, and brought to Hathaway's Bed-ſide, and he ſcratch'd her, and his Eyes were opened, and he eat and drank, and walk'd about. Upon this, I ſent one Evening to him to come to me; and I took him into my Study, and ſaid, What is the Meaning of it, that you make ſuch a Trouble in the Pariſh, to condemn this Woman for Witchery? I ſee no Reaſon for it. Says he, ſhe has done me a great deal of Hurt; ſaid Hathaway, ſhe has bewitch'd me. He ſaid, that was the Woman had done him all the Prejudice he laboured under. Then ſays I, you are a poor ſort of Fellow, you muſt get your Living by your Labour; now you had better go into the Country out of her Reach. No, Sir, ſays he, I am bound Apprentice to my Maſter; and if I go, I ſhall be as bad there as I am here: And ſeeing I was bound here, this Pariſh muſt keep me; and if I ſhould go into the Country, they will ſend me back again. Why will you not try? No, I will not. Do you not believe I am bewitch'd? No, I do not. Then, ſays he, I may as well not believe what you ſay in the Pulpit; I may ſay to you, as our Saviour ſaid to the Jews, Tho' you ſee Miracles, you will not believe. Whereupon, I turn'd him away, and did not think I ſhould have had any thing more to do with him. But about Eaſter laſt, Sir Thomas Lane ſent to me, to deſire me to come to him; the Witch being then got into London for Shelter.

I went accordingly, and when I came, I found Hathaway, his Maſter, and ſeveral others there. I found him looking briſkly, and eating heartily, and

I ask'd the Meaning of it. It was answered, That before Sir Thomas Lane, he had drawn Blood of Sarah Morduck, and that had brought him to himself. I sent in my Name to Sir Thomas Lane, and he sent for me in. There was Sir Owen Buckingham, and I think, Dr. Hamilton. There were several People examined while I was there, about this Person; and after all, Sir Thomas Lane desired me to tell what I knew in this Matter. I gave an Account of what I have done here. Says Sir Thomas Lane, Richard Hathaway, Do you know that Gentleman? Yes. How? I have seen him in the Pulpit. What, no where else? Did you not see him by your Bed-side? No. Was not I with you at your Bed-side? No. All this while he was eating Bread and Cheese; till Sir Thomas Lane spoke to him, Lay by your Bread and Cheese, and be not so unmannerly. Says I, this is very unaccountable, that he should not know me; and yet he had said, That after Mr. Martin was gone, I was a great deal worse than I was before. This is a very unaccountable Thing, and I desire to know how this is consistent; therefore I do desire that his Master may be called in. And his Master was sent for, and Hathaway was going out to call him. No, says I, I desire he may not go out, I will call his Master my self. When Welling came in, I ask'd him whether he did not tell me that Hathaway was sensible from the Time I came to him? Yes, he was. Now I desire to know how these Things are consistent? And to put this out of doubt, that this Man did see me, the Woman stood at the side of the Bed by me, near the Feet, and he took hold of her Apron readily. How can he come off in this Matter? Says Sir Thomas Lane, They tell you he had a most violent Fit after, and that made him forget what was done before. Another Question was ask'd Mr. Welling, You know you desired me to get this Servant of yours off your Hands, and that I would speak to the Church-wardens about it. Now I am inform'd, this Servant of yours was going to Goodman's-fields, and as he was going, the Press-masters met him, and he being a likely Fellow, they whipt him aboard. Is this true or no? Yes. And then you got a Letter, and went down and fetch'd him up. Yes. Then, says I, How came his Master to be so much concern'd to be rid of him as he pretended; and yet when he might have been rid of his Servant, would not take the Opportunity? To that Sir Owen Buckingham answer'd, It was only his Charity for him to fetch him from aboard; he could do no less, considering his Condition: So I came away. In a little Time after, I heard that this Sarah Morduck was bound over to the Assizes, and I was Subpœna'd to give my Evidence the last Assizes at Guilford.

Then the Indictment was read, upon which Sarah Morduck was Tried and Acquitted of Bewitching Richard Hathaway.

Mr. Coniers. Dr. Martin, pray go on.

Mr. Martin. I was Subpœna'd to go to the Assizes; but before the Assizes came on, there were Bills put up in several Churches, and particularly at Christ-Church, where I hapned to preach. I read the Bill, A poor Man being afflicted by an evil Woman, now coming to her Trial, desires the Prayers of this Congregation. I went down to Guilford to the Tryal; and when I came up, I thought all People would be satisfy'd with the Justice that was done. But when I came to Town, I was abused by many People, both openly and privately: You have the Blood of that innocent Man to lie at your Door; The Woman had been hang'd, if you had not saved her; The Judgments of God will fall on you. One Woman followed me to the Water-side, and said, I was the Occasion of the Ruin of that innocent Man; for she her self------

L. C. J. Who is this?

Mr. Martin. I do not know her, I only give Evidence of the Abuses I underwent.

Mr. Coniers. Do you know any thing after the Assizes, how he behaved himself?

Mr. Martin. No, Sir, I know nothing of that.

Mr. S. Jenner. What was done by other People, ought not to be given in Evidence.

Mr. Broderick. If this Man does prove an Impostor, it will aggravate his Crime, if the Consequence be mischievous, and the World be still abused with a Persuasion that he was Bewitched.

Mr. S. Jenner. What was done by other People signifies nothing to us.

Mr. Broderick. This is very material, for it is a Confirmation that there was a Design carried on----- (being interrupted.)

L. C. J. Holt to Serj. Jenner. What other People did, must not affect this Man. But hear what Answer can be given, you that are the Queen's Council?

Mr. Broderick. The Charge of the Information is, That he, as an Impostor, pretended himself to be bewitched by Sarah Morduck, to deceive the World, and prejudice the Woman. And what can be more proper Evidence of that Charge, than that altho' he really was not bewitched, yet he had so prevailed upon the Opinions of the People, that they still believe him bewitched, and affronted Dr. Martin for being instrumental in her Acquittal: 'Tis all of a Piece, a Continuance of the same Imposture.

L. C. J. Holt. This Evidence is proper. He is Indicted for a Cheat, for endeavouring to beget an Opinion in People by his fraudulent Practices that he is bewitched. Now, Dr. Martin says, the People were still possessed with such a Belief; and thereupon affronted him, because they thought he was instrumental in having the Woman acquitted. Now, Is not this an Evidence that his pretending himself to be bewitched, begat that Opinion in the People.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. What the Doctor has said all along, has been of what others have done.

L. C. J. Holt. No, it has been what he saw himself. You say this Man's Evidence is most of what others have said. Not so, He has by himself prayed with him, and tried an Experiment with him upon a wrong Woman.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. He tells you what Welling said, and others; How does this affect my Client, what another Man, or another Woman said?

L. C. J. Holt. He was insulted upon the Account that Hathaway pretended himself to be bewitched, blind, speechless, and not able to eat.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. My Lord, with Submission, other Peoples censuring the Doctor cannot be brought as Evidence against my Client, unless they make it appear that he had a Hand in it, unless he put them upon it.

L. C. J. Holt. What other People have said, abstractedly considered, ought not to affect Richard Hathaway; but if there be Evidence that Hathaway hath been guilty of Deceit, and a Design to deceive People, Will you not allow it to be given in Evidence, that the People have been deceiv'd? And how came they to be deceived, but by his feigning himself to be bewitched?

Jury-

Juryman. Mr. Serjeant, If you have any Thing to object, we desire to hear what you say, for you speak so low we cannot hear you.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. I object to what the Doctor says by hearsay only.

Juryman. I believe that will be little considered by the Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. The Information is for an Impostor and Cheat: Now what is that? A Cheat is a Design to impose on the Credulity of others, to induce them to believe a Thing that is not true. Now Dr. Martin's Evidence is what Hathaway did, and that People did believe him to be bewitched; and they abused Mr. Martin, and told him he had done very ill in the Case of this Woman; and if it had not been for him she had been Condemned.

Mr. Martin. I have only one Thing more to say; it was reported that I had been bribed: I was told I had received several Guineas; that the Judge was Bribed and the Jury Bribed, and the Judge would not suffer the Woman to be searched, he being Bribed.

Mr. Coniers. Doctor have you done?

Mr. Martin. I have.

Mr. Coniers. We will next call Mrs. Johnson who was scratched.

Mr. Broderick. Sir, I think you mentioned a Gentleman that you sent for up? Where is he?

Mr. Martin. He is here.

Mr. Broderick What is his Name?

Mr. Martin. Mr. Bateman.

Mr. Broderick. We will call him to give an Account of that.

Mr. Coniers. We will first call this Woman. Mrs. Johnson, Were you at any time with Dr. Martin at such time as Hathaway pretended to be Bewitched?

Mrs. Johnson. Yes.

Mr. Coniers. Then pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what you know about it.

Mrs. Johnson. I went into the Room to see Sarah Morduck.

Mr. Coniers. What Room?

Mrs. Johnson. I was in the Room where Dr. Martin fetched her to be scratch'd; and Dr. Martin told me, he designed that he should scratch some other Woman; and he desired me to let him scratch me; but I denied him, and said, I was a Wife, and was not willing; at last I consented, and he told me I must not speak when I came into the Room where Hathaway was; and he brought me to the Fellow; and he said to him, If you think the Blood of this Sarah Morduck will do you any good, hold up your Hand. Which he did. Then he bid Sarah Morduck speak to him; which she did. Says he; Are you willing this Man should scratch you? She said, Yes: My Hearts Blood, if it will do him good. So with that he scratch'd me, and Sarah Morduck cry'd out. He had razed the Skin off my Arm, but no Blood came presently. Dr. Martin desired me not to speak, and I did not; the Blood came afterwards, but none then.

Mr. Coniers. Were you in the Room when the Doctor spoke to him?

Mrs. Johnson. I went into the other Room; Dr. Martin put me out before him.

Mr. Coniers. Was you not brought in again?

Mrs. Johnson. No. I went in of my own accord.

Mr. Coniers. In what Condition was he then?

Mrs. Johnson. He looked in this manner, his Eyes staring open.

L. C. J. Holt. Were his Eyes shut when you first came and was scratch'd, or open?

Mrs. Johnson. No, they were fast shut.

L. C. J. Holt. Did he speak then?

Mrs. Johnson. No, he said nothing when I came back, till his Eyes were open, and then he said, O Christ Jesus, or O Lord Jesus!

Mr. Phipps. But did he feel your Arm before he scratch'd you.

Mrs. Johnson. Yes, over and over.

Mr. Coniers. Call William Bateman. (Who appeared and was sworn) Pray give an Account what you know of this Defendant's vomiting Pins.

William Bateman. About a Twelvemonth ago I went to see Richard Hathaway.

Mr. Coniers. Were you desired to go to him by Dr. Martin?

William Bateman. I can't remember that.

L. C. J. Holt. Where do you live?

William Bateman. In Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Coniers. Then you do not remember any Thing that past then.

William Bateman. I do not say I do not remember any Thing, but I do not remember whether Dr. Martin desired me to go to him.

Mr. Coniers. Give an Account of what you know about his vomiting Pins.

William Bateman. About this time Twelvemonth, on a Sunday Night, a Woman came to Dr. Martin's House to enquire for him. I went to the Door; and the Woman said, If Dr. Martin would but come now, he might see Hathaway vomit Pins. Can I see him, says I? Yes, says she. So I went immediately; and in the House there were little Chinks that I could see through; and I saw him walk about the House, and heard him talk to the People, and I stood some time to hear him. At last I knock'd, and he came and let me in; and seeing me, he seemed to be troubled, and feigned himself to be in some Pain.

Mr. Raimond. You say you look'd through the Chink, How was he then? Repeat that.

William Bateman. He seemed to be as well as he is now.

Mr. Raimond. What did you do then?

William Bateman. I knocked, and he let me in; and when I came where the Light was, he knew me; and I said to him, I hear you spew Pins. Yes, says he. Says I, Prithee let me see thee. So he sate on a low Seat, and they gave him something in a Cup, and by drinking this I was to see him vomit Pins; and he took some Drink, but as far as I could perceive he did not swallow any.

Mr. Coniers. What was the Effect of it?

William Bateman. He pretended then to be in an Agony, and vomited several times, and there were Pins on the Ground. I had the Room swept very clean, and gave him the same again. He vomited again, and there were abundance of Pins on the Ground again. I believe he vomited Fourteen or Fifteen Times, and I believe there were some Hundreds of Pins on the Ground; but I thought the Pins were dropt from one or other; and I took up some of them, and they were dry, and I took up two or three in a Chain; and I said, I believed those were the Pins that were shewn at our House. No, no, says his Master, these are not the same; and he did endeavour to satisfy me that he did vomit these Pins; so I desired he might have a Pot to vomit in; and I had a Pot brought and made very clean, and I searched his Mouth and found no Pins there; and I held the Pot to his Mouth close, and he often endeavoured to put his Hand to the Pot, and I would not ſuffer him, for I perceived his Hands often moving to his Pocket. He vomited ſeveral Times, and there were ſome Pins ſcattered on the Ground, but none in the Chamber-Pot. Says I, theſe Pins do not come out of his Mouth; but the People were very preſſing on me to believe they did.

L. C. J. Holt. Who were they?

William Bateman. They were all Strangers to me. Upon this I told them I believed he had a Slight of Hand to convey them there, and I took hold of his Pocket. He ſtopt my Hand, and would not let me put my Hand into it. But after ſome time, ſays one, Let him, let him ſearch your Pocket. So I did, and took out ſeveral Things, and among the reſt ſeveral Parcels of Pins, and I believe theſe were they that he convey'd on the Ground.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you ſee him take them out of his Pocket?

William Bateman. No, but I took out ſeveral Hundred.

Juryman. What ſort of Shape were they of?

William Bateman. They were of a very odd kind of Shape.

L. C. J. Holt. Were they ſtraight, or crooked?

William Bateman. They were crooked in ſtrange Figures, like them on the Floor.

Mr. Broderick. And he made a great Difficulty of letting you meedle with his Pocket.

William Bateman. Yes.

Mr. Phipps. And when you would not let him put his Hand to the Pot, there were none in the Pot, but only on the Ground?

William Bateman. Yes, Sir.

Juryman. Did you ſee any Pins come out of his Mouth?

William Bateman. No, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. What became of the Pins you ſaw on the Ground; you ſay you ſaw abundance, what became of them?

William Bateman. They were ſwept away.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Who ſwept them away?

William Bateman. Some of the Family.

Juryman. I think he ſays that ſeveral of the Pins were taken up dry, were any of the Pins that were on the Ground dry?

William Bateman; Yes, and I ſaid, theſe Pins did not come from him.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. When was this?

William Bateman. About a Twelve-month ago.

Mr. Broderick. Now, my Lord, we will ſhew your Lordſhip, that he drew up a Narrative for the Preſs, giving an Account of this Buſineſs. Call Richard Ball, (who was ſworn.) Mr. Ball, pray give an Account what you know of Richard Hathaway's endeavouring to print a Story of his Vomiting of Pins.

Richard Ball. About a Twelve-month ago, in December, Richard Hathaway brought a Writing, and withal a Diſh-full of crooked Pins, and told us, thoſe Pins he had vomited, and that he had been afflicted by a Woman in Southwark, and I think he ſaid he had not eat any thing from my Lord-Mayor's Day.

Mr. Broderick. What did he deſire you to do?

R. Ball. To print his Paper. And after he had told this Story, he ſaid he had been with a Woman in Goodmans-fields. There was a Boy with him. And he deſired us to print his Paper. It related the Story of his Vomiting of Pins. He ſaid he had taken Quickſilver, and it wou'd not move him; and Madam Goodwin was mentioned ſeveral times in the Papers, that ſhe had cured him.

Mr. Coniers. How came it that you did not print his Paper?

R. Ball. My Maſter ſtood by; ſays he, You look very well; I will have nothing to do with it; I believe you are a Cheat. I believe no ſuch thing, ſays he; and upon that went away. But the next Day there was a Paper printed by ſomebody; and Richard Hathaway comes to us afterwards, and ſays, You have printed a Paper, tho' you would not have it of me: But it is not true, ſays he; I can give a better Account.

Mr. Broderick. Then he talked very freely to you, tho' he had not eat in Six Weeks before?

R. Ball. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Broderick. And he look'd very well?

R. Ball. Yes, Sir; and we wonder'd at it.

Mr. Coniers. Call Mr. Hearne, (who was ſworn.) Mr. Hearne, pray give my Lord, and the Jury, an Account what you know of this Matter.

Mr. Hearne. About September was Twelve-month, my Siſter was fall'n upon by this Hathaway, and Scratched and Abuſed in a barbarous Manner; and about Six Weeks after, ſhe was ſcratch'd again. After this we went before Juſtice Riches, and Juſtice Riches perſwaded them to be quiet, and not to trouble this Woman; and he perſwaded her to remove to ſome other Place. After this there was a Tumult made about her in Newgate-ſtreet.

Mr. Coniers. Were not you preſent when Dr. Martin was with the Defendant.

Mr. Hearne. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Coniers. Then give an Account of that.

Mr. Hearne. I went to Dr. Martyn; and Dr. Martyn told me that he would try a Stratagem, (to ſee whether he was bewitch'd,) by making him Scratch another Woman. I told him, I was afraid we ſhould be betray'd. Says he, Let me alone to manage it: So I ſaid no more. Says he, Do you go and fetch Sarah Morduck to me, and I will go before. So I came with my Siſter to Welling's Houſe where Dr. Martin was, and there was a Houſe full of People; and then he ordered the Door to be ſhut; and then Dr. Martyn left me at the Bed-ſide, and he got a Woman that was willing to be ſcratch'd. She refuſed at firſt, but afterwards conſented. And then Dr. Martyn brought them into the Room where Hathaway was; and he ask'd him if he did believe that ſcratching of Sarah Morduck would do him any Good; if he did he ſhould hold up his Hand; and he held up both Hands. Says he then to Sarah Morduck, Are you willing to be Scratch'd? Yes, her Hearts Blood to do him good. Then give me your Hand, ſays he; but inſtead of hers he took Mrs. Johnſon's Hand, and gave it into Hathaway's Hand. And Hathaway took her by the Wriſt, and felt her ſeveral times. Then ſays Dr. Martyn, if you will ſcratch her ſcratch her, I cannot wait on you always. Then he fell to work, and Dr. Martyn ſaid, he will open his Eyes preſently, there is Blood enough; and he preſently opens his Eyes and catches Sarah Morduck by the Apron, and holds her as faſt as he could, and the Woman that was ſcratch'd was gone into the other Room; with all the Strength I had I cou'd hardly looſen his Hands from Sarah Morduck. Now, ſays Dr. Martyn, you are miſtaken, this is not the Woman you ſcratch'd; and then his Countenance chang'd, and he he looked like a Fool, he was ſo ſurprized. Then ſays Dr. Martyn, Where is the Woman that he ſcratch'd? And I fetch'd Johnſon out of the other Room, and ſhow'd him her Arm, that ſhe was the Woman he had ſcratch'd. Says Dr. Martyn, I ſee what you are; go and mind your Buſineſs; or to that Effect; and then we went away. This was about Twelve or One a Clock the 11th of February And when we were gone, the ſame Day, as ſoon as it was Dark, they got half a Dozen luſty Fellows to go to Sarah Morduck's Houſe, and there they abuſed her.

L. C. J. Holt. How do you know that? Did you ſee it?

Mr. Hearne. My Lord, I will tell you preſently. When ſhe had had this Miſchief ſhe ſent for me; and when I came, her Shift on her Back was as wet as Muck. She ſent for me, becauſe ſhe had none to aſſiſt her but me, and I found her that Night in that Pickle. They ſaid, as ſoon as we were gone, the Fellow was bad again, and they have put this Trick upon us; but we will have the right Witch to ſcratch her.

L. C. J. Holt. Who was at the Houſe that Night that you ſay ſhe was in an ill Condition.

Mr. Hearne. There were ſeveral at the Houſe then, Mrs. Sarah Hays the Landlady was there, and others.

L. C. J. Holt. You ſay they were in a Hubbub, and would have the right Woman ſcratch'd. Who was it that would have it ſo?

Mr. Hearne. I heard ſo. But when I came to her, I found her in a lamentable Condition. Then I went to Juſtice Riches, and deſired his Warrant to take ſome of them; and he granted it, and I took up one Osburn; and when I came with him to Juſtice Riches, we had no Body to ſwear that ſhe was lame a-Bed, and ſo he was diſcharged; and Juſtice Riches ſaid, if there be no other to prove it on the Tryal you will ſpend a great deal of Money to no Purpoſe, and therefore he let him go. So ſhe was removed to Paul's-Wharf, but a Company of Fellows follow'd her thither.

L. C. J. Holt. How do you prove that?

Mr. Hearne. I heard of it, and I deſired the Landlord to ſend for a Conſtable; he did ſo; and when we came there, all the People made their Eſcape, except Hathaway and another Perſon. So then ſhe was carried before Sir Thomas Lane; and they telling him that he had vomited Pins, and other Things, Sir Thomas was perſwaded to believe it. I told him, theſe Fellows had diſturbed this Woman's Peace, and very much abuſed her. Sir Thomas, Will you not let me know who this Man is?

L. C. J. Holt. What Man do you mean?

Mr. Hearne. Jones. I begg'd, Pray let me know this Fellow's Name. Says he, it is no Matter, there was Provocation enough. And then when we were talking of the Pins, Dr. Hamilton look'd in Hathaway's Mouth, and found his Mouth very well; and he gave him Beer; and he, when he had taken it, ſtruggled with all his Might to keep it out; then he cry'd out. Let her be ſcratch'd, ſaid Sir Thomas. Dr. Hamilton ſaid, Forbear a little, let us ſee the Effect of this Beer, and ſo they forbore a little longer. Then they talked again of the Pins, and Dr. Hamilton would have her ſcratch'd again; ſo he ſpake to the Woman about it, but ſhe would not conſent, for ſhe ſaid ſhe had been abuſed, and would not be ſcratch'd, unleſs they would ſecure her for the future. But Sir Thomas would have her ſcratch'd; and ſo ſhe was; and then when ſhe was ſcratch'd, and he had drawn her Blood, the Fellow bruſtled about like a Cock-Sparrow; and then they call'd for Bread and Cheeſe; and ſo he that before pretended he could not ſwallow any Thing, ſhow'd like an Antick to the People, for he was very greedy. And when he had eaten that, he call'd for more; and Welling ſaid, Pray let him not have it, it will do him hurt, becauſe he has not eat ſo long. Then Sir Thomas Lane ordered her to be ſtript, and ſhe was ſtript above-Stairs, and then he would commit her to Priſon.

L. C. J. Holt. Why? Did any Body ſay ſhe had any Thing extraordinary about her?

Mr. Hearne. No. Dr. Hamilton ſaid ſhe had nothing about her; I offered a Hundred Pound Security for her; and Sir Thomas Lane would not take it. But when Dr. Martyn had been with him at Night, I Bail'd her out.

Mr. Bar. Hatſell. Was this Hathaway dumb when he was at Sir Thomas Lane's?

Mr. Hearne. He ſpoke before, and when Sir Thomas Lane bound her over to the Old-Baily; and all that time he was as well as could be.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Was you at the Aſſizes at Guilford?

Mr. Hearne. Yes, and gave Teſtimony for her there.

Mr. Coniers. My Lord, we have a great many others that were preſent with Dr. Martyn; but we have proved that Matter ſufficiently. Now we will ſhow how he behaved himſelf at Mr. Kenſy's. Call Mr. Kenſy (who appeared, and was ſworn.) Mr. Kenſy, Do you know Richard Hathaway?

Mr. Kenſy. Yes.

Mr. Coniers. Was he not committed to your care?

Mr. Kenſy. Yes.

Mr. Coniers. When was it?

Mr. Kenſy. In November laſt.

Mr. Coniers. Now pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what you know of his Faſting.

Mr. Kenſy. He was brought to my Houſe the Firſt of November laſt about Noon. I went to ſee him at the King's-Bench, where about Nine in the Morning I found him in Bed. The Servants in the Priſon told me his Tongue was ſwell'd. At my Requeſt he put out his Tongue, which I found in a very good State and Colour, free from any Induration or Contraction. I obſerv'd the Glands under the Tongue, alſo his Throat, ſo far as I could ſee, free from any preternatural Accident or Impediment. He was brought to my Houſe about Twelve the ſame Day. I kept him in the Room where we dined, and offer'd him Meat and Drink ſeveral Times, which he refuſed. About Eight at Night we put him to Bed, and took his Cloaths out of his Chamber. The next Morning we offer'd him Meat again, and he refuſed to eat; and we brought him his Cloaths, and he was ſurly and would not riſe. At Night I offer'd him a Glaſs of Cordial, which he alſo refuſed. At the ſame time we found his Rug wet, which we diſcovered to be his Urine dropping through the Teſter of the Bed, he having hid his Urine upon it in the Cover of a large Box, through which it dreined. And I threatned to diſcover him, and ſaid, Pray diſcover who ſet you to work in this Matter: I look on you as a poor innocent Fellow, and that you are ſet on by others that have more Wit; but he would diſcover nothing. The next Morning I forced him to riſe, and I found him reſolute in his Humour of Faſting: I found Perſwaſions and Promiſes of a Pardon could not prevail, prevail, nor Threatnings that I would ſtarve him if he would not confeſs; ſo I feigned a Quarrel with my Maid, and railed at her in his Preſence, ſaying ſhe was as very a Hypocrite as Richard Hathaway, and that I would be troubled no more with her. And I order'd her, ſo ſoon as my back was turn'd, to rail againſt me as bad as ſhe could, and charge him not to take any Thing from me or my Brother, for ſhe alone would take care to feed him. After this we took him up every Day, and contrived Places and Holes, whereby we diſcovered him to eat and drink heartily, ſometimes Three Times a Day, he thinking no body was Witneſs to it but the Servant. Particularly one Day I had Fiſh and Oyſters for Dinner, and I order'd the Maid to give him ſome, and to give him ſtrong Beer and Brandy too, and he eat and drank freely. And afterwards he brought up his Dinner, and I coming in, told him I was glad the Witch was found out at my Houſe, and I told him to morrow I would find out the Pins and Needles. He took the Poker, and raked the Aſhes over it, that it might not be ſeen what he had vomited.

L. C. J. Holt. But did he know that you ſaw him eat?

Mr. Kenſy. No, my Lord. The next Day I offer'd him ſomething to eat, to ſee if I could make him ſpeak. But he pretended to be ſo faint that he could not get off his Chair; this was after he had eat ſeveral Days. And he danced and play'd on the Tongs.

L. C. J. Holt. But did you not ſee him drink?

Mr. Kenſy. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. But did he know you ſaw him?

Mr. Kenſy. He thought no body ſaw him but the Maid; but I ſaw him drink.

Mr. Broderick. How did you ſee him?

Mr. Kenſy. I hid my ſelf in a dark Place in my own Buttery, and did ſee him eat and drink ſeveral Times. I did not ſee him eat every Day. But the Eighth Day he endeavour'd to make his Eſcape. My Brother and my Sons went into his Chamber with his Cloaths, and Hathaway having dreſs'd himſelf, watch'd his Opportunity, and jump'd out of the Room, and bolted them in. But they ſtaying ſo long, I ſent the Maid up, and ſhe met him ſtealing down Stairs, and then he went back again and let them out. On Monday the 10th I gave him his Cloaths, and I being alone, he had not Patience to dreſs himſelf, but immediately ſeized me; but ſtruggling with him, he pretended Feebleneſs, and fell on the Bed.

Mr. Coniers. Can you give Account of any thing afterwards?

Mr. Kenſy. Yes.

Mr. Coniers. What Diſcourſe had you with him then?

Mr. Kenſy. I will tell you. He was very ſurly. That was the firſt Day he ſpoke. I came to him, and told him he was a Fool; that his Friends were in Cuſtody, and had not been true to him, but had diſcovered the whole Matter; and adviſed him to make a Diſcovery himſelf; and if he would, I would go with him to my Lord Chief Juſtice. Upon that, he cried paſſionately, and ſaid he would tell the Lord Chief Juſtice the whole Truth. But my Lord not being at his Chamber, he in about an Hour recanted, and ſaid he was bewitch'd. When he cried, he ask'd if his Mother was ſafe.

Mr. Coniers. Did he at any Time tell you how long he had faſted?

Mr. Kenſy. Yes. He made Signs that he had faſted ſeveral Times when we had ſeen him eat, and he took his Cloaths and wrapt them over him. And I ſaid unto him, How long haſt thou faſted before you came to my Houſe? He made Signs that he had faſted Ten Weeks.

L. C. J. Holt. Did he pretend to be Dumb?

Mr. Kenſy. Yes. And I ask'd him how long he had faſted at my Houſe; and he pointed Two more.

Mr. Coniers. You ſay he made Signs that he had faſted Ten Weeks before he came to your Houſe, and Two Weeks while he was there. Now how often did you ſee him eat at your Houſe after the Two firſt Days?

Mr. Kenſy. I ſaw him eat ſeveral Times at Noon and Night. And after I had ſeen him eat, I would have perſwaded him to eat, and he made Signs ſtill as if he could not eat, and ſhook his Head.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How did you know what he meant by ſhaking his Head?

L. C. J. Holt. How did you know what he meant by his counting? How did you know that he meant Weeks?

Mr. Kenſy. He counted upon his Fingers, my Lord. I ask'd him how many Weeks he had faſted before he came to my Houſe, and he counted Ten Fingers; and how long he had faſted at my Houſe, and he counted Two more. And I aſk'd him whether he had faſted Twelve Weeks then, and he made Signs of Twelve.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. You ſay he was dumb, and yet could hear.

Mr. Kenſy. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How is that likely, that he ſhould hear, and yet was dumb?

L. C. J. Holt. Cannot a Man hear, tho' he be dumb?

Mr. Coniers. Call Elizabeth Baker. Where is ſhe? (She was ſworn.) Were you a Servant to Mr. Kenſy when this Man was at his Houſe?

Eliz. Baker. Yes, I was.

Mr. Coniers. Then pray tell my Lord and the Jury what you know of him.

E. Baker. Richard Hathaway came to my Maſter's Houſe about Twelve a-Clock on Saturday. When we went to Dinner at One a-Clock, my Maſter offer'd him Meat and Broth, and he refuſed it; he was aſk'd to eat ſeveral Times, but ſtill refuſed it. They aſk'd him again at Night, and he ſhook his Head, and would not eat. And when he went to Bed, we took his Cloaths, and lock'd him in. And the next Day he refuſed to riſe, and at Noon they went to ſee if he would eat any Thing, and offer'd him a Glaſs of Sack, and he refuſed it. And on Monday Morning he was aſk'd to riſe again, and he would not; but my Maſter would have him riſe, and would have him come down and ſit by the Fire; and when he was come down, aſk'd him to eat, but he would not. And at laſt he look'd in his Mouth, and ſaid he ſaw nothing but that he might eat and drink if he would. And my Maſter ſaid to me, When I am with him I will call you up, and take an Occaſion to fall out with you, and when I am gone, do you rail at me, and tell him he ſhould take nothing of me or my Brother. And ſo I did; I ſaid my Maſter call'd me Preſbyterian Jade, but I ſaid I did not know what Religion he was of; and that he was not more willing to have me go, than I was to be gone. And I told him he ſhould take nothing of my Maſter or his Brother, I would look after him while I ſtay'd. So I went out of the Room, and fetch'd a Glaſs of Brandy, and gave it to him. But there was a Child with me, and he refuſed to drink it, with a Sign pointing to the Child; ſo I ſaid I would hide the Child, and I ſtood between him and the Child; and then he drank it. And the ſame Day I gave him ſome Pudding and Small Beer; and at Night I carried him a Pint of Ale and a Toaſt, but found he had not eat the Pudding: I ſaw him eat the Toaſt and drink the Ale; but I did not ſee him eat the Pudding, tho' I ſuppoſe he eat it afterwards, for I ſaw it no more.

Juryman. In what Manner did you convey this Proviſion to him?

E. Baker. My Maſter gave me the Key, and I went in and ſtaid while he eat and drank, and I made him believe I had got the Key by Stealth. And I gave him a Glaſs of Brandy on Monday Night, and he drank it. And the next Day he eat and drank; he drank ſome Broth, and eat boil'd Mutton at Noon; and at Night he eat a Chop of Mutton, Bread and Cheeſe, and drank Beer and Brandy. On Wedneſday we had a Shoulder of Mutton roaſted, and after they had dined, I gave him a Plate of Meat, and he eat it in the Kitchen with me, and drank freely. And ſo he did every Day after while he was at our Houſe.

Mr. Coniers. Did any ever ſee him eat, beſides your ſelf?

E. Baker. Yes. That Day that we had Fiſh, he was in the Kitchen; and being there, he went and waſh'd his Hands, and I gave him a Plate of Fiſh, and ſet it by him; and he took it, and eat it. And I gave him a Bottle of Stout, and told him it was my Birth-day, and he muſt drink my Health; and after he had drunk it, he pointed to his Forehead, ſignifying it was got into his Head; and about two Hours after, he was very merry, and danced about, and took the Tongs and play'd upon them. But after that he was mighty ſick, and vomited ſadly. And, ſays my Maſter's Brother, we ſhall ſee the Pins and Needles now. And to hide it, he falls a pulling the Fire over it.

Mr. Coniers. Did any of the Neighbours ſee him eat?

E Baker. The 11th Day of the ſame Month, we had a Shoulder of Veal for Dinner; and after Dinner, my Maſter bid me ſet by ſome for him, and he would have ſome Gentlemen to ſee him eat it. They were accordingly hid in the Buttery and Coal-hole; and Richard Hathaway was brought down, and he took his Bread and Meat, and eat heartily, and drank with it.

Mr. Raymond. Who were thoſe Gentlemen that ſaw him eat?

E. Baker. Mr. Collet, Mr. Norbery, Mr. Page, and Mr. Stanton.

Mr. Coniers. Theſe Perſons are here.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. My Lord, all this is of what was done after the Tryal, this Evidence ought not to be given; the Record bears Date the firſt Day of the Term, and all this is ſaid to be done in November; it is all after the Record.

L. C. J. Holt. It is to prove the Impoſture committed before now. What Mr. Kenſy ſays of his pretending to faſt twelve Weeks, tho' two or more be not within the Time of the Information, I hope they may give it as Evidence ſubſequent, to prove what was done before.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. But I oppoſe all this of eating at their Houſe.

L. C. J. Holt. It is an Evidence of his cheating ſince that Time, and that out of the Information; but it is an Evidence alſo to prove that his pretended Faſting before was a meer Deceit; for he then pretended to have faſted Ten Weeks before he came thither, and after pretends to continue faſting in the ſame manner; if that be proved to be a Fraud, it is ſtrongly to be inferred, that his pretended faſting before was ſo too.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. But then they may not give Evidence in Matter after.

L. C. J. Holt. Matter afterwards that proves a Thing done before; for if a Confeſſion be made ſubſequent to an Indictment for a Crime, Shall not that Confeſſion after be brought as Evidence of the Thing done before? Sure it may.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. And will that prove what was done before?

L. C. J. Holt. It is certainly ſo. The Thing is, Whether I can give in Evidence any Thing after to prove what was done before. If he pretends to faſt Twelve Weeks, Ten Weeks before he came there; and the Two Weeks after, he did not faſt but only pretended it: Whether what he did after be not Evidence of what he did before? Sure it is. For he that cannot hold out faſting Two Weeks, but was glad to eat, tho' he pretended to faſt, may ſtrongly be preſumed to have eaten during the Ten Weeks, tho' then he pretended to faſt.

Mr. Coniers. Call Mr. Stanton, (who appear'd) Was you at Mr. Kenſey's Houſe to ſee Richard Hathaway eat?

Mr. Stanton, Yes. Mr. Kenſey came to me the 11th of November, and deſired me to come to his Houſe, to ſee whether he eat or drank or not; and I went, and was put into a dark Place, and I ſaw the Victuals before he was brought; there was five Slices of Meat, and Bread, and Beer. And he was brought where it was, and he looked about him earneſtly to ſee if any one ſaw him, and then he fell to, and eat as heartily as any Man could. And hearing a Noiſe whilſt he was eating, he run away with it, and ſet it on the Dreſſer. The Maid ſaid, there is no body coming; and then he went to it again, and eat it up, and drank the Drink, and ſate down by the Fire. And afterwards we went to him, and carried a Bottle of Drink with us, and drank to him; but he made Signs that he could not drink, and ſhow'd us that his Belly clung to his Back, which we thought was very ſtrange.

Mr. Coniers. Call Matthew Shipps, and -------- Baxter. (They did not appear.) Jo. Hunt. (He was ſworn.) My Lord, we call this Man to give you an Account of the ſtrange Noiſes that they pretended were heard in Mr. Welling's Houſe; and we will make it appear how that Noiſe came. Mr. Hunt, pray give an Account what you know in this Matter.

Jo. Hunt. My Lord, an Acquaintance of mine, one Kelpin, told me that he had watch'd with Richard Hathaway one Night; and the next Day he came to me, and told me he fell aſleep, and had not watch'd him as he ought; and deſired me to ſit up with him, and to obſerve him as narrowly as I could, and ſee if I could find any Deceit in him. Accordingly I did ſo; and when I came into the Room, I ſate down on the Bed-ſide. There were two Gentlemen in the Room, Mr. Pocock, and Mr. Butler, and

Thomas

Thomas Welling. He lay as if he were almoſt Dead. In a little Time his Maſter, Tho. Welling, brought in ſome Pins in a Coffee-diſh, and ſaid he had brought them up that Day, and that he believed he would bring up more. And after this ſeeing of the Pins, I went to Mr. Pocock, and ſaid, I did imagine the Pins might lie in his Mouth, rather than in his Stomach; and therefore it was very proper to have his Mouth ſearch'd. And Mr. Pocock replied, Who will venture to do it? And I ſaid, If they would waſh the Fire Poker clean, and put it into his Mouth, to prevent his biting my Finger, I would do it. Immediately upon this Hathaway raiſed himſelf, and began to make a Reaching, as tho' he would Vomit; and then Welling and his Wife ſaid, now he is going to bring up Pins. Thereupon I kneeled down by the Bed-ſide with a Candle in my Hand to obſerve his Motions; and after he had ſtrain'd ſome times, he made a Motion with his Tongue at each ſide of his Mouth, but I could not perceive any thing come up his Throat, tho' his Mouth was wide open; and by and by he drew up his Mouth, and turned out two or three bright Pins, and preſently after two more, which I catch'd in my Hands, and ſhew'd them to the Company, ſaying, they are bright and new; and his Maſter ſaid he believed they came out of ſome Chandler's Shop. Afterwards Hathaway lay down very quiet, and ſo continued for ſome Time. And Welling's Wife coming into the Room, ask'd why the Charms were not put on? I replied, I have been told the Charms have been aways taken off from him by the Witch; but was reſolved to watch ſo narrowly that Night, that they ſhould not be taken from him. Then Welling and his Wife offering to put on the Charms, Hathaway made a ſtruggling, as tho' he was unwilling to have them on; and Welling ſaid, you have always found Benefit by it, Why will you not? They are order'd by Mr. Butler.

L. C. J. Holt. What were thoſe Charms?

Jo. Hunt. Three little Things in black Bags, I did not know what they were. And they ask'd him whether he was willing they ſhould be put on; if he was, he ſhould hold up his Hand; but he was unwilling. But I ſaid I was minded to have them put on; ſo he lay ſtill, and Mrs. Welling, or ſome other Woman, ſew'd them to the Boſom of his Shirt. After the Charms were put on, I watch'd to ſee what would become of them; and perceiving Hathaway to make ſeveral Motions with his Hands about them, I ſtruck his Hands. I bid him either keep his Arms ſtraight in the Bed, or elſe put them out of the Bed, for that the Charms ſhould not be taken off that Night. Then I and the Company ſitting ſtill about the Bed, Welling ſaid, Hearken, you will not believe; hear what a Noiſe there is, the like is heard here almoſt every Night. Whereupon all were ſilent. At laſt I heard a ſmall ſcratching or rubbing at the Bed's-feet; and putting my Head cloſe to the Bed's-feet, liſtning, I heard ſomething ſcreek; and perceiving the Bed-cloaths ſtir, I took hold of the Fellow's Foot, and ſaid, I have caught the Witch that made the Noiſe. I thought it had been Mice at firſt; but ſeeing the Cloaths move, I catch'd his Foot. Thereupon Hathaway roſe up, and in a Paſſion made a Motion towards me with both his Hands; but I lifting up his Foot, he fell back upon his Pillow, and lay ſtill, and the Noiſe ceaſed; and about Five a-Clock in the Morning I left him, and the Charms upon him.

Mr. Coniers. Call Elizabeth Brand (who appeared). Pray give an Account what you know of any Collection of Money for Richard Hathaway.

Eliz. Brand. There was betwixt Six and Seven Pounds gathered.

L. C. J. Holt. How was it gathered?

Eliz. Brand. We went about to get Money for him to bear his Charges to Guilford, and we got betwixt Six and Seven Pounds.

Mr. Broderick. Do you know of any other Sums that were gathered for him?

Eliz. Brand. Yes; but I know not how much.

Mr. Coniers. Who employ'd you to do this?

Eliz. Brand. A great many of the Neighbours.

L. C. J. Holt. Who was the Money paid to?

Eliz. Brand. To Mrs. Welling.

Mr. Coniers. Do you know any thing of his ſcratching Sarah Morduck?

Eliz. Brand. I over-perſuaded her to let the Fellow ſcratch her.

L. C. J. Holt. Did ſhe conſent to it?

Eliz. Brand. Yes, my Lord. I call'd her, and ſaid to her, Let me perſuade you to let this Fellow ſcratch you; and ſhe bid me go and fetch him. And he came, and ſits him down on a low Seat. Says ſhe, Will you engage he ſhall not ſcratch my Eyes out? At laſt he ſcratches, and there came no Blood; and he ſcratches again, and then the Blood came; and he cry'd, O my Eyes, O my Eyes. And I ſaid, now the Blood comes, and he ſtared. Says I to him, Can you ſee me? Yes, ſays he, as well as ever I could.

Mr. Coniers. Mr. Herne, you was at Guilford Aſſizes, How long did this Fellow pretend he had faſted?

Mr. Herne. I cannot be poſitive what he ſaid at the Tryal as to that; but they ſaid he had faſted ſix Weeks, before Dr. Martin tried the Experiment with him.

Mr. Coniers. Call Matth. Shipps (he was ſworn.) Was Richard Hathaway under your Cuſtody?

M. Shipps. Yes. He was brought from Guilford Aſſizes upon the 31*ſt* of July laſt. He came home at Eleven a-Clock at Night, and they told me he was come a Priſoner from Guilford to the Marſhalſea, where he continued Four Days, and he was ordered to lie with me; and every Night that he lay there, he ſlept very well to my thinking: And ſeveral times I ask'd him how he did, he anſwer'd, he was pretty well; and every Day while he was there, he eat and drank with me, as the reſt of the Servants of the Houſe did, and was not in all that Time in any Fit as I could perceive, but went very well out of the Priſon.

L. C. J. Holt. What did he ſay at the Aſſizes about his Faſting?

M. Shipps. I was not at the Aſſizes.

Mr. Coniers. Then we muſt leave it here.

Mr. Broderick. My Lord, we have the Woman here that they pretended was the Witch; but it may be, they may think it not proper, and therefore we ſhall let her alone.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Council for the Defendant, Richard Hathaway, who is indicted for a Cheat and Impoſtor; and it is for pretending himſelf to be bewitched, and that he has uſed indirect Arts and Means to make People believe he was ſo bewitch'd; and that this Sarah Morduck was the Perſon that had bewitch'd him; and that this was contrived by him, in order to bring Miſchief and Damage on this Sarah Morduck, and to the evil Example of the Queen's Queen's Subjects. You have heard the Evidence that has been given, and therefore I ſhall not repeat it, but only obſerve ſome good Things to you. The Doctor has taken a great deal of Pains in this Cauſe; but that which he does tell you by Hearſay, what other Perſons have told him, is not ſuch Evidence as you are to take any Notice of, that is, what Johnſon told him, and likewiſe what other Perſons told him concerning this Man; for what they have ſaid to him of this Man, tho' it may be true, is not to come under your Conſideration. There are ſeveral others that have given Evidence of what other Perſons have ſaid, and they have given it as their Opinions that what this Man did was the Cauſe of their Doings; of which you are to take no Notice. But, my Lord, that which ſeems to bear moſt hard upon us, is, That becauſe the Doctor, and ſeveral others have been abus'd, both before and after the Tryal, for what they endeavour'd to do; therefore they would inſinuate as if my Client had had a Hand in it. But if a Man be doing any thing, and another takes the Advantage of it, to do another a Miſchief, I hope that Miſchief ſhall not be laid to his Charge. My Lord, there is one Man that has given a great deal of Evidence as to his Vomiting of Pins, and ſays that he was by, and he ſwept the Ground, and after he had Vomitted, there were Pins upon the Ground; and when he had a Chamber-pot to vomit in, he could not find any Pins there; but there was ſome upon the Ground again. So likewiſe for his Faſting, you have had Evidence to prove that a Cheat. And this ſeems to affect him moſt, that all this Pretence to be Bewitch'd, and Vomiting of Pins, and Faſting, was a Cheat. This is the Matter that they accuſe him of. Of which if he be really Guilty, I come not here to defend him; but I am to defend him as far as Witneſs will do. And now, my Lord, if my Brief be true, we ſhall ſatisfy you that my Client was in a very lamentable Condition, ſuch as one would think no Man could be in and live; and I will lead you by theſe Steps. When he was thus diſabled, could neither ſpeak, nor take Suſtenance; his Maſter, after he had ſerved him Two Years, and he had lived very civilly, and behaved himſelf well in his Maſter's Service, till he fell thus ill: Then he was ſo ill, that after the Maſter had ſpent a great deal of Money with Doctors and Apothecaries, he could get no Cure for him; then he got him into the Hoſpital, and there he continued a long Time, and at laſt they gave it in that he was incurable, and they turn'd him out. But his Maſter made Intereſt, and got him in again, and he continued ſome Time there again; and there it was that he was firſt thought to be bewitched: For they had him twice, and could do no good with him, and the Tenders told him he muſt lie under ſome evil Tongue; and thereupon he was turn'd out as incurable, and with that Inſtruction that it was an incurable Diſeaſe. So he came home again, and his Maſter and Miſtreſs were acquainted with it; and they conſider what Perſon it ſhould be that ſhould have any evil Deſign againſt him. And at laſt they recollect, that his Maſter had taken a Room over the Head of this Sarah Morduck, and ſhe had gone to the Shop often, and had given them very ill Words, and ſhe ſhould be even with him one Time or other; and therefore they concluded this Woman was the Perſon. Upon this there were many Things contrived, what Courſe they ſhould take to do him good, and there was one Thing concluded upon in order to his Eaſe, (which I think none ſhould adviſe) that is, the Buſineſs of ſcratching. But this Woman, when ſhe was accuſed by them of bewitching him, ſhe offered herſelf to be ſcratch'd, and ſhe was ſcratch'd, and from thence this Man found Eaſe. But afterwards he fell ill again, and he went into London, and was examined at Sir Thomas Lane's; and upon Examination they thought that this Man did lie under ſuch an Affliction. I cannot ſay it is an irreligious Thing to ſay there are Witches in the World; but this Man lay under ſuch a Diſtemper, that no Doctor could know what to do with it. And they could not imagine who ſhould do it but this Woman, and ſhe was there ſcratch'd by him, and he did find Relief by it. My Lord, this being the Matter of Fact, we ſhall call very ſubſtantial Witneſſes to prove it. As to his Faſting, we ſhall prove that he was put under the Care of very ſubſtantial Perſons, and that he did not eat or drink for Three Weeks or a Month; ſo that it will appear we had no Contrivance in the World, but only would get Eaſe if we could. We have Twenty Witneſſes to call.

L. C. J. Holt. Let them all be call'd. Call as many as you will.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Call Anne Eaton. (She appeared.) Do you know Richard Hathaway?

Anne Eaton. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How long have you known him?

Anne Eaton. Ever ſince he came to his Maſter.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How long is that?

Anne Eaton. About Five or Six Years.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Do you know what Condition he was in Two Years ago?

Anne Eaton. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Then pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account of it.

Anne Eaton. I watch'd with him ſeveral Nights.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Where did you watch with him?

Anne Eaton. At his Maſter's Houſe.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. In what Condition was he then?

Anne Eaton. He was in a very bad Condition, he was dumb and blind, and his Senſes were gone, and he ſeem'd as if he were dead; and when his Senſes have come to him, he has burn'd like a Flame of Fire.

L. C. J. Holt. How long did you watch with him?

Anne Eaton. About Nine Weeks.

L. C. J. Holt. Did he faſt all that Time?

Anne Eaton. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J Holt. Might he not eat in that Time, and you not ſee him?

Anne Eaton. I was with him conſtantly at Nights, but not in the Day; I have been with him Four or Five Days and Nights together, and did not ſee him eat or drink.

L. C. J. Holt. What Time was this that you watch'd with him?

Anne Eaton. From the Time that he came from Madam Davenport's, till your Lordſhip confined him.

L. C. J. Holt. Who put him to Madam Davenport's?

Anne Eaton. I had nothing to do with that.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Can you not tell what Month that was in?

Anne Eaton. I can't tell that.

Mr. Raymond. Did you obſerve him all that Time?

Anne Eaton. When I went out, I left one always in my Room.

L. C. J. Holt. You ſay you were with him Four or Five Days and Nights together.

Anne Eaton. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Were you with him all Night and all Day?

Anne Eaton. My Lord, ſome Days I had Occaſion to go out, but then I left ſome Neighbours with him.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Call Gibſon. (Who appeared.) Do you know this Man, Richard Hathaway?

Gibſon. I have ſeen him in a deplorable Condition.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. When was this that you ſaw him?

Gibſon. About Two Years ago. His Maſter ask'd me to go and ſee him, and when I came up I ſaw him foaming at Mouth; I thought he would not live till Morning. The next Day his Maſter deſired me to watch with him at Night; and I did, and he was ſo bad that I thought he would not live till Morning. Afterwards I ſaw him again, and he was blind and dumb, as it appeared to me. And he had a ſtrange Motion, he threw himſelf forward, and afterwards threw himſelf backward, as if his Head lay in the Reins of his Back; and I ſaid to this Woman then, I believe he has broke his Back. I believe this was after he came from Madam Davenport, about the Time that he appeared at the Bar at Weſtminſter.

L. C. J. Holt. The firſt Time that you ſpeak of, when you ſay he was blind and dumb, you ſay that was Two Years ago; was he blind and dumb when you ſaw him the Second Time?

Gibſon. Yes, the Second Time I ſaw him he was blind and dumb. I ſaw him in a deplorable Condition Three Times.

Juryman. We deſire to know the Circumſtances of his Condition.

L. C. J. Holt. The Jury deſire to be ſatisfied of the Circumſtances of his Condition. You ſay you ſaw him Two Years ago, and he was then in a deplorable Condition, and you ſaw him twice after; the Jury would have you deſcribe the Circumſtances of it as plain as you can.

Gibſon. His Maſter deſired me to go to him, and I was willing to oblige him; and when I came to him, he was both blind and dumb.

L. C. J. Holt. How long was this after you ſaw him the firſt Time?

Gibſon. About half a Year after.

L. C. J. Holt. Are you a Neighbour?

Gibſon. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. You ſay you ſaw him Two Years ago, and you ſay he then foamed at Mouth and Noſtrils; was he blind and dumb then?

Gibſon. No, my Lord; but he was when I ſaw him the ſecond Time.

L. C. J. Holt. When did you ſee him after?

Gibſon. It was about a Twelve-month after that I ſaw him.

L. C. J. Holt. And not before?

Gibſon. He was Seven Weeks in the Hoſpital.

Mr. Broderick. Then you did not ſee him in the Hoſpital.

Gibſon. I did; but he went almoſt double.

Mr. Broderick. Did you hear any Thing of Mrs. Morduck then?

Gibſon. No, Sir.

L. C. J. Holt. What Trade are you?

Gibſon. I am a Glazier.

Mr. Coniers. Have you no other Trade?

Gibſon. Sometimes I work at the Cuſtom-houſe. One Sunday we went to hear Dr. Pead, and R. Hathaway went with us. And when we were gone out a-Door, he could not ſpeak; and when we came upon the Bridge, his Face was drawn a-wry ſo ſtrangely that it aſtoniſhed me; he ſtagger'd the Length of this Table, and his Face was drawn back again, and he fetch'd a Reel; but in a Quarter of an Hour he ſpoke, and his Speech continued till he came to Gracechurch-ſtreet, and there we met Mr. Fox, and ſo he continued till we came to Biſhopſgate: But coming to Hounſditch, he made Motions that his Speech was gone again.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you hear him ſpeak at Weſtminſter?

Gibſon. No, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Call Flummery, (who appeared.) Do you know this Man?

Flummery. Yes, I am a Neighbour.

L. C. J. Holt. What is thy Name?

Flummery. Flummery. After Guilford Aſſizes I went to ſee him, and he was in a lamentable Condition; he was like a Stock or Stone, Blind and Dumb. I went to ſee him ----

L. C. J. Holt. Did you ever ſee him before?

Flummery. I ſaw him ſeveral times, but took no notice of it; but then his Eyes ſtood wide open.

L. C. J. Holt. And yet you ſay he was blind, How could that be?

Flummery. My Lord, I will tell you how; I tried him, I wagg'd the Hair of his Eye-Lids, and put the Candle to his Eyes, and he took no notice of it.

L. C. J. Holt. How could you know that he did not ſee?

Flummery. I tried him.

L. C. J. Holt. How did you try him?

Flummery. I tried them with my Fingers, and his Eyes would not wag.

L. C. J. Holt. Did he not look then as he looks now?

Flummery. No.

Mr. Broderick. Did you ſpeak to him then?

Flummery. Yes, but I could not make him Hear nor Anſwer me.

L. C. J. Holt. Could he ſpeak then?

Flummery. No, May it pleaſe your Lordſhip.

Anne Pearſe, Sworn.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Anne Pearſe, Pray tell my Lord, what you know of this Richard Hathaway.

Anne Pearſe. I belong to the Hoſpital. When he came into the Hoſpital he was very bad.

L. C. J. Holt. Was he Blind and Dumb when he came in?

Anne Pearſe. After he was brought in he was put to Bed, and he was taken with a Fit, and I was call'd to him; and I came to him, and he did not ſtir much, and turn'd up his Eyes. And afterwards one of his Maſter's Journey-Men came to him, and he raiſed him out of his Bed; and one came to me and ſaid, Siſter, he is come to the Fire, but he is very bad ſtill. Says I, What did you raiſe him out of his Bed for? He went upon his Ankles almoſt; he went very Weakly, and continued ſo for ſome time.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How long was he in the Hoſpital?

Anne Pearſe. About Five Months.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Was he out, and came in again?

Anne Pearſe. Yes, he was. He complain'd he could not go to Stool; and the Doctor gave him Quickſilver;

Quickſilver; and when it came from him, I heard the Apothecary made him take it again, and ſwallow it again.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. When he came in the ſecond time, Was you there then?

Anne Pearſe. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How long was he there the ſecond time?

Anne Pearſe. How long he was there the ſecond time, I cannot tell.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Can you tell when he was put in the ſecond time?

Anne Pearſe. No.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. What was your Opinion of him?

Anne Pearſe. I apprehended him to be in a very ſtrange Condition; he lay Seven or Eight Days, and did not Eat or Drink; he had taken Quickſilver, and it did not come from him, and the Doctor wonder'd it ſhould lie ſo long in his Body.

Mr. Broderick. Did the Doctor or you apprehend any Thing of Witchcraft in the Caſe?

Anne Pearſe. No, Sir. But at this time his Eyes were ſet in his Head.

Mr. Broderick. When he was recovered out of thoſe Fits, did he pretend that he was bewitch'd?

Anne Pearſe. No.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you never hear him complain that he was bewitched?

Anne Pearſe. No, my Lord, I did not hear of that.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Call Jo. Smith (who appeared.) Mr. Smith, Do you know this Perſon, Richard Hathaway?

Mr. Smith. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How long have you known him?

Mr. Smith. About Five or Six Years.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How far do you live from him?

Mr. Smith. I believe about two Stones throw.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Were you well acquainted with his Condition two Years ago.

Mr. Smith. Yes, I have done Buſineſs for the Family ſeveral Years. About Five Years ago, I found him much afflicted with Convulſion Fits at his coming to his Maſter.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How was he about two Years ago?

Mr. Smith. He was in a very ſtrange Condition; and I adviſed his Maſter to get rid of him, and to get him into the Hoſpital.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. What did he ail?

Mr. Smith. He lay in a very ſtrange Condition.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How did he lie?

Mr. Smith. He lay ſtruggling and ſtriving often, and ſometimes like a Man that was dead; and once when he lay in that Condition I laid Cupping-Glaſſes to him, and that enliven'd him.

L. C. J. Holt. What did you imagine ailed him? Did you think he counterfeited or not?

Mr. Smith. Indeed, my Lord, I can't tell that.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Why did you adviſe his Maſter to put him into the Hoſpital?

Mr. Smith. I can't tell.

Mr. Phipps. You ſay you have known him Five Years, and that he has been troubled with Fits. Did he ever talk of being bewitch'd till within this two Years?

Mr. Smith. No, not till within theſe two Years.

Mr. Bar. Hatſell. When he lay ſeemingly dead, you do not know whether he counterfeited or no.

Mr. Smith. No, my Lord.

Mr. Bar. Hatſell. Do you think a Man can be in ſuch a Condition as he ſeem'd to be, and yet only Counterfeit?

Mr. Smith. Indeed, my Lord, I know not. I examined him whether he was ſubject to thoſe Fits formerly; and he told me, he was very much troubled with them in the Country.

L. C. J. Holt. You do not anſwer the Queſtion. Cannot a Man counterfeit in ſuch a Caſe? What do you think of that?

Mr. Smith. Without doubt it may be counterfeited.

L. C. J. Holt. You ſay, when he was in thoſe Fits, you put Cupping-Glaſſes to him, and it enliven'd him; now if he were in a real Convulſion, do you think it would have enliven'd him?

Mr. Smith. Sometimes it may be ſo.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Call Elizabeth Willoughby (She appeared.) Mrs. Willoughby, pray give my Lord an Account whether you know Richard Hathaway, and what you know of him.

E. Willoughby. Sir, I have ſeen him ſince the Aſſizes at Guilford.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did you never ſee him before?

E. Willoughby. Yes.

Mr. Serj Jenner. Then give an Account of what Condition you have ſeen him in.

E. Willoughby. I have ſeen him when the Breath came out of his Mouth like the Barking of a Dog. I had a Child that was troubled with Fits, and I was above Stairs, and I heard a great Noiſe; and I went out of the Door to ſee what was the Matter, and over the Hatch lay Richard. Lord bleſs me, ſays I, is it you makes this Noiſe? And I could not fancy any Thing, but that it was like the Barking of a Dog.

L. C. J. Holt. How thick was it? Was it not like other Folks?

E. Willoughby. No.

Mr. S. Jenner. What ailed him?

E. Willoughby. I cannot tell what ailed him.

L. C. J. Holt. Do you think he was bewitched?

E. Willoughby. I believe he was, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. I ſuppoſe you have ſome Skill in Witchcraft. Did you ever ſee any Body that was bewitched before?

E. Willoughby. My Lord, I have been under the ſame Circumſtances my ſelf when I was a Girl, in Sir Edward Bromfield's Time.

L. C. J. Holt. How do you know you was bewitched?

E. Willoughby. There was a Woman taken up upon Suſpicion for it.

L. C. J. Holt. For bewitching thee?

E. Willoughby. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you ſcratch her?

E. Willoughby. My Lord, I had no power to do any thing. I flew over them all.

L. C. J. Holt. You ſay you were in the ſame Condition with this Man, and you ſay you flew; Did you faſt too?

E. Willoughby. One held me by one Arm, another by the other, and another behind, and I flew ſheer over their Heads.

L. C. J. Holt. Woman, can you produce any of theſe Women that ſaw you fly?

E. Willoughby. It was when I was a Child; they are dead; it was in old Sir Edward Bromfield's Time.

L. C. J. Holt. What became of that Woman that made thee to fly?

E. Willoughby. I cannot tell, I have been well ever ſince I was Married.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How was you cured of that Witchery?

E. Willoughby. How do I know?

Mr. Coniers. Did you ſcratch her?

E. Willoughby. How ſhould I ſcratch her, when I had not power to ſee her?

Mr. Coniers. And yet you believe this Man was bewitched as well as you. What Condition was this Man in? How long did he lye in this Condition.

E. Willoughby. Night and Day he has lain over the Hatch, and over the Bed, and made a great Noiſe with his Breath.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Who did you ſuſpect had done him this harm?

E. Willoughby. I know not that.

Mr. Broderick. Are you a Widow?

E. Willoughby. No, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Call Keeling. (he appeared.) Do you know any Thing concerning this Richard Hathaway.

Keeling. I watcht with him 9 Nights.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. What did he Eat or Drink all that Time?

Keel. He did neither Eat nor Drink, nor had he any Stool all that Time.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you watch with him 9 Nights and Days?

Keel. There was another Man that watch'd with him in the Day; as I came out, he was let in; and as he came out, I was let in.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How long was this before the Tryal?

Keel. Two or three Days before he came before Sir Thomas Lane.

Bridges Sworn.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did you watch with Richard Hathaway?

Bridges. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How long?

Bridges. Nine Days.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did you watch with him the ſame Days that he watch'd with him in the Nights?

Bridges. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did you not ſtir from him till he came?

Bridges. No.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did you ſee him Eat or Drink all that Time?

Bridges. No.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Where was it that you watch'd with him?

Bridges. In an old empty Houſe.

L. C. J. Holt. Where was this Houſe?

Bridges. By a Dock on the Bank-ſide in St. Mary Overy's Pariſh.

L. C. J. Holt. How came you to put him into that Houſe?

Bridges. The Maſters of the Pariſh put him in it.

Mr. Webb ſworn.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Mr. Webb, did you get a Houſe to put Hathaway in?

Mr. Webb. Yes.

L. C. J. Holt. How came you to do ſo?

Mr. Webb. His Maſter uſed to work for me, and he came to me, and ſaid, I cannot tell what to do with my Man, unleſs the Maſters of the Pariſh take ſome Care of him; and I did ſpeak with ſome of them about it; and they ſaid, we will not trouble the Pariſh about it, we will ſpend a Crown a-piece, and put theſe Men into the Houſe with him.

L. C. J. Holt. You took the Houſe then?

Mr. Webb. We borrowed the Houſe, it being empty, and put in theſe Two Men. There were four or five Neighbours more, and I ſaid to him, They ſay you vomit Pins, I will be ſatisfied whether it be true or no; and we ſtript him, and could find none about him; we ſearch'd his Shirt, his Stockings, his Breeches, and his Hat, but could find no Pins about him.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did he eat or drink all the Time you were there.

Mr. Webb. No, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did he vomit?

Mr. Webb. Yes, I went to him on Thurſday Morning, and he had a husky Cough, and I thought he would have been choak'd; and at laſt he made a Crumb of Spittle out of his Mouth, and there were Three Pins came from him in the Spittle, as ruſty as if they had lain in a Ditch Seven Years. About Saturday following he had I believe Four Pins more came from him; I took them, and I think the Hands of Man could not join them as thoſe Pins were. On Sabbath-day in the Morning, a Gentleman came and deſired him to go to Church with him, and deſired him to drink a Pint of Ale, but he did not drink half; and about Five a-Clock in the Afternoon came Mr. Sutton the Apothecary, and I ſtay'd with him till Six on Monday, and heard not a Word from him.

Juryman. What People came in to ſee this Fellow while you watch'd him?

Keeling. No Man, Woman, or Child came to him the Time I was there, but only that Sunday Night that my Maſters were there, and I ſaid, you do not put him here to ſtarve him; and they bid me aſk him if he would eat any Thing; if he would eat any Thing, he might have it.

Mr. Coniers. Did you not uſe to carry him out ſometimes?

Keeling. We never carried him out.

Mr. Coniers. Juſt now you ſaid he was out on Sabbath-day.

Keeling. Yes, but never otherwiſe.

Mr. Broderick. Was he in a Ground-Room, or up Stairs?

Keeling. He was in a Ground-Room.

L. C. J. Holt. Were there any Windows in it?

Keeling. Yes.

L. C. J. Holt. Was there any Caſement?

Keeling. Yes, there was.

Juryman. We deſire to know of this Witneſs, whether he never was aſleep in that Time while he watch'd with him.

Keeling. No, I ſat juſt at his Head. I ſlept in the Day-Time.

L. C. J. Holt. You that watch'd with him in the Day, did you not ſleep all Day?

Bridges. No.

L. C. J. Holt. How came you to concern your ſelf in this Buſineſs? Are you one of the Maſters of the Pariſh?

Mr. Webb. No, I am not, but it was my Turn to be Overſeer, and his Maſter ſpoke to me to ſpeak to the Church-Wardens; and I did, and they ſaid they would not put the Pariſh to the Charge, but do it themſelves.

L. C. J. Holt. What Trade are you?

Mr. Webb. A Lighter-Man, my Lord.

Dell ſworn.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Do you know this Richard Hathaway?

Dell. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How long have you known him?

Dell.

Dell. Ever ſince he was an Apprentice.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did you know him Two Years ago?

Dell. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. What Condition was he in then?

Dell. I was at the Aſſizes at Guildford ——

Mr. Serj. Jenner. What did you know of him before that Time?

Dell. I took no notice of ſuch Things.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Can you ſay any Thing of him?

Dell. I can ſay, that the Night before he was before Sir Thomas Lane I watch'd with him, and he went to Stool, and in his Excrements there was a Lump of Hair, looſe Pins, a Stump of a Nail, half a Nutſhell, and Two or Three Pieces of Stone.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. And this you ſaw.

Dell. I ſaw him in a very deplorable Condition.

L. C. J. Holt. How? In what Condition?

Dell. This is all I have to ſay.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. What do you call a deplorable Condition?

Dell. He lay in ſuch a Condition as if he were Dumb; and if he was not, I believe he is the greateſt Villain in the World.

L. C. J. Holt. How do you know thoſe Excrements came from him?

Dell. I was one of the Three Men that watch'd with him that Night. We had Two Chamber-Pots; theſe Things were in the firſt Stool, and when he had the ſecond Stool, he ſat on the Pot, and when he had done, we look'd, and there was nothing in it.

L. C. J. Holt. And were theſe Things in the firſt?

Dell. Yes, in the firſt; in the other there was none. And there were Twenty Neighbours more that ſaw them.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Was Benn there?

Dell. Yes, he was there.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Mr. Benn, was this ſo?

Benn. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did you help watch with him?

Benn. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. And are you ſure thoſe Excrements came from him?

Benn. Yes, I am ſure. I ſtood over him with a naked Sword.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Why did you ſtand over him with a naked Sword?

Benn. Becauſe People ſaid he was bewitched.

L. C. J. Holt. Who employed you to watch with him?

Benn. I went into the Houſe, and I told his Maſter, if they would watch him in the Day, I would in the Night.

Powel called.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. What do you know of this Matter?

Powel. This Man and I went up one Night —

Mr. Serj. Jenner. When?

Powel. February was Twelve-month. We went up and look'd upon him, and he lay as one dead, and he did not wag his Eyes; and preſently he hook'd his Neck about in ſuch a manner that I thought he had broke it; and he foamed, and we took the Foam from his Mouth, and in it were Five Pins, the crookedeſt Rams-horneſt Things, that I believe no Man could do them ſo.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. That was one Night, did you ſee the ſame at any other Time?

Powel. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. Holt. But you did not ſee them come from him?

Powel. I took it from his Mouth, and they were ruſty.

L. C. J. Holt. How ſhould they be ruſty?

Mr. Serj. Jenner. The Stomach will make them ruſty. Call Madam Davenport. (She appeared.) Madam, pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account what you know concerning Richard Hathaway, when he came to your Houſe, and how he was managed there.

Mrs. Davenport. My Lord, one Saturday I accidentally went to Dr. Hamilton's to viſit his Wife, and I ſaw with the Doctor this Fellow's Maſter ſtanding there; and I perceived he was come to deſire the Doctor to perform a Promiſe he had made to him formerly ——

L. C. J. Holt. Was this before the Tryal, or after?

Mrs. Davenport. It was after the Tryal. I came accidentally to the Doctor's, and ſaw the Fellow's Maſter with the Doctor.

L. C. J. Holt. Was the Fellow there himſelf?

Mrs. Davenport. No, my Lord, I never ſaw him there. But ſtanding there, I perceived him expecting the Doctor to make good a Promiſe he had made him about this Fellow. I found the Doctor demurr'd upon it, not knowing where to put him. At laſt ſays he to me, Mrs. Davenport, will you let me have a Garret in your Houſe? Doctor, ſays I, you ſhall have my whole Houſe at your Service, if you have occaſion for it: I thought nothing of this Fellow, till the Doctor told me it was for him. And the Doctor told me he ſhould come that Night. Says the Fellow's Maſter, I will not ſend a Bed, that the Doctor may be ſatisfied there is no Cheat. And the Doctor, to prevent any Cheat, deſired me to go and buy an old Bed. So I went and got a Bed in Long-Lane; and at Night he was brought by his Maſter and ſome of his Neighbours. And truly I was ſurprized when I ſaw him, he ſeemed very weak.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. What did you do with him?

Mrs. Davenport. They ſaid he had Fits, and I found I muſt take other Meaſures with him than I thought of. His Maſter deſired he might be ſearch'd; and my Son and Two Men more ſearch'd him. So he went to Bed, and was watch'd with that Night, and in the Morning he was ſtruck blind.

L. C. J. Holt. At your Houſe?

Mrs. Davenport. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did you appoint any Perſons to watch with him?

Mrs. Davenport. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did you watch with him your ſelf?

Mrs. Davenport. Yes, ſeveral Times.

L. C. J. Holt. How long at a Time did you watch with him?

Mrs. Davenport. But one Night at a Time my ſelf.

L. C. J. Holt. When you did watch with him, did you watch the whole Night?

Mrs. Davenport. Yes, ſeveral Nights; and this Gentlewoman or my ſelf took care of him always.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. What did he eat or drink while he was there?

Mrs. Davenport. Nothing. As for his Faſting, the Doctor gave me a great Charge, and ſaid he knew I would do it.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. All the Time you watch'd with him, you ſay he did neither Eat nor Drink.

L. C. J. Holt. How many Nights did you watch with him in the Seventeen?

Mrs. Davenport. But Two.

L. C. J. Holt. How many Days?

Mrs. Davenport. Every Day.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you watch with him every Day your ſelf?

Mrs. Davenport. Either my ſelf, or this Woman, or the Servant, or my Son Davenport. He is now gone to Sea. My Lord, I do not tell you I kept him in the Garret all this time.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. When you left him, who relieved you?

Mrs. Davenport. This Gentlewoman, or my Servant.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. What is that Gentlewoman's Name?

Mrs. Walker. Walker.

She was Sworn.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Mrs. Walker, Did you watch with him in this Place?

Mrs. Walker. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did he Eat or Drink while he was there?

Mrs. Walker. He did neither Eat nor Drink.

Mr. Coniers. How often was it that you watched with him?

Mrs. Walker. I cannot tell whether one or two Nights.

L. C. J. Holt. I would be ſatisfied in ſome Things. Is that Davenport you ſpeak off your Son?

Mrs. Davenport. Yes, my Lord. He is now gone to Sea.

L. C. J. Holt. How long has he been gone to Sea?

Mrs. Davenport. But a Week.

Mrs. Dorman Sworn.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Mrs. Dorman, Did you watch with this Man at Mrs. Davenport's?

Mrs. Dorman. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Within the 17 Days that he was there, did he Eat or Drink?

Mrs. Dormer. No.

Mr. Phipps. How many Nights or Days did you watch with him?

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Give an account of the Time when you watch'd with him, and no longer.

Mrs. Dorman. Two Nights, and every Day.

L. C. J. Holt. He might have Eat, and you not ſee him, might he not?

Mrs. Dorman. But the time I ſaw him, he did neither Eat nor Drink. And he made Water, and I believe five times more came from him than he took.

Mrs. Dean Sworn.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Mrs. Dean, Do you know Richard Hathaway?

Mrs. Dean. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How long have you known him?

Mrs. Dean. Not till he was at Madam Davenport's.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Was you there all the Seventeen Days?

Mrs. Dean. Not all the Time. I ſate up with him two Nights.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Who ſate up with you?

Mrs. Dean. Madam Davenport.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. While you were there, did he Eat or Drink?

Mrs. Dean. No.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Call Dr. Hamilton. (He was Sworn.) Doctor, pray give an Account of what you know concerning this Richard Hathaway.

Dr. Hamilton. My Lord, I have very little to ſay upon my own Perſonal Knowledge. But happening to be at Sir Thomas Lane's when he was brought before him, I heard what paſt, and I deſired Sir Thomas to let me try his Throat; and I did try it, and found nothing amiſs. But at laſt I found there was nothing to be depended upon, for there are abundance of Legerdemain Tricks, therefore his vomiting Pins, and other Actions were not to be truſted to; and therefore there was nothing to be depended on but his Faſting; and if you would diſcover whether he be an Impoſtor or no, he muſt be lock'd up in a Room for a Fortnight, and watch'd. And then I ſaid to the Fellow's Maſter, for my Curioſity, if you pleaſe, I will lock him up in a Room a Fortnight, and I ſhall find out whether he counterfeits or no. And he came to me afterwards, and ſaid, Dr. you promiſed you would make this Tryal of my Man. I did ſo, ſays I, and if I can I will. I had Thoughts of putting him in the Garret; but then I conſidered, if I ſhould put him in the Garret by himſelf, he might dye. But at the ſame time Mrs. Davenport happen'd to come to my Houſe; and I ſaid to her, I dare truſt you with an Experiment, for I believe he is an Impoſtor; and I deſired her to let me have her Garret to put him in, and ſhe conſented. And I deſired her either to go her ſelf, or ſend to Long-Lane, and buy Things for him; and that ſhe ſhould ſtrip him, and ſee that nothing may be about him to hide Bread or any Thing elſe in; and, ſaid I, let none come to him, and let one or two of your Family ſit up with him every Night. And ſhe promiſed me ſhe would. Accordingly ſhe bought a Bed for him, and other Things, and he was ſent to her; and the next Day they ſent me Word that he had ſtrange kind of Motions; but I ſaid, there is nothing to be depended on as to theſe Things; but I would fain know whether he faſts or no. I have heard of many that have faſted many Weeks, but they have taken Water, or ſome ſuch Thing, which, though they are very weak Things, yet may keep one Alive; but none can live without taking ſomething; and if he ſhould live to the End of the 17 Days without Eating or Drinking any Thing, I ſhould have ſomething to take hold of. They told me----

Mr. Serj. Jenner. That is no Matter what they told you. Did you ſee him afterwards?

Dr. Hamilton. I was mightily concerned for the poor Creature when I ſaw him at Sir Thomas Lane's; and I was willing to try him.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did you ſee him after that?

Dr. Hamilton. Yes, when he was blind for ſeveral Days. And I ſent to Dr. Martin, and deſired the Favour of him to call upon me; and I ſaid ----.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did you ſee him after he had been at Madam Davenport's?

Dr. Hamilton. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did you ſee him while he was there?

Dr. Hamilton. Yes. The Thing that I depended upon was purely his Faſting. I ſaw him my ſelf ſeveral times, and I could not believe but that he had eat, becauſe his Pulſe were ſtrong; that was one Reaſon that I thought he muſt eat.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did you ſee him the laſt Day of the Fortnight?

Dr. Hamilton. I was juſt going to Dinner when Dr. Martin came to me; and I ſaid to him, Dr. Martin,

Martin, let us try every Thing: Will you go along with me to him? Says he, if I go he will fall in a Paſſion. But after I had dined I went, and enquired about him, and they told me he had ſtrange Motions.

Mr. Broderick. You ſay you reject every Thing except that of his Faſting.

Dr. Hamilton. Yes.

L. C. J. Holt. Doctor, Do you think it is poſſible in Nature for a Man to faſt a Fortnight?

Dr. Hamilton. I think not, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Can all the Devils in Hell help a Man to faſt ſo long?

Dr. Hamilton. No, my Lord, I think not; and that made me to ſuſpect him.

Mr. Phipps. Do you think the Pulſe of a Man can be ſtrong when he has faſted Eight Days?

Dr. Hamilton. I think not.

Sir Thomas Lane Called and Sworn.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Sir Thomas, be pleaſed to tell my Lord and the Jury what you know of this Man.

Sir Tho. Lane. It was above a Twelve-month ago that his Maſter brought a Woman before me, upon ſuſpicion that ſhe was a Witch, and that ſhe had bewitched his Man: but there having been a Tryal I ſhall wave that. I enquired what kind of Life he had lived; and his Maſter ſaid he had behaved himſelf very civilly, and gave him a very good Character. He told me how grievouſly he had been afflicted, and that he had been Six or Seven Months in the Hoſpital, and had faſted a great while, above Eight Weeks, and had voided and vomited Pins; and two Witneſſes ſwore to Chains of Hundreds of Pins that came from him in his Excrements. And it ſeems they had a fancy that ſcratching Sarah Morduck would give him Relief, and they were earneſt with me that I would command this Woman to be ſcratch'd; and I appeal to them, whether I did not refuſe it. I ſaid, if I ſhould order this, it would be an Aſſault; but if ſhe will conſent, you may do it. Says ſhe, If I may be ſecured for the future, I will let him. Says I, if you do it, do it in your own Way: There are ſeveral here that know it was ſo. And ſhe did give her Conſent; and he ſcratched her, and I pull'd away her Arm from him. The Fellow had Bread and Cheeſe brought him; and as ſoon as he had ſcratch'd this Woman, he took the Bread and Cheeſe and eat prodigiouſly; and he had about a Quart of Drink, and he drank it up at a Gulp. I ask'd Mrs. Morduck, and her Friends, whether they did ever know that this Fellow had got any Money by theſe Tricks? No, they could not tell of any; ſo that there appeared to be neither Profit nor Revenge in the Caſe; and I thought he could not be ſuch a Fool to pretend all this for no End, and run the hazard of being whipp'd.

L. C. J. Holt. The Queſtion is not whether he ſhall be puniſhed for a Fool, but whether he be a Knave; whatever Puniſhment he may ſuffer, if convicted, does not belong to you to determine.

Sir Thomas Lane. I ſent for Mr. Martin, and I ſent for him, and I ſent for the Woman, and I examined them both; and Mr. Martin told me he ſuſpected the Fellow might be an Impoſtor, for he had got a Woman to be ſcratch'd for Sarah Morduck. And he ask'd the Woman that Mr. Martyn had hired, and ſhe ſaid in her Opinion he could ſee no more than a Poſt.

L. C. J. Holt. Call Johnſon again. This Man ſcratch'd you. When he had done it, did you ſee him afterwards?

Mrs. Johnſon. Yes.

L. C. J. Holt. Were his Eyes open?

Mrs. Johnſon. Yes.

L. C. J. Holt. But could he ſee?

Mrs. Johnſon. No. When he ſcratch'd me they were ſhut.

L. C. J. Holt. Every Body can ſee when their Eyes are open.

Sir Thomas Lane. This Woman ſaid, ſhe believed he could neither ſee nor hear, any more than a Poſt.

Mr. Martin. It was after I was gone, I heard nothing of it.

Sir Thomas Lane. I ſent for him after the Examination; all the Evidence that was before was of his Faſting.

L. C. J. Holt. Anne Eaton, How long did you watch with him?

Anne Eaton. Nine Weeks.

L. C. J. Holt. Was he dumb and blind ſo long?

Anne Eaton. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. How long did he faſt?

Anne Eaton. Thirteen Weeks in all.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did you watch with him all the Time?

Anne Eaton. Sometimes by Night, but not by Day.

Heycock Sworn.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. What do you know of this Man?

Heycock. I ſaw this Man in a very dreadful Condition ſince the laſt Aſſizes.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Where did you ſee him?

Heycock. At Mr. Welling's. I ſaw him Blind and Dumb, and his Eyes were ready to ſtart out of his Head.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How long ſince was it that you ſaw him thus?

Heycock. I ſaw him ſeveral times in that Condition. And I was once in Company, when there were Four or Five to hold him in his Bed, whereas at another time he had not half the Strength of a Man.

L. C. J. Holt. When was this?

Heycock. Since the Aſſizes.

Spurling Sworn.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. What did you ſee of this Perſon?

Spurling. I ſaw him at Madam Davenport's.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. How often did you ſee him?

Spurling. Three Times.

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Did you watch with him there?

Spurling. I went to ſee him, becauſe I heard he was under a ſupernatural Power.

L. C. J. Holt. What do you think that was, was it an Infernal Power?

Spurling. A Diabolical Spirit.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you ever hear the Power of a Diabolical Spirit deſcribed?

Spurling. But I ſuppoſe thoſe that are under Witchcraft are under ſuch a Spirit.

L. C. J. Holt. But can a Diabolical Spirit enable a Man to faſt Forty Days?

Spurling. I can't tell that. I was acquainted with one that was under a ſupernatural Power, that was in ſuch a Condition as this Man was.

L. C. J. Holt. Did he faſt too?

Spurling. I know not that.

L. C. J. Holt. I never heard that the Devil ever made ſuch a bold Attempt.

Spurling. That Perſon, the Devil, acted him ſo ſubtilly, that it was impoſſible to proſecute him.

L. C. J. Holt. How could you know that?

Spurling. Becauſe when his Eyes were ſhut, he could tell any Man's Name that was coming up.

L. C. J. Holt. Was not he very well pleaſed to be bewitch'd?

Spurling. No, he was actually poſſeſs'd.

L. C. J. Holt. Was he ſick, or out of Order?

Spurling. No, my Lord; but he had crooked Pins came from him.

L. C. J. Holt. Did he accuſe any body of bewitching him?

Spurling. Yes.

L. C. J. Holt. What is become of that Perſon he accuſed?

Spurling. He accuſed ſeveral.

L. C. J. Holt. How many did he accuſe?

Spurling. Five Women; eſpecially one.

L. C. J. Holt. Where is that Woman?

Spurling. She is deceaſed.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard a very long and tedious Evidence. The Information is againſt this Richard Hathaway, for that he with an evil Deſign to take away the Life of Sarah Morduck, pretended to be bewitch'd, and to have faſted for a conſiderable Time, being not able to take any Suſtenance for divers Days; nay, for ſeveral Weeks, which he pretended to faſt. And his faſting was imputed to this Woman's bewitching him; that he did pretend to faſt a conſiderable Time; that he did procure this Woman to be committed for being a Witch; that ſhe was Indicted, Tried and Acquitted, is plainly proved to you, without all manner of Queſtion. The only Queſtion that you are now to try, is, whether this Man did do this by reaſon of any Diſability of his Mind, or Deluſion that was upon him; or did counterfeit (what was the Reaſon to induce him to counterfeit, does not appear; whether to get Money, or what elſe, will not be material); but if this Man was under a Delirium of his Mind, and did fancy himſelf to be bewitch'd, then there will be no Reaſon to convict him.

Now it is urged, that he did this maliciouſly, and with a Deſign to take away the Woman's Life. Firſt they tell you, that this Man had been a Servant to one Welling a Blackſmith: He came to him about Four or Five Years ago; then he had Fits, and was put into the Hoſpital; and being there, he pretends he could not eat. After that, he was dumb; and after that, he began to be blind; and being blind and dumb, and faſting, theſe were look'd upon to be the Three Tokens that he was bewitch'd. Then the Man had a Fancy that he was bewitch'd by this Woman, but for what Reaſons does not appear; but his Fancy appear'd to be very ſtrong, that ſhe brought him into theſe Miſchiefs. Therefore he muſt go and ſcratch her; which he did, and preſently he could ſee and eat. This was look'd on as very ſtrange, and People concluded that this Woman was the Cauſe of theſe Maladies that were upon this Man. It ſeems that this Scratching was thought to be ſo effectual, that he was well for about ſix Weeks; after which he appeared to be ill again, and his Sight and his Stomach were gone again, and then it was propoſed he ſhould ſcratch her again. It ſeems that before that, Dr. Martin was deſired to come to him, and pray with him, and he did; and to try whether he was ſenſible or not, he took him by the Hand, and by the Signs he made, found he was ſenſible; and therefore he did pity his Condition, but could not tell what to make of it. But Welling his Maſter told the Doctor he had received great Benefit by ſcratching the Woman before; and thereupon deſired ſhe might be ſcratch'd again. But he ſuſpecting this might be a mere Counterfeit, and that it could not have that Effect, he thereupon gets the Woman ſeemingly to conſent to be ſcratch'd, being reſolved to try whether this was an Impoſture or no. And Hathaway pretending himſelf to be blind, gave him an Opportunity to make that Experiment; for he procured another Woman to repreſent Sarah Morduck, and ſhe conſented to be ſcratch'd in her ſtead; Hathaway was laid up in a Bed, and Sarah Morduck was in the Room, and ſpake to him. It was obſerved, when this other Woman, whoſe Name was Johnſon, was brought to repreſent this Morduck to Hathaway, ſhe put her Hand into his, and then he examin'd it, and her Wriſt, and her Arm.; ſo it ſeems he had ſome Apprehenſions of a Deſign to impoſe upon him. And then he proceeds to ſcratch that other Woman, who takes it patiently, till the Blood was ready to come; and then ſhe was ſuddenly taken away; and ſome of the Company ſaid the Blood is come, and preſently his Eyes opened, and he laid hold on Sarah Morduck, and ſeizes her, and did not only appear to ſee, but to ſpeak. This is proved to you by other Evidence beſides Dr. Martin. Upon this, ſays Dr. Martin, you are miſtaken; you have deceived the World, you have not ſcratch'd Sarah Morduck, but another Woman. When he underſtood that, he was very much concern'd, and ſeemed to begin to be ill again; and Welling ſaid, he will not be well till he had ſcratch'd the right Woman; ſo to Appearance he fell ill again. You have heard how the Matter had been carry'd on afterwards; for many looked on this Blindneſs and Faſting as an errant Impoſture. Welling and his Wife complained to Dr. Martin, ſaying, you have undone us all, and our Family too. What ſhould be the Meaning of that? What, becauſe he had diſcovered a Cheat, therefore they were undone. It ſeemed likely, that if it were a Cheat, and Welling not conſcious to himſelf of carrying it on, he need not have been concern'd at it. But they reſt not here, the Woman, Sarah Morduck, muſt be ſcratched again; which was perform'd with Violence, againſt her Conſent; and the Woman being purſued by the Rabble, not able to live quietly in Southwark, was forced to go on the other ſide of the Water, and take a Lodging there for her Security; where ſhe was again purſued, and aſſaulted by Hathaway and others, in a riotous manner, in order to ſcratch her again; and tho' Complaint on her behalf was made of this Violence to Sir Thomas Lane, he did not think fit to give her any Relief, being (as it ſeems upon ſome Evidence) poſſeſs'd with an Opinion that there might be ſome Grounds for purſuing this Woman in that manner. She was carried before him, and he being informed that this Fellow could not eat nor drink, thereupon it was thought convenient by Sir Thomas, in order to make a full Diſcovery, that ſhe ſhould be ſcratched again; and accordingly ſhe was perſwaded to ſubmit to be ſcratched, and preſently after the Scratching, Hathaway did eat, and drank very greedily, and thereupon this Woman was committed to Priſon. This was thought a great Evidence of this Man's being bewitched by this Woman, Sarah Morduck. What Rule they have for it either in Philoſophy or Divinity, I cannot tell. There was a Tryal, and the Woman was acquitted, and upon full Evidence. He then pretended to have faſted for a long Time. That of our Saviour's Faſting Forty Days, is mention'd in Scripture as miraculous, and an Effect of Divine Power, being one Evidence of the Truth of the Chriſtian Religion. Who can imagine, that without ſuch Aſſiſtance, a Man can faſt Forty Days, or above, and yet continue in Health? It is not within the Compaſs of my Underſtanding to conceive it; I muſt leave you to conſult your own, and to conſider with your ſelves, whether you have any Evidence to induce you to believe it to be in the Power of all the Witches in the World, or all the Devils in Hell, to enable a Man to faſt beyond the uſual Time that Nature will allow; they cannot invert the Order of Nature: And if the Thing be impoſſible, and he endeavour all this while to make the World believe he has faſted ſo long a Time, it is moſt evident he is a Cheat; for he muſt contrive to have ſome Victuals ſome way or other ſecretly conveyed to him; of which the Impoſſibility of his being able to faſt ſo long is a Demonſtration. But notwithſtanding this Tryal, and that this Woman was acquitted, yet this Matter muſt be carried on ſtill. He was bailed out, and then returns to his Fits again; and tho' then he was not blind, or pretended to be ſo, yet he ſeemed to faſt, and to be dumb again for a long Time. This made a great Hubbub about the Town, and the People clamour'd that the Man had Injuſtice done him in the Trial at the Aſſizes; and Reports were ſpread, that the Woman was acquitted by Favour or Corruption both of Judge and Jury. Upon this Account, the Woman was purſued by a Rabble, and came to be in imminent Danger of her Life. Wherefore it was thought highly neceſſary that the Proſecution againſt this Man, and others concern'd with him, ſhould be ſpeedy; and thereupon he was apprehended, and bound to appear in the King's Bench, and there he pretended ſtill to be dumb. His Bail deliver'd him up, and he was ſent to the Marſhalſea. There he lay without eating or ſpeaking for ſome ſhort time, till it was conſider'd that if he was under any real Affliction, it was proper he ſhould be under the Care of ſome proper Perſon: Therefore he was put to the Houſe of Mr. Kenſey a Chyrurgeon in Fetter-Lane, who was order'd to take care of him, and uſe him well; alſo to watch him, and endeavour to make a Diſcovery of the Truth of his Condition. He was deliver'd into his Hands the Firſt of November laſt. The People of the Houſe took care of him, and he faſted from Saturday till Monday; and Mr. Kenſey aſk'd him how many Weeks he had faſted, he counted on his Fingers Twelve: But Mr. Kenſey thought he did not deal truly, but had a mind to impoſe upon the World, and therefore he locks him up. He eat nothing all Saturday and Sunday; but Mr. Kenſey found he had made Water, for he diſcover'd the Rug or Counterpane of the Bed to be wet; and that it appear'd to come from the Teſter of the Bed: He made Water it ſeems in an old Box, and ſet it over the Bed. Drink was offered him, but he refuſed it. After this Mr. Kenſey makes uſe of this Stratagem: He pretends to quarrel with his Maid, and gives her reproachful Language, in the Hearing of Hathaway; calling her Hypocrite, like unto him. At which the Maid ſeemed to be provoked; and out of Revenge, to prevent her Maſter's Deſign in making a Diſcovery, ſhe takes an Opportunity and ſays to him, Take heed of my Maſter, he will betray you. And ſhe had inſinuated her ſelf ſo far into him, that he began to truſt her. She gave him on the Monday a Glaſs of Brandy, which he drank, and a Piece of Pudding, which he received and put into his Pocket; and afterwards a Toaſt and Beer, which he eat and drank, and afterwards he entirely truſted this Woman. And Day by Day he did eat plentifully for ſeveral Days together in her Preſence, from Tueſday to Friday Se'ennight following, thinking Mr. Kenſey did not ſee him; but he being in a ſecret Place, undiſcover'd by Hathaway, did ſee him eat and drink ſeveral Days; ſometimes he drank ſo much, that he was perfectly drunk; and all this while he pretended to faſt, tho' divers others beſides Mr. Kenſey and the Maid were Witneſſes to his eating and drinking. Then it was thought to be time to diſcover this to the World; and he was told plainly by Mr. Kenſey, that he was diſcover'd, and if he would tell the Truth, he ſhould be pardon'd, ſeeing he could carry it on no longer. Now it is plain this Man had counterfeited during the Time he was at Mr. Kenſey's; tho' that particular Time be not laid in the Information, yet it is a Continuance of that Time which is laid therein. And if he was an Impoſtor by pretending to have faſted while he was at Mr. Kenſey's Houſe, I leave you to conſider whether he was not ſo all the while before. You hear what Management there has been, how he was at Welling's Home, how Pins were pretended to come from him, how they were made uſe of, and Charms ſewed to him. You hear how ſome time ago one Mr. Bateman came to him, hearing at the Beginning of this Buſineſs, he vomited Pins: He ſaw ſome on the Ground; when he vomited a conſiderable Number, they were linked up together; for it is hard to manage ſo many looſe Pins; but when they are linked together, they are the eaſier to manage in the Mouth. Here he pretended to vomit Pins, and would be ſtill putting his Hands to his Pocket, and Mr. Bateman fancied he pulled them out from thence. Therefore he took the Chamber-pot, and would not let his Hands come near it; then he vomited no Pins there; and he ſearch'd his Pockets, and there were great Quantities of Pins found therein; neither did he at any time ſeem to vomit any Pins, until he had drank a Draught of Ale. But notwithſtanding all this, there are People that come and tell you that he was ſick; he was diſturb'd, and had theſe Fits. One Woman tells you ſhe has watched with him ſeveral times; ſometimes by Night: Another Woman tells you that ſhe watched with him, when the other did not, and ſometimes by Day; and that he did not eat, but was ſick, and out of Order. And another tells you, he ſaw him; that he was in great Diſorder, threw himſelf backward and forward, and would turn his Face round towards his Back; and that he was blind, tho' his Eyes were open. But how could he tell that he was blind? Said he, when I pulled him by his Eye-lids, his Eyes did not ſtir; and therefore he infers, that he was blind. And then they give you an Account that he was at the Hoſpital Five Months; and that he was weak, and went upon his Ankles, and had Quickſilver given him; and that he lay ſeven or eight Days, and did not eat; but then there was no Apprehenſion of Witchcraft. And one Mr. Smith an Apothecary, a Witneſs, called on his part, and a Neighbour, ſaid, he knew him four or five Years ago; and that Hathaway was then with his Maſter, and had Fits, and would fall down, and ſeem to be dead; whether he was really ſick, or counterfeited, he cannot tell; he applied his Cupping-glaſſes to him, and preſently brought him to himſelf. This is one of his own Witneſſes. And then there is Mrs. Willoughby; ſhe ſaw him in his Maſter's Houſe, and ſhe ſaid his Breath made a Noiſe like the Barking of a Dog, and ſhe believed he was bewitched, for ſhe herſelf had been bewitched, and was made to fly, and ſhe fancies he was bewitched becauſe of his breathing in that Manner. And then they tell you what care was taken of him, and he was put into an empty Houſe about Nine or Ten Days, and one Man watch'd with him by Day, and another by Night, and how they came to do that; and they ſwear they never ſaw him eat or drink all that Time; but they ſay he did ſeveral Times vomit Pins in that Time; but it ſeems he was put there merely out of Charity, the Pariſh would not be charged with him: Then they tell you there were People appointed to watch with him, there were Two Chamber-pots; and in one there were Excrements, and there were Pins in it, and Hair, and a Piece of a Nail, but after he ſat on the Second Pot, there was nothing found therein; but they conclude him bewitched. Then there are others that ſay he lay as dead, and that they took out of his Mouth ſeveral Pins, and then you have an Account after the Tryal, what happened at Mrs. Davenport's, where he was ſent by Dr. Hamilton to be tryed whether he was an Impoſtor or not. She ſays ſhe watched with him herſelf ſometimes, another Woman at other Times, and another at other Times, and that they could never perceive that he eat any Thing. But there is one Mr. Davenport that was with him ſome other Times, but he is gone to Sea, and could not appear. Then comes in at laſt Dr. Hamilton, and he tells you he was by, when this Matter was brought before Sir Thomas Lane, and he could not tell what to think of his Faſting, but as to his Fits and the Pins, he ſays thoſe may be eaſily conterfeited by Legerdemain Tricks, but, ſays he, faſting for ſo long as ſome People did believe he did, is more than Nature can bear; no body can think the Devil has ſuch a Power to enable a Man to undergo it. Tricks the Devil may play, but not work a Miracle, it is not to be thought that God ſhould let him looſe ſo far. This is the Sum of the Matter, his pretending to be dumb and blind, and to faſt, and to be reſtored to his Speech, his Sight, and Stomach, by ſcratching this Woman, is fully proved. You are to conſider whether he did labour under theſe Infirmities, or counterfeited them, and whether ſcratching and drawing Blood of the old Woman, could be effectual to cure him of them, if they had been real? If not, then it is a ſtrong Argument that theſe Infirmities were counterfeited. His ſcratching and drawing Blood of a ſtrange Woman, inſtead of Sarah Morduck, did ſeem to avail him, as much as if he had ſcratch'd her, until he underſtood he was impoſed upon; then he ſeemed to relapſe to his former Condition. You will remember what paſſed at Mr. Kenſey's, and the Manner of vomiting of Pins as was pretended. You are to conſider whether this Man was non compos mentis, or under a Deluſion; therefore I ſhall ſpare the troubling you with more Words, but leave it wholly to you. If you do believe, upon the whole Matter, that this Man has impoſed upon the Magiſtrate and on the World, or endeavoured by counterfeiting theſe Infirmities, to perſwade People to believe that this Woman was a Witch, and had bewitched him, then there is all the Reaſon that can be, to find him Guilty. But if you believe he did not counterfeit, or that he was non compos mentis, or under any kind of Deluſions, you muſt acquit him.

and

The Jury conſulted, and without going from the Bar, brought him in Guilty.

A Short Account of the Tryal held at Surrey Aſſizes, in the Borough of Southwark, March 26. 1702.

In an Information, againſt Richard Hathaway, Thomas Wellyn and Elizabeth his Wife, and Elizabeth Willoughby, Wife of Walter Willoughby, upon an Information for a Riot and Aſſault, &c.

THE Information ſets forth, that the Defendants, with divers other Perſons, the 25th of September, in the Twelfth Year of King William, at Southwark, in a Riotous and unlawful manner aſſembled themſelves, and made a great Affray and Riot; and upon one Sarah Morduck, the Wife of Edward Morduck, being an honeſt Woman, and not a Witch, nor ever uſing Witchcraft, Inchantment, Charm or Sorcery, did make an Aſſault, and under a wicked Colour, againſt the Law, to try whether the ſaid Sarah was then a Witch (the Defendant Hathaway then falſly and malicioufly affirming himſelf to be bewitched by her the ſaid Sarah, though in truth he was never bewitched, and well knew himſelf not to be ſo), her the ſaid Sarah did then, and there Scratch, Wound, &c. againſt the Peace, &c.

The Information further ſets forth, That the ſaid Defendants, the 11th of February, in the Twelfth Year of King William, at Southwark aforeſaid, aſſembling themſelves together riotouſly and unlawfully, did then and there make a great Affray and Riot, and alſo Aſſaulted the ſaid Sarah, and Beat, Scratch'd, and Wounded her, in Contempt of the King, and againſt the Peace, &c.

The Information further ſets forth, That the ſaid Defendants, the ſaid 11th of February, did Aſſault the ſaid Sarah, and wounded her the ſaid Sarah, againſt the Peace, &c.

The Defendants pleaded Not Guilty, and Iſſue was taken thereupon. The Council for the King opened the Caſe to this Effect: That the Defendants Caſe was the ſame in the other Information. Hathaway pretended himſelf bewitch'd, and the Contrivance was carryed on by the other Defendants and divers others; but whether for the hopes of getting Money by it, or out of Malice to take away the poor Woman's Life, or what the Deſign was, was was not then known; but it was certain that ſeveral Riots and Aſſemblies were made, and great Numbers of People came together in a Body at ſeveral times to Morduck's Houſe, and in a violent manner enter'd the ſame, and by Force took her out and carried her away to the Defendant Wellyn's Houſe, where the Defendant Hathaway ſcratched her; and the other Defendants alſo in a very barbarous manner beat her, pulled out her Teeth, tore her Face, Hair and Cloaths, threw her on the Ground, ſtamp'd upon her Belly, and threw her into the Street, where ſhe lay as Murdered, until taken into a Neighbour's Houſe; which the Defendants and others in a riotous manner beſet, and threatned to pull it down, unleſs Morduck (the pretended Witch) was again delivered to them. Theſe Riots and Aſſaults happened to be encouraged by an Accident, which fell out as Morduck was going through Newgate-market, where the People crying out, A Witch, the Rabble ſeized her, and threatned to throw her into a Horſe-Pond; that one of theſe Rioters being taken away, was carry'd before a Magiſtrate in the City, but he was ſo far from taking notice thereof, that he declared that there was Cauſe enough for it; and being deſired to ask the Perſon's Name, refuſed it; but the ſame Magiſtrate afterwards ordered the Defendant Hathaway to ſcratch Morduck in his Preſence, where were alſo preſent ſome of the Aldermen of London. Theſe Matters being acted by Publick Authority, gave the Licentious Mob ſuch a Confidence, that even after the Woman was Tryed and Acquitted, and the Defendant Hathaway committed for an Impoſtor, yet he with the other Defendants, did again in a riotous manner Aſſault, Scratch, and Wound the ſaid Morduck, and purſued her after a cruel manner from Day to Day, till they were taken into Cuſtody, in order to be puniſhed for the ſame. For which ſeveral barbarous Facts the Defendants were then to be Tryed.

Then the Council for the King called their Evidence to prove the ſeveral Branches of the Information.

Sarah Morduck being called and Sworn, depoſed to this Effect: That in September laſt Richard Hathaway came to this Informant in Surry, as ſhe was opening her Window, and being behind ſcratch'd her Face in a very cruel manner, and forced out one of her Teeth, and carried away her Cloaths. And upon the 11th of February laſt, Thomas Osborn, Thomas Hatton, with Four other Perſons unknown, all in Diſguiſe, came to this Informant's Houſe in Surry, and forced her out of her Houſe, and carried her to the Houſe of Thomas Wellyn, who is Maſter to the ſaid Richard Hathaway; and there the ſaid Hathaway, by the Encouragement of the ſaid Osborn and Hatton, and the reſt of the Company, did again ſcratch this Informant in a moſt barbarous manner; and afterwards Elizabeth, Wife to the ſaid Thomas Wellyn, fell upon her and ſcratch'd her in a moſt cruel manner; and tore her Face, and tore off her Head-cloaths and Hair; and then the ſaid Thomas Wellyn gave this Informant two or three Kicks on her Belly, and threw her on the Ground and ſtampt upon her, and ſo much bruiſed her that ſhe was forced to keep her Bed for about a Fortnight. And this Informant further depoſeth, That in September laſt one Elizabeth Willoughby, the Wife of Walter Willoughby, came to this Informant's Houſe in Surry, and brought a great many Perſons unknown to this Informant with her; and the ſaid Elizabeth gave this Informant ſeveral Blows with her Fiſt, and would have pulled her out of her Houſe, for him the aforeſaid Richard Hathaway to have ſcratch'd her, he ſtanding at a Corner hard by; but was prevented by Mrs. Sarah Hall. And further ſaith, That in the Month of September laſt ſhe having occaſion to go into Newgate-market, a Boy, his Name is John Hopkins, called out, ſaying, There goes the Old Witch; whereupon a great Company of People in a riotous manner, flock'd about her, and threatned to throw her into a Horſe-Pond; and this Informant being got into an Ale-houſe by the Aſſiſtance of ſome Women, avoided the Fury of the Rabble, otherwiſe ſhe had been Murdered, as ſhe verily believes; and afterwards Mr. Burrel her Landlord, with others his Aſſiſtants came and conveyed her home.

Sarah Hall was the next Witneſs, who ſaid, That in September 1700, about 8 in the Forenoon, the Defendant Willoughby came with Hathaway and others, pretending to buy Fruit of Morduck, and told Morduck ſhe came to have her out, that Hathaway might ſcratch her; and Willoughby ſtruck Morduck ſeveral Blows, and forced her out of Doors, before Hall could come to her Aſſiſtance, who with difficulty got Morduck into her Houſe again; upon which the Defendants Willoughby and Hathaway, and others, beſet her Houſe, and threatned to pull it down, unleſs they had Morduck delivered to them; but Hall calling up her Husband, who was a-Bed, the Perſon went away.

Robert Adams, and John Bowrer, both Watermen, declared, That plying for their Fare at Maſon's Stairs, they ſaw the Defendant Hathaway come behind Morduck as ſhe was opening her Window, and took her about the Neck with one Arm, and pulled her almoſt to the Ground, and ſcratch'd her Face in ſeveral Places till the Blood came, and tore her Mouth, and tore her Hood and Head-cloaths from her Head; and being taken off, Morduck got into a Neighbour's Houſe, whom Hathaway would have purſued in at a Window, had not Adams ſtopt him.

To prove the Riot and Aſſault in February 1700.

Sarah Morduck declared, That the 11th of February, 1700. Thomas Osbourn, Thomas Hatton, with four others unknown, all diſguiſed, came to and forced her out of her Houſe, and carried her to the Houſe of the Defendant Wellyn, Hathaway's Maſter; where Hathaway, by the Encouragement of the Company, ſcratch'd her barbarouſly; and after that, Wellyn's Wife ſcratch'd her, and tore her Hair, and Face, and pulled off her Head-cloaths; then Wellyn kick'd her two or three Times on the Belly, and threw her on the Ground, and ſtamp'd on her, and bruiſed her ſo much, that ſhe was forced to keep her Bed for a Fortnight.

Mrs. Hall ſaid, That in February 1700. in the Evening, ſeveral Perſons unknown came to her Houſe, and forced Morduck from thence, and carried her to Wellyn's (as ſhe was told:) That about half an Hour after, Morduck was caſt into the Street, and being received into a Neighbour's Houſe, Hall went to her, and found her Face much torn, in a moſt barbarous Manner, and her Legs, Arms, and Body cruelly bruiſed and black.

Then the Council called Witneſſes to prove the Third Part of the Information.

Samuel Burrel being ſworn, depoſed, that Edmund Jones, in Company with Two more, came to his Houſe, and deſired to ſpeak with Morduck, who lodged there, who being called to Jones, he aſk'd her to go over the Water to be ſcratch'd by Hathaway, who declared he was bewitch'd by her; but ſhe refuſing to go, Jones ſaid, if ſhe walked London he would have her ſcratch'd; and further, that about Eaſter or Whitſon Week laſt, the ſaid Jones came to his Houſe with about Fourteen Strangers, among whom was Hathaway, and would have forced into Morduck's Chamber; but a Conſtable coming, they all but Jones diſpers'd, whom the Conſtable took, and carried before Sir Thomas Lane; but Sir Thomas would take no Notice of it.

Thomas Knowlton being ſworn, depoſed, That in Eaſter Week laſt, Jones and Hathaway, and ſeveral others, went into Burrel's Houſe, and aſked for Sarah Morduck, who was called down to them, when Burrel deſired them to go up Stairs into the common Drinking-room, and deſired Knowlton to ſee Morduck had no Harm done her. That ſoon after came in about fourteen Perſons, one of which ſaid, they came to give Hathaway Eaſe, and that they would do it before they went; upon which Morduck, at Knowlton's Deſire, retired into her Chamber.

Thomas Noon being ſworn, declared, That all the Time aforeſaid he ſaw Three or Four Perſons, who were of Jones's Company, endeavouring to get into Morduck's Chamber; and upon Noon's aſking them their Buſineſs, they cry'd they would ſpeak with Morduck, but upon his threatning them they went into the Room below Stairs from whence they came.

Henry Armſtrong declared, That in September was Twelve-month he ſaw a great Number of People following Morduck, calling her Witch; and going home afterwards, he ſaw a Crowd of People at an Alehouſe Door, near St. Paul's Churchyard, who declared Morduck a Witch; and that he aſſiſted Burrell in ſecuring Morduck from the Rabble.

James Hearne being called, depoſed, that in Eaſter or Whitſon Week laſt, one Jones was apprehended for a Riot by him and others committed in Burrell's Houſe, and carried before Sir Thomas Lane, who diſcharged Jones, ſaying there was Cauſe enough for the Riot; and tho' often intreated by Hearne, yet Sir Thomas refuſed to let him know Jones's Name. And the ſaid Hearne further declared, That the Day after Jones was carried before Sir Thomas, he and Burrell, by Sir Thomas's Directions, carried Morduck before him, where were preſent Sir Owen Buckingham and Dr. Hamilton, and the Defendant Hathaway. That Sir Thomas would have had Morduck ſcratch'd by Hathaway, which ſhe refuſed, unleſs ſhe might be at Peace for the future: And after Dr. Hamilton had given Hathaway ſome Beer, Sir Thomas would have had Morduck ſcratch'd; but the Doctor ſaid, Let her alone a little, to ſee what Effect the Drink would have on Hathaway; and ſaid, if ſhe was ſcratch'd it would be ſaid, that the ſcratching, and not the Drink, made the Alteration. And when Sir Thomas had heard ſome more Diſcourſe of Hathaway's vomiting Pins, &c. Sir Thomas ſaid again, let her be ſcratch'd; but Hearne oppoſed it, ſaying, ſhe had been too much abuſed already; notwithſtanding which, Sir Thomas ordered Hathaway to ſcratch her, and ordered her to be ſtript and ſearch'd by ſome Women in his own Houſe. That Hearne ſeeing Sir Thomas's Reſolution, bid him ſatisfy himſelf. After which Sir Thomas committed Morduck to Woodſtreet-Compter, and refuſed 500 l. Bail for her Appearance: But upon Application made to him by Dr. Barton and Dr. Martyn, Sir Thomas accepted Hearne's and his Brother's Bail for Morduck.

The Witneſſes for the Defendants being called and heard, and the Right Honourable Lord Chief Juſtice Holt having ſpoken to the Jury, they withdrew, and ſoon after brought them all in Guilty.

The Arraignment and Confeſſion of JAMES BOUCHER, Gent. at the Queen's-Bench Bar, February 28. 170$\frac{3}{4}$.

THE Court being ſet, the Priſoner was called, and the Clerk of Arraignments ordered Proclamation to be made, for the Under Sheriff of Suſſex to return the Precept, and the Keeper of Newgate to bring into Court the Body of James Boucher. Accordingly the Precept was return'd, and the Priſoner ſet to the Bar.

Clerk of Arr. James Boucher hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

Then the Grand Jury of Suſſex's Preſentments were read.

Then the Second Preſentment was read.

Clerk of Arr. How ſayeſt thou, art thou Guilty of the ſaid Treaſon whereof thou art indicted, or not Guilty?

J. Boucher. Guilty.

J. Boucher. My Lord, I humbly beg that I may have leave to ſpeak Two or Three Words.

L. C. J. Holt. What would you ſay?

J. Boucher. My Lord, I humbly beg leave to ſpeak Two or Three Words.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, let us hear what you have to ſay.

J. Boucher. My Lord, it is very well known, that I have ſollicited this Two Years for Leave to come over into England. And while I have been in France, I have done all that I could to ſubſiſt the Engliſh that were brought Priſoners to the French Camp, and have to my Power aſſiſted them with Money, and other Neceſſaries, eſpecially one Troop of Horſe. I applied my ſelf to Collonel Lumly, and he promiſed to lay my Caſe before the Queen. But not hearing from him, I went to his Son, and he told me he had no Opportunity to acquaint the Queen with it. Afterwards I was taken going for Holland, and then I ſent to Colonel Lumly, and he promiſed to remember me. And I continued ſtill to ſollicite the Service of Her Majeſty's Subjects, and have procured their Horſes that have been taken from them, to be reſtored to them. I ſpoke to Colonel Godfry, and he promiſed to ſpeak to —— who promiſed to make it their Intereſt to procure my Return. And after the Camp was over, I came over into England at Noon-Day, with my Children, and ſent up a Letter to my Lord Nottingham to acquaint him where I was. It's true, I followed King James into Ireland, but had no Commiſſion, only ſerved the Duke of Berwick as Aid du Camp. And afterwards I went into France, but never ſerved there with any Commiſſion, but as Maſter of the Horſe to the Duke of Berwick. And I did hope that the Articles of Limerick would take off a great Part of my Offence. My Lord, I hope you will repreſent my Caſe favourably to the Queen.

Dr. Sandys. My Lord, I beg leave to ſpeak a Word or two on behalf of the Priſoner. My Lord, I ſollicited ——

L. C. J. Holt. What you can ſay to us will ſignify nothing; but if you have any Thing to ſay for the Priſoner, you muſt apply your ſelf elſewhere.

Mr. Attor. Gen. My Lord, as it is my Duty, I demand Judgment againſt the Priſoner, upon his Confeſſion of the Two Indictments.

Clerk of Arr. James Boucher, thou haſt been indicted on Two Indictments, and confeſſed thy ſelf Guilty of both. What haſt thou to ſay why Sentence of Death ſhould not be pronounced againſt thee?

J. Boucher. I hope your Lordſhip will be pleaſed to intercede for me to the Queen.

Clerk of Arr. My Lords the Queen's Juſtices do ſtrictly command all Perſons to keep Silence while Judgment is giving, on Pain of Impriſonment.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Boucher, You are, by your own Confeſſion, convicted of High Treaſon, for which, Judgment of Death is to be pronounced upon you, and which you are to ſuffer under thoſe Circumſtances which the Law hath appointed.

The Fact of which you were Accuſed, and have now Confeſſed, is, That ſince the Eleventh Day of December, 1688. you went into France without Licenſe either from the late King or Queen, and have returned ſince the Fourteenth of Jan. 1697. without any Licenſe under the Privy-Seal, either from the late King, or Her Majeſty that now is; which Fact is made High Treaſon by the Statute of the Ninth Year of the late King.

The Wiſdom and Juſtice in making that Law, will be very evident to any one that will but reflect upon the Poſture of our Affairs at that Time: For in the Year preceeding to that of the making thereof, there was an horrid Conſpiracy formed from from among that Party of Men who had ſo left the Kingdom, to aſſaſſinate the late King; to introduce a Popiſh and French Power, for the Subverſion of the Proteſtant Religion, and the Liberties and Properties of the People of England; which was managed with that Privacy, carried on with that Secreſy, that it was not diſcovered, nay, not ſo much as ſuſpected, until it arrived to that Maturity, that it was come to the very Point of being put in Execution.

The Truth of which is very clear, as well as by the Proofs produced at the Tryals of ſeveral of the Malefactors, as even by their own Confeſſion.

In the following Year the Peace of Reſwick was made, whereby the Intercourſe was reſtored between England and France. From thence it was evident, that divers of that Party of Men would return into the Realm, and thereby have an Opportunity to revive and carry on that horrid Deſign, in the Succeſs whereof they had been ſo diſappointed; for which, no doubt, they were not a little enraged, and it could not be otherwiſe expected but they would make uſe of it: For thoſe of the ſame Principles will be guilty of the ſame Practices.

Therefore it was neceſſary to make a Returning into England by any of thoſe who were under theſe Circumſtances, to be ſo very penal, unleſs they ſhould firſt give Satisfaction to the Government, either of their Innocence or Repentance, and obtain a Licenſe and Approbation for their Return, under the Privy-Seal; for their returning in any other Manner, is a Danger to the Queen's Perſon, and Her Kingdom.

This Treaſon, tho' it ſeems, and is new in the Form, yet it is compounded of an old Treaſon, known in the ancient Law of the Kingdom, which is, that of adhering to the King's Enemies. For what can be thought of thoſe who, in Time of War, ſhall abandon their own Country, be harboured and protected in any Enemies Country; for being of an Intereſt inconſiſtent with, even repugnant to, that of their own?

What your Deſign might be in returning in this Manner, whether to revive and purſue thoſe wicked Practices, your own Conſcience is your Witneſs, and will be your Judge; and if that ſhall acquit you, it will be for your Advantage in the World to come. But you are an Offender againſt the Law of the Land, which hath made this your Offence to be High Treaſon, and therefore that Judgment appointed for one guilty thereof muſt be pronounced; the Court therefore doth award, That you be conveyed from hence to Newgate, the Priſon from whence you came, and from thence you are to be drawn upon a Hurdle to Tyburn; where you are to be hanged by the Neck, and while you are alive to be cut down, your privy Members to be cut off, and your Bowels to be cut out of your Body, and burnt in your View; your Head is to be cut off, and your Body is to be divided into Four Parts, and your Head and your Quarters are to be diſpoſed as her Majeſty ſhall appoint. And the Lord have Mercy upon your Soul.

Clerk of Arr. Goaler; look to your Priſoner.

J. Boucher. My Lord, I beg that my Friends may have Leave to come to me.

L. C. J. Holt. You ſhall have ſuch as is uſual, and as is fitting.

Clerk of Arr. Take away the Priſoner.

The Tryal of DAVID LINDSAY, on Wedneſday the 19*th of* April, 1704.

THE Court being ſet, Proclamation was made.

Clerk of Arr. David Lindſay hold up your Hand, (which he did.) Thou ſtandeſt Indicted by the Name of David Lindſay of London, Gent. for that thou being a Subject of the late King William, and now a Subject of her preſent Majeſty, after the Eleventh Day of December 1688, viz. the 26th Day of March 1689. was in the Kingdom of England, viz. at the Pariſh of St. Martins in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex; and afterwards and before the Third Day of December 1697, viz. the Firſt Day of October 1696. Thou the ſaid David Lindſay did voluntarily go into France without Licenſe from the late King William or the late Queen Mary; and that thou the ſaid David Lindſay on the ſaid Third Day of December 1697. was not within the Dominions of the late King William; and that thou the ſaid David Lindſay not having the Fear of God in thy Heart, nor weighing the Duty of thy Allegiance towards our Lady the Queen that now is, thy Supreme, True, Legitimate, Lawful and undoubted Lady; and as a falſe Traytor againſt our ſaid Lady Anne, the Queen that now is, after the 14*th Day of* January, 1697. viz. the 10*th of* December, in the Second Year of the Reign of our Lady the Queen, did traiterouſly return and come into the Kingdom of England, viz. at the Pariſh of St. Martins in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, without Licenſe from the late King William under his Privy Seal, or from our ſaid Lady the Queen, under her Privy Seal obtained; againſt the Duty of thy Allegiance, and againſt the Form of the Statute, and againſt the Peace of our Lady the Queen, her Crown and Dignity, &c.

Mr. Lindſay, (Taking a Paper out of his Pocket read it to the Court.) My Lord, I am very ſorry I am ſo unfortunate as to fall under the Diſpleaſure of the Government; and being willing to ſave the Court all unneceſſary Trouble upon my Tryal, I have therefore reſolved to confeſs moſt of the Facts charged upon me in the Indictment, viz. As to my being in France, and coming into England without Licenſe. But I am adviſed that there is ſomething ſo ſingular for my Benefit in this Caſe, that I beg your Lordſhip to hear me by Council

Council before my Arraignment; the Council I desire, are Mr. Williams and Mr. Raymond.

Sir Edw. Northey. Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, he might have had Council assigned him before, if he had desired it.

L. C. J. Trevor. You shall have these Council assigned you which you desire.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, I suppose this is not desired now, with any Design to delay the Tryal; the Prisoner must first plead to his Indictment.

L. C. J. Trevor. If his Council be here, we are willing to hear what they have to say.

Clerk of Arr. Call Mr. Williams and Mr. Raymond. (Who came into Court.)

L. C. J. Trevor. Mr. Raymond and Mr. Williams, the Prisoner here desires you may be of Council for him, and the Court have assigned you to be of Council for him accordingly.

Mr. Att. Gen. He has heard the Indictment read to him, but he has not yet pleaded to it.

Mr. Lindsay. My Lord, I desire to be heard by my Council first.

Mr. Raymond. My Lord, I apprehend Mr. Lindsay's Intention is, to give the Court as little Trouble as may be, and therefore the Facts, of which he is Guilty, and that are charged upon him in this Indictment he will confess. But, my Lord, he has been advised by his Friends, and other Council, that his Case has something particular in it, which he hopes will be for his Advantage, and desires to have the Benefit of what can be pleaded, besides Guilty or Not Guilty.

L. C. J. Trevor. Is there any other Plea, that he can plead specially?

Mr. Williams. My Lord, not any that we know of; I desired him to advise with some other Persons about it, I hope he has done so. As to the Prisoner's Confessing, or Pleading Not Guilty to the Indictment, it's a Matter of Prudence and not of Law.

L. C. J. Trevor. Let him plead then.

Clerk of Arr. David Lindsay, Art thou Guilty of this High Treason whereof thou art indicted, or Not Guilty?

David Lindsay. Not Guilty.

Clerk of Arr. Culprit, How wilt thou be tried?

David Lindsay. By God and my Country.

Clerk of Arr. God send thee a good Deliverance.

Mr. Lindsay. My Lord, I have one Favour to beg, that my Wife and Children may come to me.

L. C. J. Trevor. I think he may have that Liberty, in the Presence of the Keeper, if you have nothing to object against it.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we are willing they should come to him, in the Presence of the Keeper; we will not abridge any Man of what he can reasonably and justly desire.

L. C. J. Trevor. Have you pitch'd upon any Time to appoint for the Tryal?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes my Lord, on Monday next, if it suit the Court. He shall have a Copy of the Pannel, and all other Things that are fit for him. I suppose my Lord, the Prisoner is now committed to the Sheriff as is usual on these Occasions.

L. C. J. Trevor. Yes, he is committed to the care of the Sheriff.

Clerk of Arr. Where is the Keeper of Newgate? He appeared, and took Charge of the Prisoner. And then the Court adjourned till Monday Nine of the Clock.

April 4. 1704.

THE Court being set, and the Pannel called over, as usual, the Prisoner making no Exceptions; the following Gentlemen were sworn upon the Jury.

Timothy Lenoy, Esq;	Tho. Ellis, Esq;
Richard Brown, Esq;	Nich. Goodwin, Esq;
Joseph Jorey, Esq;	Tho. Blackmore, Jun. Esq;
Tanner Arnold, Esq;	Will. Snelling, Esq;
Arthur Bayly, Esq;	Peter Lekeux, Esq;
George Ford, Esq;	Jo. Pack, Esq;

L. C. J. Holt. You Gentlemen that are sworn, go within the Bar.

Clerk of Arr. David Lindsay, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Gentlemen of the Jury, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to the Charge. He stands indicted by the Name of David Lindsay, of the City of London, Gentleman, &c. as before in the Indictment. Upon which Indictment he hath been arraigned, and hath pleaded Not Guilty. Your Charge is to enquire whether he be guilty of the said Treason, whereof he stands indicted. If you find him Guilty, you are to enquire what Goods and Chattels he had at that Time, or if he fled for it. But if you find him not guilty, you are to say so, and no more. And stand together, and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Morley. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, This is an Indictment preferred against David Lindsay, the Prisoner at the Bar, for High Treason, for that he being a Subject of the late King William, and now a Subject of her present Majesty, after the Eleventh Day of December 1688, viz. the 26th Day of March 1689, was in this Kingdom of England, viz. in St. Martins in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex, and afterwards, and before the Third Day of December 1697, viz. the First Day of October 1696. the Prisoner did voluntarily go into France without License either from the late King William, or the late Queen Mary: And that the Prisoner on the Third Day of December, 1697. was not within the Dominions of the late King William. But the Prisoner, not weighing the Duty of his Allegiance towards our Sovereign Lady the Queen, did, as a false Traytor, after the 14th Day of January 1697, viz. the 10th Day of December, in the Second Year of the Reign of her now Majesty, traiterously return and come into this Kingdom of England, viz. in the Parish of St. Martins in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex, without License either from the late King William under his Privy-Seal, or from her now Majesty under her Privy Seal; and this he hath done against the Duty of his Allegiance, and against the Form of the Statute in this Case made and provided. To this Charge he hath pleaded Not Guilty.

If we prove him Guilty I doubt not but you will find him so.

Mr. D. Lindsay. I shall give your Lordships, and the Court, as little Trouble as may be. I shall only beg leave to state my Case truly before you, and then I shall submit to your Judgment.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Lindsay, if you had a mind to confess, you should have done it before, now the Jury are to enquire whether you are Guilty or not.

Mr. Lindsay.

Mr. Lindſay. My Lord, I only deſire to be heard as to the Fact.

L. C. J. Holt. You muſt ſtay till the Queen's Evidence is heard, and then you may ſay what you can.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, his Intentions may be as to ſome Things to ſave the Time of the Court; and perhaps to eaſe the Queen's Council of ſome Trouble.

L. C. J. Holt. Let the Queen's Council ſtate the Evidence firſt, and then it may be proper for him to ſay what he will.

Sir T. Powis, [the Queen's Serjeant.] You muſt either confeſs the Treaſon wherewith you are charged, or elſe we muſt proceed to prove it.

L. C. J. Holt. If you open the Evidence, then it may be he will confeſs; but it muſt be firſt opened.

Sir T. Powis. My Lord, there is nothing meant by us to reſtrain him in any Thing that he has to ſay; all that we deſign, is to put him into a proper Method. It is proper that he ſhould underſtand the Caſe. He has pleaded Not Guilty, and we are under a Neceſſity to ſhow what Evidence we have to prove him Guilty. My Lord, this Indictment is founded on an Act of Parliament made in the Ninth Year of the late King William. And it is grounded on very good Reaſons; for, as it is taken notice of in this Act, there had been a former Act made in the Third and Fourth Years of the Reign of the late King William and Queen Mary, by which it was made High Treaſon for any to repair into France without Licenſe; that any one that did ſo, ſhould fall under the Guilt of High Treaſon. But that Act was calculated only for the Time the War laſted, and was of no longer Continuance; and there being a Peace concluded, the Preamble of this Act takes notice, that thereby it would become neceſſary for the carrying on of Trade and Commerce between England and France, that there ſhould be a Freedom of going and coming out of, and into the ſaid Kingdoms reſpectively. And therefore the Act farther ſays, that whereas ſeveral Perſons who had been in Arms, or had been engaged in treaſonable Practices againſt the King and Government, and other diſaffected Perſons (as all that reſorted into France without Licenſe, during the War, were ſuppoſed to have ſufficiently ſhewed themſelves diſaffected to the Government) therefore the Act goes on, and provides againſt the Miſchiefs that might enſue; and ſays, If any of his Majeſty's Subjects who had voluntarily, ſince the 11th of December, 1688, gone into France without Licenſe, and ſhould at any Time, after the 14th of January, 1697. return into England without Licenſe, that ſuch Perſon, ſo doing, ſhould fall under the Guilt and Penalty of High Treaſon. This is the Subſtance of the Act upon which the Indictment is formed. Now, that which we have to charge and prove upon the Priſoner, is, That he was here in England after the 11th of December, 1688. We are ready to prove that he was here in the beginning of March, 1689; that he went into France in October, 1696; that he afterwards returned into England in December laſt. We ſay, He went into France without Licenſe, and return'd without Licenſe; and it will be his Part, if he can, to make it appear otherwiſe. If he does not admit theſe Facts, we ſhall call our Witneſſes to prove them upon him. If they are Facts that he admits, then he may regularly proceed.

Mr. Lindſay. My Lord, May I ſpeak now?

L. C. J. Holt. Yes, you may.

Mr. Lindſay. My Lord, I do confeſs, that being a Native of Scotland, and never having had any Office in England, I did go into France without his late Majeſty's Licenſe, after the Time mentioned in the Act; and I did continue beyond Sea, till I was informed that her Majeſty did, according to her uſual Clemency, by her gracious Proclamation in 170½, give a general Pardon to all her Subjects; and being deſirous to take the Advantage of it, and to return to my Native Country, I came into Scotland, where I preſented my ſelf before the Government, and had the Benefit of the Queen's Proclamation allowed me. Whereupon my Lord, being adviſed by ſome eminent Council there, that I was as free to come into England, as any other Subject; and having my Wife and Children here, I came to London by the Way of Berwick. Therefore, my Lord, humbly conceiving, in theſe Circumſtances, that I am not guilty of Treaſon within the Intent of this Act, I deſire to be heard by my Council.

L. C. J. Holt. You own you went into France ſince the 11th of December, 1688.

Mr. Lindſay. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. From what Place did you go into France, from England, or from Scotland?

Mr. Lindſay. From England.

L. C. J. Holt. Then he confeſſes the whole Fact.

Mr. Soll. Gen. But, my Lord, he was there before 1697.

L. C. J. Holt. You muſt agree on the Fact. He ſays he did go into Scotland within the Time mentioned in that Proclamation. And being in Scotland, he ſays, he did adviſe with ſome learned Council, and they told him he might ſafely come into England. Now do you admit that he did go into Scotland on that Occaſion of the Queen's Proclamation?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, as to that Fact, we cannot admit it. There was no Licenſe mentioned in it, the Proclamation gives no Licenſe to come into England, only a general Pardon. What his Council will make of it, I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Holt. Do you expect it ſhould be proved?

Mr. Att. Gen. If he will ſhew us the Proclamation, if it be the ſame that I have, I will allow it.

L. C. J. Holt. Produce that Proclamation, look upon it, it may be you will admit it without any further Proof.

Then the Proclamation was produced, and Mr. Attorney General looked on it.

Sir T. Powis. Will they have it read?

Mr. Att. Gen. It may be read if they deſire it.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, We deſire it may be read.

Sir T. Powis. My Lord, We would not have it look'd on as a Thing of Right to be read, without further Proof.

L. C. J. Holt. No, that is of Grace, it is a voluntary Offer of yours.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then I ſhall not oppoſe the reading of it.

L. C. J. Holt. Then you do admit that to be the Queen's Proclamation for Scotland.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Williams.

Mr. Williams. I desire to know, whether they admit the Prisoner to be a Native of Scotland?

Mr. Att. Gen. We do not know that.

L. C. J. Holt. Then you must prove it, if you think it material.

Sir T. Powis. My Lord, he went from England into France, and returned from France into England again.

L. C. J. Holt. He must be taken for a Native of England, unless he can prove the contrary.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, Shall we first read the Proclamation, or prove him a Native of Scotland?

L. C. J. Holt. Read the Proclamation first.

[Then the Clerk read the Proclamation.]

A Proclamation of Indemnity.

By Her Majesty's Command.

Queensberry,

GOD save the QUEEN.

Mr. Raymond. Look on the Backside.

Mr. Att. Gen. What is that?

Mr. Raymond. A Certificate from the Duke of Queensberry, Secretary of State of Scotland, that it is a true Copy.

Mr. Att. Gen. We admit it.

Mr. Williams. Then, my Lord, it is insisted on that we should prove the Prisoner a Native of Scotland.

Mr. Att. Gen. If you think it material, you may prove it.

L. C. J. Holt. They did think it material, and therefore made it part of their Case

Mr. Williams. Call James Grey, Esq; (who appeared and was sworn.) Sir, do you know the Prisoner at the Bar?

J. Grey. Yes.

Mr. Williams. What Country-man is he?

J. Grey. Always reputed of Scotland, I have known him this 20 Years, and he was always reputed so.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you known him Twenty Years in England?

J. Grey. Yes, my Lord, in England, not in Scotland.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Have you had any Correſpondence with him?

J. Grey. No, Sir, no great Correſpondence. In King James's Time he was Secretary to the Lord Melfort.

Mr. Williams. What Country-man was he reputed then?

J. Grey. A Scotchman.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you know his Family?

J. Grey. No, I have been always in England, I did not know his Family.

Mr. Williams. We have another Evidence.

L. C. J. Holt. You muſt bring better Proof than this, or elſe it will not do.

Mr. Williams. Call Mr. Trumbal, (who appeared, and was Sworn.) Mr. Trumbal, do you know the Priſoner at the Bar?

Mr. Trumbal. Yes.

Mr. Williams. How long have you known him?

Mr. Trumbal. I have known him this Twenty Years.

Mr. Williams. What Country-man did you always reckon him?

Mr. Trumbal. A Scotchman.

L. C. J. Holt. How do you know that?

Mr. Trumbal. He has been always reputed ſo. He dealt in Wine with one that I knew, and ſo I came to know him.

Mr. Williams. Did you know him in Scotland?

Mr. Trumbal. No.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you known him any where but in England?

Mr Trumbal. No, but he has been reputed a Scotchman, that dealt in Wine. He had always the Repute of an honeſt Man.

Mr. Williams. Call Charles Canair, (who appeared.)

Mr. Att. Gen. You ſhould bring your Witneſſes into the Court. What is your Name Sir?

Mr. Canair. Charles Canair.

Mr. Williams. How long have you known the Priſoner?

Mr. Canair. Ever ſince I was a Child.

Mr. Williams. Where did you know him?

Mr. Canair. In Scotland. I remember him from a Child.

L. C. J. Holt. And you knew him to be a Native of Scotland?

Mr. Canair. Yes, my Lord, of Dundee in Scotland.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you know any of his Relations?

Mr. Canair. Yes, my Lord, his Father was of Dundee in Scotland.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we have ſomething farther to prove.

L. C. J. Holt. What is it?

Mr. Williams. That the Priſoner was allowed the Benefit of this Proclamation in Scotland; and we beg leave to ſay, this Fact which is now charged againſt him is already pardoned.

Mr. Att. Gen. That Pardon has Influence in Scotland, not in England.

Mr. Williams. Then you admit alſo that the Priſoner had the Benefit of this Proclamation allowed him in Scotland.

Mr. Att. Gen. I know nothing of that.

L. C. J. Holt. Now go on and ſtate your Caſe.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, Mr. Attorney General is not pleaſed to admit we had the Benefit of the Proclamation allowed us in Scotland.

Mr. Att. Gen. They inſiſt on what I know nothing of; if they think they can have any Benefit by it, they may prove it.

Mr. Raymond. We have done our Endeavour to have the Secretary of State of Scotland appear here, but I don't know whether he has done us the Favour. We have the Certificate under his Hand.

L. C. J. Holt. Is it the ſame Hand?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, he aſſerts that Certificate, but we know not whether it be true.

L. C. J. Holt. Then that muſt be proved.

Mr. Raymond. Call Tho. Bruce, Eſq; (who appeared, and was ſworn.) Mr. Bruce, do you know the Priſoner, and whether he had Benefit of the Pardon in Scotland.

Mr. Bruce. I know very little of him. I know he was at Edinburgh laſt Summer, and was under Confinement there, and under Examination ſeveral Times; but after ſome Days he was at Liberty again. That's all that I know.

Mr. Raymond. Was he not at Liberty by leave of the Government?

Mr. Bruce. It was ſo believed.

Mr. Att. Gen. Can you tell when he came back to Scotland?

Mr. Bruce. No, Sir. He was in Cuſtody about July laſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. Can you be particular to the Time? Was it in June or July?

Mr. Bruce. I can't be poſitive, it was in the Time when the Parliament ſate. I never was in his Company.

Mr. Raymond. Call Mr. Southerland.

Mr Att. Gen. I know not why we ſhould trouble the Court with this. What ſignifies the Pardon?

L. C. J. Holt. Let them make what uſe they can of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir, what is your Name?

Mr. Southerland. Southerland.

Mr. Raymond. Do you know any Thing of the Priſoner's having any Benefit allowed him of the Scotch Pardon?

Mr. Southerland. I heard he had ſurrendred to the Government.

Mr. Raymond. Was he diſcharged by the Government?

Mr. Southerland. Yes, It was generally reported ſo.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Time was that, Sir?

Mr. Southerland. In June or July laſt Summer.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was he there the 27th of July, or before?

Mr. Southerland. I cannot be poſitive.

Mr. Raymond. Call Dr. Hutton, (who appear'd.) Doctor. What do you know of the Priſoner's having the Benefit of the Scotch Pardon, and its being allowed him by the Government?

Dr. Hutton. I was in September at Edinburgh, and there I ſaw Mr. Lindſay at the Queen's-Head, with the Attorney General. He had been examined about ſome Letters (as I heard ſay) that had been directed to him. And there I heard Sir John Stuart tell him, the Council had ſet

ſet him Free. And I met him afterwards at Liberty, and it was done upon the Proclamation of Indemnity.

Mr. Williams. What Religion is he reputed of?

Dr. Hutton. I know not that. But I have known him Six and Twenty Years, and I heard him tell Sir James Stuart (who asked him why he came away from France,) becauſe he would not be a Papiſt, and he ſaid, he had rather go to the Gallows, than return again.

Mr. Williams. What is his Temper? Is he a quiet Man in relation to the Government; or of a turbulent Temper?

Dr. Hutton. I have always known him a fair, peaceable, friendly Man.

Mr. Raymond. Doctor, I would ask you one Queſtion, whether you have any Law in Scotland that prohibits going into France?

Dr. Hutton. I do not know. I know ſeveral Perſons that came from France to Scotland.

Mr. Att. Gen. Dr, you give him a fair Character. Can you tell in whoſe Service he was in France?

Dr. Hutton. No, Sir; I cannot.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was his Affection towards the Government?

Dr. Hutton. I know nothing of that.

Mr. Soll. Gen. When did he return into Scotland; was it before or after the 27th of July?

Dr. Hutton. I do not know.

Mr. Raymond. He came into England in September laſt, after he had his Pardon. We ſay he came through Northumberland, and other Places hither, and in this County he was taken.

Mr. Lindſay. I was taken no where, but ſurrendred my ſelf to Sir Charles Hedges.

Mr. Williams. The Fact is, that he came from Scotland through Northumberland, &c. and ſo into Middleſex, and ſurrendred himſelf; ſo that Northumberland was the firſt County of England that the Priſoner came into, after his leaving Scotland; and ſo that the Treaſon, if any, was committed there, and we inſiſt that the Arraignment and Tryal ought to be there.

L. C. J. Holt. If you inſiſt upon it, that the Treaſon committed was in Northumberland, then you muſt prove it.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, with ſubmiſſion, tho' the Fact being that Northumberland was the firſt County of England, that we came into, yet it may be difficult to us to prove it; but, with Submiſſion, it may not be abſolutely neceſſary for us to prove, that Northumberland was the firſt County, in regard that your Lordſhip will take notice that Middleſex cannot be the firſt County, it being impoſſible to come from Scotland into Middleſex, without being in other Counties before; and the Indictment ought to have been in the firſt County of England he came into.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we indict him where we find him.

Mr. Raymond, We can prove that he came firſt to Berwick, then through Northumberland, before he came into Middleſex.

L. C. J. Holt. If you can, do.

Mr. Raymond. Dr. Hutton, do you know, where he came firſt into England, and which way he came hither?

Dr. Hutton, No, indeed; I have heard that he came through Northumberland, &c.

Mr. Raymond. Did you lend him your Horſe?

Dr. Hutton. No Sir, but a Friend of mine did lend him his Horſe.

Mr. Raymond. Where does your Friend live?

Dr. Hutton. At Edinburgh.

Mr. Raymond. Did he come hither on that Horſe?

Dr. Hutton. That I know not. He was left there by a Friend of mine, to be ſent into England with the firſt Opportunity, and ſo he ſent him by Mr. Lindſay.

Mr. Raymond. Did he make uſe of that Horſe all the Way?

Dr. Hutton. I know not that.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I am, by your Lordſhip's Permiſſion, of Council for the Priſoner: And I hope this free and ingenuous Confeſſion which he has now made at the Bar, being the very ſame which he before made at his Arraignment; and being the very ſame Confeſſion which he made before the Secretary of State, and others, before whom the Priſoner was examined; will be taken, and weigh with the Court as a good Argument of the Sincerity of this unfortunate Gentleman; and that he deſigns in his Tryal to put your Lordſhip to as little Trouble as poſſible. My Lord, It has been proved that he is a Native of Scotland, and he always has been of the Proteſtant Religion. He has been indeed in France but finding he could not enjoy his Religion there, he was reſolved by the firſt Opportunity to endeavour to gain a Licenſe from the Goverment for his Return into his own Country. In the mean Time comes out her Majeſty's Gracious Proclamation of Indemnity. That Proclamation was proclaimed in a publick Manner, by all Her Majeſty's Heralds, at the Market-Croſs at Edinburgh, and it has very extenſive Words in it, pardoning all Treaſons, Felonies, &c. all Crimes and Miſdemeanors whatſoever. My Lord, in Confidence of this Her Majeſty's Royal Proclamation, we came from France to Scotland, and there claimed, and were allowed by that Government, the Benefit of the Queen's Mercy. Afterwards having been adviſed by the moſt eminent Advocates and Council of Scotland, that by this Proclamation we were rendred in every reſpect as a free Subject, and might with Safety come from thence to England; we accordingly came from thence hither; but all this while we paid all the due Submiſſion and Regard that cou'd be, as well to the Law as to the Government; for we came from France unto the Hague, and we there attended upon Her Majeſty's Envoy, Mr. Stanhope, and acquainted him with our Intentions of returning Home. Immediately upon our Return into Scotland, we voluntarily came before the Chief Commiſſioner and Magiſtrates there; who, upon our Claim, were pleaſed, at length, to allow us the Benefit of Her Majeſty's Royal Proclamation and Pardon. And when we were in England, on the firſt Notice of a Warrant out againſt us, we, of our own Accord, waited on the Secretary of State, Sir Charles Hedges; and he happening not to be then at Leiſure, we voluntarily attended upon him a Second and Third Time; and upon our Third Attendance we were committed. And now, my Lord, we ſtand indicted before your Lordſhip for the greateſt of Crimes, High-Treaſon. My Lord, as to the Statute upon which we were indicted, tho' ſome Part of it, without doubt, was not only very reaſonable, but abſolutely neceſſary, I mean that Part of it which was for the Preſervation of his late Majeſty's Perſon and Government; but as to that Part of it upon which we are indicted, it ſeems, with great Submiſſion, a ſevere Law. That the bare returning into our Native Country, when we before were convicted of no Crime, or guilty, at moſt, but of a bare Contempt in going out of the Queen's Dominions without Licenſe, that this ſhould be made High-Treaſon, this, with Submiſſion, is ſomewhat ſevere: So that in reſpect of the Severity of this Law, beſides the common Argument of its being a Penal Law, your Lordſhip will be the rather induc'd to admit of the moſt favourable and merciful Conſtruction to every Part and Clauſe of this Act, that it will bear. My Lord, we do humbly inſiſt on the Words of the Proclamation; and we take it, that thoſe Words do amount to a Licenſe to us to come into Scotland: And if ſo, then we are not guilty within this Act of Parliament, of coming to the Queen's Dominions without Licenſe. And we likewiſe further inſiſt, that one that has the Queen's Licenſe to come into Scotland, may, without any further Licenſe, come into England. —— I beg your Lordſhip's Leave to read that Part of the Proclamation, which we chiefly inſiſt on. The Proclamation pardons all Treaſons, and all correſponding and intercommuning with Rebels, or declared Enemies of the Queen. My Lord, it pardons all other Crimes, of what Nature ſoever. It pardons any Act, that may infer any Pain or Puniſhment, on the Lives or Eſtates of Her Majeſty's Subjects. And it is declared to be as available to all Subjects, to pardon them all Crimes, as if the particular Crime were named, and as if Remiſſions under the Great Seal were paſs'd. And then Her Majeſty declares, That this ſhall be taken in the moſt favourable and comprehenſive Senſe that may be, for the Security of the Subject. Now, my Lord, taking this Proclamation in the moſt favourable and extenſive Senſe, in Favour of the Priſoner; which Her Majeſty has been pleaſed expreſly to direct it ſhould; with Submiſſion, I take it, it will amount to a Licenſe from Her Majeſty, to return from France to Scotland: And we humbly take it, that if the Priſoner did by Licenſe come from France to Scotland, that he afterwards coming from Scotland into England, is not within the Act.

My Lord, I wou'd beg Leave to conſider what it was that hinder'd the Priſoner from returning from France to Scotland: Sure it was his going to France without Licenſe. Then when Her Majeſty is graciouſly pleaſed to pardon this Offence, we take it, that Her Majeſty, by removing the Obſtacle, does by neceſſary Implication give Leave to the Priſoner to return to Scotland again. Her Majeſty is pleaſed, with Submiſſion, plainly to give him this Leave, by taking off that that hindred his coming. That Parliament plainly did take it, and have been pleaſed to declare it an Offence, to go into France without Licenſe; and have therefore been pleaſed to puniſh that Offence with a Temporary Baniſhment: But when that Offence is pardon'd, when that Baniſhment is remitted, then the Priſoner ſeems at Liberty to return Home: And that Liberty being given by the Queen's Proclation; this, with Submiſſion, amounts to a Licenſe from the Queen, for the Priſoner's returning home. My Lord, there are many Inſtances, wherein the King or Queen's Grants or Pardons ſhall have a double Operation, for the Benefit of the Perſons upon whom they are beſtowed. But theſe Caſes, as I humbly conceive, not immediately relating to this Point now before your Lordſhip, I ſhall not trouble your Lordſhip with citing them. My Lord, if we, when in France, had been guilty of more than what is charged upon us in the Indictment; I mean, had we correſponded, or adher'd to the Queen's declar'd Enemies; ſtill the expreſs Words of the Proclamation ſeem plainly to extend to us, when it pardons all correſponding and intercommuning with the Queen's declared Enemies; which the French then were, and now are. My Lord, If this Proclamation could in any Part of it bear Two Conſtructions, (the one making for the Priſoner, the other againſt him) the Queen has been pleaſed to determine in what Senſe it ſhall be taken; in the moſt beneficial manner for the offending Subject. But, with humble Submiſſion, would this be obſerving of Her Majeſty's Gracious Directions; inſtead of allowing to the Priſoner the Benefit of this Proclamation, to make his very coming to Scotland, to claim the Benefit of it, and humbly to lay hold of her Majeſty's Mercy; to make this very Act to amount to a Crime; to make it the greateſt of Crimes, High Treaſon? This ſurely would be the very Reverſe of Her Majeſty's moſt Gracious Intentions: And yet this, with Submiſſion, would be the Conſequence, if the Priſoner's coming from France into Scotland ſhould be conſtru'd to be Treaſon. My Lord, I admit the Words of this Act are, If any return into England, or any other of Her Majeſty's Dominions, without a Licenſe under the Privy Seal, it ſhall be High Treaſon.

Sir T. Powis. But this is not a Licenſe under the Privy Seal.

Mr. Attorney General. The Great Seal of Scotland will not vacate an Engliſh Act.

Mr. Williams. Now we humbly take it, if the Queen is pleaſed to beſtow her Licenſe by any Act, or in any manner equally notorious with her Privy Seal; 'tis ſufficient, and within the Meaning and Equity of the Statute. And this Proclamation made by all the Heralds at Arms, at the moſt publick Place in Edinburgh, is as notorious, nay, much more notorious and publick, than a Licenſe under the Privy Seal only; and therefore within the Meaning of this Act. Beſides, the very Words of the Proclamation are, That it ſhall be in every reſpect as valid and effectual, as if it were under the Great Seal: And if under the Great Seal, ſurely it muſt be at leaſt as ſtrong, as if under the Privy Seal. Beſides, the Statute does not ſay, that the Licenſe muſt be under the Privy Seal of England. The Words of the Act are, If any return into England, or any other of Her Majeſty's Dominions, without Licenſe under the Privy Seal, without ſaying of what Kingdom. Now, with Submiſſion, it not being ſaid what Privy Seal, or of what Kingdom; it muſt be intended according to the Subject-Matter, the Seal of that Kingdom or Dominion where the Licenſe is granted; and that being Scotland, the Licenſe under the Great Seal of Scotland is ſufficient: For it ſeems improper, that the Seal of one Kingdom ſhould be made uſe of, to Licenſe an Act in another Kingdom. Now, if a Licenſe under the Great Seal of Scotland be ſufficient, this Proclamation declares, that it ſhall be as valid as if 'twere under the Great Seal: And it can't be deny'd, as I have ſaid, but a Licenſe under the Great Seal, muſt be equivalent with a Licenſe under the Privy Seal. Beſides, the Queen's Proclamation does not mention what Great Seal, or of what Kingdom; and ſo it may be intended, tended, that Great Seal that would be moſt beneficial to the Priſoner; taking it in its moſt favourable Senſe, as Her Majeſty is pleas'd to direct it ſhould be.

But 'twill be ſaid, That taking this to be a Licenſe, this is only a Licenſe to come into Scotland; but the Priſoner is indicted for coming into England without Licenſe. But we take it, If we had a Licenſe to come into any one of the Queen's Dominions, and we firſt came into that Dominion with this Licenſe; we can't then be guilty of Treaſon within this Act. The Words of the Act make it Treaſon to come into England, or any other of the Queen's Dominions, without Licenſe; ſo 'tis the ſame Thing as if it ſaid, that it ſhould be Treaſon to come into the Queen's Dominions without Licenſe. Then if one comes into Scotland with Licenſe; Scotland being one of the Queen's Dominions, the Priſoner can't be ſaid to come into the Queen's Dominions without Licenſe; ſo that by this Licenſe the Priſoner is wholly out of the Act. This Act, with Submiſſion, muſt operate, and take its Effect, upon the firſt Step made from France into any of the Queen's Dominions; ſo that if the Priſoner be guilty of Treaſon within the Act, it muſt be when he made his firſt Step from France into Scotland: But that being made lawful, by the Proclamation, amounting (as we ſay) to a Licenſe; it can't be afterwards Treaſon, for the Priſoner to come into England. Take it, that the Priſoner had had Her Majeſty's Licenſe to come from France into England; and accordingly, the Priſoner comes into England, and afterwards goes into Scotland; had this been Treaſon? Surely not. Take it, that a Man within this Act returns from France into England without Licenſe, and is pardon'd, and he afterwards goes into Scotland; would this have been a new Treaſon, for which the Man that was before pardon'd muſt loſe his Life? We humbly take it, that it would not.

Beſides, with Submiſſion, this Proclamation amounts to a Pardon of the Treaſon, tho' it be before the Priſoner return'd to any of the Queen's Dominions. And if it appears to your Lordſhip, that the Priſoner is pardon'd; tho' we have not pleaded it, your Lordſhip will not be pleas'd to ſuffer the greateſt Puniſhments to be inflicted on any that your Lordſhip perceives are entitled to Her Majeſty's Mercy, or on any that are ſo much as within Her Majeſty's Intentions of being pardon'd. Beſides, another Conſequence of the Priſoner's being pardon'd, is, That then if he be pardon'd, he is a free Subject, and has Liberty to go any where, and into any of the Queen's Dominions. My Lord, as to this Point, whether the Treaſon be pardon'd, 'tis neceſſary, with humble Submiſſion, to conſider what makes this Treaſon. 'Tis the going into France without Licenſe, and returning home without Licenſe: 'Tis both join'd together make the Treaſon; and the one without the other does not make the Treaſon. Had not the Priſoner gone into France without Licenſe, his returning without Licenſe would not have amounted to Treaſon: So that the going into France, is the Foundation of the Treaſon. And I humbly take it, that this Act of Parliament has made the bare going into France without Licenſe, an Offence; and has puniſh'd it as ſuch, by Baniſhment during the Queen's Pleaſure: So that the Priſoner, from the Time he went into France without Licenſe, was an Offender, and conſequently capable of a Pardon. So, with Submiſſion, 'tis plain, there was ſome Things on which the Pardon might operate; tho' the Pardon was before the Priſoner's landing in Scotland; then taking it, that the Priſoner's going into France without Licenſe was an Offence, and the original Foundation of the Treaſon: This original Offence is, with Submiſſion, pardon'd by the Proclamation, by the Pardon of all Crimes and Miſdemeanors, of what Nature ſoever. And if the original Offence be pardon'd, all the Conſequences, all the Dependencies upon that Offence, all that enſues upon that Offence, are, with Submiſſion, at the ſame Time pardon'd. This, my Lord, ſeems to be prov'd by Cole's Caſe, Plowd. 401. where, after one had felonioufly wounded another, then comes a Pardon of all Crimes and Miſdemeanors; and afterwards the Party wounded dies. The original Miſdemeanor being pardon'd, all that enſues upon it is pardon'd; and conſequently the Murder is pardon'd, by the Pardon only of all Miſdemeanors. Now in our Caſe 'tis plain, the original Offence is going into France without Licenſe; and that being pardon'd, all that enſues that Offence, all the Dependencies upon that Offence, according to the expreſs Words of that Caſe, are pardon'd alſo: And therefore, the returning into the Queen's Dominions without Licenſe, being only a Conſequent and a Dependent upon the going into France without Licenſe, is pardon'd alſo. Beſides, my Lord, ſo favourable a Conſtruction does the Law make upon Acts of Mercy, that when the Crown pardons any Crime, the Pardon reſtores the Man in ſuch a manner, as if the Offence had never been committed. And conſequently, after this Pardon, 'tis the ſame Thing as if the Priſoner had never gone into France without Licenſe: And if the Priſoner had never gone into France without Licenſe, 'tis plain his coming home without Licenſe would not have been Treaſon.

In Hob. 81. Cuddington v. Wilkins, If a Man commits a Theft, and is pardon'd; if afterwards he is called ſo by one that had no Notice of the Pardon; for that after the Pardon, 'tis as if he had never been guilty of Theft. There is likewiſe another Caſe put there, which ſeems much ſtronger than the Priſoner's Caſe; which is this: If an Appeal of Felony be brought againſt a Man, and the Defendant prays Trial by Battel; the Plaintiff counterpleads the Battel, by ſaying, that the Defendant, when committed to Priſon for his Felony, broke the Priſon, and ſo eſcaped, (which is a Preſumption of Guilt) and ſo takes off the Trial by Battel; yet 'tis adjudged, that when the King pardons the Breach of Priſon, this reſtores the Defendant to his Trial by Battel, and 'tis then as if the Defendant had not broken the Priſon at all. Yet in this Caſe it might have been objected, That tho' the King has pardon'd the Breach of Priſon, tho' the Proſecution or Puniſhment for Breach of Priſon is pardon'd; yet the Collateral Effect of it, which is the Preſumption of Guilt upon the Party's Flight, might remain; eſpecially as to the Appellant, whoſe Suit (according to the General Rule) the King's Pardon can't influence. Yet here 'tis adjudged, that even as to the Appellant, the King's Pardon of the Breach of Priſon, makes it as if the Party had never been guilty of it. Now this is ſtronger than the Priſoner's Caſe: For in the Priſoner's Caſe, the Queen's Pardon is only made uſe of, to prevent her own Proſecution, and not the the Suit of any Appellant. Therefore, in the preſent Caſe, the Proclamation pardoning all Miſdemeanors, pardons the Offence of going into France without Licenſe: And that being pardon'd, 'tis as if the Priſoner had never gone into France without Licenſe; and without this, the bare Return without Licenſe will not amount to Treaſon. So that, with Submiſſion, we take this Proclamation to be a Licenſe to the Priſoner to return into the Queen's Dominions. Nay, we take it to be a Pardon even of the Treaſon of which he ſtands indicted.

Beſides, I would humbly beg Leave to offer to your Lordſhip's Conſideration, whether a Scotchman, that was not in England at the Time of the making of this Act of Parliament, be within the Meaning of this Act. The Act ſays, If any of his Majeſty's Subjects ſhall go into France without Licenſe, if he return without Licenſe, 'tis Treaſon. I don't pretend to call in queſtion Calvin's Caſe, which was (at that Time at leaſt) a very convenient Reſolution. I don't deny, but a Natural-born Subject of Scotland is, as to many Purpoſes, a Natural-born Subject of England. But whether (upon the Conſtruction of ſo very Penal a Law as this is) a Scotchman is within the Meaning of this Law, is the only Queſtion. Now, with Submiſſion, when the Act ſays, If any of His Majeſty's Subjects ſhall go into France without Licenſe, this (according to a reaſonable Conſtruction) ſhall be intended only of Engliſh Subjects, ſtrictly ſpeaking, that is, thoſe of England; it muſt be intended only of ſuch of His Majeſty's Subjects, who were repreſented by the Parliament that made this Law, and who are preſumed to conſent to the making of this Law; 'tis theſe Subjects only that may reaſonably be ſuppoſed to have Notice of this Law, and therefore 'tis reaſonable that they only ſhould be bound by it; eſpecially in the Caſe of ſo ſevere a Law, where a Man's Life, Eſtate, and all that is dear to a Man is at Stake. There may be a great deal of Difference betwixt an Act of Parliament that puniſhes a Fact that was before Malum in ſe, and an Act which makes that an Offence which was before lawful: Every one of any Nation is, at his Peril, to abſtain from committing any Act that is Malum in ſe; and if he commits ſuch an Act in any Country, he ſeems ſubject to be puniſhed according to the Laws of that Country where the Fact was committed. But going into France, or any Place beyond Sea, without Licenſe, ſeems only Malum Prohibitum by this Statute: And therefore when the Act ſays, If any of His Majeſty's Subjects who went into France without Licenſe, ſhall return without Licenſe, ſhall be deem'd guilty of Treaſon; it ſhall be intended only of thoſe of England; ſuch Subjects as either by themſelves, or their Repreſentatives, were conſenting to the making of this Law. Therefore I humbly beg Leave to put the Caſe; That if one of Her Majeſty's Subjects of her remote Plantations, (as Barbadoes, or Antegoa) that was reſident there at the Time of the making this Law, ſhould have ſince the Year 1688. gone into France on any private or particular Account, without Licenſe; and afterwards ſhould come into England; would this Subject (who, in all Probability, knew nothing of the making of this Law) be guilty of High Treaſon, for coming into England? Surely this would be exceſſively hard. Then if one reſident at Barbadoes, or Antegoa, at the Time of the making of this Act, ſhould not be within this Law; much leſs ſhall a Scotchman be within it, in regard Scotland is a ſeparate Kingdom, that can't be bound by our Acts of Parliament; whereas any of the Foreign Plantations are plainly liable to be bound by Engliſh Acts of Parliament.

Beſides, there is another Reaſon from the very Words of the Act, why a Scotchman that was not reſident in England at the Time of the making this Law, can't be intended within the Meaning of the Act; and that is, not only becauſe the Act mentions nothing of Scotland; but becauſe the Words of the Act are, If any of His Majeſty's Subjects who went into France without Licenſe, ſhall return into England, or any other of His Majeſty's Dominions, without Licenſe, 'tis Treaſon. Now the Word (Return) muſt plainly have Relation only to that Country where the Party was reſident at the making of the Law, or to the Country that he left at the Time of his going towards France. But it does not appear that the Priſoner, who is a Scotchman, was in England at the making the Act; and he having been prov'd to be a Native of Scotland, muſt be intended to be then in Scotland, unleſs prov'd to be elſewhere: And therefore the Priſoner's coming into England, can never be within the Meaning of the word Returning into England, any more than a Man can be ſaid to return to a Place where he was not before.

There is another Objection, (becauſe I will give Mr. Attorney only one Trouble) and that is, That this Indictment (or Tryal) can't in this Caſe be in Middleſex, but muſt be in that County where the Priſoner firſt came after his leaving France; which really was Northumberland, as he came from Scotland; or at leaſt your Lordſhip will take notice, that it can't be Middleſex. 'Tis a known Rule, that all Indictments, and Tryals for Treaſons and all other Crimes, muſt be in the County where the Treaſon was committed: And 'tis clear, (taking the Proclamation out of the Caſe) that the Treaſon was committed in that County which the Priſoner firſt came into, after leaving France. The Treaſon (taking the Pardon out of the Caſe) was compleated by the firſt Step made into England. Nay, if the Priſoner, immediately after his making his firſt Step into England, had returned, ſtill it had been a compleat Treaſon; and the Party had returned with his Guilt upon him. And, my Lord, I do not take it, that the Party commits a new Treaſon, by his going into another County. 'Tis true, 'tis ſaid, if I ſteal Goods in one County, and carry them into another, this is Felony (tho' not Robbery) in every County where I carry them: But even in this Caſe, the Law (as I take it) is ſaid to be otherwiſe, in Fitz. Abr. Tit. Coron. Par. 194. and that the Tryal muſt be in the County where the Goods were firſt taken. But taking this to be Law, That the Felon may be tried in any of the Counties, where he carries the Goods he ſtole; as I muſt needs own, the Law is now allowed to be ſo; yet this depends upon a different Reaſon, no way affecting the principal Caſe. For the Reaſon given of this Caſe, in Dyer 40. and 7. Coke 2. and Bulwer's Caſe is, That the Robbery or Felony does not alter the Property of the Goods; and therefore, into whatever County the Felon carries the Goods, 'tis a new Felony. But there 'tis not that ſpecial Reaſon in the principal Caſe, and therefore the Law is not the ſame. Suppoſing the Priſoner had been pardon'd the Treaſon, in coming into the firſt County of Northumberland without Licenſe; could he afterwards have been puniſh'd for Treaſon, for coming into into the next adjacent County; this would be a pretty ſtrange Conſtruction of multiplying Treaſons. And if coming into every County would make a freſh Treaſon, a Man at that Rate may be brought to ſuffer as a Traytor, tho' with many Pardons about him. No ſurely, my Lord, 'tis the original Act the Law regards, and the coming into a Second County does not make it a Second Treaſon; and therefore we take it that the Indictment or Tryal in this Caſe can't be in Middleſex, but muſt be in Northumberland or ſuch other County, which was the firſt County of England that the Priſoner came into. Upon the whole Matter, we with great Submiſſion, inſiſt, First, That Her Majeſty's Proclamation amounts in Law to a Licenſe for the Priſoner to come from France into Scotland; nay, that it amounts to a Pardon to him, even of his Treaſon that he is now indicted for. But if that be againſt us, we in the next Place take it that a Scotchman not reſident in England at the Time of the making this Act, is not within the Meaning of this Act. But if that alſo be againſt us, yet in the next Place we humbly inſiſt, that he can't be Indicted for this Treaſon in Middleſex, but muſt be indicted in the County where we firſt enter'd England. And 'tis ſufficient if any one of theſe Points are for us; and therefore we humbly hope the Priſoner ſhall be acquitted.

Mr. Raymond. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, I'd beg the liberty to offer a Word or Two on the ſame ſide for the Priſoner at the Bar.

I humbly apprehend, your Lordſhip expects no Apology from us, for appearing as Council in a Cauſe of this Nature, ſince 'tis by your Lordſhip's Permiſſion granted us in Purſuance of an Act of Parliament, that we have this Liberty; and I can't forget what your Lordſhip has ſaid formerly in this Place on the like Occaſion, That it is as lawful for the Gentlemen of the Bar to be Council in ſuch a Caſe, and that they are as much oblig'd to do their Duty for their Client in it, as in any other Caſe, wherein by Law they are allowed to plead.

I ſhall therefore, the Fact being agreed on by both Sides, ſtate it as a Caſe, and ſubmit the Obſervations I ſhall make upon it to your Lordſhip's Opinion.

The Fact is no more but this.

Mr. Lindſay, being a Native of Scotland, came into England, and reſided ſome Time here; from thence he went into France, where he continued a conſiderable Time; after he was gone into France, and whilſt he was there, the Act of Parliament, upon which he now ſtands indicted, was made. Afterwards the Queen granted a general Pardon and Indemnity to her Subjects in Scotland for all Treaſons, &c. Depending upon which, Mr. Lindſay returned into Scotland, and having had the Allowance of the Benefit of it there, he returned into England, coming by the way of Berwick and Northumberland to London.

My Lord, I ſhall humbly inſiſt upon it in behalf of the Priſoner at the Bar:

Firſt, That he is not comprehended within the Words of this Act.

Secondly, That if he ſhould be within the Words, yet that he is not within the Meaning of the Act.

My Lord, I ſhall by no means preſume to arraign the Wiſdom or Juſtice of the Law-makers in making this Act, which doubtleſs was founded on great Reaſon, and was very neceſſary for the Preſervation of his late Majeſty's Perſon and Government. But let it be never ſo wiſe, never ſo juſt, or never ſo neceſſary, yet, with great Submiſſion, 'tis a very penal Law; partly, becauſe it has a Retroſpect and makes that Fact an Offence, which was none at the Time when it was done, (for before this Act, it was lawful for any one to have gone into France, between the 11th of December 1688. and the Time of the proclaiming War with France.) But principally becauſe it makes the Offender againſt it a Traytor, therefore it muſt be expounded according to thoſe ſtrict Rules of Conſtruction, the Law has appointed for other Penal Statutes, and muſt never be extended by Equity beyond the Letter.

My Lord, As to the Penning of this Act, I muſt obſerve there is not one Word in it of Scotland, or the Subjects of Scotland, in expreſs Terms.

The Queſtion then will be, what other Words in it can extend to Mr. Lindſay's being a Native of Scotland? The moſt comprehenſive Words ſeem to be theſe at the beginning of the enacting Part, If any of Her Majeſty's Subjects, who have, &c.

I muſt beg leave to inſiſt upon it, that Mr. Lindſay can't be called one of His late Majeſty's Subjects within this Act. I do agree he was the late King's Subject, as King of Scotland, but not as King of England; but this Act being made in England, by the Engliſh Parliament, and uſing the Word, Subjects, muſt mean ſuch Subjects as that Parliament were able to oblige, which are only the Subjects of England, or the Dominions depending on the Crown of England; but not the Subjects of Scotland, which is a diſtinct Dominion from England.

The King of England has a double politick Capacity in him, one as King of England, the other as King of Scotland; the Two Nations are abſolutely diſtinct, and ſo are the Laws by which they are reſpectively govern'd: If therefore the King, as King of theſe Two Kingdoms, has Two ſeveral Politick Capacities in him; if the Nations and the Laws are diſtinct, with Submiſſion, the Subjects of neceſſity muſt be conſidered ſo too.

I am very ſenſible, My Lord, with what Solemnity Calvin's Caſe in 7. Rep. is ſaid by my Lord Coke to have been adjudged; it ſhall be therefore, with a great deal of Submiſſion to your Lordſhip's Opinion, and Deference to the Authority of that Caſe, if I ſhall ſay any Thing that may ſeem to claſh with that Reſolution.

I confeſs that Caſe has determined, that Allegiance is a Quality of the Mind, and can't be circumſcribed by Place; that 'tis due to the Perſon of the King; and becauſe his natural Perſon can't be divided, the Allegiance owing to him is inſeparable and indiviſible, and therefore that there is an Union of Allegiance of both Kingdoms; and that a Man can't be conſider'd as a Liegeman or Subject, which is all one to the King, as King of Scotland, and not as King of England, and ſo Vice Verſa.

I'll beg leave to conſider my Lord Coke's Foundation, upon which this Reſolution is built, and ſubmit it entirely to your Lordſhip whether that is able to ſupport it.

According to my Lord Coke himſelf in Calvin's Caſe, Legiance is a true and faithful Obedience of the Subject due to the Sovereign, for which the Sovereign is obliged to protect his Subjects. Protectio trahit Subjectionem, Subjectio protectionem, 7 Co. 5.

I ſuppoſe it will not be pretended that this Obedience due from the Subject to the Sovereign is an abſolute blind Obedience to every arbitrary Command of the Sovereign; but is only ſuch an Obedience as the Law of the Kingdom, or Principality, or Dominion, has reſpectively preſcribed for the Subject to pay to his Sovereign; and the ſame holds as to the Sovereign's Part in Point of Protection. If therefore this Obedience or Legiance (which is the ſame) is altogether preſcribed and governed by the Law of the Place where 'tis due, it muſt neceſſarily follow, that where the Laws are different, the Legiance or Rule of Obedience and Subjection muſt be different alſo, and conſequently the Legiance due to the King as King of England, and the Legiance due to him as King of Scotland, (ſince the Laws of both Nations are diſtinct) muſt be ſeparate and diſtinguiſhable: Were it not ſo, the ſame Act, if ſo in one, muſt in both Kingdoms be the Performance of the Subjects Legiance; and the ſame Act, if ſo in either, muſt in both Kingdoms be the Breach of it. But that that is otherwiſe, is eaſily to be proved; as for Inſtance, according to my Lord Coke in Calvin's Caſe, 7 Co. 7, 6. The King of England may command any Subject of England to attend him in his Wars beyond Sea; but ſuppoſe by the Law of Scotland a Subject of Scotland is not oblig'd to go with the King out of the Kingdom, the King commands a Native of Scotland to wait on him out of Scotland beyond Sea, and he refuſes; now by the Law of England he has broke his Legiance to the King, and yet in Scotland he is as good a Liege Subject (notwithſtanding this Refuſal) as any Subject the King has there. — In this very Caſe of Mr. Lindſay, By his Return into Scotland from France (if your Lordſhip takes the Word Dominions in the Act in as large a Senſe as I ſuppoſe the Queen's Council would have the word Subjects took, that is, to all the Places in Subjection to the King, tho' not dependant on the Crown of England) he was become a Traytor to the Queen as Queen of England, which is the higheſt Breach of Allegiance that can be; and yet at the ſame Time (laying the Pardon out of the Caſe, and ſuppoſing there was no Law in Scotland to prohibit his coming thither) he was a very good Subject of the Queen's in Scotland, and not guilty of any Breach of Allegiance due to her there. Then certainly theſe Two Allegiances are not the ſame, but diſtinguiſhable; one owing to the King as King of Scotland, the other owing to the King as King of England; and if the Allegiances may be conſidered ſeparately, ſo may the Subject (who owes thoſe Allegiances, and by owing of which he becomes a Subject) be ſeparately conſidered as ſuch in reſpect of them; and conſequently, that Mr. Lindſay being a Native of Scotland, muſt be regarded as a Subject of the King as King of Scotland, and not a Subject of the King as King of England, and ſo not within the Words of the Act, for the Reaſons offer'd to your Lordſhips before.

The Second Thing I begg'd your Lordſhip's Leave to inſiſt upon was, That taking it, that Mr. Lindſay, tho' a Native of Scotland, ſhould be comprehended within the Words, any of his Majeſty's Subjects, yet that this Act did not deſign to extend to any Native of Scotland, and conſequently not to him. With great Submiſſion to your Lordſhip, there are many Caſes in the Books where Statutes have receiv'd a Conſtruction contrary to the Words, to comply with their Intent. The State of Gloceſter, Cap. 1. enacts, that the Diſſeiſin ſhall recover Damage, in a Writ of Entry, founded upon the Diſſeiſin, againſt him who is found Tenant; upon which Litt. Sect. 685. puts this Caſe, That if the Diſſeiſor makes a Feoffment of the Land to B. C. and D. and Livery of Seiſin is made to B. and C.; but D. was abſent, and never would agree to this Feoffment, nor take the Profits; B. and C. die, the Diſſeiſee brings a Writ of Diſſeiſin in the Per againſt D. who pleads this Matter; tho' he is Tenant of the Freehold of this Land, yet no Damages ſhall be recover'd againſt him. So in this Caſe, tho' the Words of the Act in their utmoſt Extent would comprize the Priſoner at the Bar; yet if the Parliament did not deſign they ſhould, a Conſtruction ſhall be made accordingly.

That the Parliament did not intend to concern themſelves with Scotland, or the Natives thereof, appears, with Submiſſion, by the Preamble (which is, as my Lord Coke terms it, Co. Litt. 79. a Key to find out the meaning of the Lawmakers.)

The Words of the Preamble are, That upon the Concluſion of the Peace between his Majeſty and the French King, it was become neceſſary for the carrying on a Trade between England and France, That the Subjects of each Kingdom ſhould have, &c. — I ſuppoſe it will not be pretended that Scotland can be comprehended under the Word, of England; nor Scotchmen under the Word, the Subjects of each Kingdom, that is, of England and France. — For if a Scotchman ſhould be took to be a Subject of the King of England, yet I humbly conceive he was never took to be a Subject of the Kingdom of England; the Word Kingdom is the ſame as Realm, and is uſually apply'd to the Land of England, and not to the Dominions dependant on the Crown of England; as on the 35 Hen. 8. c. 2. a Treaſon committed in Ireland was adjudged to be a Treaſon committed out of the Realm of England, and triable as a Foreign Treaſon, Orurke's Caſe, Ander. 262. Pl. 269. But if Kingdom or Realms ſhould be taken to have the ſame Signification as Dominion, that Caſe could not be Law, becauſe Ireland was never held to be out of the Dominion of the Crown of England; ſo that with great Submiſſion to your Lordſhip, nothing in the Preamble affects the Priſoner at the Bar.

The next thing to be conſider'd, is, what the Parliament meant by the Words, If any of his Majeſty's Subjects, &c. And I humbly hope your Lordſhip will think it reaſonable to let that Expreſſion be explain'd by the Word Subjects uſed in the Preamble, and ſo interpret them his Majeſty's Subjects of the Kingdom of England, which this Priſoner is not; and the rather, becauſe to conſtrue them to extend to Scotchmen, will be an Interpretation that will make the Engliſh Parliament make an Offence a Treaſon, which will not be in the Power of the Engliſh Government to puniſh, unleſs by Accident: For if a Scotchman returning out of France into Scotland,

Scotland, contrary to this Act, ſhould be a Traytor; yet he could not be puniſh'd here, unleſs he accidentally came hither afterwards, becauſe the Engliſh Government has no Coercive Means to fetch him from Scotland hither to be puniſh'd.---- But 'tis otherwiſe in reſpect of the Dominions depending on the Crown of England, as Ireland, &c. for a Man may be tranſmitted from England to Ireland, or Vice Verſa, to be try'd; as Colonel Lundy was 2 Ventr. 314. but England can't compel the Government of Scotland to ſend a Man hither from thence to be try'd. Then I humbly conceive that it can't be imagin'd, that the Parliament deſign'd to make an Offence a Treaſon, which can't be puniſh'd but by Accident here, ſince 'tis below the Dignity of a Government to have Offenders againſt their Laws, in Crimes of ſo high a Nature, out of their Power to puniſh—— But of an Engliſh Subject it would be otherwiſe, tho' he was in Scotland, or any Foreign Prince's Dominion, becauſe they might proceed againſt ſuch a Perſon to Outlawry, and upon Attainder confiſcate his Eſtate.

Another Thing I muſt beg leave to offer to your Lordſhip, as a Proof that this Parliament did not intend in this Act to include Scotland, or the Natives of Scotland, is, that the Paragraph which makes the taking of a Charter or Grant from the late King James to be Treaſon, is ſo far from relating to Scotland, or the Scotch, that it does not make it penal for any Engliſhman to take a Grant of Honour or Eſtate in Scotland from the late King James; the Words of the Act being, to be had or enjoy'd in the Kingdom of England or Ireland: So that the Parliament ſeemed induſtriouſly not to concern themſelves with any thing relating to Scotland; and yet doubtleſs they might have made it Treaſon for any Engliſhman to have took ſuch a Grant; and there had been as great Reaſon ſo to have done, if they had thought fit to have meddled with any thing relating to Scotland, ſince the taking of ſuch a Grant in Scotland by an Engliſhman from the late King James, had been as great a Derogation to the Liegance owing to the King, as if it had been of any thing in England; the Acceptance of ſuch a Grant amounting to an Acknowledgment of another Power beſides the King's---- So that for theſe Reaſons I humbly inſiſt upon it, that the Parliament did not intend to include any Scotchman within this Act.

But, my Lord, taking it that Mr. Lindſay, tho' a Native of Scotland, ſhould be within both the Words and Meaning of this Act; yet I muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhip's Judgments, whether this Act could bind him, he being beyond Sea, viz. in France, at the Time when it was made. I do agree, that if any of the Scots have Lands, &c. in England, they ſhall be liable to pay all Duties impoſed by Act of Parliament on thoſe Lands. I do alſo agree, that every Scotchman reſident here, is bound by all the Laws of the Land; and ſo are all Foreigners whatſoever, (be they Danes or Swedes, or of whatſoever other Nation they be) who live here under the King's Protection: But as ſoon as they are gone out of the Kingdom, their Allegiance, which was but local, ceaſes, and they are no longer obliged by the Laws of England. It muſt be agreed, that no Engliſh Act of Parliament can bind Scotland, nor, as I humbly apprehend, the Scotch, whilſt out of England; if ſo, then how could this Priſoner be bound by this Act, being a Scotchman, and out of this Kingdom, at the Time when the Act was made? With great Submiſſion, his coming into England alone could not ſubject him to this Law; for there ſeems to be a great Difference between this Act, and other general Acts or Laws of this Place: For, as I ſaid before, if a Scotchman comes into England, and inhabits here, he is liable to all the Laws then in Force, and ſhall be puniſhed for the Breach of any of them; becauſe he was before protected by thoſe Laws, and therefore muſt be obedient to them. But in this Caſe, the Subjection to the Law, and the Offence, began at the ſame Inſtant; for before his Landing in England, this Law had no Power over him, and the very Act of Landing made the Offence in this Indictment; 'twill be therefore ſomething ſevere to conſtrue that Act, which only makes the Priſoner liable to the Law, to be a Breach of it. As to this Matter, there will be no Difference between a Scotchman or a Dane: Both, when here, are bound by the Laws; neither, when abſent. Suppoſe it ſhould be enacted, That if a Dane ſhould land in England without Licenſe from the King, he ſhould be a Traytor; and a Dane notwithſtanding ſuch Act ſhould come into England without ſuch Licenſe, would he be a Traytor? With humble Submiſſion, Not. Such Act might amount to a Prohibition of his coming, and make him be uſed as an Alien Enemy, 7 Co. 6 B. as Perkin Warbeck was in Henry the VIIth's Time; but could not make him a Traytor, becauſe he owed no Allegiance to the King, nor Subjection to the Law, at the Time when the Act was made. As to the Priſoner's having been in England, and having reſided here before; that, I humbly think, will make no Difference, becauſe his Subjection to the Engliſh Law ceaſed, as ſoon as he ſtept off from the Engliſh Shoar.

What I ſhall beg Leave further to inſiſt upon for the Priſoner, (ſuppoſing your Lordſhip ſhould be of Opinion againſt him on the former Points) is, That this Evidence don't maintain the Indictment. The Indictment is for returning without Licenſe from France into England: The Evidence is, That he returned out of France into Scotland, and from thence into England. The Act of Parliament is, That if any of his Majeſty's Subjects, &c. return into this Kingdom of England, or other his Majeſty's Dominions: The Meaning of which, we for the Priſoner humbly take to be, That the firſt coming of any ſuch Perſon, as is within the Act, into any of his Majeſty's Dominions, ſhall be the Treaſon; and that the Act did not intend to make every ſeveral Coming into every diſtinct Dominion a new Treaſon; as if ſuch Perſon ſhould come out of France firſt into Scotland, then into Ireland, thence into Jerſey, and ſo into England, the Act, with Submiſſion, did not deſign to make this Perſon liable to be indicted for Four Treaſons; but that into what Dominion he firſt came, for that he was a Traytor and puniſhable: And that Conſtruction ſufficiently prevents the Miſchief and Danger the Act deſign'd to arm againſt. For if a Man ſhould come without Licenſe into any one Dominion, and is look'd on as a dangerous Perſon, the taking away his Life will prevent any future Miſchiefs from him: If he has a Licenſe to come into one, 'tis to be believed, with a great deal of Reaſon, he may be truſted in any other of his Majeſty's Dominions, or elſe his Majeſty would never have granted him a Licenſe to return into any of his Dominions, where he would be equally capable of putting in Execution any dangerous Practices againſt the Government. If that ſhould be the Meaning of the Act, then, with Submiſſion, this Indictment ought to have been for coming into Scotland, which was the Place he firſt came into, for there was the Treaſon, and not for coming into England. Beſides, if the coming into Scotland was the firſt and only Treaſon puniſhable by this Act, then we muſt offer the general Pardon of Scotland in the Priſoner's Excuſe: Not, my Lord, that I can pretend, that a Pardon in Scotland can pardon a Treaſon in England; but we muſt beg Leave to inſiſt upon it, as amounting to a Licenſe to return into Scotland. I do expect that it will be objected, that the Licenſe which this Act appoints, muſt be under the Privy-Seal of England, which this Scotch Pardon can't be pretended to be. I confeſs, my Lord, the Words are, without Licenſe from his Majeſty under his Privy-Seal. But 'tis not ſaid Privy Seal of England. And tho' generally ſpeaking, when an Engliſh Act mentions the Great Seal or Privy Seal, it muſt be took to be the Great Seal or Privy Seal of England; yet in this Engliſh Act, if your Lordſhip will conſtrue the Words, His Majeſty's Subjects, not only to be his Subjects as King of England, but as King of Scotland, or any other Nation; if your Lordſhip will conſtrue the Word, Dominions, to be not only the Dominions dependant on the Crown of England, but alſo all other Dominions of which his Majeſty was King, as Scotland; by Parity, the Words, Privy Seal, ought to be extended to all the Privy Seals the King has, as King of England, or King of Scotland. And if ſo, then ſince the Queen has in Her Proclamation, declared that Her Pardon ſhall be took as beneficially as if it had been under the Great Seal; but the Great Seal includes the Privy Seal, and is of greater Efficacy: We humbly hope, that it will be as beneficial to the Priſoner, as if it had been under the Privy Seal; nay, rather more, becauſe as to Scotland it pardons the Offence; for tho' the Return is after the Pardon, yet it pardons the going into France, which is the Foundation of the Crime, and without which the returning into Scotland, or any of his Majeſty's Dominions, was no Offence. This is the Uſe the Priſoner would make of this Pardon. I can't preſs it as a Pardon of an Engliſh Crime; tho' with great Submiſſion to your Lordſhip, it ſeems ſomething ſtrange, that Mr. Lindſay, ſhould by virtue of this Pardon be a very good Subject of the Queen's in Scotland, and have all the ſame Liberties other of his Countrymen have there, and yet that he ſhould be a Traytor againſt the Queen here in England; that he ſhould be within the Queen's Protection there, and out of her Protection here; and yet at the ſame Time that his Allegiance to her can't be ſevered, nor he conſidered as a Subject to Her, as Queen of Scotland, and not as Queen of England.

But admitting the Pardon will not avail the Priſoner in any reſpect, and that your Lordſhip ſhould be of Opinion that his coming to England is a Treaſon, notwithſtanding he returned from France into Scotland firſt; then I muſt inſiſt upon what Mr. Williams has before mentioned, that this Indictment is ill, and that he ought to have been indicted in the County which he firſt came into, which was impoſſible to be Middleſex; and I muſt ground it on the general Rule, that all Crimes are Local, and Inquirable by the Grand Jury of the County where they are committed. Even in Batteries, which are Tranſitory in Actions; yet, with Submiſſion, Indictments are Local, and muſt be enquired of by the Grand Jury of the County where they are committed. My Lord, I ſhall treſpaſs no longer upon your Lordſhip's Patience, only juſt beg leave to ſay, that upon the whole Matter, for the Priſoner at the Bar, I humbly inſiſt upon it, That he being a Native of Scotland, is not within the Words of this Act: For if he ſhould be within the Words, yet he is not within the meaning of the Act. But if both thoſe Points are againſt me, That, as this Caſe is, he is not obliged by it. If I ſhould fail in all theſe, then I muſt have recourſe to the Conſtruction of the Act, that it intended only to make the firſt Entry into any of the Queen's Dominions, Treaſon, and conſequently that this Treaſon was upon his Return to Scotland, and ought in the Indictment to have been laid as ſuch: For which Reaſon I humbly conceive that the Indictment is not only ill, but the Pardon will amount to a Licenſe. But if your Lordſhip ſhould be of Opinion he is indictable for coming into England, that then the Indictment ought to have been laid in that County where he firſt came into. If any of which Points hold, with Submiſſion, the Priſoner can't be found guilty on this Indictment; but your Lordſhip will be pleaſed to direct the Gentlemen of the Jury to aquit him, which I humbly pray in his Behalf.

Sir Tho. Powis. My Lord, I have obſerv'd theſe Gentlemen in the Method they have gone, and will follow them in the ſame Manner to give them an Anſwer. What we have to ſay, will be nothing but with reſpect to the Law, as it now ſtands upon the Act of Parliament: Whether the Caſe deſerves Mercy or no, is not the Queſtion here, that will be conſider'd in another Place. Our Part is to maintain the Law as it ſtands, with reference to this Indictment; it muſt be owned that a great deal of that which has been ſaid might have carried weight with it, if it had been pleaded in Scotland, where the Proclamation was made; but to make uſe of it here in England, as having any Force in this Caſe, is not agreeable to Law or Reaſon. Firſt, no Man can ſay, a Pardon, if it had been under the Great Seal of Scotland, could pardon a Crime committed here in England; but it is not ſo, for it is not under any Seal at all. But ſuppoſing it were to be taken in the Extent they would have it, yet it would not be a ſufficient Pardon in this Caſe. For theſe Two Things muſt be conſider'd. Firſt, It is a Pardon only of Crimes committed in that Kingdom. Secondly, It cannot be a Pardon of a Crime committed ſince that Pardon granted; for we muſt mind the Date of that Pardon, and the Crime he is tryed for. The Scotch Pardon is dated in March, 170$\frac{3}{4}$. that was March was Twelvemonth. No Man can ſay a Proclamation in that Kingdom can pardon a Crime that was committed afterwards. Now this Crime was committed in December laſt, for then it was he returned into England; therefore that Pardon can never extend to this Caſe. So that theſe Two Things if conſidered, will be ſufficient to anſwer all that has been inſiſted on, by way of Pardon. Firſt, It is a Pardon of another Kingdom for Offences committed againſt the Crown of Scotland; whereas this Indictment is for an Offence committed againſt the Crown of England. And Secondly, It was granted at a Time precedent to the Time of this Offence committed: But next, they ſay the Pardon in Scotland will amount to a Licenſe from the Queen to go into Scotland, and that then by Conſequence he was free to come into England; with Submiſſion, miſſion, we think they cannot make ſuch an Inference, for the Queen's Pardon cannot extend to ſuch a double Purpoſe. Suppoſe the Queen had expreſly pardoned his going into France and returning into Scotland, that would not have amounted to a Licenſe to come into England. So that we deny their Inference, that the Pardon in Scotland amounts to a Licenſe to come into England. But in the Second Place, if the Queen had expreſly given him a Licenſe to go into Scotland, (tho' I do not admit that to be the Caſe) yet I deny that that would have been a Licenſe to come into England. If the Queen under the Privy Seal of Scotland ſhould have admitted him to come into Scotland, yet that would not have been a Licenſe for him to come into England; for it would have been a Special Licenſe to go to one Place, which can never be reckon'd, in ſuch a Caſe as this is, a Licenſe to go to another Place in another Kingdom. For the King or Queen might perhaps think fit to licenſe one to come into Scotland, and yet not think it convenient to licenſe him to come ſo near their Royal Perſon, as he would be here in England. So that there is no ſuch Licenſe in that Pardon, as is inſiſted on; and if there had been, yet it would not have had that Operation to licenſe him to come to England, The next Thing they ſpeak moſt fully to (and which is very conſiderable, if they make it out) is, that the Words of this Act of Parliament, upon which the Indictment is founded, or at leaſt the Meaning of them, cannot be extended to a Native of Scotland. As for the Words of the Act we need do no more than read them, to make it appear to be otherwiſe. It is obſerv'd by them very truly, that Scotland is no Part of the Kingdom of England; but they muſt admit it is a Part of the Dominions of the Queen of England, tho' not Part of the Kingdom of England. They would do little Service to the Subjects of Scotland, if they ſhould endeavour to overthrow Calvin's Caſe, which was ſo ſolemnly determined near a Hundred Years ago, which enables them of Scotland to come into England, and enjoy the ſame Privileges here, as the Subjects of England do. Certainly, as they are let into all theſe Benefits by the Reſolution of that Caſe, ſo they are at the ſame Time the Subjects of the King or Queen of England. That the Words therefore of the Act are againſt them, nothing can be plainer; If any of His Majeſty's Subjects, who ſince the 11th of December, 1688. have gone into France. —— This leaves them no room for Diſpute; it ſays not, if any of the Subjects of the Kingdom of England, but if any of His Majeſty's Subjects; ſo that whoever was a Subject of the late King is within the Act. The Words are without any Reſtriction whatever, If any of his Majeſty's Subjects; and they will not deny but that a Scotchman was a Subject of His late Majeſty. But then they ſay, if the Words ſhould extend to it, the Meaning of the Act cannot. With Submiſſion, we think the Caſe before you is within the Words and Meaning of the Act, and within the Miſchief which the Act provides againſt. For at the Time this Act was made, it being taken notice of, that upon the Peace concluded there would be a Door opened for a Communication between England and France, and that many Perſons who had reſorted thither, who had been actually in Arms there, and other diſaffected Perſons, might take Advantage, and be encouraged from thence to form and carry on treaſonable Deſigns and Practices againſt his Majeſty's Perſon and Government; Therefore, to obviate that Miſchief, this Act was made in ſuch general Words, That if any of His Majeſty's Subjects who had gone voluntarily into France, ſince the Time mentioned in the Act, without Licenſe, let them be born where they would, whether they were of the one Kingdom or the other, the Miſchief of their returning without Licenſe was equal. And by conſequence, it was the Meaning of the Act to exclude one as well as the other; for the Deſign of the Act was to prevent the Danger that might ariſe by ſuch Perſons coming over. But as to this preſent Caſe, if what the Witneſſes have ſaid be true, it would be very miſchievous indeed, if a Perſon that had been reſident here for near Twenty Years, as the Priſoner was, by his own Witneſſes, and afterwards went into France without a Licenſe, if he may be allowed to return back again without a Licenſe, becauſe not originally a Native of England. By the ſame Rule all thoſe Perſons that have done the like both of Scotland and Ireland would be at Liberty to return alſo, becauſe not Natives of England; which was not ſurely the Meaning of the Act of Parliament, nor ought the Conſtruction of the Words to be ſo taken. It's true, we can't here by an Act bind them in Scotland, but we are not now putting in Execution this Act in Scotland, but putting it in Execution here in England on a Scotchman that had been long an Inhabitant here before. My Lord, the next Thing that was inſiſted on, is, that if he be ſuch a Subject as may be conſtrued within this Act, and if the Pardon ſhould not have the Effect they contend for, yet they ſay this Indictment is laid in the wrong Place, it ought to have been laid in the County where he firſt arrived. There need little to be ſaid to this, becauſe the Proſecution is made where the Party was apprehended. The Objection they make, is that which would render it impracticable to proſecute any for this Offence. For how is it poſſible to know where a Man firſt privately arrived? That which is enough to charge him, is, that he was firſt found in ſuch a Place in England; for 'tis not ſaid in the Act, that they ſhall not return to this or that County, but not to England. And then where-ever he is found in England, there the Indictment may be laid againſt him. And the Caſe of the Felony comes home to this Point; the Man that ſteals Goods in one County, may be indicted in any other County where he carries them. So he that returns into England contrary to the Act, whereever he is apprehended he carries the Crime with him. And it does not appear, but that this is the firſt Place where he was found. They ſay it is impoſſible to come from Scotland into Middleſex without firſt coming into ſome other County; but it is agreed that this is the Place where he was firſt apprehended. Therefore upon the whole Matter, the Fact being confeſſed, we inſiſt that he is within the Words and the Meaning of the Act, and within the miſchievous Conſequences which are intended to be prevented by it.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I would not ſpeak any Thing to aggravate Matters againſt the Priſoner; but there have been ſome Things ſaid by his Council, which I think fit to be taken notice of.----They have given him a Character for his Faithfulneſs to the Queen, and called ſome Witneſſes to it: And Mr. Williams was pleaſed to ſay, His owning the Facts charged againſt him in the Indictment, (whereby he ſaved the Court and the Queen's Council a great deal of Trouble) was an Argument of his Sincerity.----I only ſay, I believe he had a better Opportunity by other Methods to have ſhewn it. My Lord, Every one knows from whence he came, (viz. from France) and how long he ſtay'd there, and in whoſe Service. And it would have been a better Argument of his Sincerity, if he had given an Account of his Knowledge of what paſs'd in France while he was there; and probably would have been of more Advantage to him, than ſaving the Trouble of proving what (he knew) we were ready and able to prove.

What has been ſaid as to the Act in general, is ſomething ſurprizing to me; to hear any Engliſhman complain of the Hardſhip of this Law, on which the Priſoner is indicted, which was made for the Preſervation of the King's Perſon and the Government, and by the Wiſdom of the Nation thought neceſſary. But as to the Matters of Law the Priſoner's Council have inſiſted on, they are reducible to Two Heads.

Firſt, That the Queen's Proclamation in Scotland, pardoning Her Subjects of Scotland of all Treaſons, &c. amounts to a Licenſe to return to Scotland, by pardoning the Offence in going to France; and every Subject of Scotland may lawfully come thence into England.

Secondly, That the Priſoner ought to have been indicted in the firſt County, into which he firſt returned; which is impoſſible to be Middleſex.

As to the firſt Matter, it has been ſaid, That a Native of Scotland is not bound, nor can be puniſh'd by a Law made in England. And the Council, tho' they have not deny'd the Authority of Calvin's Caſe, yet they do ſeem to diſlike the Reſolution of it. Now he is (according to Calvin's Caſe) a Subject of England. That Caſe was more beneficial to the Subjects of Scotland than to the Subjects of England; and it has been always allow'd to be Law ever ſince. But, my Lord, we are not to conſider this Gentleman in this Caſe as a Scotchman abſolutely, but as a Scotchman here in England. How far an Act made in England would affect a Scotchman that ſhould return into Scotland, I need not meddle with. But the Queſtion here is, Whether an Act of Parliament made in England, will not bind every Perſon that is reſident here in England? Now the Priſoner was reſident here in England with his Family, and went hence to France: And by the Law, every Scotchman reſiding in England, is an Engliſhman, and hath Right to enjoy the Privileges of an Engliſhman. This is the Reſolution of Calvin's Caſe. I will give but one Inſtance of this. The Act of Navigation made 12. of Car. II. requires, in many Caſes of Goods imported, that the Maſter, and Three Fourth Parts of the Mariners, ſhall be Engliſh. The Act of 14. Car. II. Chap. 11. of Frauds, declares, That any of Her Majeſty's Subjects of England, Ireland, and the Plantations, ſhall be accounted Engliſh, and no others.

Now the Natives of Scotland inhabiting in England or Ireland, have always been allow'd to be Engliſh or Iriſh within the Act of Frauds; and have enjoy'd the Privilege ever ſince of being Maſters of Ships: And the ſame hath been allow'd them on all Trials in the Court of Exchequer, that is according to Calvin's Caſe; That to all Intents and Purpoſes, a Scotchman being in England, enjoys the Privileges of an Engliſhman, he is a Subject of the Crown of England.

But give me Leave, my Lord, to conſider how the Priſoner comes to be affected by this Act: Not as being Her Majeſty's Subject, living in Scotland; but he is bound by this Act, as he is a Subject reſiding here in England. For as to what they ſay, that his Offence is going into France; that is not the Matter he is charged with: That is the Deſcription of the Perſon that falls under the Diſability of the Act; [A Man under theſe Circumſtances:] But his Returning from France into England (being a Perſon deſcribed by the Act) is the Offence.

My Lord, His Returning is the Offence: Not his Returning to Scotland, but Returning to England, or any other Her Majeſty's Dominions, bound by the Acts of Parliament made in England. The Act is, If any of His Majeſty's Subjects return: And every Scotchman that reſides here, is a Subject of the Queen. Every Law that is made in England, will bind every Scotchman that reſides here; and this will bind him from returning into England without Licenſe; which is all that is in this Caſe.

It hath been objected, The Act cannot bind the Scots here, becauſe they have no Repreſentative in Parliament. But that is not ſo: They may be Freemen of Corporations, and are capable of being Freeholders; and as ſuch, may be repreſented in Parliament. The Penning of the Act ſhews, the Parliament intended to include all Subjects, that might in the utmoſt Latitude be called Subjects. The Words are, [If any of His Majeſty's Subjects, that have gone into France, ſhall return into England.] So that the Act ſays, They that were His Majeſty's Subjects, and went into France, and did return, ſhall be guilty. Therefore, what hath been ſaid of the Laws of England binding Scotland, is quite out of this Caſe.

The Council for the Priſoner have argued, That the Proclamation of Indemnity in Scotland, is a Licenſe to return into Scotland. I would fain know where they find that. If there were a Pardon under the Great Seal of England for all Offences committed, I would be glad to know whether that would be accounted a Licenſe to return into Scotland? No, certainly. They have ſaid, That the Matter that hinder'd the returning to Scotland, was the Offence of going to France without a Licenſe; which Offence is remitted by the Pardon. That is plainly a Miſtake: For the Act had not Regard to any Offence in going to France; referring to the 11th of December, 1688. when, and long after, it was not any Offence to go thither without a Licenſe: Every Man, till the War was declar'd, might have gone thither without Licenſe. And yet by this Act, thoſe that went between that Time and the War declared, as well as thoſe that went during the War, are prohibited to return without Licenſe. So that the Pardon which they rely on, cannot avail the Priſoner: For the Act did not regard Crimes committed; but, as the Preamble is, it was made to prevent an Inconvenience which might follow by diſaffected Perſons returning; who might form and carry on Traiterous

Con-

Conſpiracies, againſt the late King and the Government. And the Parliament look'd on Perſons to be diſaffected, that left their Country, and went and ſtay'd in France after the late King went thither; and therefore judged it not reaſonable to have ſuch truſted here, without the Government ſhould licenſe their Return.

The Perſons mention'd in the Act are characteriz'd: So that as to the Matter of the Pardon, (if it were an Engliſh Pardon) it would not bring them from under the Act. Beſides, any Licenſe or Pardon in Scotland, cannot indemnify them from an Act made in England.—— The Law and the Seals of each Kingdom are diſtinct: And an expreſs Licenſe under the Seal of Scotland to return to England, nay, an Act of Parliament for that Purpoſe there, would not avail: For no Act of Scotland can take off a Diſability laid on by any Act made in England. For this Act is a baniſhing them from England, unleſs the Queen give a Licenſe to return.

My Lord, It is an extraordinary Thing which they argue from the Preamble of the Act, that mentions the carrying on the Trade between England and France; and Scotland being not named, the Act ſhall not extend to the Scotchmen. I do not ſee what can be gather'd from that.—— The Scotchmen reſiding here, are conſider'd as Engliſh; and being here, are bound by the Engliſh Laws; elſe the Scots would be in a better Condition here than the Engliſh. But, my Lord, that which we inſiſt on, is, That the Scots reſiding here, are to all Intents Engliſhmen; That they are ſubject to the Laws of England, and bound by them. The going firſt to Scotland will not avail the Priſoner: For the Offence is, Returning to the Place from whence he went, that is, England. Whether his Returning to Scotland be an Offence within this Act or not, is not material; nor whether an Act of Parliament made in England, can baniſh a Scotchman from Scotland: But it is, That an Act of Parliament in England may prohibit any Scotchman, or any other Perſon, from returning out of France into England.

My Lord, The next Matter, which they mightily inſiſt on, is, as to the Place of Trial: But if that Objection ſhould prevail, it would make the Act ridiculous and uſeleſs. For then it would lie on the Queen's Council to prove, Where a Perſon (who privately return'd, and got into the Kingdom) firſt landed. But the Act ſays, [If they ſhall return into England.] And whereever he is found, thither he is returned. There was an extraordinary Thing ſaid indeed: That if we can make it Treaſon whereever he is found, then he may be try'd in every County he comes into; altho' he be pardon'd, or tried, for returning into one County. Certainly that will not be ſo. For the Returning is but one Treaſon: And tho' he may go into ſeveral Places, yet when he is tried in one Place, and convicted, and pardon'd for that, it diſcharges him wholly. For the Returning is but one entire Offence, tho' having been in many Places: The Queen may proceed againſt him in any one of them. It is like the common Caſe of an Eſcape. An Eſcape is an Eſcape in every County, whereever the Party goes afterwards: And the Party eſcaped, or the Sheriff, may be proceeded againſt in any County whither the Party eſcaped goes, as well as in that whither he firſt eſcaped. And without this be ſo, the Act can never be put in Execution.

My Lord, I think this is the Subſtance of what they have ſaid; That an Act made in England, will not bind a Native of Scotland. We think an Act made in England, will bind ſuch a one reſiding in England. Now the Priſoner was reſiding in England for Twenty Years; and he is both within the direct Words, and within the Intent and Meaning of the Act. There are a great many of them that are in France: And I believe the Parliament never intended to leave the Scots free to return into England, any more than the Engliſh.

Mr. Lindſay. My Lord, I deſire to know, whether the Queen's Licenſe does not ſet us free, as well in England as in Scotland? And whether one that has a Licenſe to come into Scotland, may not come into England too?

Mr. Att. Gen. One may be brought to a Trial here, tho' he had a Licenſe in Scotland.

Mr. Lindſay. My Lord, Her Majeſty's Pardon extends further than a Licenſe: It reſtores to all the Privileges I had before.

L. C. J. Holt. If I take you right, you mean, This Pardon in Scotland ſecur'd to you all the Advantages you had at the Time of your Birth, or at any Time before your Departure out of England; ſo that you are not to be impeached, or convicted of any Crime you have committed againſt the Laws of Scotland; but you are thereby upon the ſame Foot, and have the ſame Rights and Privileges as any other Scotchman hath, that hath never offended: And every innocent Scotchman hath a Right and Liberty to come into England when he will. Which is very true, that the Pardon diſcharges all Diſabilities and Incapacities, that you have incurr'd by any Offence committed againſt the Laws of Scotland, but not any committed againſt the Laws of England. That is, ſuppoſing the Pardon had been ſubſequent to your Return into Scotland, and that your Return hither had been High-Treaſon by this Act.

Mr. Lindſay. My Lord, I think this Pardon reinſtates me in all the Privileges I enjoy'd before.

L. C. J. Holt. I tell you no: It only reſtores you to the Privileges that you had as a Scotchman; and which you would have loſt, if convicted of thoſe Offences by the Law of Scotland; but exempts you not from any Puniſhment, to which you were then obnoxious by the Law of England.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I would ſay but this only; That ſpeaking of the Pardon, as a Pardon, it cannot pardon a Crime before it is committed. If the Pardon granted in Scotland, would pardon a Crime committed in England; yet it would not pardon a Crime committed afterwards.

L. C. J. Holt. But obſerve what he ſays. Says he, I am by this Pardon made a Free Scotchman: (And it is to be admitted, that the Pardon of Scotland has that Effect;) And if, ſays he, this Pardon has made me as Free a Scotchman as I was before; Ergo, I may come into England, as well as any other Scotchman that was under no Diſability.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, He is bound by the Laws of England, as he reſided here: It has been the conſtant Practice. He does not pretend that he had King William's, or the preſent Queen's Licenſe to come into England; only that he had the Queen's Licenſe to come into Scotland.

L. C. J. Holt. You hear what he ſays.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, The ſeveral Facts alledged in the Indictment are admitted to be true; except except that the Priſoner was a Subject to His Late Majeſty; and, That his Return into England ſince the 14th of January, 1697. was without Licenſe.

'Tis objected, He was not a Subject of His Late Majeſty within the Meaning of the Act, becauſe he was a Scotchman.

Whoever is born under the Legiance of the King of England, is a Subject of the King; and 'tis admitted Mr. Lindſay was ſo born.

It has been likewiſe objected, His Return was not without Licenſe.

'Tis not pretended he had ſuch a Licenſe as the Act of Parliament ſpecifies, and the Indictment mentions; a Licenſe under the Privy Seal, to return into England.

But 'tis inſiſted on, That the General Pardon in Scotland does, by Conſtruction of Law, amount to ſuch a Licenſe.

It can't ſurely, with any Colour of Reaſon, be urg'd, That ſuch a Pardon ſhould be conſtrued any farther than a Licenſe to return into Scotland; and ſuch a Licenſe would not excuſe the Priſoner.

My Lord, This Pardon in Scotland can have no Relation to the Offence in Queſtion. A Pardon in that Kingdom can't extend to any Crime, which by the Laws of Scotland can't be there puniſh'd. But had that Pardon, which paſs'd in Scotland, been under the Great Seal of England, it could have been of no Service to the Priſoner. As a Pardon it could not; becauſe 'tis precedent to the Offence, and it can't by any Implication amount to a Licenſe.

The Reaſon offer'd, why it ſhould be ſo conſtrued, is, That the Offence, whereof the Priſoner ſtands indicted, is of a complicated Nature: That it conſiſts of Two Parts; Going out of England into France; and, Returning out of France into England. That the firſt Part of this Offence (his Going to France) being pardon'd, he can't be proſecuted for his Return.

The Suppoſition whereupon this Argument is founded, is a Miſtake: For after the 11th of December, 1688. any Man might (before the War was proclaim'd) have, without any Offence, gone into France: And therefore, his going thither after the 11th of December, 1688. is no Part of the Crime; but a Deſcription of the Perſon, whoſe Return without Licenſe was enacted to be High Treaſon.

Mr. Conyers. My Lord, The Priſoner inſiſts on the Benefit of Her Majeſty's Proclamation of Pardon in Scotland; which (as has been already taken notice of) bears Date in March, 170$\frac{3}{4}$. and cannot extend to pardon a Treaſon ſince that Time. The Treaſon for which he ſtands charged, was not till December laſt; then he came into England without Licenſe of the Queen: He voluntarily went into France without Licenſe, ſince the 11th of December, 1688. He came back into England without Licenſe, in December laſt; and for that he ſtands charged with Treaſon, by Virtue of the Act of Parliament in the Ninth Year of the Late King. But the Inference he makes from this Pardon, by the Queen's Proclamation in Scotland, is, That he is thereby reſtored to all the Privileges of a Scotch Subject, and conſequently may freely come into the Kingdom of England, as any other of Her Majeſty's Native Subjects of that Kingdom may do. Now the Pardon in Scotland can only extend to exempt him from Puniſhment for any Crimes committed in that Kingdom; and he can have no Benefit of it for a Crime committed againſt the Laws and Statutes of England, which is a diſtinct Kingdom, and govern'd by diſtinct Laws. And ſuch Inference as he makes from this Pardon, is both againſt the very Words and Meaning of the Act of Parliament, upon which he ſtands indicted. The Words are very expreſs and plain: Any of Her Majeſty's Subjects, who have at any Time ſince the 11th of December, 1688. voluntarily gone into France without Licenſe, (as the Priſoner confeſſes he did) and after the 14th Day of January, 1697. ſhall return into England, or any other Her Majeſty's Dominions, without Licenſe, - - - - ſhall be judged guilty of High Treaſon. He was reſiding in England after the 11th of December, 1688. He went from England into France; and is returned into England without Licenſe, ſince the 14th of January, 1697. and ſo is within the expreſs Words of this Act. And the Intent of the Act will appear by the Preamble. The Miſchiefs and Inconveniencies apprehended at the making of this Act, were, That the Freedom of Going and Coming out of England into France, and from France to England, by the reſpective Subjects of each Kingdom after the Peace, might be an Encouragement to ſuch of the King's Subjects, who had been engaged in Traiterous Deſigns and Conſpiracies againſt His Majeſty, and who might be encouraged to form and carry on Treaſonable Deſigns and Practices againſt the King and the Government, to come out of France into England. The Perſons from whom thoſe Dangers were apprehended, were ſuch Perſons as are deſcribed in this Act; and therefore, for the Safety and Preſervation of His Majeſty's Perſon and Government, the Intent of this Law was to prohibit their Returning into England, without ſuch Licenſe from His Majeſty under His Privy Seal.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any more to ſay? Or have you any Thing to reply?

Mr. Williams. My Lord, We would ſave your Lordſhip's Time as much as might be; but we humbly inſiſt, that our Objections are not anſwer'd: And it being upon a new Law, and in Caſe of Life, we pray that the Matter may be found Specially.

L. C. J. Holt. If we ſee any Reaſon to doubt it, it ſhall be found Specially. But what you have ſaid, overthrows Calvin's Caſe: For you urge, That you are a Subject of Scotland, and ſo not within this Act of Parliament. But you ought to conſider, That as you are a Subject of Scotland, ſo alſo you are a Subject to the Crown of England, by being a Native of Scotland ſince the Acceſſion of Scotland to England, which is by the Law of England. And if the Caſe had been, that you had only departed from Scotland into France, and from thence returned into Scotland, and ſtay'd there without ever coming into England, the Caſe would have been much different: For it may be, the Law of England cannot oblige a Scotchman, for any Act by him done in his own Country; (tho' there is no Occaſion to give any Opinion of that;) but an Act of Parliament in England, may ſubject any Scotchman to any Penalty, for any Act that he ſhould do in England. Suppoſe a Scotchman going out of Scotland into France, ſince the 11th of December, 1688. that ſhall return into England ſince the 14th of January, 1697. he ſeems to be within the Words and Meaning of the Act. But there is no need of determining that Point now: The Priſoner being a Scotchman born, and having been in England for a long Time, and departing from England into France within that Time, and returning into England afterward, is to all the Purpoſes within the Letter and Deſign of the Act: For, being a Reſident in England at that Time, you are to all Purpoſes a Subject of the Crown of England, as much as any Native of England; and your departing into France, and remaining there for ſo long Time, and returning without Licenſe, is the ſame Danger that the Act of Parliament intended to prevent.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I would not preſume to ſay any Thing in Derogation of Calvin's Caſe: But I ſay, that tho' a Scotchman may be as a Natural-born Subject of England, yet he may not be within the Meaning of this ſo Penal a Law.

L. C. J. Holt. Certainly within the Meaning, if within the Words and Reaſon. But there is another Point that you, his Council, have urged in his Behalf; which is, That this Pardon is a Licenſe to him to return into Scotland. Which in Truth is not; for it is to another Purpoſe; viz. To pardon and diſcharge all Treaſons and Crimes committed in Scotland; but not give a Licenſe to return into that Realm: But ſuppoſe it to be a Licenſe to go into Scotland, that will not be a Licenſe to return into England. The Treaſon is, to return into the Realm of England, or any other His Majeſty's Dominions. Another Matter that you have inſiſted upon, is, That ſuppoſing this to be a good Pardon under the Great Seal of Scotland, it hath pardon'd the Offence of going into France. The Return into England can't be High Treaſon; becauſe the Treaſon conſiſts of Two Facts, ſay you, which are, The Departing into France, and, The Returning into the Queen's Dominions. Like unto the Caſe, when one gives another a mortal Wound of which he languiſhes, and before he dies, the Stroke is pardon'd; and then the Party dies: Afterwards it will not be Murder; becauſe that Act, which ſhould make it ſo, is diſcharged by the Pardon. To this a plain Anſwer hath been before given by the Queen's Council; That Going into France ſince the 11th of December, 1688. is no Offence originally; but only the Return of ſuch Perſon is made High Treaſon, and from that Return doth the High Treaſon commence. Therefore ſuch a Pardon under the Great Seal of England, could not have diſcharged him from being guilty of High Treaſon, if he had returned afterwards.

But, ſays he for himſelf, (as I apprehend him) That this Pardon hath made him a Free Scotchman, to all Purpoſes, as if he had never offended. And tho' the Pardon can't have any Operation to diſcharge him of any Crime committed againſt the Law of England; yet it hath this Effect, by putting him in the ſame State of other Scotchmen, to enable him to come into England. It is true, this Pardon puts him in the ſame Condition, in which other Scotchmen are by the Law of Scotland; but it puts him not in the ſame Condition that other Scotchmen are by the Law of England. By the Law of England, Scotchmen may at any Time come into England: But the Law prohibits thoſe who are Subjects, and went into France without Licenſe, to return into England.

They who are born in Scotland, may inherit Lands in England: But if an Alien to England and Scotland be Naturaliz'd by Act of Parliament in Scotland; tho' he is to all Purpoſes a Natural-born Subject of Scotland by the Law of that Realm; yet not therefore Inheritable to Lands in England, becauſe he is not a Natural-born Subject by the Law of England.

There is another Queſtion hath been ſtirr'd; which is, That he ſhould have been indicted in the Firſt Engliſh County into which he came: For it appears, upon the Evidence, that he came from Scotland. Now Middleſex can't be the Firſt County; but it muſt be Northumberland: For upon his coming there, the Treaſon is compleat: And his proceeding further into other Counties, can't make it more Treaſons than it was before. As to the Caſe of Felony, ſtealing Goods in one County, and carrying them into another; it is Felony in every County they are carried into. A Priſoner eſcapes from a Gaol in one County, and then goes into ſeveral Counties; it is an Eſcape in every County into which he comes; which is a Caſe very appoſite to this in Queſtion. Suppoſe a Man committed for Felony has eſcaped out of Newgate into Northumberland; may he not be indicted in Northumberland? He came voluntarily into this County of Middleſex; and certainly may be indicted, and tried here. Indeed, if he had been taken in one County, and carried into another County, that would be another Caſe; becauſe he came there by Coercion.

Mr. Williams. Now, my Lord, in this Caſe, the Priſoner comes into this County of Middleſex to ſurrender himſelf; and coming into Middleſex with an Intention to ſurrender himſelf, when a Warrant is out againſt him, will not be Treaſon in Middleſex, tho' his firſt Coming into England were admitted to be Treaſon.

L. C. J. Holt. That does not appear: He ſays otherwiſe himſelf. He ſays, He heard there was a Warrant out againſt him; and then he ſurrender'd himſelf.

L. C. J. Trevor. I do not think, if he had come into this County to ſurrender himſelf, it would have alter'd the Caſe. If he had ſurrender'd himſelf in the firſt County he came into, he would have been within the Law.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, with humble Submiſſion, if he comes into England, he by that commits Treaſon. But if after his coming into England, and before he comes into Middleſex, he hears that in Middleſex there is a Warrant out againſt him; and, purely to ſurrender himſelf upon this Warrant, he comes into Middleſex, and ſurrenders himſelf in Middleſex; with humble Submiſſion, this Act of Surrendring himſelf, which the Priſoner does in Obedience, and in Juſtice to the Proceſs of Law, won't amount to make him guilty of High Treaſon in Middleſex.

L. C. J. Holt. This is not the Caſe. However, we are all of Opinion, that alters not the Caſe: (For I have conſulted my Lord and Brothers.) Have you any more to ſay for the Priſoner? Or has he any Thing more to ſay for himſelf?

Mr. Lindſay. My Lord, I have told you what was the Motive that brought me into England; That I was to come to my Wife and Children, believing that I might have done it without Treſpaſſing againſt the Law, becauſe I ſaw others did ſo before me. Now, if it be taken as a Fault in me, and not in others; that will be very hard, my Lord. If I have offended, it is out of Ignorance.

L. C. J. Holt. Ignorance of the Law is no Excuſe: But that may fall under another Conſideration, which doth not belong to us. Have you any more to ſay?

Mr. Lind-

Mr. Lindſay. If I have by my Ignorance offended in this Point, and if you think my Indemnity in Scotland will not avail me, I humbly beg your Lordſhip will intercede for me to Her Majeſty.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen of the Jury, this Priſoner, David Lindſay, is indicted for High Treaſon upon the Statute that was made in the Ninth of King William. The Offence ſet forth in the Indictment is to this Effect, That he being a Subject of the late King, did, ſince the 11th of December, 1688. go out of this Realm into France, and that he has returned into England, without Licenſe under the Privy Seal, ſince the 14th of January, 1697; which returning, by that Act is made High Treaſon. This Act was made upon the concluding the Peace of Reſwick, becauſe, then (as the Act recites in the Preamble) the Seas would be open for Commerce between England and France, and that would give an Opportunity to thoſe Perſons to return to England, whom the Wiſdom of the Nation thought dangerous to the Government, that is, thoſe that had been in the Service of the French King, and others that by departing the Realm ſince the 11th of December, 1688. Therefore to prevent all Danger to the King and his Government, this Act was made, to make ſuch a Return to England by ſuch Perſons to be ſo Penal as to amount to High Treaſon.

Now, the Queſtion is, whether this Priſoner be guilty. It does appear that he is a Native of Scotland, and alſo that he was here in England for many Years (I think one of his own Witneſſes ſays about Twenty) and did depart ſince the 11th of December, 1688. and he returned into Scotland ſince March was Twelvemonth, and came into England afterwards about December laſt, which is alſo admitted. So that it appears he is in the Words of the Act, and had no Licenſe under the Privy Seal.
